6 This passage is usually pointed, with a period before affection—which thus commences a sentence— it has the sense, taken in connection with this reading, of imagination—intention, that of intensity. The punctuation of the text is that of the old copies. The passage (to the end of the speech) is crossed out by the MS. emendator of the folio of 1632, 7 to the (of the heart).

11 Unripe pea-pod.

12 A proverb, for bearing an affront.

13 Proper, or lot; this is another old proverb.

14 They are aware of my condition.

15 An old word for whispering.

16 Taste, or be aware of.
Of head-piece extraordinary? lover messes,1 Perchance, are to this business purblind: say.
Cam. Business, my lord? I think, most understand
Bohemia stays here longer.
Leo. Ha?
Cam. Stays here longer.
Leo. Ay, but why?
Cam. To satisfy your highness, and the entreaties
Of our most gracious mistress.
Leo. Satisfy
The entreaties of your mistress?—satisfy?—
Let that suffice. I have trusted thee, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber-cupboards, wherein, thou
 Hast clean'd my bosom: I from thee departed
Thy penitent reform'd; but we have been Deceiv'd in thy integrity, deceiv'd
In that which seems so.
Cam. Be it forbid, my lord!
Leo. To bide upon 't,—thou art not honest; or,
If thou inclin'st that way, thou art a coward,
Which hexes2 honesty behind, restraining
From course requir'd; or else thou must be counted
A servant gained in my serious trust,
And therein negligent; or else a fool,
That seem a game play'd home, the rich stake drawn,
And tak'st it all for jest:
Cam. My gracious lord,
I may be negligent, foolish, and fearful:
In every one of these no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, fear,
Amongst the infinite doings of the world,
Sometime puts forth. In your affairs, my lord,
If ever I were wilful-negligent,
It was my folly; if industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end; if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 't was a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. These, my lord,
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of: but, beseech your grace,
Be plainer with me: let me know my trespass
By its own visage; if I then deny it,
't is none of mine.
Leo. Have not you seen, Camillo,
(But that's a past doubt; you have, or your eye-glass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn) or heard,
(For, to a vision so apparent, rumour
Cannot be mute) or thought, (for cogitation
Resides not in that man that does not think it?)
My wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess,
Or else be impudently negative,
To have nor eyes, nor ears, nor thought, then say,
My wife's a bobby-horse; denies a name
As rank as any flax-wench, that puts to Before her troth-plight: say 't, and justify 't.
Cam. I would not be a stander-by, to hear
My sovereign mistress clouded so, without
My present vengeance taken. Shrew my heart,
You never spoke what did become you less
Than this: which to reiterate, were sin
As deep as that, though true.
Leo. Is whispering nothing?
Cam. I must believe you, sir: I do; and will fetch off Bohemia for 't;
Provided, that when he's remov'd, your highness
Will take again your queen, as yours at first,
Even for your son's sake; and thereby for sealing
The injury of tongues, in courts and kingdoms
Known and allied to yours.
Leo. Thou dost advise me,
Even so as I mine own course have set down.
I'll give no blemish to her honour, none.
Cam. My lord,
Go then; and with a countenance as clear
As friendship wears at feasts, keep with Bohemin,
And with your queen. I am his cupbearer;
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant.

This is all:

Do not, and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Do not, and thou split'st thine own.

Cam. I'll do't, my lord.

Leon. I will seem friendly, as thou hast advis'd me.

ACT II.

All's true that is mistrusted—that false villain, Whom I employ'd, was pre-employ'd by him. He has discover'd my design, and I Remain a pinch'd thing; yes, a very trick For them to play at will.—How came the postern

[To them.]

So easily open?

1 Lord. By his great authority; Which often hath no less prevail'd than so, On your command.

Leon. I know 'tis too well.— Give me the boy. [To Hermione.] I am glad, you did not nurse him:

Though he does bear some signs of me, yet you Have too much blood in him.

Her. What is this? sport?

Leon. Bear the boy hence; he shall not come about her.

Away with him: and let her sport herself With that she's big with; for 'tis Polixenes Has made thee swell thus.

Her. But, I'd say he had not, And, I'll be sworn, you would believe my saying, Howe'er you lean to the Nayward.

Leon. You, my lords, Look on her, mark her well: be but about To say, "she is a goodly lady?" and The justice of your hearts will thereto add, "It is pity she's not honest, honourable!" Praise her but for this her without-door form, (Which, on my faith, deserves high speech) and straight The shrug, the hump, or ha (these petty brands, That calumny doth use,—O, I am out!— That mercy does, for calumny will scar Virtue itself)—these shrugs, these hums, and ha's, When you have said, "she's goodly," come between, Ere you can say "she's honest." But be't known, From him that has most cause to grieve it should be, She's an adultress.

Her. Should a villain say so,
The most replenish'd villain in the world, He were as much more villain: you, my lord, Do but mistake.

Leon. You have mistook, my lady, Polixenes for Leontes. O, thou thing! Which I'll not call a creature of thy place, Leontes, Leon. Behind the tuft of pines I met them: never Saw I men scour so on their way. I eyed them Even to their ships.

Leon. How bless'd am I [Aside.] In my just censure! in my true opinion!— Alack, for lesser knowledge!—How accompl'd, In being so blest!—There may be in the cup A spider steep'd, and one may drink a part, And yet partake no venom, for his knowledge Is not infected; but if one present The abhorred ingredient to his eye, make known How he hath drunk; he cranks his gorge, his sides, With violent hefts. I have drunk, and seen the spider. Camillo was his help in this, his pard'r. There is a plot against my life, my crown:

1 Not in f. e. 2 drink, depart, &c. : in f. e. 3 It was an old popular belief that spiders were poisonous. 4 Hearings. 5 Puppet. 6 Not in f. e.
Leon. No; if I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon,
The centre is not big enough to bear
A school-boy's top.—Away with her to prison!
He, who shall speak for her, is afar off guilty,
But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient, till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable.—Good my lords,
I am not prone to weeping, as our sex
Commonly are, the want of which you diew.
Perchance, shall dry your eyes, but I have
That honourable grief lodg'd here, which burns
Worse than tears drown. Beseech you all, my lords,
With thoughts so qualified as your charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me;—and so
The king's will be performed.

Leon. Shall I be heard? [To the Guards.
Her. Who is it that goes with me?—Bessech your highness,
My women may be with me: for you see,
My plight requires it. Do not weep, good fools;
There is no cause: when you shall know, your mistress
Has deserv'd prison; then abound in tears,
As I come out: this action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace. — Adieu, my lord:
I never wish'd to see you sorry: now,
I trust, I shall.—My women, come; you have leave.

Leon. Go, do our bidding: hence!

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

1 Lord. Beseech your highness, call the queen again.
Ant. Be certain what you do, sir, lest your justice
Prove violence; in the which three great ones suffer,
Yourself, your queen, your son.

1 Lord. For her, my lord,
I dare my life lay down; and will do 't, sir,
Please you 't accept it, that the queen is spotless
I the eyes of heaven, and to you: I mean,
In this which you accuse her.

Ant. If it prove
She's otherwise, I'll keep me stable where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her;
Than when I feel, and see her, no further trust her;
For every inch of woman in the world,
Ay, every dram of woman's flesh, is false,
If she be.

Leon. Hold your peace!

1 Lord. Good my lord,
Ant. It is for you we speak; not for ourselves.
You are abused, and by some putter-on,
That will be damn'd for 't; would I knew the villain,
I would lamback^ him. Be she honour-flaw'd, I have three daughters: the eldest is eleven,
The second, and the third, nine, and some five;
If this prove true, they'll pay for 't: by mine honour,
I'll gend them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generation: they are coheirs,
And I had rather gib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Leon. Cease! no more.
You smell this business with a sense as cold
As is a dead man's nose; but I do see 't, and feel 't,
As you feel doing thus, and see withal
The instruments that feel.

Ant. And if it be so,
We need no grave to bury honesty:
There's not a grain of it the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungey earth.

Leon. What! lack I credit?

1 Lord. I had rather you did lack, than I, my lord,
Upon this ground; and more it would content me
To have her honour true, than your suspicion,
Be blam'd for 't how you might.

Leon. Why, what need we Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Our prerogative
Calls not your counsels, but our natural goodness
Imparts this; which, if you (or stupified,
Or seeming so in skill) cannot, or will not,
Relish a truth like us, inform yourselves,
We need no more of your advice: the matter,
The loss, the gain, the ordering on 't, is all Properly ours.

Ant. And I wish, my liege,
You had only in your silent judgment tried it,
Without more overture.

Leon. How could that be?
Either thou art most ignorant by age,
Or thou wert born a fool. Camillo's flight,
Added to their familiarity,
(Which was as gross as ever touch'd conjecture,
That lack'd sight only, nought for approbation)
But only seeing, all other circumstances
Made up to the deed! doth push on this proceeding:
Yet, for a greater confession.
(For in an act of this importance 't were Most piteous to be wild) I have despatch'd in post,
To sacred Dolphins, to Apollo's temple,
Cleomenes and Dion, whom you know
Of stuff'd sufficiency. Now, from the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had,
Shall stop, or spur me. Have I done well?

1 Lord. Well done, my lord.

Leon. Though I am satisfied, and need no more
Than what I know, yet shall the oracle
Give rest to the minds of others; such as he,
Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to the truth. So have we thought it good,
From our free person she should be confin'd,
Lest that the treachery of the two fled hence
Be left her to perform. Come, follow us:
We are to speak in public; for this business
Will raise us all.

Ant. [Aside.] To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth were known.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. The outer Room of a Prison.

Enter Paulina and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison.—call to him:

[Exit an Attendant.

Let him have knowledge who I am.—Good lady!
No court in Europe is too good for thee,
What dost thou then in prison?—Now, good sir,

Re-enter Attendant, with the Jailor,

You know me, do you not?

Jailor. For a worthy lady,
And one whom much I honour.

Paul. Pray you then,

Conduct me to the queen.

Jailor. I may not; madam: to the contrary
I have express commandment.

Paul. Here's ado,
To lock up honesty and honour from
Th' access of gentle visitors!—Is 't lawful, pray you,
To see her women? any of them? Emilia?

Jailor. So please you, madam,
To put apart these your attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth.

1 my stables: in f. s. 2 land-dame: in f. s.; lamback, is to beat.
The cause were not in being, part o' the cause,
She, th' adul'tress; for the harlot king
Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank
And level of my brain, plot-proof; but she
I can hook to me: say, that she were gone,
Given to the fire, a motley of my rest
Might come to me again.—Who's there?
1 Attent.
1 Attent. How does the boy?
1 Attent. He took good rest to-night:
'T is hop'd, his sickness is discharg'd.
Leon.
To see his nobleness!
Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,
He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply,
Fasten'd and fix'd the shame on 't in himself,
Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep,
And downright languish'd.—Leave me solely:—go,
See how he fares. [Exit Attend.]—Fie, fie! no thought of him:—
The very thought of my revenge that way
Recoil upon me: in himself too mighty,
And in his parties, his alliance;—let him be,
Until a time may serve: for present vengeance,
Take it on her. Camillo and Polixenes
Laugh at me; make their pastime at my sorrow:
They should not laugh, if I could reach them; nor Shall she, within my power.
Enter Paulina, behind, with a Child.
1 Lord.
You must not enter.
Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be second to me.
Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas,
Than the queen's life? a gracious innocent soul,
More free than he is jealous.
Ant.
That's enough.
1 Attent. Madam, he hath not slept to-night; commanded
None should come at him.
Paul.
Not so hot, good sir:
I come to bring him sleep. 'T is such as you,—
That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needless heavings, such as you
Nourish the cause of his awaking: I
Do come with words as medicinal as true,
Honest as either, to purge him of that humour,
That presses him from sleep.
Leon.
What noise there, ho?
Paul. No noise, my lord; but needful conference,
[Coming forward.
About some gossips for your highness.
Leon.
How?—
Away with that audacious lady. Antigonus,
I charg'd thee, that she should not come about me:
I knew she would.
Ant.
I told her so, my lord,
On your displeasure's peril, and on mine,
She should not visit you.
Leon.
What! cant not rule her?
Paul. From all dishonesty he can: in this,
(Unless he take the course that you have done, Commit me for committing honour) trust it,
He shall not rule me.
Ant.
Lo, you now! you hear.
When she will take the rein, I let her run;
But she 'll not stumble.
Paul.
Good my liege, I come,—
And, I beseech you, hear me, who professes
Myself your loyal servant, your physician,
Your most obedient counsellor, yet that dares
Less appear so in comforting* your evils,
The Winter's Tale

ACT II.

Than such as most seem yours,—I say, I come From your good queen;
Paul. Good queen, my lord; good queen; I say, good queen;
And would by combat make her good, so were I A man, the worst about you.

Paul. Let him that makes but trifles of his eyes First hand me. On mine own accord I'll off, But first I'll do my errand.—The good queen, For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter: Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing.

Leontes. [Laying down the Child. Out!
A mankind! witch! Hencw with her, out o' door! A most intelligencing hawd!
Paul. Not so:
I am as ignorant in that, as you In so entitling me, and no less honest Than you are mad; which is enough, I'll warrant, As this world goes, to pass for honest.

Traitors!
Will you not push her out? Give her the bastard.— Thou, dotard, [To Antigonus.] thou art woman-tir'd, unroosted
By thy dame Partlet here.—Take up the bastard: Take 't up, I say; give 't to thy crone.

Paul. For ever
Unvenerable be thy hands, if thou Tak'st up the princess by that forced baseness Which he has put 'pon't!

Leontes. He dreads his wife.
Paul. So I would you did; then, 't were past all doubt, You'd call your children yours.

Antigonus. A nest of traitors! Ant. I am none, by this good light.
Paul. Nor I; nor any, But one that 's here, and that 's himself; for he The sacred honour of himself, his queen's, His hopeful son's, his babe's, betrays to slander, Whose sting is sharper than the sword's, and will not (Tor, as the case now stands, it is a curse He cannot be compell'd to 't) once remove The root of his opinion, which is rotten As ever oak, or stone, was sound.

Leontes. A callat,
Of boundless tongue, who late hath beat her husband, And now baits me!—This brat is none of mine: It is the issue of Polixenes. Hence with it; and, together with the dam, Commit them to the fire.

It is yours;
And, might we lay the old proverb to your charge, So like you, 't is the worse.—Behold, my lords, Although the print be little, the whole matter And copy of the father: eye, nose, lip, The trick of his frown, his forehead; nay, the valley, The pretty dimples of his chin, and cheek; his smiles; The very mould and frame of hand, nail, finger.— And, thou, good goddess Nature, which hast made it So like to him that got it, if thou hast The ordering of the mind too, 'mongst all colours No yellow in 't; lest she suspect, as he does, Her children not her husband's.

Leontes. A gross hug!—
And, lozel, thou art worthy to hang'd, That will not stay her tongue.

Ant. Hang all the husbands That cannot do that feat, you will leave yourself
Hardly one subject.

Leontes. Once more, take her hence.
Paul. A most unworthy and unnatural lord Can do no more.

Leontes. I'll ha' thee burn'd.
Paul. I care not:
It is an heretic that makes the fire,
Not she which burns in 't. I'll not call you tyrant; But this most cruel usage of your queen (Not able to produce more accusation Than your own weak hing'd fancy) something savours Of tyranny, and will ignoble make you, Yea, scandalous to the world.

Leontes. On your allegiance, Out of the chamber with her. Were I a tyrant, Where was her life? She durst not call me so, If she did know me one. Away with her!

Paul. I pray you, do not push me; I'll be gone. Look to your babe, my lord; 't is yours: Jove send her A better guiding spirit!—What need these hands?— You, that are thus so tender o'er his follies, Will never do him good, not one of you.

Paul. So, so:—farewell; we are gone.

Leontes. Thou, traitor, hast set on thy wife to this.— My child? away with 't!—even thou, that hast A heart so tender o'er it, take it hence, And say, it instantly consum'd with fire;
Even thou, and none but thou. Take it up straight. Within this hour bring me word 't is done, (And by good testimony) or I'll seize thy life, With what thou else call'st thine. If thou refuse, And wilt encounter with my wrath, say so;
The bastard-brains with these my proper hands Shall I dash out. Go, take it to the fire, For thou set'st th' on thy wife.

Ant. I did not, sir:
These lords, my noble fellows, if they please, Can clear me in 't.

Leontes. We can: my royal liege, He is now guilty of her coming hither.

Leontes. You're liars all.

1 Lord. Beseech your bigness, give us better credit. We have always truly serv'd you, and beseech you So to esteem of us; and on our knees we beg, (As recompense of our dear services, Past, and to come) that you do change this purpose; Which, being so horrible, so bloody, must Lead on to some foul issue. We all kneel.

Leontes. Am I a feather for each wind that blows? Shall I live on, to see this bastard kneel And call me father? Better burn it now, Than curse it then. But, be it; let it live:— It shall not neither.—You, sir, come you hither; [To Antigonus.]

You, that have been so tenderly officious With lady Margery, your midwife, there, To save this bastard's life,—for 't is a bastard, So sure as thy beard's grey,—what will you adventure To save this brat's life?

Ant. Any, my lord,
That my ability may undergone, And nobleness impose: at least, thus much; I'll pawn the little blood which I have left, To save the innocent; any thing possible.

Leontes. It shall be possible. Swear by this sword Thou will perform my bidding.

ACT III.

Even to the guilty, or the purgation—
Produce the prisoner.

Offi. It is his highness' pleasure, that the queen
Appear in person here in court. [Silence.

Enter Hermione, to her trial, guarded; Paulina and Ladies attending.

Leon. Read the indictment.

Offi. "Hermione, queen to the worthy Leontes, king of Sicilia, thou art here accused and arraigned of high treason, in committing adultery with Polixenes, king of Bohemia; and conspiring with Camillo to take away the life of our sovereign lord the king, thy royal husband; the pretence whereof being by circumstances partly laid open, thou, Hermione, contrary to the faith and allegiance of a true subject, didst counsel and aid them, for their better safety, to fly away by night."—Since what I am to say, must be but that Which contradicts my accusation, and
The testimony on my part no other
But what comes from myself, it shall scarce boot me
To say "Not guilty." mine integrity,
Being counted falsehood, shall, as I express it,
Be so receiv'd. But thus:—If powers divine
Behold our human actions, (as they do)
I doubt not, then, but innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience.—You, my lord, best know,
(Who least will seem to do so) my past life
Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy; which is more
Than history can pattern, though devis'd,
And play'd to take spectators. For behold me,
A fellow of the royal bed, which once
A moicry of the throne, a great king's daughter,
The mother to a hopeful prince, here standing
To prate and talk for life, and honour, 'fore
Who please to come and hear. For life, I prize it
As I weigh grief, which I would spare: for honour,
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And only that I stand for. I appeal

1 Not in f. e. 2 Printed as a stage direction in the 1st folio; the others omit it. Mod. ed., with Malone, usually add it to the previous speech. 3 The words, "to her trial," not in f. e. 4 Own.
To your own conscience, sir, before Polixenes
Came to your court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be; since he came,
With what encounter so uncurrent
Have stray'd? 't appear thus: if one jot beyond
The bound of honour, or, in act, or will,
That way inclining, harden'd be the hearts
Of that that hear me, and my near's of kin
Cry, "Fie!" upon my grave.

Leon. I ne'er heard yet,
That any of these bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gainsay what they did,
Than to perform it first.

Her. That's true enough:

Though 't is a saying, sir, not due to me.

Leon. You will not own it.

Her. More than mistress of,
Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes,
(With whom I am accus'd) I do confess,
I lov'd him, as in honour he requir'd,
With such a kind of love as might become
A lady like me; with a love, even such,
So and no other, as yourself commanded:
Which not to have done, I think, had been in me
Both disobedience and ingratitude
To you, and toward your friend, whose love had spoke,
Even since it could speak from an infant, freely,
That it was yours. Now, for conspiracy,
I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd
For me to try how: all I know of it
Is, that Camillo was an honest man;
And why he left your court, the gods themselves,
Wotting no more than I, are ignorant.

Leon. You know of his departure, as you know
What you have undert'na to do in 's absence.

Her. You speak a language that I understand not:
My life stands in the level2 of your dreams,
Which I'll lay down.

Leon. Your actions are my dreams:
You had a bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream'd it.—As you were past all shame,
(Those of your fact are so) so past all truth;
Which to deny concerns more than avail's; for as Thy brat hath been cast out, like to itself,
No father owning it; (which is indeed,
More criminal in thee than it) so thou
Shalt feel our justice, in whose easiest passage
Look for no less than death.

Her. Sir, spare your threats:
The bug, which you would fright me with, I seek.
To me can life be no commodity:
The crown and comfort of my life, your favour,
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went. My second joy,
And first-fruit's of my body, from his presence
I am barr'd, like one infectious. My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast,
The innocent milk in its most innocent month,
Haled out to murder: myself on every post
Proclaim'd a strumpet: with utmost hatred,
The child-bed privilege denied, which 'longs
To women of all fashion: lastly, hurried
Here to this place, 't he open air, before
I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should fear to die? Therefore, proceed,
But yet hear this; mistake me not.—No: life,
I prize it not a straw; but for mine honour,
(Which I would free) if I shall be condemn'd
Upon surmises, all proofs sleeping else
But what your jealousies awake, I tell you,
'T is rigour, and not law.—Your honours all,
I do refer me to the oracle:
Apollo be my judge.

Her. This your request
Is altogether just. Therefore, bring forth,
And in Apollo's name, his oracle. [Exeunt Officers.

Her. The emperor of Russia was my father:
O! that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial; that he did but see
The flatness of my misery, yet with eyes
Of pity, not revenge!

Re-enter Officers, with Cleomenes and Dion.

Offi. You here shall swear upon this sword of justice,
That you, Cleomenes and Dion, have Been both at Delphi; and from thence have brought
This seal'd-up oracle, by the hand deliver'd
Of great Apollo's priest; and that, since then,
You have not dare'd to break the holy seal,
Nor read the secrets in it.

Cleo. Dion. All this we swear.

Leon. Break up the seals, and read.

Offi. [Reads.] "Hermione is chaste, Polixenes blameless,
Camillo a true subject, Leontes a jealous tyrant,
His innocent babe truly begotten; and the king shall live without an heir, if that which is lost be not found."

Lords. Now, bless'd be the great Apollo!

Her. Praise!

Offi. Leon. Hast thou read truth?

Offi. Ay, my lord; even so
As it is here set down.

Leon. There is no truth at all in 't the oracle.
The sessions shall proceed: this is mere falsehood.

Enter a Servant, in haste.

Serv. My lord the king, the king!

Leon. What is the business?

Serv. O sir! I shall be hated to report it:
The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed,3 is gone.

Leon. How! gone?

Serv. Is dead. [Hermione swoons.

Leon. Apollo's angry, and the heavens themselves
Do strike at my injustice. How now there!

Paul. This news is mortal to the queen.—Look down,
And see what death is doing.

Leon. Take her hence:
Her heart is but o'ercharg'd; she will recover.—
I have too much believ'd mine own suspicion:—
Beseech you, tenderly apply to her
Some remedies for life.—Apollo, pardon
[Exeunt Paulina and Ladies, with Hermione.

My great profaneness 'gainst thine oracle!—
I 'll reconcile me to Polixenes,
New wo me my queen, recall the good Camillo,
Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of mercy;
For, being transported by my jealousies
To bloody thoughts and to revenge, I chose
Camillo for the minister, to poison
My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command; though I with death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing it, and being done: he, most humane,
And fill'd with honour, to my kingly guest

1 stray'd: in f. o. 2 Is the object at which him is taken. 3 Of how the queen may speed—the issue.
Unclesap'd my practice; quit his fortunes here,
Which he knew great, and to the hazard
Of all uncertainties himself commended,
No richer than his honour.—How he glisters
Thorough my rust! and how his piety
Does my deeds make the blacker!

Re-enter Paulina.

Paul. Woe the while!
O, cut my lace, lest my heart, cracking it,
Break too!

1. Lord. What fit is this, good lady?
Paul. What studied torments, tyrant, hast for me?
In lead?

Wherefore?

What old, or newer torture
Must I receive, whose every word deserves To taste of thy most worst? Thy tyrannic, Together working with thy jealousies,— Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle For girls of nine,—O! think, what they have done, And then run mad; indeed; stank mad, for all Thy by-gone follies were but spices of it.
That thou betray'dst Polixones, 't was nothing; That did but show thee of a fool, inconsistent; And damnable ungrateful: nor was 't much, Thou wouldst have poison'd good Camillo's honour, To have him kill a king; poor trespasses, More monstrous standing by! wherefore I reckon The peeping forth to crow's thy baby daughter, To be or none, or little; though a devil Would have shed water out of fire, ere don't:
Nor is 't directly laid to thee, the death Of the young prince, whose honourable thoughts (Thoughts high for one so tender) cleft the heart That could conceive a gross and foolish sire Blemish'd his gracious dam: this is not, no, Laid to thy answer: but the last,—O, lords! When I have said, cry, woe!—the queen, the queen, The sweet'st, dear'st creature's dead; and vengeance for 't
Not drop'y down yet.

Not drop'y down yet.

1. Lord. The higher powers forbid!
Paul. I say, she's dead; I'll swear 't: if word, nor oath, Prevail not, go and see. If you can bring Tincture, or lustre, in her lip, her eye, Heat outwardly, or breath within, I'll serve you As I would do the gods.—But, O thou tyrant! Do not repent these things, for they are heavier Than all thy woes can stir; therefore, betake thee To nothing but despair. A thousand knees Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting, Upon a barren mountain, and still winter, In storm perpetual, could not move the gods To look that way thou wert.

Leon. Go on; go on;

Thou canst not speak too much: I have deserved All tongues to talk their bitterest.

Leon. Say no more:
Howe'er the business goes, you have made fault I the boldness of your speech.

Paul. I am sorry for 't: All faults I make, when I shall come to know them, I do repent. Alas! I have show'd too much The rashness of a woman. He is touch'd To the noble heart.—What's gone, and what's past help, Should be past grief: do not receive affliction At repetition, I beseech you; rather, Let me be punish'd, that have minded you

| 1 my petition: in f. e. | * becoming: in f. e. | * weep: in f. a. | Of what you should forget. Now, good my liege, Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman: The love I bore your queen,—lo, fool again!— I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children; I'll not remember you of my own lord, Who is lost too. Take your patience to you, And I'll say nothing.

Leon. Thou didst speak but well, When most the truth, which I receive much better, Than to be pitied of thee. Pr'ythee, bring me To the dead bodies of my queen, and son. One grave shall be for both: upon them shall The causes of their death appear, unto Our shame and reproach. One day I'll visit The chapel where they lie; and tears shed there Shall be my recreation: so long as nature Will bear up with this exercise, so long I daily vow to use it. Come, and lead me To these sorrows.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Bohemia. A Desert Country near the Sea.

Antigonus, with the Babe; and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect, then, ourship hath touch'd upon The deserts of Bohemia?

Mar. Ay, my lord; and fear We have landed in ill times: the skies look grimly, And threaten present blusters. In my conscience, The heavens with that we have in hand are angry, And frown upon us.

Ant. Their sacred wills be done!—Go, get aboard; Look to thy bark: I'll not be long, before I call upon thee.

Mar. Make your best haste, and go not Too far i' the land; 't is like to be loud weather: Besides, this place is famous for the creatures Of prey that keep upon 't.

Ant. I'll follow instantly.

Mar. I am glad at heart To be so rid o' the business.

Ant. Come, poor babe:—

I have heard, (but not believ'd) the spirits o' the dead May walk again: if such thing be, thy mother Appeard to me last night, for ne'er was dream So like a waking. To me comes a creature, Sometimes her head on one side, some another; I never saw a vessel of like sorrow, So fill'd, and so o'er-running: in pure white robes, Like very sanctity, she did approach My cabin where I lay, thrice bow'd before me, And, gasping to begin some speech, her eyes Became two spouts: the fury spent, anon Did this break from her.—'t Good Antigonus, Since fate, against thy better disposition, Hath made thy person for the thrower-out Of my poor babe, according to thine oath, Places remote enough are in Bohemia, There wend, and leave it crying; and, for the babe Is counted lost for ever, Perdita. I pr'ythee, call 't: for this ungentle business, Put on thee by my lord, thou ne'er shalt see Thy wife Paulina more?—and so, with shrieks She melted into air. Affrighted much, I did in time collect myself, and thought This was so, and no stumper. Dreams are toys; Yet for this once, yea, superstitiously, I will be square by this. I do believe, Hermione hath suffer'd death; and that Apollo would, this being indeed the issue
Of king Polixenes; it should here be laid,
Either for life or death, upon the earth.
Of its right father.—Blessom, speed thee well!

[Exeunt.
There lic; and there thy character: there these,
[Exeunt with a Bundle.
Which may, if fortune please, both breed thee, pretty,
And still rest thine.—The storm begins.—Poor wretch!
That for thy mother's fault art thus expos'd [Thunder.
To loss, and what may follow.—Weep I cannot,
But my heart bleeds, and most accus'd am I,
To be by oath enjoin'd to this!—Farewell!
The day frowns more and more: thou art like to have
A lullaby too rough. I never saw [clamour—
The heavens so dim by day. [Bear roar. A savage
Well may I get aboard!—This is the chase.
I am gone for ever.

[Exit, pursued by a bear.

Enter an old Shepherd.

Shep. I would there were no age between ten and three-and-twenty, or that youth would sleep out the rest; for there is nothing in the between but getting wenches with child, wronging theancient, stealing, fighting.—Hark you now!—Would any but these boiled-brains of nineteen, and two-and-twenty, hunt this weather? They have scared away two of my best sheep; which, I fear, the wolf will sooner find, than the master: if any where I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, browzing of it. Good luck, and do thy will! what have we here? [Taking up the Babe] Mercy on's, a barn; a very pretty barn! A boy, or a child, I wonder?
A pretty one; a very pretty one. Sure some scape though I am not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gen-tlewoman in the scape. This has been some stair-work, some trunk-work, some behind-door work: they were warmer that got this, than the poor thing is here:
I'll take it up for pity; yet I'll tarry till my son come:
he halloed but even now.—Whoa, ho ho!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Hilloa, lea!

Shep. What! art so near? If thou 'lt see a thing to talk on when thou art dead and rotten, come hither.
What ails't this man?

Clo. I have seen two such sights, by sea, and by land!—but I am not to say it is a sea, for it is now the sky: betwixt the firmament and it you cannot thrust a bol'din's point.

Shep. Why, boy, how is it?

Clo: I would, you did but see how it chafes, how it rages, how it takes up the shore! but that's not to the point. O, the most piteous cry of the poor souls!
sometimes to see 'em, and not to see 'em: now the ship boring the moon with her mainmast; and anon flown with yest and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hogshead. And then for the land service:—to see how the bear tore out his shoulder bone; how he cried to me for help, and said his name was Antigusus, a nobleman.—But to make an end of the ship:
—to see how the sea flag-draped it—but, first, how the poor souls roared, and the sea mocked them;—
and how the poor gentleman roared, and the bear mocked him, both roaring louder than the sea, or weather.

Shep. Name of mercy! when was this, boy?

Clo. Now; now; I have not winked since I saw these sights: the men are not yet cold under water; nor the bear half dined on the gentleman: he's at it now.

Shep. Would I had been by, to have helped the old man!

Clo. I would you had been by the ship's side, to have helped her: there your charity would have lacked footing.

Shep. Heavy matters! heavy matters! but look thee here, boy. Now bless thyself: thou met'st with things dying, I with things new born. Here's a sight for thee; look thee: a bearing-cloth for a squire's child!
Look thee here: take up, take up, boy; open 't. So, let's see. It was told me I should be rich by the fairies: there is some changeling.—Open 't: what's within, boy?

Clo. You're a made old man: if the sins of your youth are forgotten you, you're well to live. Gold! all gold!

Shep. This is fairy gold, boy, and 't will prove so:
up with it, keep it close; home, home, the next way.
We are lucky, boy; and to be so still requires nothing but secrecy.—Let my sheep go.——Come, good boy, the next way home.

Clo. Go you the next way with your findings: I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never sure, but when they are hungry. If there be any of him left, I'll bury it.

Shep. That's a good deed. If thou may'st discern by that which is left of him, what he is, fetch me to the sight of him.

Clo. Marry, I will; and you shall help to put him there.

Shep. 'Tis a lucky day, boy, and we'll do good deeds on't.

[Exeunt.}
SCENE II. -THE WINTER'S TALE.

Equal with wondering: What of her enues, I list not prophecy; but let Time's news be known, when 'tis brought forth. A shepherd's daughter, and what to her adheres, which follows after, is 'th' argument of Time. Of this allow, if ever you have spent time worse ere now: If never, yet that Time himself doth say, He wishes earnestly you never may.

SCENE I. — The Same. A Room in the Palace of Polixenes.

Enter Polixenes and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more importunate: 'tis a sickness denying thee anything, a death to grant this.

Cam. It is fifteen years since I saw my country: though I have, for the most part, been aired abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent king, my master, hath sent for me; to whose feeling sorrows I might be some alloy, or I overween to think so, which is another spur to my departure.

Pol. As thou lovest me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services, by leaving me now. The need I have of thee, thine own goodness hath made: better not to have had thee, than thus to want thee. Thou, having made me businesses, which none without thee can sufficiently manage, must either stay to execute them thyself, or take away with thee the very services thou hast done; which if I have not enough considered, (as too much I cannot) to be more thankful to thee shall be my study, and my profit therein, the heaping friendships. Of that fatal country, Sicilia, prythee speak: no more, whose very naming punishes me with the remembrance of that penitent, as thou call'st him, and reconciled king, my brother; whose loss of his most precious sons, and children, are even now to be afresh lamented. Say to me, when saw'st thou the prince Florizel, my son? Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them when they have approved their virtues.

Cam. Sir, it is three days since I saw the prince. What his happier affairs may be, are to me unknown: but I have musingly noted, he is of late much retired from court, and is less frequent to his princely exercises than formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I have considered so much, Camillo, and with some care; so far, that I have eyes under my service, which look upon his remoteness: from whom I have this intelligence; that he is seldom from the house of a most holy shepherd; a man, they say, that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbours, is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Cam. I have heard, sir, of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is extended more than can be thought to begin from such a cottage.

Pol. That's likewise part of my intelligence, but I fear, the angle that plucks our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place, where we will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd; from whose simplicity, I think it not easy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Pr'ythee, be my present partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I willingly obey your command.

Pol. My best Camillo! — We must disguise ourselves.

[Exeunt.]
SCENE III.—The Same. A Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter Florizel and Perdita.

Flo. These, your unusual weeds, to each part of you Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora Peering in April's front. This, your sheep-shearing, Is as a meeting of the petty gods, And you the queen on't.

Per. Sure, 'tis my gracious lord, To chide at your extremes it not becomes me; O! pardon, that I name them: your high self, The gracious mark of the land, you have obscured With a swain's wearing, and me, poor lowly maid, Most goddess-like pranks'd up. But that our feasts In every mess have folly, and the feeders Digest it with a custom, I should blush To see you so attir'd, so worn', I think, To show myself a glass.

Flo. I bless the time, When my good falcon made her flight across Thy father's ground.

Per. Now, Jove afford you cause! To me the difference forgives dread; your greatness Hath not been us'd to fear. Even now I tremble To think, your father, by some accident, Should pass this way, as you did... O, the fates! How would he look, to see his work, so noble, Vilely bound up? What would he say? Or how Should I, in these my borrow'd flaunts, behold The sternness of his presence?

Flo. Apprehend Nothing but jollity. The gods themselves, Humbling their deities to love, have taken The shapes of beasts upon them: Jupiter Became a bull, and bellow'd; the green Neptune A ram, and bleated; and the fire-rob'd god, Golden Apollo, a poor humble swain, As I seem now. Their transformations Were never for a piece of beauty rarer, Nor any way so chaste; since my desires Run not before mine honour, nor my lusts Burn hotter than my faith.

Per. O! but, sir, Your resolution cannot hold, when 'tis Oppos'd, as it must be, by the power of the king. One of these two must be necessities, Which then will speak—that you must change this purpose, Or I my life.

Flo. Thou dearst Perdita, With these fore'd thoughts, I pr'ythee, darken not The mirth of the feast: or 'twill be thine, my fair, Or not my father's; for I cannot be Mine own, nor any thing to any, if I be not taken: to this I am most constant, Though destiny say, no. Be merry, girl!; Strangle such thoughts as these with any thing That you behold the while. Your guests are coming: Lift up your countenance, as 't were the day Of celebration of that nuptial, which We two have sworn shall come.

Per. O, lady fortune, Stand you auspicious!

Enter Shepherd, with Polixenes and Camillo, dis- guised; Clown, Mopsa, Dorcas, and others.

Flo. See, your guests approach: Address yourself to entertain them sprightly, And let's be red with mirth.

1 Pick his pocket: in f. e. 2 An old game resembling bagatelle. 3 A puppet-show. 4 unrolled: in f. e. 5 Sir: in f. e. 6 attired, sworn: in f. e. 7 in a: in f. e. 8 gentle: in f. e.
THE WINTER’S TALE.

Shep. Fie, daughter! when my old wife liv’d, upon
This day she was both pantler, butler, cook;
Both dame and servant; welcome all; serv’d all;
Would sing her song, and dance her turn; now here,
At upper end o’ the table, now, ’t’ middle,
On his shoulder, and his; her face o’ fire
With labour, and the thing she tool to quench it,
She work’d with middle one slip. You are retir’d,
As if you were a feasted one, and not
The hostess of the meeting: pray you, bid
These unknown friends to us welcome; for it is
A way to make us better friends, more known.
Come; quench your blushes, and present yourself
That which you are, mistress o’ the feast: come on,
And bid us welcome to your sheep-shearing,
As your good flock shall prosper.

Per. [To Pol.] Sir, welcome.
It is my father’s will, I should take on me
The hostess-ship o’ the day:—[To Cam.] You’re welcome, sir.
Give me those flowers there, Dorcas. Reverend sirs, For you there’s rosemary, and rue; these keep Seeming and savour all the winter long:
Grace, and remembrance, be to you both,
And welcome to our shearing!

Pol. Shepherdesse,
(A fair one are you) well you flit our ages
With flowers of winter.

Per. Sir, the year growing ancient,—
Not yet on summer’s death, nor on the birth
Of trembling winter,—the fairest flowers o’ the season
Are our carnations, and streak’d gillyflowers!
Which some call nature’s bastards: of that kind
Our rustic garden’s barren, and I care not
To get slips of them.

Per. Do you neglect them?

Pol. For I have heard it said,
There is an art which, in their piedness, shares
With great creating nature.

Say, there be;
Yet nature is made better by no mean,
But nature makes that mean: so, o’er that art,
Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry
A gentler scope to the wildest stock,
And make conceive a bank of baser kind
By bud of nobler race: this is an art
Which does mend nature,—change it rather; but the Art itself is nature.

So it is.

Per. Then make your garden rich in gilly-flowers,
And do not call them bastards.

I’ll not put
The dibble in earth to set one slip of them:
No more than, were I painted, I would wish
This youth should say, ’t were well, and only therefore Desire to breed by me.—Here’s flowers for you;
Hot lavender, mints, savory, marjoram;
The marigold, that goes to bed wi’ the sun,
And with him rises weeping: these are flowers
Of middle summer, and, I think, they are given
To men of middle age. You are very welcome.

Cam. I should leave grazing, were I o’ your flock,
And only live by grazing.

Per. Out, alas!
You’d be so lean, that blasts of January
Would blow you through and through.—Now, my fair’s friend,

I would, I had some flowers o’ the spring, that might Become your time of day; and yours, and yours,
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads growing:—O Proserpina!
For the flowers now, that, friended, thou let’st fall
From Dis’s waggon! daffodils,
That come before the swallow dares, and take
The winds of March with beauty; violets dim,
But sweeter than the lides of Juno’s eyes,
Or Cytherea’s breath; pale primroses,
That die unmarried ere they can behold
Bright Phoebus in his strength, a malady
Most incident to maids; bold oxlips, and
The crown imperial; lilies of all kinds,
The flower-de-luce being one. O! these I lack,
To make you garlands of, and my sweet friend,
To strew him o’er and o’er.

Flo. What! like a corse?

Per. No, like a bank, for love to lie and play on,
Not like a corse; or if,—not to be buried,
But quick, and in mine arms. Come, take your flowers.
Methinks, I play as I have seen them do
In Whitsun-pastorals: sure, this robe of mine
Does change my disposition.

Flo. What you do
Still betters what is done. When you speak, sweet,
I’d have you do it ever: when you sing,
I’d have you buy and sell so; so give alms;
Pray so; and, for the ordering your affairs,
To sing them too. When you do dance, I wish you
A wave o’ the sea, that you might ever do
Nothing but that; move still, still so,
And own no other function: each your doing,
So singular in each particular,
Crowns what you are doing in the present deeds,
That all your acts are queens.

Per. O Doricles! Your praises are too large: but that your youth,
And the true blood, which peeps so fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an unstat’d shepherd,
With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles,
You woo’d me the false way.

Flo. I think, you have
As little skill to fear, as I have purpose
To put you to’t.—But, come; our dance, I pray.
Your hand, my Perdita: so turtles pair,
That never mean to part.

Per. I’ll swear for ‘em.

Pol. This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever
Ran on the greensward: nothing she does, or says,
But smacks of something greater than herself;
Too noble for this place.

Cam. He tells her something,
That wakes her blood:—look on it. Good sooth, she is
The queen of curds and cream.

Clo. Come on, strike up.

Dor. Mopsa must be your mistress: marry, garlick,
To mend her kissing with.—

Mop. Now, in good time—

Clo. Not a word, a word: we stand upon our manners.—

Come, strike up. [Music.

[Here a dance of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray, good shepherd, what fair swain is this,
Which dances with your daughter?

Shep. They call him Doricles, and boasts himself
To have a worthy breeding: but I have it
Upon his own report, and I believe it:
He looks like sooth. He says, he loves my daughter:

1 Old copies: gillygors. 2 Reason. 3 seems: in f. e. 4 That makes her blood look on’t: in f. e.
I think so too; for never gaz’d the moon
Upon the water, as he’ll stand, and read,
As ’t were, my daughter’s eyes; and, to be plain,
I think, there is not half a kiss to choose,
Who loves another best.

Pol. She dances fealty.
Slep. So she does any thing; though I report it,
That should be silent. If young Doricles
Do light upon her, she shall bring him that
Which he not dreams of.

Enter a Servant.
Serv. O master! if you did but hear the pedlar at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe; no, the bagpipe could not move you. He sings several tunes faster than you’ll tell money; he utters them as he had eaten ballads, and all men’s ears grew to his tunes.

Clo. He could never come better: he shall come in
I love a ballad but even too well; if it be doeful matter, merrily set down, or a very pleasant thing indeed, and sung lamentably.

Serv. He hath songs, for man, or woman, of all sizes:
no milliner can sit his customers with gloves. He has the prettiest love-songs for maids; so without bawdry, which is strange; with such delicate burdens of “diddles” and “faddings,” “jump her and thump her;” and where some stretch’d-mouth’d rascal would, it was, mean mischief, and break a soul jape in the matter, he makes the maid to answer, “Whoop, do me no harm, good man?” puts him off; slights him with “Whoop, do me no harm, good man.”

Pol. This is a brave fellow.

Clo. Believe me, thou talkest of an admirable-con ceited fellow. Has he any embroidered wares?

Serv. He hath ribands of all the colours i’ the rainbow; points, more than all the lawyers in Bohemia can learnedly handle though they come to him by the gross;
inkles, caddisses, cambrics, lawns; why he sings them over, as they were gods or goddesses. You would think a snook were a she-angel, he so chants to the sleeve-band; and the work about the square’s on’t.

Clo. Pr’ythee, bring him in, and let him approach singing.

Per. Forewarn him, that he use no scurrilous words
in’s tunes.

Clo. You have of these pedlars, that have more in them than you’d think, sister.

Per. Ay; good brother, or go about to think.

Enter Autolycus, singing:

Lawn, as white as driven snow;
Cypres, black as e’er was crow;
Gloves, as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces, and for noses;
Buggle-bracelet, necklace amber,
Perfume for a lady’s chamber:
Golden quips, and stomachers,
For my ladis to give their dears;
 Pins and poking-sticks of steel,
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come, buy of me, come; come buy, come buy;
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry:
Come, buy.

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopea, thou shouldest take no money of me; but being enthral’d as I am, it will also be the bondage of certain ribands and gloves.

Mop. I was promised them against the feast, but they come not late now.

Dor. He hath promised you more than that, or there be liars.

Mop. He hath paid you all he promised you: may be, he has paid you more, which will shame you to give him again.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maids? will they wear their plackets, where they should bear their faces? Is there not milking-time when you are going to bed, or kiln-hole, to whisper off these secrets, but you must be little-talking before all our guests? ’Tis well they are whispering. Charm! your tongues, and not a word more.

Mop. I have done. Come, you promised me a tawdry lace, and a pair of sweet gloves.

Clo. Have I not told thee, how I was cozened by the way, and lost all my money?

Aut. And, indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad;
therefore, it behoves men to be wary.

Clo. Fear not thou, man, thou shalt lose nothing here.

Aut. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What Hast here? ballads?

Mop. Pray now, buy some: I love a ballad in pritnite, for then we are sure they are true.

Aut. Here’s one to a very doeful tune, How a usurer’s wife was brought to bed of twenty money bags at a burden; and how she longed to eat adders’ heads, and toads carbonadoed.

Mop. Is it true, think you?

Aut. Very true; and but a month old.

Dor. Bless me from marrying a usurer!

Aut. Here’s the midwife’s name to’t, one mistress Taleporter, and five or six honest wives that were present. Why should I carry lies abroad?

Mop. ‘Pray you now, buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by; and let’s first see more ballads: we’ll buy the other things anon.

Aut. Here’s another ballad, of a fish, that appeared upon the coast, on Wednesday the fourscore of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maids: it was thought she was a woman, and was turned into a cold fish, for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her.
The ballad is very pitiful, and as true.

Dor. Is it true too, think you?

Aut. Five justices’ hands at it, and witnesses more than my pack will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too: another.

Aut. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one.

Mop. Let’s have some merry ones.

Aut. Why this is a passing merry one, and goes to the tune of, “Two maids wooing a man.” There’s scarcely a maid westward but she sings it: ’tis in quest, I can tell you.

Mop. We can both sing it: if thou’lt bear a part,
thou shalt hear; ’tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on’t a month ago.

Aut. I can bear my part; you must know, ’tis my occupation: have at it with you.

SONG.

Aut. Get you hence, for I must go,
Whither fits not you to know.

Dor. Whither?

Mop. O! whither?

Dor. Whither?

Mop. It becomes thy oath full well,
Thou to me thy secrets tell.

Before this ancient sir, who, it should seem,
Hath sometimes lov'd: I take thy hand; this hand,
As soft as dove's down, and as white as it,
Or Ethiopian's tooth, or the fam'd snow, that's bolted
By the northern blasts twice o'er.

Pol. What follows this?
How prettily the young swain seems to wash
The hand, was fair before!—I have put you out.
But, to your protestation: let me hear
What you profess.

Flo. Do, and be witness to't.

Pol. And this my neighbour too?

Flo. And he, and more
Than he, and men; the earth, the heavens, and all;
That were I crown'd the most imperial monarch,
Thereof most worthy; were I the fairest youth
That ever made eye swerve; had sense, and knowledge,
More than was ever man's; I would not prize them,
Without her love: for her employ them all,
Commend them, and condemn them, to her service,
Or to their own perdition.

Pol. Fairly offer'd.

Cam. This shows a sound affection.

Skep. But, my daughter,
Say you the like to him?

Per. I cannot speak
So well, nothing so well; no, nor mean better:
By the pattern of mine own thoughts I cut out
The purity of his.

Skep. Take hands; a bargain:
[Joining their hands.]

And, friends unknown, you shall bear witness to't.
I give my daughter to him, and will make
Her portion equal his.

Flo. O! that must be
I the virtue of your daughter: one being dead,
I shall have more than you can dream of yet;
Enough then for your wonder. But, come on;
Contract us 'fore these witnesses.
Come, your hand;

And, daughter, yours.

Pol. Soft, swain, awhile, beseech you.
Have you a father?

Flo. I have; but what of him?

Pol. Knows he of this?

Flo. He neither does, nor shall.

Pol. Methinks, a father
Is at the nuptial of his son a guest
That best becomes the table. Pray you, once more:
Is not your father grown incapable
Of reasonable affairs? is he not stupid
With age, and altering rheums? Can he speak? hear?
Know man from man? dispose' his own estate?
Lies he not bed-rid? and again, does nothing,
But what he did being childish?

Flo. No, good sir;
He has his health, and ample strength, indeed,
Than most have of his age.

Pol. By my white beard,
You offer him, if this be so, a wrong
Something unfaith. Reason, my son
Should choose himself a wife; but as good reason,
The father, (all whose joy is nothing else
But fair posterity) should hold some counsel
In such a business.

Flo. I yield all this;
But for some other reasons, my grave sir,
Which 't is not fit you know, I not acquaint

Pol. Pr'ythee, let him.

Flo. No, he must not.

Shep. Let him, my son: he shall not need to grieve
At knowing of thy choice.

Flo. Come, come, he must not.—

Mark our contract.

Pol. Mark your divorce, young sir,

[Dismissing himself.
Whom son I dare not call: thou art too base
To be acknowledg'd. Thou a sceptre's heir,
That thus affect'st a sheep-hook!—Thou old traitor,
I am sorry, that by hanging thee I can
But shorten thy life one week.—And thou fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know
The royal fool thou cop'st with—

Per. O, my heart!

Pol. I'll have thy beauty scratch'd with briers, and made
More homely than thy state.—For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know, thou dost but sigh
'That thou no more shalt never' see this knack, (as never
I mean thou shalt) we'll bar thee from succession;
Not hold thee of our blood, nor not our kin,
Far than Denecall off:—mark thou my knav, my words.
Follow us to the court.—Thou, churl, for this time,
Though full of our displeasure, yet we free thee
From the dead blow of it.—And you, enchantment,—
Worthy enough a herdsman; yea, him too,
That makes himself, but for our honour therein,
Unworthy thee,—if ever henceforth thou
These rural latches to his entrance open,
Or hoop his body more with thy embraces,
I will devise a death as cruel for thee,
As thou art tender to't.

[Exit.

Flo. Even here undone! I was not much afeard; for once, or twice,
I was about to speak, and tell him plainly,
The self-same sun that shines upon his court,
Hides not his visage from our cottage, but Looks on alike.—Will 't please you, sir, be gone?

[To FLORIZEL.

I told you, what would come of this. Beseech you,
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,
Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch farther,
But milk my ewes, and weep.

Cam. Why, how now, father? Speak, ere thou diest.

Shep. I cannot speak, nor think;
Nor dare to know that which I know.—O, sir,

[To FLORIZEL.

You have undone a man of fourscore three,
That thought to fill his grave in quiet; yea,
To die upon the bed my father died,
To lie close by his honest bones; but now,
Some hangman must put on my shroud, and lay me
Where no priest shovels in dust.—O, cursed wretch!

[To PERDITA.

That know'st this was the prince, and wouldst adventure
To mingle faith with him.—Undone! undone!
If I might die within this hour, I have liv'd
To die when I desire.

[Exit.

Flo. Why look you so upon me?
I am but sorry, not afeard: delay'd,
But nothing alter'd. What I was, I am:
More straining on, for plucking back; not following

My leash unwillingly.

Cam. Gracious my lord,
You know your father's temper: at this time
He will allow no speech, (which, I do guess,
You do not purpose to him) and as hardly
Will he endure your sight as yet, I fear:
Then, till the fury of his highness settle,
Come not before him.

Flo. I not purpose it.

I think, Camillo?

Cam. Even he, my lord.

Per. How often have I told you 't would be thus?
How often said my dignity would last
But till 't were known?

Flo. It cannot fail, but by
The violation of my faith; and then,
Let nature crush the sides o' the earth together,
And mar the seeds within.—Lift up thy looks:
From my succession wipe me, father; I
Am heir to my affection.

Cam. Be advis'd.

Flo. I am; and by my fancy: if my reason
Will there be obedient, I have reason;
If not, my senses, better pleas'd with madness,
Do bid it welcome.

Cam. This is desperate, sir.

Flo. So call it; but it does fulfill my vow:
I needs must think it honestly. Camillo,
Not for Bohemia, nor the pomp that may
Be thereat glee'n'd; for all the sun sees, or
The close earth wombs, or the profound seas hide
In unknown fathoms, will I break my oath
To this my fair belov'd. Therefore, I pray you,
As you have ever been my father's honour'd friend,
When he shall miss me, (as, in faith, I mean not
To see him any more) cast your good counsels
Upon his passion: let myself and fortune
Tug for the time to come. This you may know,
And so deliver.—I am put to sea
With her, whom here I cannot hold on shore;
And, most opportune to our need, I have
A vessel rides fast by, but not prepar'd
For this design. What course I mean to hold Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concern me the reporting.

Cam. O, my lord!
I would your spirit were more easy for advice,
Or stronger for your need.

Flo. Hark, Perdita.—

[To Camillo.] I'll hear you by and by. [They talk apart.]

Cam. He's irremovable; Resolv'd for flight. Now were I happy, if His going I could frame to serve my turn;
Save him from danger, do him love and honour,
Purchase the sight again of dear Sicilia,
And that unhappy king, my master, whom
I so much thirst to see.

Flo. Now, good Camillo, I am so fraught with serious business, that I leave out ceremony.

[Going.

Cam. Sir, I think,
You have heard of my poor services, i' the love
That I have borne your father?

Flo. Very nobly
Have you deserv'd: it is my father's music,
To speak your deeds; not little of his care
To have them recompens'd, as thought on:

Cam. Well, my lord,
If you may please to think I love the king,
And, through him, what’s nearest to him, which is
Your gracious self, embrace but my direction,
(If your more ponderous and settled project
May suffer alteration) on mine honour
I’ll keep you wherewith you shall have such receiving
As shall become your highness; where you may Enjoy your mistress; (from the whom, I see,
There’s no disjunction to be made, but by,
As heavens forefend, your ruin) marry her;
And (with my best endeavours in your absence)
Your discontenting father strive to qualify,
And bring him up to liking.

Flo. How, Camillo,
May this, almost a miracle, be done,
That I may call thee something more than man,
And, after that, to trust thee.

Cam. Have you thought on
A place whereto you ’ll go?

Flo. Not any yet;
But as th’ unthought-on accident is guilty
To what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows.

Cam. Then list to me:
This follows. If you will not change your purpose,
But undergo this flight, make for Sicilia,
And there present yourself, and your fair princess,
(For so, I see, she must be) before Leontes:
She shall be habited, as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Methinks, I see
Leontes, opening his free arms, and weeping
His Welcome forth; asks thee, the son, forgiveness,
As ’t were i’ the father’s person; kisses the hands
Of your fresh princess; and o’er and o’er divides him
’Twixt his unhappiness and his kindness: th’ one
He chides to hell, and bids the other grow
Faster than thought, or time.

Flo. Worthy Camillo,
What colour for my visitation shall I
Hold up before him?

Cam. Sent by the king, your father,
To greet him, and to give him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you, as from your father, shall deliver,
Things known between us three, I’ll write you down:
The which shall point you forth: for my sitting
What you must say, that he shall not perceive,
But that you have your father’s bosom there,
And speak his very heart.

Flo. I am bound to you.

Cam. There is some sap in this.

Cam. A course more promising
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpatith’ed waters, undream’d shores; most certain,
To miseries enough: no hope to help you,
But, as you shake off one, to take another:
Nothing so certain as your anchors, who
Do their best office, if they can but stay you
Where you’ll be lost to be. Besides, you know,
Prosperity’s the very bond of love,
Whose fresh complexion, and whose heart together,
Affliction alters.

Per. One of these is true:
I think, affliction may subdue the check,
But not take in the mind.

Cam. Yea, say you so?
There shall not, at your father’s house, these seven years,
Be born another such.

Flo. My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is i’ the rear of birth.

Cam. I cannot say, ’tis pity
She lacks instructions, for she seems a mistress
To mold that teach.

Per. Your pardon, sir; for this I’ll blush you thanks.

Flo. My prettiest Perdita.—
But, O, the thorns we stand upon!—Camillo,
Preserver of my father, now of me,
The medicine of our house, how shall we do?
We are not furnish’d like Bohemia’s son,
Nor shall appear ’t in Sicily.

Cam. My lord,
Fear none of this. I think, you know, my fortunes
Do all lie there: it shall be so my care
To have you royally appointed, as if
The scene you play were true. For instance, sir,
That you may know you shall not want,—one word.

[They talk apart.]

Enter Autolycus.

Aut. Ha, ha! what a fool honesty is! and trust, his sworn brother, a very simple gentleman! I have sold all my trumpery, not a counterfeite-stone, not a riband, glass, pomander, brooch, table-book, ballad, knife, tape, glove, shoe-tie, bracelet, horn-ring, to keep my pack from fasting: they thronged who should buy first: as if my trinkets had been hallowed, and brought a beneficent to the buyer: by which means, I saw whose purse was best in picture, and what I saw, to my good use I remembered. My clown (who wants but something to be a reasonable man) grow so in love with the wrenches’ song, that he would not stir his petticoats, till he had both tune and words; which so drew the rest of the herd to me, that all their other senses stuck in ears: you might have pinched a placket, it was senseless; ’t was nothing to geld a codepiece of a purse; I would have fleted keys off, that hung in chains: no hearing, no feeling, but my sir’s song, and admiring the nothing of it: so that, in this time of lethargy,
I picked and cut most of their festival purses, and had not the old man come in with a whoo-bub’ against his daughter and the king’s son, and scared my choughs from the chaff, I had not left a purse alive in the whole army.

[Camillo, Florizel, and Perdita, come forward.

Cam. Now, but a pretty, by this means being there
So soon as you arrive, shall clear that doubt.

Flo. And those that you’ll procure from king Leon-tes?

Cam. Shall satisfy your father.

Per. Happy be you!

All that you speak shows fair.

Cam. Whom have we here?—Seeing Autolycus.
We’ll make an instrument of this: omit
Nothing may give us aid.

Aut. If they have overheard me now,—why hanging.

Cam. How now, good fellow! Why shakest thou so?—Fear not, man; here’s no harm intended to thee.

Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir.

Cam. Why, be so still; here’s nobody will steal that from thee: yet, for the outside of thy poverty, we must make an exchange: therefore, disease thee instantly, thou must think, there’s a necessity in ’t and change garments with this gentleman. Though the penny-worth on his side be the worst, yet hold thee, there’s some boot.

[Giving money.]

Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir.—[Aside.] I know ye well enough.

Flo. Should I now meet my father,
He would not call me son.
Cam. Nay, you shall have no hat.
[Give it to Perdita.

Come, lady, come.—Farewell, my friend.
Aut. Adieu, sir.

Flo. Oh Perdita! what have we twain forgot?
Pray you, a word. [They talk apart.

Cam. What I do next shall be to tell the king
Of this escape, and whither they are bound;
Wherein, my hope is, I shall so prevail,
To force him after; in whose company
I shall review Sicilia, for whose sight
I have a woman’s longing.

Flo. Fortune speed us!—Thus we set on, Camillo, to the sea-side.
Cam. The swifter speed, the better.
[Exeunt Florizel, Perdita, and Camillo.

Aut. I understand the business; I hear it. To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cut-purse: a good nose is requisite also, to smell out work for the other senses. I see, this is the time that the unjust man doth thrive. What an exchange had this been without boot! what a boot is here with this exchange! Sure, the gods do this year connive at us, and we may do any thing extempore.
The prince himself is about a piece of iniquity; stealing away from his father, with his clog at his heels. If I thought it were a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would not do’t: I hold it the more knavery to conceal it, and therein am I constant to my profession.

Enter Clown and Shepherd.

Aside, aside:—here is more matter for a hot brain.
Every lane’s end, every shop, church, session, hanging, yields a careful man work.

C1. See, see, what a man you are now! There is no other way, but to tell the king she’s a changeling, and none of your flesh and blood.

Shep. Nay, but hear me.

C1. Nay, but hear me.

Shep. Go to, then.

C1. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the king; and so your flesh and blood is not to be punished by him. Show those things you found about her; those secret things, all but what she has with her. This being done, let the law go whistle; I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the king all, every word, yea, and his son’s pranks too; who, I may say, is no honest man, neither to his father, nor to me, to go about to make me the king’s brother-in-law.

C1. Indeed, brother-in-law was the furthest off you could have been to him; and then your blood had been the dearer, by I know how much an ounce.

Aut. [Aside.] Very wisely, puppies!

Shep. Well, let us to the king: there is that in this farde] will make him scratch his beard.

Aut. [Aside.] I know not what impediment this complaint may be to the flight of my master.

C1. Pray heartily he be at palace.

Aut. [Aside.] Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance:—let me pocket up my pedler’s excrement?—[Takes off his false beard.] How now, rusties! whither are you bound?

Shep. To the palace, an it like your worship.

Aut. Your affairs there? what? with whom? the condition of that farde], the place of your dwelling, your names, your ages, of what having 4, breeding, and any thing that is fitting to be known? discover.

C1. We are but plain fellows, sir.

Aut. A lie: you are rough and hairy. Let me have no lying: it becomes none but tradesmen, and they often give us soldiers the lie; but we pay them for it with stamped coin, not stubbing steel: therefore, they do not give us the lie.

C1. You were had like to have given us one, if you had not taken yourself with the manner.

Shep. Are you a courtier, an’t like you, sir?

Aut. Whether it like me, or no, I am a courtier. Seest thou not the air of the court in these enfoldings? hast not my gait in it the measure of the court? receivs not thy nose court-odour from me? reflect I not on thy baseness court-contempt? Thank’s thou, for that I insinuate, or touze 9 from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier? I am courtier, cap-a-pie; and one that will either push on, or pluck back thy business there: whereupon, I command thee to open thy affair.

Shep. My business, sir, is to the king.

Aut. What advocate hast thou to him?

Shep. I know none’an’t like you.

C1. Advocate is the court-word for a pheasant; say, you have none.

Shep. None, sir: I have no pheasant, cock, nor hen.

Aut. How bless’d are we that are not simple men! Yet nature might have made me as these are, Therefore I’ll not disdain.

C1. This cannot but be a great courtier.

Shep. His garments are rich, but he wears them not handsomely.

C1. He seems to be the more noble in being fantastical: a great man, I’ll warrant; I know, by the picking on’s teeth.

Aut. The horse there? what’s it the farde? Wherefore that box?

Shep. Sir, there lie such secrets in this farde, and box, which none must know but the king; and which he shall know within this hour, if I may come to the speech of him.

Aut. Age, thou hast lost thy labour.

Shep. Why, sir?

Aut. The king is not at the palace: he is gone aboard a new ship to purge melancholy, and air himself: for, if thou be’st capable of things serious, thou must know, the king is full of grief.

Scene I. The Winter's Tale.

Skep. So 'tis said, sir; about his son, that should have married a shepherd's daughter.

Aur. If that shepherd be not in hand-fast, let him fly: the curses he shall have, the tortures he shall feel, will break the back of man, the heart of monster.

Clo. Think you so, sir?

Aur. Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter, but those that are germane to him, though removed fifty times, shall all come under the hangman: which, though it be great pity, yet it is necessary. 'An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram-tender, to offer to have his daughter come into grace!' Some say, he shall be stoned: 'but that death is too soft for him, say I.' Draw our throne into a sheep-cote? all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easy.

Clo. Has the old man o'er a son, sir, do you hear, an't like you, sir?

Aur. He has a son, who shall be flayed alive, then 'pointed over with honey, set on the head of a wasp's nest; there stand, till he be three quarters and a dram dead; then recovered again with aqua vitae, or some other hot-infusion; then, raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall he be set against a brick-wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him, where he is to behold him with flies blown to death. But what talk we of these traitorly rascals, whose miseries are to be smiled at, their offences being so capital? Tell me, (for you seem to be honest plain men) what you have to the king? being something gently considered, I'll bring you where he is aboard, tender your persons to his presence, whisper him in your behalfs; and, if it be in man, besides the king, to effect your suits, here is man shall do it.

Clo. He seems to be of great authority: close with him, give him gold; and though authority be a stub-born bear, yet he is oft led by the nose with gold. Show the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand, and no more ado. Remember, stoned, and flayed alive!

Aur. An't please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have: I'll make it as much more, and leave this young man in pawn, till I bring it you.

Aur. After I have done what I promised?

Skep. Ay, sir.

Aur. Well, give me the money. — Are you a party in this business?

Clo. In some sort, sir: but though my case be a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flayed out of it.

Aur. O! that's the case of the shepherd's son: hang him, he'll be made an example.

Aur. Comfort, good comfort! We must to the king, and show our strange sights: he must know, 'tis none of your daughter nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does, when the business is performed; and remain, as he says, your pawn, till it be brought you.

Aur. I will trust you. Walk before toward the sea-side: go on the right hand; I will but look upon the hedge, and follow you.

Clo. We are blessed in this man, as I may say; even blessed.

Skep. Let's before, as he bids us. He was provided to do us good. [Exeunt Shepherd and Clown.]

Aur. If I had a mind to be honest, I see, fortune would not suffer me: she drops booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion—gold, and a means to do the prince my master good; which, who knows how that may turn luck to my advancement? I will bring these two moles, these blind ones, aboard him: if he think it fit to shore them again, and that the complaint they have to the king concerns him nothing, let him call me rogue for being so far officious; for I am proof against that title, and what shame else belongs to 't. To him will I present them: there may be matter in it. [Exit.

ACT V.

Scene I. Sicilia. A Room in the Palace of Leontes. Enter Leontes, Cleomenes, Dion, Paulina, and Others.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have performed A saint-like sorrow: no fault could you make Which you have not redeem'd; indeed, paid down More penitence than done trespass. At the last, Do, as the heavens have done, forget your evil; With them, forgive yourself.

Leom. Whilst I remember Her, and her virtues, I cannot forget My blemishes in them, and so still think of The wrong I did myself; which was so much, That heless it hath made my kingdom, and Denroy'd the sweetst companion, that o'er man Beed his hopes out of: true.¹

Paul. Too true, my lord: If one by one you wedded all the world, Or from the all that are took something good, To make a perfect woman, she you kill'd Would be unparallel'd.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

ACT V.

Is't not the tenour of his oracle,
That king Leontes shall not have an heir,
Till his molest child be found? which, that it shall,
Is all as monstrous to our human reason,
As my Antigonus to break his grave,
And come again to me; who, on my life,
Did peril with the infant. 'Tis your counsel,
My lord should to the heavens be contrary,
Oppose against their wills.—Care not for issue;
The crown will find an heir: Great Alexander
Left his to the worthiest, so his successor
Was like to be the best.

Leon. Good Paulina,—
Who hast the memory of Hermione,
I know, in honour,—O, that ever I
Had squar'd me to thy counsel!—then, even now,
I might have look'd upon my queen's full eyes,
Have taken treasure from her lips,—
Paul. And left them
More rich, for what they yielded.
Leon. Thou speak'st truth.
No more such wives; therefore, no wife: one worse,
And better us'd, would make her sainted spirit
Again possess her corpse; and, on this stage,
(Where we offenders now appear) soul-vex'd,
Begin, 'And why to me?'

Paul. Had she such power,
She had just cause.
Leon. She had; and would incense me
To murder her I married.

Leon. I should so:
Were I the ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you mark
Her eye, and tell me for what dull part in 't
You chose her? then I'd shrive, that even your ears
Should rift to hear me, and the words that follow'd
Should be, "Remem'ring mine."

Leon. Stare, stare! And all eyes else dead coals.—Fear thou no wife; I'll have no wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you swear
Never to marry, but by my free leave?
Leon. Never, Paulina; so be bless'd my spirit!
Paul. Then, good my lords, bear witness to his oath.
Cleo. You tempt him over-much.

Paul. Unless another,
As like Hermione as is her picture,
And turn'd his eye,
Cleo. Good madam, I have done.
Paul. Yet, if my lord will marry,—if you will, sir,
No remedy, but you will—give me the office
To choose you a queen. She shall not be so young
As was your former; but she shall be such
As, walk'd your first queen's ghost, it should take joy
To see her in your arms.

Leon. My true Paulina,
We shall not marry, till thou bid'st us.

Paul. That
Shall be when your first queen's again in breath:
Never till then.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself prince Florizel Son of Polixenes, with his prince, (she
The fairest I have yet beheld,) desires acr-ss
To your high presence.

Leon. What! with him? he comes not
Like to his father's greatness: his approach,
So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us
'Tis not a visitationfram'd, but fore'd
By need, and accident. What train?

Gent. But few,
And those but mean.

Leon. His princess, say you, with him?
Gent. Ay; the most peerless piece of earth, I think,
That e'er the sun shone bright on.

Paul. O Hermione!
As every present time doth boast itself
Above a better, gone, so must thy grace!
Give way to what's seen now. Sir, you yourself
Have said and writ so, but your writing now
Is colder than that theme—She had not been,
Nor was not to be equal'd;—thus your verse
Flow'd with her beauty once: 't is shrewdly ebb'd,
To say you have seen a better.

Gent. Pardon, madam:
The one I have almost forgot, (your pardon)
The other, when she has obtain'd your eye,
Will have your tongue too. This is a creature,
Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal
Of all professors else, make presbytics
Of whom she did but follow.

Paul. How! not women?

Paul. Women will love her, that she is a woman
More worth than any man; men, that she is
The rarest of all women.

Leon. Go, Cleomenes;
Yourself, assisted with your honour'd friends,
Bring them to our embracement.—Still 't is strange, [Exeunt Cleomenes, Lords, and Gentleman.
He should thus steal upon us.

Paul. Had our Prince
(Jewel of children) seen this hour, he had pair'd
Well with this lord: there was not full a month
Between their births.

Leon. Pr'ythee, no more: cease! thou know'st,
He dies to me again, when talk'd of: sure,
When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches
Will bring me to consider that, which may Unfurnish me of reason.—They are come.—

Re-enter Cleomenes, with Florizel, Perdita, and Others.

Your mother was most true to wed-lock, prince,
For she did print your royal father off,
Conceiving you. Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so bit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him; and speak of something, wildly
By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome!
And your fair princess, goddess!—O, alas! I
Lest a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have stood, begetting wonder as,
You, gracious couple, do. And then I lost
(All mine own folly) the society,
Amity too, of your brave father; whom,
Though bearing misery, I desire my life
Once more to look on him.

Flo. By his command
Have I here touch'd Sicilia; and from him
Give you all greetings, that a king, as friend,
Can send his brother; and, but infirmity
(Which waits upon worn times) hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters 'twixt your throne and his Messur'd to look upon you, whom he loves
(Had bade me say so) more than all the sceptres,
And those that bear them, living.

Leon. O, my brother!
SCENE II.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

301

Good gentleman, the wrongs I have done thee stir
A fresh within me; and these thy offices,
So readily kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness.—Welcome hither,
As is the spring to th' earth. And hath he, too,
Expost’d this paragon to the fearful usage
(At least ungentle) of the dreadful Neptune,
To greet a man not worth her pains, much less
Th’ adventure of her person?

Flo. Good, my lord,
She came from Libya.

Leon. Where the warlike Smalus,
That noble, honour’d lord, is fear’d, and lov’d?

Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him, whose tears proclaim’d his, parting with her; thence (A prosperous south-wind friendly) we have cross’d,
To execute the charge my father gave me,
For visiting your highness. My best train
I have from your Sicilian shores dismiss’d,
Who for Bohemia bend, to signify,
Not only my success in Libya, sir,
But my arrival, and my wife’s, in safety
Here, where we are.

Leon. The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our air, whilst you
Do climate here! You have a noble father,
A graceful gentleman, against whose person,
So sacred as it is, I have done sin;
For which the heavens, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless; and your father’s bless’d
(As he from heaven merits it) with you,
Worthy his goodness. What might I have been,
Might I a son and daughter now have look’d on,
Such goodly things as you?

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir,
That which I shall report will bear no credit,
Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great sir,
Bohemia greets you from himself by me;
Desires you to attach his son, who has (His dignity and duty both cast off)
Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with A shepherd’s daughter.

Leon. Where’s Bohemia? speak
Lord. Here in your city; I now came from him:
I speak amazedly, and it becomes
My Marvel, and my message. To your court
While he was hastening (in the chase, it seems,
Of this fair couple) meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady, and
Her brother, having both their country quitted
With this young prince.

Flo. Camillo has betray’d me,
Whose honour, and whose honesty, till now,
Endur’d all weathers.

Lord. Lay ’t so to his charge:
He’s with the king your father.

Leon. Who? Camillo?

Lord. Camillo, sir: I spake with him, who now
Has these poor men in question. Never saw I
Wretches so quako: they kneel, they kiss the earth,
Forswear themselves as often as they speak:
Bohemia stops his ears, and threatens them
With divers deaths in death.

Per. O, my poor father!—
The heaven sets spies upon us, will not have
Our contract celebrated.

Leon. You are married?

Flo. We are not, sir, nor are we like to be;
The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first:
The odds for high and low’s alike.

Leon. My lord,
Is this the daughter of a king?

Flo. She is,
When once she is my wife.

Leon. That once, I see, by your good father’s speed,
Will come on very slowly. I am sorry,
Most sorry, you have broken from his liking,
Where you were tied in duty; and as sorry,
Your choice is not so rich in worth as beauty,
That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Dear, look up
Though fortune, visible an enemy,
Should chase us with our father, power no jot
Hath she to change our loves.—Beseech you, sir,
Remember since you ow’d no more to time
Than I do now; with thought of such affections,
Step forth mine advocate: at your request,
My father will grant precious things as trifles.

Leon. Would he do so, I’d beg your precious mistress,
Which he counts but a trifle.

Paul. Sir, my liege,
Your eye hath too much youth in ’t; not a month
’Fore your queen died, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now.

Leon. I thought of her,
Even in these looks I made.—But your petition

[To Florizel.

Is yet unanswer’d. I will to your father:
Your honour not o’erthrown by your desires,
I am a friend to them, and you; upon which errand
I now go toward him. Therefore, follow me,
And mark what way I make. Come, good my lord.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. Before the Palace.

Enter Autolycus and a Gentleman.

Aut. Beseech you, sir, were you present at this relation?

1 Gent. I was by at the opening of the fardel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazedness, we were all commanded out of the chamber; only this, methought
I heard the shepherd say, he found the child.

Aut. I would most gladly know the issue of it.

2 Gent. I make a broken delivery of the business;
but the changes I perceived in the king, and Camillo, were very notes of admiration: they seemed almost, with staring on one another, to tear the cases of their eyes; there was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture; they looked, as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed. A notable passion of wonder appeared in them; but the wisest beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say, if the importance were joy or sorrow, but in the extremity of the one it must needs be.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a gentleman, that, haply, knows more.—
The news, Rogero?

2 Gent. Nothing but bonfires. The oracle is fulfilled; the king’s daughter is found: such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour, that ballad-makers cannot be able to express it.

Enter a third Gentleman.

Here comes the lady Paulina’s steward; he can deliver you more.—How goes it now, sir? This news, which is called true, is so like an old tale, that the verity of it is in strong suspicion. Has the king found his heir?
THE WINTER'S TALE.

ACT V.

3 Gent. Most true, if ever truth were, pregnant by circumstance: that which you hear, you'll swear you see. There is such unity in the proofs. The maniacal queen Hermione; her jewel about the neck of it;—the letters of Antigonus found with it, which they know to be his character;—the majesty of the creature, in resemblance of the mother;—the affection of nobleness, which nature shows above her breeding, and many other evidences, proclaim her with all certainty to be the king's daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?

2 Gent. No.

3 Gent. Then you have lost a sight, which was to be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one joy crown another; so, and in such manner, that it seemed, sorrow went to take leave of them, for their joy waded in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands, with countenance of such distraction, that they were to be known by garments, not by favour. Our king, being ready to leap out of himself for joy of his found daughter, as if that joy were now become a loss, cries, "O, thy mother, thy mother!" then asks Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries his daughter with clipping her: now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by, like a weather-beaten conduit of many kings' reigns. I never heard of such another encounter, which James report to follow it, and undue deception to show itself. There was found in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled: she lifted the princess from the earth, and so locks her in embracing, as if she would pin her to her heart, that she might no more be in danger of losing her.

1 Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the audience of kings and princes, for by such was it acted.

3 Gent. One of the prettiest touches of all, and that which angled for mine eyes (caught the water, though not the fish) was, when at the relation of the queen's death, (with the manner how she came to it, heavily confessed, and lamented by the king) how attentiveness wounded his daughter: till, from one sign of colour to another, she did, mysteriously, make him say, "I would mince my bloody tears: for, I am sure, my heart wept blood. Who was most marble there changed colour; some swooned, all sorrowed: if all the world could have seen it, the woe had been universal.

1 Gent. Are they returned to the court?

3 Gent. No: the princess hearing of her mother's statue, which is in the keeping of Paulina,—a piece many years in doing, and now newly performed by that rare Italian master, Julio Romano; who, had he himself eternity and could put breath into his work, would beguile nature of her custom, so perfectly he is her ape: he so near to Hermione hath done Hermione, that, they say, one would speak to her, and stand in her, and not that she should stand in him. And, as far as affection, are they gone, and there they intend to sup.

2 Gent. I thought, she had some great matter there in hand, for she hath privately, twice or thrice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that removed house. Shall we thither, and with our company piece the rejoicing?

1 Gent. Who would be thence, that has the benefit of access? every wink of an eye, some new grace will be born: our absence makes us unthrifty to our knowledge. Let's along.

[Exeunt Gentlemen.

Aut. Now, I had not the dash of my former life in me, would preferment drop on my head. I brought the old man and his son aboard the prince; told him I heard them talk of a farthing, and I know not what; but he at that time, over-fond of the shepherd's daughter, (so he then took her to be) who began to be much sea-sick, and himself little better, extremity of weather continuing, this mystery remained undiscovered. But 'tis all one to me; for had I been the finder out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discredits.

Enter Shepherd and Closets, in new apparel. Here come those I have done good to against my will, and already appearing in the blossoms of their fortune.

Shep. Come, boy; I am past more children; but thy sons and daughters will be all gentlemen born.

Clo. You are well met, sir. You denied to fight with me this other day, because I was no gentleman born: see you these clothes? say, you see them not, and think me still no gentleman born: you were best say, these robes are not gentlemen born. Give me the lie, do, and try whether I am not now a gentleman born.

Aut. I know, you are now, sir, a gentleman born.

Clo. Ay, and have been so any time these four hours.

Shep. And so have I, boy.

Clo. So you have;—but I was a gentleman born before my father, for the king's son took me by the hand, and called me, brother; and then the two kings called my father, brother; and then the prince, my lord; and all the world called my father, father; and so we slept: and there was the first gentleman-like tears that ever we shed.

Shep. We may live, son, to shed many more.

Clo. Ay; or else 't were hard luck, being in so preposterous estate as we are.

Aut. I humbly beseech you, sir, to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your worship, and to give you my good report to the prince my master.

Shep. Pr'ythee, son; do; for we must be gentle, now we are gentlemen.

Clo. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Aut. Ay, an it like your good worship.

Clo. Give me thy hand: I will swear to the prince, thou art as honest, true, and faithful fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may say it, but not swear it.

Clo. Not swear it, now I am a gentleman? Let boors and franklins say it, I'll swear it.

Shep. How if it be false, son?

Clo. If it be pe'er so false, a true gentleman may swear it in the behalf of his friend:—And I'll swear to the prince, thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know, thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk;
but I'll swear it, and I would thou wouldest be a tall fellow of thy hands.

_Aut._ I will prove so, sir, to my power.

_Clo._ Ay, by any means prove a tall fellow: if I do not wonder how thou darrest venture to be drunk, not being a tall fellow, trust me not.—[Trumpets.] Hark! the stage and the princes, our kindred, are going to see the queen's picture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good masters.

The Winter's Tale.

Scene III.—The Same. A Chapel in Paulina's House.

Enter LEONTES, POLIENES, FLOREZEL, PERDITA, CAMILLO, PAULINA, Lords, and Attendants.

_LEON._ O grave and good Paulina, the great comfort That I have had of thee!

_Paul._ What, sovereign sir, I did not well, I meant well. All my services, You have paid home; but that you have vouchsafed, With your crown'd brother, and these you contracted Heirs of your kingdoms, my poor house to visit, It is a surplus of your grace, which never My life may last to answer.

_LEON._ O Paulina! We honour you with trouble. But we came To see the statue of our queen: your gallery Have we pass'd through, not without much content In many singularities, but we saw not That which my daughter came to look upon, The statue of her mother.

_Paul._ As she liv'd peerless, So her dead likeness, I do well believe, Excees whatever yet you look upon, Or hand of man hath done: therefore I keep it Lonely, apart. But here it is: prepare To see the life as lively mock'd, as ever Still sleep mock'd death: behold! and say, 'tis well.

[Paulina undraws a curtain, and discovers a statue.]

_Music playing._—_A pause._

I like your silence: it the more shows off Your wonder; but yet speak:—first you, my liege. Comes it not something near?

_LEON._ Her natural posture.—

_Chide me, dear stone, that I may say, indeed, Thou art Hermione; or, rather, thou art she._

_In thy not chiding, for she was as tender As infancy, and grace.—But yet, Paulina, Hermione was not so much wrinkled; nothing So aged, as this seems._

_Pol._ O! not by much.

_So much the more our carver's excellence; Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her As she liv'd now._

_LEON._ As now she might have done, So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul! O! thus she stand'd, Even with such life of majesty, (warm life, As now it coldly stands) when first I woot'd her. I am asham'd: does not the stone rebuke me, For being more stone than it?—O, royal piece! There's magic in thy majesty, which has My evils condicion'd to remembrance; and From thy admiring daughter took the spirits, Standing like stone with thee._

_Per._ And give me leave, And do not say 'tis superstition, that [Kneeling.] kneel, and thus implore her blessing.—Lady, Dear queen, that ended when I but began, Give me that hand of yours to kiss.

_Paul._ O, patience! The statue is but newly fix'd; the colour's Not dry.

_Cam._ My lord, your sorrow was too sore laid on, Which sixteen winters cannot blow away, So many summers dry: scarce any joy Did ever so long live; no sorrow, But kill'd itself much sooner.

_Pol._ Dear my brother, Let him that was the cause of this, have power To take off so much grief from you, as he Will piece up in himself.

_Paul._ Indeed, my lord, If I had thought, the sight of my poor image Would thus have wrought you, (for the stone is mine) I'd not have show'd it. [Offers to draw.]

_LEON._ Do not draw the curtain.

_Paul._ No longer shall you gaze on't, lest your fancy May think anon it moves.

_LEON._ Let be, let be! Would I were dead, but that, methinks, already I am but dead, stone looking upon stone. What was he that did make it?—See, my lord, Would you not deem it breath'd, and that those veins Did verily bear blood?

_Pol._ Masterly done: The very life seems warm upon her lip._

_LEON._ The fixture of her eye has motion in 't, As we are mock'd with art._

_Paul._ I'll draw the curtain.

My lord's almost so far transported, that _Offers again to draw._

He'll think anon it lives.

_LEON._ O, sweet Paulina! Make me to think so twenty years together: No settled senses of the world can match The pleasure of that madness. Let 't alone.

_Paul._ I am sorry, sir, I have thus far stirr'd you; but I could afflict you farther.

_Do, Paulina, For this affliction has a taste as sweet As any cordial comfort.—Still, methinks, There is an air comes from her: what fine chisel Could ever cut exception? Let no man mock me, For I will kiss her._

_Paul._ Good my lord, forbear. [She stays him.] The rudness upon her lip is wet: You'll mar it, if you kiss it; stain your own With oily painting. Shall I draw the curtain?

_LEON._ No, not these twenty years.

_Per._ So long could I Stand by, a looker on.

_Paul._ Either forbear, Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you For more amazement. If you can behold it, I'll make the statue move indeed; descend, And take you by the hand; but then you'll think, (Which I protest against) I am assisted By wicked powers.

_LEON._ What you can make her do, I am content to look on: what to speak, I am content to hear; for 't is as easy To make her speak, as move.

_Paul._ It is requir'd, You do awake your faith. Then, all stand still. On, those that think it is unlawful business I am about; let them depart.

_LEON._ Proceed:

_No foot shall stir._

'T is time; descend; be stone no more: approach;
Strike all that look upon with marvel. Come;
I'll fill your grave up: stir; nay, come away;
Bequest to death your numbness, for from him
Dear life redeems you. — You perceive, she stirs.

[Hermione descends slowly from the pedestal.

Start not: her actions shall be holy, as
You hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her,
Until you see her die again, for then
You kill her double. Nay, present your hand:
When she was young you woo'd her; now, in age,
Is she become the suitor?

Leon. O! she's warm. [Embracing her.

If this be magic, let it be an art
Lawful as eating.

Pol. She embraces him.

Cam. She hangs about his neck.

If she pertain to life, let her speak too.

Pol. Ay; and make it manifest where she has liv'd,
Or how stol'n from the dead?

Paul. That she is living,
Were it but told you, should be hooted at
Like an old tale; but it appears she lives,
Though yet she speak not. Mark a little while. —

Please you to interpose, fair madam: kneel,
And pray your mother's blessing. — Turn, good lady,
Our Perdita is found. [Perdita kneels to Hermione.

Her. You gods, look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your graces
Upon my daughter's head! — Tell me, mine own,
Where hast thou been preserv'd? where liv'd? how found

Take her by the hand: in f e.

Paul. There's time enough for that,
Lest they desire upon this push to trouble
Your joys with like relation. — Go together,
You precious winners all: your exultation
Partake to every one. I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there
My mate, that's never to be found again,
Lament till I am lost.

Leon. O peace, Paulina! Thou should'st a husband take by my consent,
As I by thine, a wife: this is a match,
And made between 's by vows. Thou hast found mine;
But how is to question'd, for I saw her,
As I thought, dead; and have in vain said many
A prayer upon her grave: I'll not seek far
(For him, I partly know his mind) to find thee
An honourable husband. — Come, Camillo,
And take her hand; whose worth, and honestly,
Is richly noted, and here justified
By us, a pair of kings. — Let's from this place. —
What! — Look upon my brother: — both your pardons,
That o'er I put between your holy looks
My ill-suspicion. — This your son-in-law,
And son unto the king, (whom heavens directing)
Is troth-plight to your daughter. — Good Paulina,
Lead us from hence, where we may leisurely
Each one demand, and answer to his part
Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were dissemble. Hastily lead away. [Exeunt.
KING JOHN.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

KING JOHN.
Prince Henry, his Son.
Arthur, Duke of Bretagne.
William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke.
Geoffrey Fitz-Peter, Earl of Essex.
William Longsword, Earl of Salisbury.
Robert Bute, Earl of Norfolk.
Hubert de Burgh, Chamberlain to the King.
Robert Faulconbridge.
Philip Faulconbridge.
James Gurney, Servant to Lady Faulconbridge.

Lords, Ladies, Citizens of Angiers, Sheriff, Heralds, Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, and Attendants.

SCENE, sometimes in England, and sometimes in France.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, Salisbury, and Others, withChatillon.

K. John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of France, In my behaviour, to the majesty, The borrow'd majesty, of England here.

Elia. A strange beginning!—borrow'd majesty?

K. John. Silence, good mother: hear the embassy. Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son, Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim To this fair island, and the territories, To Ireland, Poictiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine; Desiring thee to lay aside the sword Which sways usurpingly these several titles, And put the same into young Arthur's hand, Thy nephew, and right royal sovereign.

K. John. What follows, if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war, To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood, Controlment for controlment: so answer France.

Chat. Then take my king's defiance from my mouth, The farthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace. Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France; For ere thou canst report I will be there, The thunder of my cannon shall be heard. So, hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath, And sudden' presage of your own decay.—An honourable conduct let him have; Pembroke, look to't. Farewell, Chatillon.

[Kneel Chatillon and Pembroke.]
Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy mother,
And wound her honour with this difference.
Bast. I, madam? no, I have no reason for it:
That is my brother's plea, and none of mine;
The which if he can prove, 'a pops me out
At least from fair five hundred pound a year.
Heaven guard my mother's honour, and my land!

K. John. A good blunt fellow.—Why, being younger born,
Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance?
Bast. I know not why, except to get the land.
But once he slander'd me with bastardy:
But whe'r I be as true begot, or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head;
But, that I am as well begot, my liege,
Fair fall the bones that took the pains for me!
Compare our faces, and be judge yourself.
If old sir Robert did beget us both,
And were our father, and this son like him,
O! old sir Robert, father, on my knee
I give heaven thanks, I was not like to thee.

K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us here!

Eli. He hath a trick of Cœur-de-lion's face;
The accent of his tongue affec'teth him.
Doth not read some tokens of my son
In the large composition of this man?

K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts,
And finds them perfect Richard.—Sirrah, speak;
What doth move you to claim your brother's land?
Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father,
With that half-face he would have all my land:
A half-face did great five hundred pound a year!
Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father liv'd,
Your brother did employ my father much.
Bast. Well, sir; by this you cannot get my land:
Your tale must be, how he employ'd my mother.
Rob. And once despatch'd him in an embassy
To Germany, there, with the emperor,
To treat of high affairs touching that time.
The advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the mean time sojournd at my father's;
Where how he did prevail I shame to speak,
But truth is truth: large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my mother lay,
As I have heard my father speak himself,
When this same lusty gentleman was got.
Upon his death-bed he by will bequeath'd
His lands to me; and took it, on his death,
That this, my mother's son, was none of his;
And, if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.
Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,
My father's land, as was my father's will.

K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate:
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him;
And if she did play false, the fault was hers,
Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands
That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother
Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,
Had of your father claim'd this son for his?
In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept
This calf, bred from his cow, from all the world;
In sooth, he might: then, if he were my brother's,
My brother must have claim'd him, nor your father,
Being none of his, refuse him. This concludes—
My mother's son did get your father's heir;

Your father's heir must have your father's land.
Rob. Shall, then, my father's will be of no force
To dispossess that child which is not his?
Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, sir,
Than was his will to get me, as I think.
Eli. Whether hadst thou rather be a Faulconbridge,
And, like thy brother, to enjoy thy land,
Or the reputed son of Cœur-de-lion,
Lord of thy presence, and no land beside?
Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape,
And I had his, sir Robert his; like him;
And if he were two such riding-rods,
My arms such eel-skins stuff'd: my face so thin,
That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose.
Lest men should say, 'Look, where three-farthings goes,

And, to his shape, were he heir to all this land,
Would I might never stir from off this place,
I'd give it every foot to have this face:
I would not be sir Nob in any case.
Eli. I like thee well. Wilt thou forsake thy fortune,
Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me?
I am a soldier, and now bound to France.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance.
Your face hath got five hundred pounds a year,
Yet sell your face for five pence, and 'tis dear:
Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

Eli. Nay, I would have you go before me, thither.
Bast. Our country manners give our betters way.

K. John. What is thy name?
Bast. Philip, my liege; so is my name begun;
Philip, good old sir Robert's wife's eldest son.

K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose Form thou bearest.

Kneel thou down Philip, but arise more great:

Bast. kneels and rises.

Aris's Richard, and Plantagenet.
Bast. Brother, by the mother's side, give me your hand:
My father gave me honour, yours gave land,
Now blessed be the hour, by night or day,
When I was got Sir Robert was away.

Eli. The very spirit of Plantagenet!—
I am thy grandame, Richard: call me so.

Bast. Madam, by chance, but not by truth: what though?

Something about, a little from the right,
In the window, or else o'er the hatch:
Who dares not stir by day, must walk by night,
And have is have, however men do catch.

Near or far off, well won is still well shot,
And I am I, however was begot.

K. John. Go, Faulconbridge: now hast thou thy desire;

A Jandless knight makes thee a landed squire.—
Come, madam, and come, Richard: we must speed
For France, for France, for it is more than need.

Bast. Brother, adieu: good fortune come to thee,
For thou wast got in the way of honesty.

[Exeunt all but the Bastard.

A Foot of honour better than I was,
But many, ah, many foot of land the worse.
Well, now can I make any Joan a lady:—
"Good den", sir Richard.—"God a-mercy, fellow?"
And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter;
For new-made honour doth forget men's names:—
'Tis too respective, and too solable.

For your diversion, now, your traveller,
He and his tooth-pick\(^1\) at my worship's mess;
And when my knightly stomach is suffic'd,
Why then I suck my teeth, and catechize
My picked\(^2\) man of countries:— "My dear sir,"
Thus leaning on mine elbow I begin,
"I shall beseech you"—that is question now;
And then comes answer like an ABC-book —
"O sir," says answer, "is your best command;
At your employment; at your service, sir:"—
"No, sir," says question, "I, sweet sir, at yours.
And so, ere answer knows what question would,
Saving in dialogue of compliment,
And talking of the Alps, and Apennines,
The Pyrenees, and the river Po,
It draws toward supper, in conclusion so.
But this is worshipful society,
And fits a mounting spirit, like myself;
For he is but a bastard to the time,
That doth not smack of observation;
And so am I, whether I smack, or no;
And not alone in habit and device,
Exterior form, outward accompaniment,
But from the inward motion to deliver
Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age's tooth:
Which, though I will not practise to deceive,
Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn,
For it shall shew the footsteps of my rising.
—But who comes in such haste, in riding robes?
What woman-post is this? hath she no husband,
That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

Enter Lady Faulconbridge and James Gurney.
O me! it is my mother.—How no, good lady!
What brings you here to court so hastily?

Lady F. Where is that slave, thy brother? where is he,
That holds in chase mine honour up and down?

Bast. My brother Robert? old sir Robert's son?
Colbrand\(^3\) the giant, that same mighty man?
Is it Sir Robert's son, that you seek so?

Lady F. Sir Robert's son! Ay, thou unreverend boy,
Sir Robert's son: why scorn'st thou at sir Robert?
He is sir Robert's son, and so art thou.

Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave awhile?

Gur. Good leave, good Philip.

Bast. Philip?—sparrow!—James,
There's toys abroad; anon I'll tell thee more.

[Exit Gurney.

SCENE I. — France. Before the Walls of Angiers.

Enter, on one side, the Archduke of Austria, and Forces; on the other, Philip, King of France, and Forces; Lewis, Constance, Arthur, and Attendants.

Lewis. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria.—
Arthur, that great fore-runner of thy blood,
Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave;
And, for amends to his posterity,
At our importance\(^4\) lither is he come,
To spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf;
And to rebuke the usurpation
Of thy unnatural uncle, English John:

\(^1\) Not in general use in England, when the play was written.
\(^2\) Spruce, trim.
\(^3\) The Danish giant, whom Guy of Warwick discomfited in the presence of King Athelstan.
\(^4\) An old name given to a sparrow.
\(^5\) Could he get me: in i. e.
\(^6\) A braggadocio character in Soliman and Persida, a play of the time.
\(^7\) Folio: That.
\(^8\) Unstained: in i. e.
Even till that England, hedg’d in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes,
Even till that utmost corner of the west
Salute thee for her king: till then, fair boy,
Will I not think of home, but follow arms.
Const. O! take his mother’s thanks, a widow’s thanks,
Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength,
To make a more requital to your love.
Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs, that lift their swords

In such a just and charitable war.

K. Phi. Well then, to work. Our cannon shall be Against the brows of this resisting town:— [bent
Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To eul the plots of best advantages.
We’ll lay before this town our royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen’s blood,
But we will make it subject to this boy.

Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy,
Lest unadvis’d you stain your swords with blood.
My lord Chatillon may from England bring
That right in peace which here we urge in war;
And then we shall repent each drop of blood.
That hot rash haste so indiscreetly' shed.

Enter Chatillon.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady!—io, upon thy wish,
Our messenger, Chatillon, is arriv’d.—
What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
We coldly pause for thee: Chatillon, speak.

Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege,
And stir them up against a mightier task.
England, impatient of your just demands,
Hath put himself in arms: the adverse winds,
Whose leisure I have stay’d, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I.
His marches are expedit’d to this town;
His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
With him along is come the mother-queen,
As’ Alc’ stirring him to blood and strife:
With her her niece, the lady Blanch of Spain;
With them a bastard of the king’s deceased,
And all th’ unsettled humours of the land:
Rush, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,
With ladies’ faces, and fierce dragons’ spleens,
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birthrights boldly on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here.
In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waft o’er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide,
To do offence and sooth in Christendom.

The interruption of their churlish drums
Cuts off more circumstance; they are at hand,
To parley, or to fight: therefore, prepare.
K. Phi. How much unlock’d for is this expedition!
Aust. By how much unexpected, by so much
We must awake endeavour for defence,
For courage mounteth with occasion:
Let them be welcome, then; we are prepared.

Enter King John, Elinor, Blanch, the Bastard,
Pembroke, and Forces.

K. John. Peace be to France, if France in peace permit.
Our just and linear entrances to our own:
If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven;
While we, God’s wrathful agent, do correct

Their proud contempt that beats his peace to heaven.

K. Phi. Peace be to England, if that war return
From France to England, there to live in peace.
England we love; and, for that England’s sake,
With burden of our armour here we sweat.
This toil of ours should be a work of thine;
But thou from loving England art so far,
That thou hast under-wrought her lawful king,
Cut off the sequence of posterity,
Outfaced infant state, and done a rape
Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
Look here upon thy brother Geffrey’s face:

[Pointing to Arthur.]

These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his;
This little abstract doth contain that large,
Which died in Geffrey, and the hand of time
Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume.
That Geffrey was thy elder brother born,
And this his son: England was Geffrey’s right,
And this is Geffrey’s. In the name of God,
How comes it, then, that thou art call’d a king,
When living blood doth in these temples beat.
Which owe the crown that thou o’ermasterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commenc’
Thy France?

To draw my answer from thy articles?

K. Phi. From that supernal Judge, that stirs good thoughts
In any breast of strong authority,
To look into the blots and stains of right.
That Judge hath made me guardian to this boy;
Under whose warrant I impeach thy wrong,
And by whose help I mean to chastise it.

K. Phi. Excuse: it is to be usurping down.
Eli. Who is it, thou dost call usurper, France?

Const. Let me make answer—thy usurping son.

Eli. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king,
That thou mayst be a queen, and check the world!
Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true,
As thine was to thy husband, and this boy
Liker in feature to his father Geffrey,
Than thou and John, in manners being as like,
As rain to water, or devil to his dam.
My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think,
His father never was so true begot:
It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.
Eli. There’s a good mother, boy, that blots thy father.
Const. There’s a good grandam, boy, that would blot thee.

Aust. Peace!

Aust. Hear the crier.

Aust. What the devil art thou?

Aust. One that will play the devil, sir, with you,
An’ a may catch your hide and you alone.
You are the harle of whom the proverb goes,
Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard.
I’ll smoke your skincoat, and I catch you right:
Sireh, look to’t; if faith, I will, if faith.

Blanch. O! well did he become that lion’s robe,
That did disrobe the lion of that robe.
Eli. It is as sightly on the back of him,
As great Alcides’ shoes upon an ass.—
But, ass, I’ll take that burden from your back,
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack.

Aust. This Alcides cannot be that wretches that doas our ears
With this abundance of superfluous breath.

K. Phi. Lewis, determine what we shall do straight.
Eur. Women and fools, break off your conference.

King John, this is the very sum of all:

English, and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee.

Wilt thou resign them, and lay down thy arms?

Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand,
And out of my dear love I'll give thee more,
Than e'er the coward hand of France can win.

Submit thee, boy.

Eli. Come to thy grandam, child.

Const. Do, child, go to it! grandam, child;
Give grandam kingdom, and it! grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig:
This's a good grandam.

Arth. Goo my mother, peace, peace!
I would that I were low laid in my grave: [Weeping.
I am not worth this coil that's made for me.
Eli. His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.

Const. Now shame upon you, who's she does, or no!
His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames,
Draw those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes,
Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee:
Ay, with these crystal beads shall heaven be brib'd
To do him justice, and revenge on you.

Eli. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth!

Const. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and earth!

Call not me slanderer, thou, and thine, usurp
The denominations, royalties, and rights,
Of this oppressed boy; thy child's son's cannot in nothing but in thee:
Thy sins are visited on this poor child;
The canon of the law is laid on him,
Buing but the second generation
Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb.

K. John. Bedlam, have done.

Const. I have but this to say,—
That he is not only plagued for her sin,
But God hath made her sin, and her the plague.
On this removed issue, plag'd for her,
And with her plag'd her sin; his injury
Her injury the beadle to her sin.
All plag'd in the person of this child,
And all for her, a plague upon her!

Eli. Thou unadvised scold. I can produce
A will, that bars the title of thy son.

Const. Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked will;
A woman's will: a canker'd grandam's will!
K. Phi. Peace, lady! pause, or be more temperate.
It ill bespeaks this presence, to cry aim?
To these ill-tuned repetitions,—
Some trumpet summon hither to the walls
These men of Angiers; let us hear them speak,
Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpets sound. Enter Citizens upon the walls.

Cit. Who are they, that hath warn'd us to the walls?
K. Phi. 'Tis France, for England.

You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects,—
K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects,
Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle.

K. John. For our advantage; therefore, hear us first.

These flags of France, that are advanced here
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endangerment:
The cannons have their bowels full of wrath,
And ready mounted are they, to spit forth
Their iron indignation against your walls:

All preparation for a bloody siege,
And merciless proceeding by these French,
Come 'fore your city's eyes; your winking gates;
And, but for our approach, those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about,
By the compulsion of their ordinance
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dishabited, and wide havoc made.
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
But, on the sight of us, your lawful king,
Who painfully, with much expedient march,
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unscrath'd your city's threat'red cheeks,
Behold, the French amaz'd you vouchsafe a parle;
And now instead of bullets wrapp'd in fire,
To make a shaking fever in your walls.
They shoot but calm words, folded up in smoke,
To make a faithless error in your ears:
Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,
And let us in, your king; whose labour'd spirits,
Forwearied in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls.

K. Phi. When I have said, make answer to us both.

Lo! in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely vow'd upon the right
Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet,
Son to the elder brother of this man,
And king o'er him, and all that he enjoys.
For this down-trodden city, we tread
In warlike march these groans before your town;
Being no further enemy to you,
Than the constraint of hospitable zeal,
In the relief of this oppressed child,
Religiously provokes. Be pleased, then,
To pay that duty which you truly owe,
To him that owes it, namely, this young prince;
And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, have all offence seal'd up:
Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent
Against th' invulnerable clouds of heaven;
And with a blessed and unvex'd retire,
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruised,
We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spent against your town,
And leave your children, wives, and you, in peace.
But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
'T is not the roundure of your old-face'd walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war,
Though all these English, and their discipline,
Were harbour'd in their rude circumference.
Then, tell us; shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we have challeng'd it,
Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And stalk in blood to our possession?

Cit. In brief, we are the king of England's subjects;
For him, and in his right, we hold this town.

K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.

Cit. That can we not; but he that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal: till that time,
Have we ramm'd up our gates against the world.

K. John. Doth not the crown of England prove the king?
And, if not that, I bring you witnesses,

Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed.

Bast. Bastards, and else.

K. John. To verify our title with their lives.

K. Phi. As many, and as well-born bloods as those.

Bast. Some bastards, too.

K. Phi. Stand in his face to contradict his claim.
CIT. Till you compound whose right is wealthiest.
We for the wealthiest hold the right from both.

K. John. Then God forgive the sins of all those souls,
That to their everlasting residence
Before the dew of evening fall shall fleet,
In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king!

K. Phi. Amen, Amen.—Mount, chevaliers! to arms!
Bast. St. George, that swing'd the dragon, and c'or since,
Sits on his horseback at mine hostess' door,
Teach us some fence! [To Austria.] Sirrah, were I at home,
At your den, sirrah, with your lionesse,
I would set an ox-head to your lion's hide,
And make a monster of you.

Aust. Peace! no more.
Bast. O! tremble, for you hear the lion roar.

K. John. Up higher to the plain; where we'll set forth
In best appointment all our regiments,
Bast. Speed, then, to take advantage of the field.
K. Phi. It shall be so;—[To Lewis] and at the other hill
Command the rest to stand.—God and our right! [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Same.
alarums and Excursions: then a Retreat. Enter a French Herald, with trumpets, to the gates.

E. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your gates,
And let young Arthur, duke of Bretagne, in,
Who by the hand of France this day hath made
Much work for tears in many an English mother,
Whose son lie scatter'd on the bleeding ground:
Many a widow's husband grovelling lies,
Caldly embracing the discolor'd earth,
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French,
Who are at hand, triumphantly display'd,
To enter conquerors, and to proclaim
Arthur of Bretagne, England's king, and yours.

Enter an English Herald, with trumpets.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells:
King John, your king and England's doth approach,
Commander of this hot melodious day,
Their armour, that march'd hence so silver-light,
Hither return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood.
There stuck no plume in any English crest,
That is remov'd by any staff of France:
Our colours do return in those same hands,
That did display them when we first march'd forth;
And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Dyed in the dying slaughter of their foes.
Open your gates, and give the victors way.

CIT. 1. Heralls, from off our towers we might behold,
From first to last, the onset and retire
Of both your armies; whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censtred:
Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answer'd blows;
Strength match'd with strength, and power confronted power:
Both are alike; and both alike we like.
One must prove greatest: while they weigh so even,
We hold our town for neither, yet for both.

Enter, at one side, King John, with his power, Elinor, Blanch, and the Bastard; at the other, King Philip, Lewis, Austria, and forces.

K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away?
Say, shall the current of our right roam on?
Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel, and e'er-awell
With course disturb'd ev'n thy confining shores,
Unless thou let his silver waters keep
A peaceful progress to the ocean.

K. Phi. England, thou hast not save'd one drop of
In this hot trial, more than we of France;
Rather, lost more: and by this hand I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlooks,
Before we will lay down our just-born arms,
We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we bear,
Or add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.
Bast. His! Majesty, how high thy glory towers,
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire.
O! now doth death line his dead chaps with steel;
The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs;
And now he feasts, mousing the flesh of men,
In undetermin'd differences of kings.—
Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry, havoc, kings! back to the stained field,
You equal potent, fire-kindled spirits!
Then let confusion of one part confirm
The other's peace; till then, blows, blood, and death!

K. John. Whose party do the townsmen yet admit?
K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England who's your king?

CIT. The king of England, when we know the king.
K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.
K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy,
And bear procession of our person here;
Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.

CIT. A greater power than we deny all this; And, till it be undoubted, we do lock
Our former sculp in our strong-barr'd gates, Kings of our fear; until our fear, resolv'd, Be by some certain king purs'd and depos'd.
Bast. By heaven, these sertoyes of Angiers flout you, kings.
And stand securely on their battlements, As in a theat'd bench, whence they gaze and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
Your royal presence be rul'd by me:
Do like the mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends awhile, and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town.
By east and west let France and England mount.
Their battering cannon, charg'd to the mouths,
Till their soul-fearing clamours have brawldown
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
I'd play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unfeud'd desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
That done, disserver your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again:
Turn face to face, and bloody point to point;
Then, in a moment, fortune shall cull forth
Out of one side her happy minion,
To whom in favour she shall give the day;
And kiss him with a glorious victory.
How like you this wild counsel, mighty states?
Smacks it not something of the policy?

K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our heads, I like it well.—France, shall we knit our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground, Then, after, fight who shall be king of it?
Bast. An if thou hast the mettle of a king, Being wrong'd as we are by this wicked town, Turn thou the mouth of the artillery, As we will ours, against these saucy walls; And when that we have dash'd them to the ground, Why, then defy each other, and pell-mell, Make work upon ourselves for heaven, or hell.
K. Phi. Let it be so.—Say, where will you assault.
K. John. We from the west will send destruction Into this city's bosom.
Aust. I from the north.
K. Phi. Our thunder from the south, Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.
Bast. O, prudent discipline! From north to south, Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth.

I'll stir them to it.—Come, away, away!
Cit. Hear us; great kings: vouchsafe a while to stay, And I shall show you peace, and fair-fac'd league; Win you this city without stroke, or wound; Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds, That here come sacrifices for the field. Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings.
K. John. Speak on, with favour: we are bent to hear.
Cit. That daughter there of Spain, the lady Blanch, Is niece to England: look upon the years Of Lewis the Dauphin, and that lovely maid. If lusty love should go in quest of beauty, Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch? If zealous love should go in search of virtue, Where should he find it purer than in Blanch?
If love ambitious sought a match of birth, Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanch? Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth, Is the young Dauphin every way complete: If not complete of, say, he is not she; And she again wants nothing, to name want, If want it be not, that she is not he: He is the half part of a blessed man, Left to be finished by such a she; And she a fair divided excellence, Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. O! two such silver vessels, when they join, Do glorify the banks that bound them in; And two such shores to two such streams made one, Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings, To these two princes, if you marry them. This union shall do more than battery can To our fast-closed gates; for, at this match, With swifter spleen than powder can enforce, The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope, And give you entrance; but, without this match, The sea enraged, is half so deaf, Lions more confident, mountains and rocks More froe from motion: no, not death himself In mortal fury half so peremptory, As we to keep this city in thy hands.
Bast. Here's a stay, That shakes the rotten carcass of old death Out of his gags! Here's a large mouth, indeed, That spits forth death, and mountains, rocks, and seas; Talks as familiarly of roaring lions, As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs.
What cannoner begot this lusty blood? He speaks plain cannon-fire, and smoke, and bough; He gives the bastinado with his tongue: Our ears are outgeld'd; not a word of his,

1 near: in f. e. 2 Complete in the qualities. 3 as: in f. e.
With her to thee; and this addition more,
Full thirty thousand marks of English coin—
Philip of France, if thou be pleas'd withal,
Command thy son and daughter to join hands.

K. Phi. It liketh us well.—Young princes, close your hands. [They join hands.]

Aust. And your lips too; for, I am well-assur'd,
That I did that, when I was first assur'd.

K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,
Let in that amity which you have made;
For at Saint Mary's chapel presently
The rites of marriage shall be solemniz'd.—
Is not the lady Constance in this troop?
I know, she is not; for this match, made up,
Her presence would have interrupted much.
Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows.

Lew. She is sad and passionate at your highness' seat.

K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league, that we have
Will give her sadness very little cure.—[made,
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow'd lady? In her right we came,
Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way,
To our own vantage,

K. John. We will heal up all;
For we'll create young Arthur duke of Bretagne,
And earl of Richmond, and this rich fair town
We make him lord of.—Call the lady Constance:
Some speedy messenger bid her repair
To our solemnity.—I trust we shall,
If not fill up the measure of her will,
Yet in some measure satisfy her so,
That we shall stop her exclamation.
Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
To this unlook'd for, unprepared pomp.

[Exeunt all but the Bastard.—The Citizens retire from the walls.

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition!

John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part;
And France, whose armour conscience buckled on,
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field,
As God's own soldier, round'd in the ear
With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil,
That broker that still breaks the pate of faith,
That daily break-vow, he that wins of all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids,—
Who having new external thing to lose
But the word maid,—cheats the poor maid of that;
That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling commodity,—
Commodity, the bias of the world;
The world, who of itself is poised well,
Made to run even, upon even ground,
Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This sway of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifference,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent:
And this same bias, this commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word,
Clapp'd on the outward eye of fickle France,
Bath drawn word from his own design'd aim;
From a resolv'd and honourable war,
To a most base and vile-concluded peace.
And why rai I on this commodity:
But for because he hath not woo'd me yet:
Not that I have no power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But for my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, raileth on the rich.
Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say, there is no sin, but to be rich;
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say, there is no vice but beggary.
Since kings break faith upon commodity,
Gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. The French King's Tent.

Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Const. Gone to be married? gone to swear a peace?
False blood to false blood join'd! Gone to be friends?
Shall Lewis have Blanch, and Blanch those provinces?
It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard:
Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again:
It cannot be; thou dost but say 'tis so.
I trust, I may not trust thee, for thy word
Is but the vain breath of a common man:
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man:
I have a king's oath to the contrary,
Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frightening me,
For I am sick, and capable of fears;
Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of fears;
A widow, hushbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears;
And though thou now confess, thou didst but jest,
With my vex'd spirits, I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.
What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?
Why dost thou look so sadly on my son?
What means that hand upon that breast of thine?
Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds?

1 Not in f. e. 2 Retretoed. 3 Whispered. 4 add: in f. e. 5 the: in f. e. 6 and sightless: in f. e.
KING JOHN.

For then I should not love thee; no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown.
But-thou art fair; and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great:
Of nature's gifts thou may'st with little boast;
And, thou the rose, and I the rose overblown, and thou fortune, O!
She is corrupted, chang'd, and, won from thee:
Sh' adulterates hourly with thine uncle John;
And with her golden hand hath pluck'd on France
To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
And made his majesty the bawd to theirs.
France is a bawd to fortune, and king John;
That strumpet fortune, that usurping John—I
Tell me, thou fellow, is not France forsworn?
Envenom him with words, or get thee gone,
And leave those woes alone, which I alone
Am bound to under-bear.

Sal. Pardon me, madam,
I may not go without you to the kings.

Const. Thou may'st, thou shalt: I will not go with thee.
I will instruct my sorrows to be proud,
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stoop.
To me, and to the state of my great grief,
Let kings assemble; for my grief's so great,
That no supporter but the huge firm earth
Can hold it up: here I and sorrow sit;
Here is my throne, bid kings come bow to it.

[She sits on the ground.]

Enter King John, King Philip, Lewis, Blanch, Elinor, Bastard, Austria, and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter; and this blessed
Ever in France shall be kept festival: [day.
To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchemist,
Turning, with splendour of his precious eye,
The meagre coldly earth to glittering gold:
The yearly course, that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holyday.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holy day! [Rising.
What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done,
That it in golden letters should be set,
Among the high tides, in the calendar?
Nay, rather, turn this day out of the week;
This day of shame, oppression, perjury;
Or if it must stand still, let wives with child
Pray, that their burdens may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be cross'd;
But on't this day, let seamen fear no wreck;
No bargains break, that are not this day made;
This day all things begun come to ill end;
Yea, faith itself to hollow falsehood change!
K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause
To curses the false proceedings of this day.
Have I not pawn'd to you my majesty?

Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit,
Resembling majesty, which, being touch'd and tried,
Proves valueless. You are forsworn, forsworn;
You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood,
But now in arms you strengthen it with yours:
The grappling vigour, and rough frown of war,
Is cold in anxiety and faint in' peace.
And our oppression hath made up this league.—
Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjur'd kings!
A widow cries: be husband to me, heavens!
Let not the hour of this ungodly day
Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset,
Set armed discord, 'twixt these perjur'd kings!
Hear me! O, hear me!

Aust. Lady Constance, peace!
Const. War! war! no peace! peace is to me a war.
O, Lymoges! O, Austria! thou dost shame
That bloody spoil: thou slave, thou wretch, thou coward;
Thou little villain, great in villany!
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side!
Thou fortune's champion, that dost never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by
To teach thee safety! thou art perjur'd too,
And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool, to brag, and stamp, and swear,
Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Been sworn my soldier? bidding me depend
Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength?
And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! dott'it for shame,
And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. O, that a man should speak those words to me!
Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. Thou dar'st not say so, villain, for thy life.
Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.
K. John. We like not this: thou dost forget thyself.

Enter Pandulph.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.

Pand. Hail, you anointed deputies of heaven.
To thee, king John, my holy errand is.

I Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal,
And from Pope Innocent the legate here,
Do in his name religiously demand,
Why thou against our holy mother,
So wilfully dost spurn; and, force perforce,
Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop
Of Canterbury, from that holy see?
This, in our 'forehold holy father's name,
Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthly name to interrogatories
Can task the free breath of a sacred king?
Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer, as the pope.
Tell him this tale: and from the mouth of England,
Add thus much more,—that no Italian priest
Shall tithe or toll in our dominions;
But as we under heaven are supreme head,
So, under heaven, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold,
Without thy' assistance of a mortal hand.
So tell the pope; all reverence set apart
To him, and his usur'y authority.

K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Christendom,
Are led so grossly by this meddler priest,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out,
And, by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man.
Who, in that sale, sells pardon from himself;
Though you, and all the rest, so grossly led,
This juggling witherelash with revenue cherish,
Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose
Against the pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then, by the lawful power that I have,
Thou shalt stand curs'd, and excommunicate:
And blessed shall he be, that doth revolt
From his allegiance to his patron;
And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canonized, and worshipping as a saint.
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life.

Const. O! lawful let it be,
That I have room with Rome to curse awhile.

Good father Cardinal, cry thou amen
To my keen curses; for without my wrong
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pand. There's a law and warrant, lady, for my curse.

Const. And for mine too: when law can do no right,
Let it be lawful that law bar no wrong.

Law cannot give my child his kingdom here,
For he that holds his kingdom holds the law:
Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,
How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?

Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse,
Let go the hand of that arch-heretic,
And raise the power of France upon his head,
Unless he do submit himself to Rome.

Eli. Look'st thou pale, France? do not let go thy hand.

Const. Look to that, devil, lest that France repent,
And by disjoining hands hell lose a soul.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on his recreant limbs.

Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs.

Because—

Bast. Year breeches best may carry them.

K. John. Philip, what say'st thou to the cardinal?

Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal?

Lew. Bethink you, father; for the difference
Is purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
Or the light loss of England for a friend:
Forgo the easier.

Blanch. That's the curse of Rome.

Const. O Lewis, stand fast! the devil tempts thee here,
In likeness of a new uptrimmed bride.

Blanch. The lady Constance speaks not from her faith.
But from her need.

Const. O! if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer this principle,
That for I would live again by death of need:
O! then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up;
Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down.

K. John. The king is mov'd, and answers not to this.

Const. O! be remov'd from him, and answer well.

Aust. Do so, king Philip: hang no more in doubt.

Bast. Hang nothing but a calf's-skin, most sweet lout.

K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what to say.

Pand. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee more,

If thou stand excommunicate, and curs'd?

K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours,
And tell me how you would bestow yourself.

This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league, coupled and link'd together
With all religious strength of sacred vows:

The latest breath that gave the sound of words,
Was deep-swear'd faith, peace, amity, true love,
Between our kingdoms, and our royal selves;
And even before this truce, but new before,
No longer than we well could wash our hands,
To clap this royal bargain up of peace,

Heaven knows, they were beseech'd and overstand'd
With slaughter's pencil; where revenge did paint

The fearful difference of incensed kings:
And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,

So newly join'd in love, so strong in both,

Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret?

Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven,

Make such unconstant children of ourselves,

As now again to snatch our palm from palm;

Unswear faith sworn; and on the marriage bed

Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,

And make a riot on the gentle brow

Of true sincerity? O! holy sir,

My reverend father, let it not be so:

Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
Some gentle order, and then we shall be bless'd.

To do your pleasure, and continue friends.

Pand. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love.

Therefore, to arms! be champion of our church,

Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,

A mother's curse, on her revolting son.

France, thou may'st hold a serpent by the tongue,

A caged lion by the mortal paw,

A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,

Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

Pand. So mak'st thou faith an enemy to faith;

And, like a civil war, set'st oath to oath,

Thy tongue against thy tongue. O! let thy vow
First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform'd;

That is, to be the champion of our church.

What since thou sow'st is sworn against thyself,

And may not be performed by thyself:

For that, which thou hast sworn to do amiss,

Is not amiss when it is truly done;

And being not done, where doing tends to ill,

The truth is then most done not doing it.

The better act of purposes mistook

Is to mistake again: though indirect,

Yet indirection thereby grows direct,

And falsehood falsehood cures; as fire cools fire

Within the scorched veins of one new burn'd.

It is religion that doth make vows kept,

But thou hast sworn against religion,

By what thou swear'st, against the thing thou swear'st,

And mak'st an oath, against thy truth,

Against an oath: the truth, thou art unsure

To swear, swears only not to be forsworn;

Else, what a mockery should it be to swear?

But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;

And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear.

Therefore, thy later vows, against thy first,

Is in thyself rebellion to thyself;

And better conquest never canst thou make,

Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts

Against these giddy loose suggestions:

Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchesafe them; but, 0! not then know,

The peril of our curses light'st on the tree,

So heavy, as thou shalt not shake them off,

But in despair die under their black weight.

Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!

Bast. Will it not be?

Will not a calf's-skin stop that mouth of thine?

Lew. Father, to arms!

Blanch. Upon thy wedding day?

Against the blood that thou hast married?

What? shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd men?

Shall braying trumpets, and loud hurliburli drums,

Clamours of hell, be measures to our pomp?

O husband, hear me!—ah, alack! how new

Is husband in my mouth!—even for that name,
KING JOHN.

Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce,
Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms
Against mine uncle.

Const. O! upon my knee,

Kneeling.

Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom
Fore-thought by heaven.

Blanch. Now shall I see thy love. What motive may Bo stronger with thee than the name of wife?
Const. That which upbeldh him that thee upholds,
His honour. O! thine honour, Lewis, thine honour.

Lew. I muse, thy majesty doth seem so cold,
When such profound respects do pull you on.

Pand. I will denounce a curse upon his head.

K. Phi. Thou shalt not need.—England, I'll fall
Const. O, fair return of banish'd majesty! [from thee.

Eli. O, foul revolt of French inconstancy!

K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.

Bast. Old Time the clock-setter, that beld sexton Time,
Is it as he will? well then, France shall rue.

Blanch. The sun's o'ercast with blood: fair day,
Which is the side that I must go withal? [adieu!
I am with both: each army hath a hand,
And in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl asunder, and dismember me.

 Husband, I cannot pray that thou may'st win;
Uncle, I needs must pray that thou may'st lose;

Father, I may not wish the fortune thine;
Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive;

Whoe'er wins, on that side shall I lose;
Assuredly, before the match be play'd.

Lew. Lady, with me; with me thy fortune lies.

Blanch. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.

K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together.
[Exit Bastard.

France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath;
A rage, whose heat hath this condition,
That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,
The blood, and dearst-vaund'd blood of France.

K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt
To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire. [turn
Look to thyself: thou art in jeopardy.

K. John. No more than he that threatens.—To arms
let's hie! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. Plains near Angiers.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the Bastard with Austria's Head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous hot;
Some fiery devil hovers in the sky.
And pours down mischief. Austria's head, lie there,
While Philip breathes.

Enter King John, Arthur, and Hubert.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy.—Philip, make up:
My mother is assailed in our tent,
And ta'en, I fear.

Bast. My lord, I rescued her;
Her highness is in safety, fear you not;
But on, my liege; for very little pain
Will bring this labour to an happy end.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Alarums; Excursions; Retreat. Enter King John,
Elinor, Arthur, the Bastard, Hubert, and Lords.

K. John. So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind,
[To Elinor.

So strongly guarded.—Cousin, look not sad:
[To Arthur.

Thy grandam loves thee, and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.

Arth. O! this will make my mother die with grief.

K. John. Cousin, [To the Bastard.] away for England: haste before;

And ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbeys; their imprison'd angels
Set at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon;
Use our commission in his utmost force.

Bast. Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back,
When gold and silver beckons me to come on.
I leave your highness.—Grandam, I will pray
(If ever I remember to be holy;)

For your fair safety: so I kiss your hand.

Eli. Farewell, gentle cousin.

Eli. Come hither, little kinsman; hark, a word.

[She talks apart with Arthur.

K. John. Come hither, Hubert! O! my gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much: within this wall of flesh

There is a soul counts thee her creditor,

And with advantage means to pay thy love:

And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath,

Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished.

Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,—

But I will fit it with some better time.

By heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamp'd
To say what good respect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to thy majesty. [yet;
K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so
But thou shalt have: and creep time ne'er so slow,
Yet it shall come, for me to do thee good.
I had a thing to say,—but let it go.

The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,

Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gauds,

To give me audience:—if the midnight bell
Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
Sound on into the drowsy ear of night:
If this same were a churchyard where we stand,
And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs;

Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,

Had had his blood, and made it heavy, thick,
(Which, els runs tingling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes,
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment,

A passion hateful to my purposes,)

Or if thou couldst see me without eyes,
Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
Without a tongue, using conceit alone,

Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words,
Then, in despite of the broad, waterful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts.

But ah! I will not:—yet I love thee well;

And, by my truth, I think, thou lov'st me well.

Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjurent to my act,
By heaven, I would do it...

K. John. Do not I know, thou wouldst?

Good Hubert! Hubert—Hubert, throw thine eye
On yond' young boy: I'll tell thee what, my friend,
He is a very serpent in my way;

And wheresoe'er that foot of mine doth tread,
He lies before me. Dost thou understand me?

Thou art his keeper.
Hub. 'And I'll keep him so,
That he shall not offend your majesty.
Hub. My lord?
Hub. He shall not live.
I could be merry now. Hubert, I love thee;
Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee:
Remember.—Madam, fare you well:
I'll send those powers o'er to your majesty.
Eli. My blessing go with thee!
K. John. For England, cousin: go!
Hubert shall be your man, attend on you
With all true duty.—On towards Calais, ho! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. The French King's Tent.

Enter King Philip, Lewis, Pandulph, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado of converted with sail
Is scattered, and disjointed from fellowship,
Pand. Courage and comfort! all shall yet go well.
K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so ill?
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?
Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?
And bloody England into England gone,
O'bearing interruption, spite of France?
Lev. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:
So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example. Who hath read, or heard,
Of any kindred action like to this?
K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this praise,
So we could find some pattern of our shame,
Enter Constance.

Const. Lo now; now see the issue of your peace,
K. Phi. Patience, good lady: comfort, gentle Con-

Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,
But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
Death, death.—O, amiable lovely death!
Thou odorous stench! sound rottenness!
Arose from forth the couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones;
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows;
And ring these fingers with thy household worms;
And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust,
And be a carrion monster like thyself:
Come, grin on me; and I will think thou smil'st,
And buss thee as thy wife! Misery's love,
O, come to me!
K. Phi. O, fair affliction, peace!
Const. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry.—
O! that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth:
Then with what passion I should shake the world,
And rue from sleep that fell anatomy;
Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,
Which scorns a widow's invocation.
Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.
Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so.
I am not mad: this hair I tear, is mine;
My name is Constance: I was Geoffrey's wife;
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost!
I am not mad:—I would to heaven, I were;
For then 'tis like I should forget myself:
O, if I could, what grief should I forget!—
Preach some philosophy to make me mad,
And thou shalt be canoniz'd, cardinal;
For, being not mad, but sensible of grief,
My reasonable part produces reason
How I may be deliver'd of these woes,
And choose me to hang myself:
If I were mad, I should forget my son,
Or madly think a babe of clowns were he.
I am not mad: too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.
K. Phi. Bind up those tresses. O! what love I note
In the fair multitude of those her hairs!
Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,
Even to that drop ten thousand wiry friends
Do glue themselves in sociaile grief;
Like true, inseparable, faithful lovers,
Sticking together in calamity.
Const. To England, if you will.
K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.
Const. Yes, that I will; and wherewithal will I do it?
I tore them from their bonds, and cried aloud,
"O, that these hands could so redeem my son,
As they have given these hairs their liberty!"
But now, I envy at their liberty,
And will again commit them to their bonds,
Because my poor child is a prisoner.—
And, father cardinal, I have heard you say,
That we shall see and know our friends in heaven:
If that be true, I shall see my boy again;
For, since the birth of Cain, the first male child,
To him that did but yesterday suspiere,
There was not such a gracious creature born.
But now wilt canker sorrow eat my bud,
And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost.
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit,
And so he'll die; and, rising so again,
When I shall meet him in the court of heaven,
I shall not know him: therefore never, never Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.
Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.
Const. He talks to me, that never had a son.
K. Phi. You are as fond of grief, as of your child.
Const. Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me;
But on his pretty looks and sorrowful words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form:
Then, have I reason to be fond of grief.
Fare you well: had you such a loss as I,
I could give better comfort than you do.—
I will not keep this form upon my head,
[Tearing her hair.]
When there is such disorder in my wit.
O lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son!
My life, my joy, my food, my all the world,
My widow-comfort, and my sorrow's cure!
[Exit.
K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her.
[Exit.

Lew. There's nothing in this world can make me
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale, vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man;
And bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's taste,
That it yields nought, but shame, and bitterness.
Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest: evils that take leave,
On their departure most of all show evil.
What have you lost by losing of this day?
       \textit{Lev.} All days of glory, joy, and happiness.
\textit{Pand.} If you had won it, certainly, you had.
No, no: when fortune means to men most good,
She looks upon them with a threatening eye.
'T is strange, to think how much king John hath lost
In this which he accounts so dearly won.
Are not you griev'd that Arthur is his prisoner?
\textit{Lev.} As heartily, as he is glad he hath him.
\textit{Pand.} Your mind is all as youthful as your blood.
Now hear me speak with a prophetic spirit;
For even the breath of what I mean to speak
Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub,
Out of the path which shall directly lead
Thy foot to England's throne; and therefore mark:
John hath seiz'd Arthur; and it cannot be,
That whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins,
The misplace'd John should entertain one hour,
One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest.
A sceptre, snatch'd with an unruly hand,
Must be as hastily maintain'd as gain'd;
And he, that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up;
That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;
So be it, for it cannot but be so.
\textit{Lev.} But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall?
\textit{Pand.} You, in the right of lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claim that Arthur did.
\textit{Lev.} And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.
\textit{Pand.} How green you are, and fresh in this old world!
John lays you plots; the times conspire with you,
For he that stoops his safety in true blood
Shall find but bloody safety, and untrine.

\textbf{ACT IV.}

\textsc{Scene I.}—Northampton. A Room in the Castle.
       \textit{Enter Hubert and two Attendants.}
\textit{Hub.} Heat me these irons hot; and, look thou stand
Within the arras: when I strike my foot
Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth,
And bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
Past to the chair: be heedful. Hence, and watch.
\textit{1 Attendant.} I hope, your warrant will bear out the deed.
\textit{Hub.} Uncleanly scruples: fear not you: look to it.---
       \textit{[Exit Attendants.}

\textit{Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.}
\textit{Enter Arthur.}
\textit{Arth.} Good morrow, Hubert.
\textit{Hub.} Good morrow, little prince.
\textit{Arth.} As little prince (having so great a title
To be more prince), as may be.---You are sad.
\textit{Hub.} Indeed, I have been merrier.
\textit{Arth.} Mercy on me!

Methinks, no body should be sad but I:
Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness. By my christendom,
So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
I should be merry as the day is long;
And so I would be here, but that I doubt
My uncle practises more harm to me:
He is afraid of me, and I of him.
Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey's son?

This act, so evilly born, shall cool the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze up their zeal,
That none so small advantage shall step forth
To check his reign, but they will cherish it:
\textit{No natural exhalation in the sky,}
\textit{No scope' of nature, no dissembler'd day,
No complaisant, no customed event;}
But they will pluck away his natural cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Abortives, pressages, and tongues of heaven,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.
\textit{Lev.} May be, he will not touch young Arthur's life,
But hold himself safe in his imprisonment.
\textit{Pand.} O! sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already,
Even at that news he dies; and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change;
And pick strong matter of revolt, and wrath,
Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John.
Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot:
And, O! what better matter breeds for you,
Than I have nam'd.—The bastard Faulconbridge
Is now in England ransacking the church,
Offending charity: if but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side;
Or as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. O, noble Dauphin!
Go with me to the king. 'T is wonderful,
What may be wrought out of their discontent.
Now that their souls are topfull of offence,
For England go; I will whet on the king.
\textit{Lev.} Strong reasons make strong actions. Let us go:
If you say, ay, the king will not say, no.
       \textit{[Exeunt.}}
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time,
Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your grief?
Or, What good love may I perform for you?
Many a poor man's son would have lain still;
And no'er have spoken a loving word to you;
But you at your sick service had a prince.
Nay, you may think my love was crafty love,
And call it cunning: do, an if you will.
If heaven be pleas'd that you will use me ill,
Why, then you must—Will you put out mine eyes?
These eyes, that never did, nor never shall
So much as frown on you?

Hub. I have sworn to do it,
And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. A! none but in this iron age would it do.
The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,
Approaching near these eyes would drink my tears,
And quench this thievish indignation,
Even in the matter of mine inoencece:
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harm mine eye.
Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?
An if an angel should have come to me,
And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believ'd him; no tongue but Hubert's.

Re-enter Attendants, with Cord, Irons, &c.

Do as I bid you do.

Arth. O! save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are out,
Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

[Taking it.]

Arth. Alas! what need you be so boisterous-rough?
I will not struggle; I will stand stone-still.
For heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound.
Nay, hear me, Hubert: drive these men away,
And I will sit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron anger.
Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,
Whatever torment you do put to me.

Hub. Go, stand within: let me alone with him.

[Exit Attendants.

Arth. Alas! I then have chid away my friend;
He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart;
Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

Arth. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Arth. O heaven!—that there were but a mote in yours,
A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair,
Any annoyance in that precious sense!
Then, feeling what small things are boisterous there,
Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. Let this your son go: hold your tongue.

Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes:
Let me not hold my tongue; let me not, Hubert:
Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,
So I may keep mine eyes. O! spare mine eyes;
Though to no use, but still to look on you.
Lo! by my troth, the instrument is cold,
And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy.

Arth. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with grief,
Being create for comfort, to be us'd

In undeserv'd extremes: see else yourself;
There is no malice in this burning coal;
The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out,
And since he repentant ashes to his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

Arth. And if you do, you will but make it blush,
And glew with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:
Nay, it, perchance, will sparkle in your eyes;
And like a dog that is compell'd to fight,
Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on.
All things that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office: only you do lack
That mercy, which fierce fire, and iron, extend,
Creatures of note for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live; I will not touch thine eyes
For all the treasures that thine uncle owes:
Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, boy,
With this same very iron to burn them out.

Arth. O! now you look like Hubert: all this while
You were disguised.

Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports
And, pretty child, sleep doubly, and secure,
That Hubert for the wealth of all the world
Will not offend thee.

Arth. O heaven!—I thank you, Hubert.
Hub. Silence! no more. Go closely in with me;
Much danger do I undergo for thee.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, crowned; Pembroke, Salisbury, and other Lords. The King takes his State.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again crown'd,
And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.

Pem. This once again, but that your highness pleas'd,
Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was never pluck'd off;
The faiths of men ne'er stain'd with revolt;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land,
With any long'd-for change, or better state.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,
To guard a title that was once before,
To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beautuous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful, and ridiculous excess.

Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an ancient tale new told,
And in the last repeating troublesome,
Being urged at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this, the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured;
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It takes the course of thoughts to fetch about,
Startles and frights consideration,
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness;
And, oftentimes, excusing of a fault
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse:
As patches, set upon a little breach,
Discredit more in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new-crown'd,
We breath'd our counsel; but it pleas'd your highness
To overbear it, and we are all well-pleas'd;
Since all and every part of what we would,
Doth make a stand at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation
I have possess'd you with, and think them strong;
And more, more strong, thus lessening my fear,
I shall induc you with: mean time, but ask
What you would have reform'd that is not well,
And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both hear and grant you your requests.

Pem. Then I, as one that am the tongue of these,
To sound the purposes of all their hearts,
Both for myself and them, but, chief of all,
Your safety, for the which myself and they Bend their best studies, heartily request
Th' enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break into this dangerous argument:—
If what in rest you have, in right you hold,
Why should your fears, which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman, and to choke his days
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise!—
That the time's enemies may not have this
To grace occasions, let it be our suit,
That you so fear'd he had a charge to do.

Sal. The colour of the king doth come and go,
Between his purpose and his conscience,
Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

Pem. And when it breaks, I fear, will issue thence
The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand.—
Good lords, although my will to give is living,
The suit which you demand is gone and dead:
He tells us, Arthur is decease'd to-night.

Sal. Indeed, we fear'd his sickness was past cure.

Pem. Indeed, we heard how near his death he was,
Before the child himself felt he was sick.
This might be answer'd, either here or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?
Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

Sal. It is apparent foul play; and 'tis shame,
That greatness should so grossly offer it.
So thrive it in your game: and so farewell.

Pem. Stay yet, lord Salisbury, I'll go with thee,
And find th' inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forced grave.
That blood which ow'd the breadth of all this isle,
Three foot of it doth hold: bad world the while.
This must not be thus borne: this will break out
To all our sorrows, and ero long, I doubt. [Exit Lords.

K. John. They burn in indignation. I repent:
There is no sure foundation set on blood,
No certain life achiev'd by others' death.

Enter a Messenger.
A fearsful eye thou hast: where is that blood,
That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?
So foul a sky clears not without a storm:
Pour down thy weather.—How goes all in France?

Mess. From France to England.—Never such a power
For any foreign preparation,
Was levi'd in the body of a land.
The copy of your speed is learn'd by them;
For, when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings come that they are all arriv'd.

K. John. O! where hath our intelligence been drunk?
Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care,
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

Mess. My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust: the first of April, died
Your noble mother; and, as I hear, my lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days before: but this from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true, or false, I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful Occasion!
O! make a league with me, till I have pleas'd
My discontented peers.—What! mother dead?
How wildly, then, walks my estimation
Under whose conduct come these powers of France,
That thou for truth giv'st out are landed here?

Mess. Under the Dauphin.

Enter the Bastard, and Peter of Pomfret.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill-tidings.—Now, what says the world
To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

Bast. But if you be afeard to hear the worst,
Then let the worst, unheard, fall on your head.

K. John. Bear with me, cousin, for I was amaz'd
Under the tide; but now I breathe again
Aloft the flood, and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will.

Bast. How I have speeded among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express:
But as I travell'd hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantasied,
Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams,
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear;
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes,
That ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?
Peter. For knowing that the truth will fall out so.

K. John. Hubert, away with him: imprison him;
And on that day at noon, whereon he says,
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd,
Deliver him to safety, and return;
For I must use thee. —O my gentle cousin!

[Exit Hubert, with Peter.

Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arriv'd?

Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full
Besides, I met lord Bigot, and lord Salisbury,
Of it: With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire,
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, who, they say, is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.
K. John. Gentle kinsman, go, And thrust thyself into their companies. I have a way to win their loves again: Bring them before me.

Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed. [Exit.

K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot before.—

O! let me have no subject enemies, When adverse foreigners affright my towns With dreadful pomp of stout invasion. Be Mercury; set feathers to thy heels, And fly like thought from them to me again. Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed. [Exit.

K. John. Spoke like a spriteful, noble gentleman.— Go after him; for he, perhaps, shall need Some messenger betwixt me and the peers, And be thou he.

Mess. With all my heart, my liege. [Exit.

K. John. My mother dead! Re-enter HUERT.

Hub. My lord, they say, five moons were seen to-night: Four fixed; and the fifth did whirl about The other four in wonderous motion.

K. John. Five moons? Hub. Old men, and beldames, in the streets Do prophesy upon it dangerously. Young Arthur’s death is common in their mouths, And when they talk of him, they shake their heads, And whisper one another in the ear; And he that speaks, doth gripe the hearer’s wrist, Whilst the old harper, makes fearful action. With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes. I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus, The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool, With open mouth swallowing a tailor’s news; Who, with his shears and measure in his hand, Standing on slippers, (which his nimble haste Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet) Told of a many thousand warlike French, That were embattailed and rank’d in Kent. Another lean, unwash’d artificer Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur’s death.

K. John. Why seek’st thou to possess me with these fears? Why urgest thou so oft young Arthur’s death? Thy hand hath murder’d him: I had a mighty cause To wish him dead, but thou hast done none to kill him. Hub. Hadst none, my lord! why, didst thou not provoke me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings, to be attended By slaves, that take their honours for a warrant To break into the bloody house of life; And, on the winking of authority, To understand a law; to know the meaning Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it frowns More upon humour than adviz’d respect.

Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did. K. John. O! when the last account’t twist heaven and earth Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal Witness against us to damnation. How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds, Makes ill deeds done! Hadst not thou been by, A fellow by the hand of nature mark’d, Quoted, and sign’d, to do a deed of shame; This murder had not come into my mind: But, taking note of thy abhor’d aspect, Finding thee fit for bloody villainy, Apt, liable to be employ’d in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthur’s death; And thou, to be endeared to a king, Made it no conscience to destroy a prince.

Hub. My lord, what’s to be done?

K. John. Hast thou but shook thy head, or made a When I spake darkly what I purposed; Or turn’d an eye of doubt upon my face, Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break off, And those thy fears might have wrought fears in me: But thou didst understand me by my signs, And didst in signs again parley with sign’s; Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent, And consequently thy rude hand to act The deed which both our tongues held vile to name. Out of my sight, and never see me more! My nobles leave me; and my state is brav’d, Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers: Nay, in the body of this fleshly land, This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath, Hostility and civil tumult reigns Between my conscience, and my cousin’s death.

Hub. Arm you against your other enemies, I’ll make a peace between your soul and you. Young Arthur is alive: this hand of mine Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand, Not painted with the crimson spots of blood. Within this bosom never enter’d yet The dreadful motion of a murderous thought, And you have slander’d nature in my form; Which, however, if I judge rightly, Is yet the cover of a fairer mind, Than to be butcher of an innocent child.

K. John. Dost Arthur live? O! haste thee to the peers:
Throw this report on their incensed rage, And make them tame to their obedience. Forgive the comment that my passion made Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind, And foul imaginary, eyes of blood. Presented thee more hideous than thou art. O! answer not; but to my closet bring The angry lords, with all expedit haste: I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before the Castle.

Enter ARTHUR, on the Wills.

Arth. The wall is high; and yet will I leap down.— Good ground, be pitiful, and hurt me not!— There’s few, or none, do know me; if they did, This ship-boy’s semblance hath disguis’d me quite. I am afraid; and yet I’ll venture it. If I get down, and do not break my limbs, I’ll find a thousand shifts to get away: As good to die and go, as die and stay. [Leaps down. O me! my uncle’s spirit is in these stones.— Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones. [Dies. Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BICROT.

Sal. Lords, I will present his Saint Edmund’s Bury: It is our safety, and we must embrace This gentle offer of the perilous time.

Pem. Who brought that letter from the cardinal? Sal. The count Melan, a noble lord of France; Whose private missives of the Dauphin’s love, Is much more general than these lines import. Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him then.

Sal. Or, rather then set forward: for ’t will be Two long days’ journey, lords, or e’er we meet.
Enter the Bastard.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, distemper'd lords. The king by me requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath dispos'd of himself of us; We will not live his sin-besotted clown.

With our pure honours, nor attend the foot That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks. Return, and tell him so: we know the worst.

Bast. What'er you think, good words, I think, were best.

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason now. Bast. But there is little reason in your grief;

Therefore, 't were reason you had manners now.

Pen. Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege.

Bast. 'Tis true; to hurl his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison. Who is he lies here?

[Seeing Arthur.]

Pen. O death! made proud with pure and princely beauty, The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.

Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done, Doth lay it open to urge on revenge.

Big. Or when he doom'd this beauty to a grave, Found it too precious-princely for a grave.

Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you beheld, Or have you read, or heard? or could you think? Or do you almost think, although you see, That you do see? could thought, without this object, Form such another? This is the very top, The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest, Of murder's arm: this is the bloodiest shame, The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke, That ever wall-ey'd wrath, or staring rage, Presented to the tears of soft remorse.

Pen. All murders past do stand excus'd in this: And this, so sole and so unmatchable, Shall give a holiness, a purity, To the yet unbegotten sin of times; And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest, Exampl'd by this heinous spectacle.

Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work; The graceless action of a heavy hand, If that it be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?— We had a kind of light, what would ensue: It is so fileless, weight so lightly toughed, The practice, and the purpose, of the king: From whose obedience I forbid my soul, Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life, And breathing to his breathless excellence The incense of a vow, a holy vow, Never to taste the pleasures of the world, Never to be infected with delight, Nor conversant with ease and idleness, Till I have set a glory to this head, By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pen. Big. Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you. Arthur doth live, the king hath sent for you.

Sal. O! he is bold, and blushes not at death.— Ay, and, thou hateful villain! get thee gone.

Hub. I am no villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law? [Drawing his sword.

Bast. Your sword is bright, sir: put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, lord Salisbury; stand back, I say: By heaven, I think, my sword's as sharp as yours. I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,

1 thin bestowed: in f. e. 2 hand: in f. e. 3 Not in f. e.
The life, the right, and truth of all this realm
Is fled to heaven; and England now is left
To tug and scramble, and to part by the teeth
The unwieldy interest of this swelling state.
Now for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty.
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarl in the gentle eyes of peace:
Now powers from home, and discontents at home,
Meet in one line: and vast confusion waits.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.
Enter King John, Randolph with the Crown, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory.

From this my hand, as holding of the pope,
Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the French;
And from his holiness use all your power
To stop their marches; 'tis we are inflam'd.
Our discontented counties do revolt,
Our people quarrel with obedience,
Swearing allegiance, and the love of soul,
To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.
This inaudation of mistemper'd humour
Rests by you only to be qualified:
Then pause not; for the present time's so sick,
That present medicine must be minister'd,
or overthrow incurable ensues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convertible,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blustering land.

On this Ascension-day, remember well,
Upon your oath, you laid to the pope,
Go I to make the French lay down their arms.

Exit.

K. John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the prophet
Say that before Ascension-day at noon,
My crown I should give off? Even so I have.
I did suppose it should be on constraint;
But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds
But Dover castle: London hath receiv'd,
Like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers.
Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.

K. John. Would not my lords return to me again,
After they heard young Arthur was alive?
Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the streets;
An empty casket, where the jewel of life
By some damn'd hand was rob'd and ta'en away.

K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.
Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew.
But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad?
Be great in act, as you have been in thought;
Let not the world see fear, and blank distrust,
Govern the motion of a kingly eye.

As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast,
The imminent decay of wrested pomp.
Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture can Hold out this temper. Bear away that child,
And follow me with speed: I'll to the king.
A thousand businesses are brief in hand,
And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.

[Exeunt: Hubert bearing out Arthur's body.]

SCENE II.—A Plain, near St. Edmund's Bury.
Enter, in arms, Lewis, Salisbury, Melun, Pembroke, Bigot, and Soldiers.

Lew. My lord Melun, let this be copied out,
And keep it safe for our remembrance.

Return the precedent to these lords again;
That, having ours written down, both they, and we, perusing o'er these notes,
May know wherefore we took the sacrament,
And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Sol. Upon our sides it never shall be broken.
And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear
A voluntary zeal, and an unurg'd faith,
To your proceedings; yet, believe me, prince,
I am not glad that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaster by commend'd revolt,
And heal the inveterate canker of one wound,
By making many. O! it grieves my soul,
That I must draw this metal from my side
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars
Between this chastis'd kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And now 't is far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with interest to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart,
And come ye now to tell me, John hath made
His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
I, by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
And now it is half-conquer'd, must I back,
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne,
What men provided, what munition sent,
To underprop this action? is 't not I,
That undergo this charge? who else but I,
And such as to my claim are liable,
Sweat in this business, and maintain this war?
Have I not heard these islanders shout out,
Vive le roy! as I have banked their towns?
Have I not spent the beholding deeds for the gain,
To win this easy match, play'd for a crown,
And shall I now give o'er the yielded set?
No, on my soul, it never shall be said.

Pend. You look but on the outside of this work.

Leu. Outside or inside, I will not return
Till my attempt so much be glorified,
As to my ample hope was promised
Before I drew this gallant head of war,
And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Even in the jaws of danger and of death.

[Trumpet sounds]

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter the Bastard, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world,
Let me have audience: I am sent to speak—
My holy lord of Milan, from the king
I come, to learn how you have dealt for him;
And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pend. The Dauphin is too willful-opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties:
He flatly says, he 'll not lay down his arms,
Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd,
The youth says well.—Now, hear our English king,
For thus his royalty doth speak in me.
He is prepar'd; and reason, too, he should:
This appish and unmanfully approach,
This harness'd masque, and unadvised revel,
This unheard sauciness of boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war; these piggyn arms,
From out the circle of his territories.
That hand, which had the strength, even at your door
To cudgel you, and make you take the hatch;
To dive like buckets in concealed wells;
To crouch in litter of your stable planks;
To lie like pawns lock'd up in chests and trunks;
To hug with swine; to seek sweet safety out
In vaults and prisons, and to thrill, and shake,
Even at the crowing of your nation's cock,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman:
Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?
No! Know, the gallant monarch is in arms;

KING JOHN.

Act V.

Sal. When we were happy we had other names.
Pem. It is the count Melyn.
Sal. Wounded to death.
Mel. Fly, noble English; you are bought and sold:
Untread the road-way of rebellion.
And welcome home again discarded faith.
Seek out king John, and fall before his feet;
For if the French be lords of this loud day,
He means to recompense the pains you take,
By cutting off your heads. Thus hath he sworn,
And I with him, and many more with me,
Upon the altar at Saint Edmund's bury;
Even on that altar, where we swore to you
Dear sanity and ever living love.
Sal. May this be possible? may this be true?
Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax
Resolveth? from his figure 'gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all deceit?
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth?
I say again, if Lewis do win the day,
He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east:
But even this night, whose black contagious breath
Already smokes about the burning cresst
Of the old, feeble, and day-wearyed sun,
Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire,
Paying the fine of rated treachery.
Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,
If Lewis by your assistance win the day.
Commend me to one Hubert, with your king;
The love of him,—and this respect besides,
For that my grandsire was an Englishman,—
Awakes my conscience to confess all this.
In lieu whereof, I pray you, bear me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts
In peace, and part this body and my soul
With contemplation on this happy hour.
Sal. We do believe thee, and beseech my soul,
But I do love the favour and the form
Of this most fair occasion, by the which
We will un tread the steps of damned flight;
And, like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd,
And calmly run on in obedience.
Even to our ocean, to our great king John,—
My arm shall give thee help to bear thee hence,
For I do see the cruel pangs of death
Bright in thine eye.—Away, my friends! New flight,
And happy newness, that intends said right.
[Exit, leading off Melyn.

Scene V.—The same. The French Camp.

Enter LEWIS and his Train.

Lew. The sun of heaven, methought, was loath to set,
But stay'd, and made the western welkin blush,
When English measure'd backward their own ground,
In faint retire. O! bravely came we off,
When with a volley of our needless shot,
After such bloody toil we bid good night,
And wound our tattered colours closely up.¹
Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Mell. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

LEO. What news?
M. The count Melun is slain: the English lords, By his persuasion, are again fallen off; And your supplies, which you have wish'd so long, Are cast away, and sunk, on Goodwin sands.

LEO. Ah, foul shrewd news!—Beshrew thy very heart.

I did not think to be so sad to-night,
As this hath made me. — Who was he, that said,
King John did fly an hour or two before
The stombling night did part our weary powers?
M. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.
LEO. Well; keep good quarter, and good care to-night:
The day shall not be up so soon as I,
To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—An open Place in the Neighbourhood of Swinstead-Ashby.

Enter the Bastard and Hubert, severally.
HUB. Who's there? speak, ho! speak quickly, or I shoot.

BAST. A friend. — What art thou?
HUB. Of the part of England.
BAST. Whither dost thou go?
HUB. What's that to thee? Why may not I demand
Of thine affairs, as well as thine of mine?
BAST. Hubert, I think.
HUB. Thou hast a perfect thought:
I will, upon all hazards, well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well.
Who art thou?

BAST. Who thou wilt: and, if thou please,
Thou may'st befriend me so much, as to think
I come one way of the Plantagenets.
HUB. Unkind remembrance! thou, and eyeless' night,
Have done me shame. — Brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from thy tongue
Should escape the true acquaintance of mine ear.
BAST. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?

HUB. Why, here walk I, in the black brow of night,
To find you out.

BAST. Brief, then; and what's the news?

HUB. O! my sweet sir, news fitting to the night,
Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible.

BAST. Show me the very wound of this ill news:
I am no woman; I'll not swoon at it.
HUB. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk:
I left him almost speechless, and broke out
To acquaint you with this evil, that you might
The better arm you to the sudden time,
Than if you had at leisure known of this.
BAST. How did he take it? who did taste to him?

HUB. A monk, I tell you; a resolved villain,
Whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king
Yet speaks, and, peradventure, may recover.

BAST. Whom didst thou leave to tend his majesty?

HUB. Why, know you not; the lords are all come back,
And brought prince Henry in their company;
At whose request the king hath pardon'd them,
And they are all about his majesty.

BAST. Withhold thine indignation, mighty heaven,
And tempt us not to bear above our power.
I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them:
Myself well-mounted hardly have essay'd.
Away, before: conduct me to the king;
I doubt, he will be dead ere I come. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Orchard of Swinstead-Ashby.

Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Bigot.

P. Hen. It is too late: the life of all his blood
Is touch'd corruptibly; and his pure brain
(Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling-house)
Doth this idle commotion. But it makes,
Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.
PEN. His highness yet doth speak; and holds belief
That being brought into the open air,
It would alloy the burning quality
Of that fell poison which assailth him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here.—
Doth he still rage?

PEN. He is more patient
Than when you left him: even now he sung.

P. Hen. O, vanity of sickness! fierce extremes
In their continuance will not feel themselves.
Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves them unvisited; and his siege is now
Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies,
Which, in their throng and press to that last hold,
Confound themselves. 'T is strange that death should sing.
I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death,
And from the organ-pipe of raitly sings
His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, prince, for you are born
To set a form upon that indigest,
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

Re-enter Bigot and Attendants. — King John brought in a Chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room;
It would not out at windows, nor at doors.

There is so hot a summer in my bosom,
That all my bowels crumble up to dust:
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment, and against this fire
Do I shrink up.

P. Hen. How fares your majesty?
K. John. Poison'd. — ill-fare; — dead, forsook, cast off,
And none of you will bid the winter come,
To thrust his icy fingers in my maw;
Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course
Through my burn'd bosom; nor entreat the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips,
And comfort me with cold. — I do not ask you much:
I beg cold comfort: and you are so strait,
And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O, that there were some virtue in my tears,
That might relieve you!

K. John. The salt in them is hot.—
Within me is a hell: and there the poison
Is, as a fiend, confin'd to tyrannize
On unpreetable condemned blood.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. O! I am scaled with my violent motion,
And keen of speed to see your majesty.

K. John. O cousin! thou art come to set mine eye
The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd;
And all the shrouds, wherewith my life should sail,
Are turned to one thread, one little hair:
My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered,
And then all this thou seest is but a clod,
And model of confounded royalty.
Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward,
Where, heaven he knows, how we shall answer him;
For, in a night, the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the washes, all unwarily,
Devoured by the unexpected flood. [King John dies.
Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear.—
My liege! my lord!—But now a king, now thus.
P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a king, and now is clay?
Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind,
To do the office for thee of revenge,
And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.—
Now, now, you stars, that move in your right spheres,
Where be your powers? Show now your mended faiths,
And instantly return with me again,
To push destruction, and perpetual shame,
Out of the weak door of our fainting land.
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought:
The Dauphin rages at our very heels.
Sal. It seems you know not; then, so much as we.
The cardinal Pandulph is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin,
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honour and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this war.
Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well sinew'd to our own defence.
Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath despatch'd
To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel
To the disposing of the cardinal:
With whom yourself, myself, and other lords,
If you think meet, this afternoon will post
To consummate this business happily.
Bast. Let it be so.—And you, my noble prince,
With other princes that may best be spare'd,
Shall wait upon your father's funeral.
P. Hen. At Worcester must his body be inter'd;
For so he will'd it.
Bast. Thither shall it then.
And happily may your sweet self put on
The lineal state and glory of the land:
To whom, with all submission, on my knee,
I do bequeath my faithful services,
And true subjection everlastingly.
Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,
To rest without a spot for evermore.
P. Hen. I have a kind soul, that would give you thanks,
And knows not how to do it, but with tears.
Bast. O! let us pay the time but needful woe,
Since it hath been forsooth with our griefs.—
This England never did, nor never shall,
Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
But when it first did help to wound itself.
Now these, her princes, are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them. Nought shall make us rue,
If England to itself do rest but true. [Exeunt.
THE LIFE AND DEATH
OF
KING RICHARD II.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

KING RICHARD the Second.
EDMUND of LANGLEY, Duke of York.
JOHN of GAUNT, Duke of Lancaster.
HENRY BOLINGBROKE, Duke of Hereford.
DUKE of Aumerle, Son to the Duke of York.
THOMAS MOWBRAY, Duke of Norfolk.
DUKE of Surrey.
EARL of Salisbury, EARL BERKELEY.
BUSHY, BAGOT, Creatures to King Richard.
GREEN, EARL of Northumberland.

Lords, Heralds, Officers, Soldiers, Gardeners, Keeper, Messenger, Groom, and other Attendants.

SCENE, dispersedly in England and Wales.

ACT I.

Enter King Richard, attended; JOHN of GAUNT, and other Nobles, with him.

K. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time-honour'd Lancaster,
Hast thou, according to thy oath and band, ¹
Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold son,
Here to make good thy boisterous late appeal,
Which then our leisure would not let us hear,
Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I have, my liege.

K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, hast thou sounded him,
If he appeal the duke on ancient malice,
Or worthily, as a good subject should,
On some known ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that argument,
On some apparent danger seen in him,
Aim'd at your highness; no indeterate malice.

K. Rich. Then call them to our presence: face to face,
And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear
Th' accuser, and th' accused, freely speak.—

[Exeunt some Attendants.

High stomach'd are they both, and full of ire,
In rage deaf as the sea, lusty as fire.

Re-enter Attendants, with BOLINGBROKE and NORFOLK.

Boling. Full² many years of happy days beheld My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!
Nor. Each day still better other's happiness;
Until the heavens, envy'd earth's good hap,
Add an immortal title to your crown!

Which else would post, until it had return'd
These terms of treason doubled down his throat.
Setting aside his high blood's royalty,
And let him be no kinsman to my liege,
I do defect thee, and I hope while he shall be dead
Call him a slanderous coward, and a villain;
Which to maintain I would allow him odds,
And meet him, were I tied to run a-foot
Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps,
Or any other ground inhabitable,
Where ever Englishman durst set his foot.
Mean time, let this defend my loyalty:

_Boling._
Pale trembling coward, there I throw my Disclaiming here the kindred of the king; [sage,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty;
Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except:
If guilty deed have left thy soul so much strength,
As to take up of mine honour's post, then stoop,
By that and all the rites of knighthood else,
Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,
What I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise.

_Nor._ I take it up; and, by that sword I swear,
Which gently laid my knighthood on my shoulder,
I'll answer thee in any fair degree,
Or chivalrous design of knightly trial:
And, when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be traitor, or unjustly fight!

_K. Rich._ What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's charge?
It must be great, that can inherit us
So much as of a thought of ill in him.

_Boling._ Look, what I speak, my life shall prove it true:
That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles,
In name of lendings for your highness's soldiers,
The which he hath detain'd for lewd* employments,
Like a false traitor, and injurious villain.
Besides, I say, and will in battle prove,
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye,
That all the treasons, for these eighteen years
Complotted and contrived in this land,
Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and spring.
Further, I say, and farther will maintain
Upon his bad life to make all this good.
That he did plot the duke of Gloster's death:
Suggest* his soon-believing adversaries,
And, consequently, like a traitor-coward,
Stirr'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood:
Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To me for justice, and rough chastisement;
And, by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.

_K. Rich._ How high a pitch his resolution soars?
Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?

_Nor._ O! let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while he deaf,
Till I have told this slander of his blood,
How God, and good men, hate so foul a liar.

_K. Rich._ Mowbray, impartial are our eyes, and ears:
Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,
As he is but my father's brother's son,
Now by my seepire's sake I make a vow,
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
The unstooping firmness of my upright soul.

He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou:
Free speech and fearless, I to thee allow.

_Nor._ Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart,
Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest.
Through the false parts of that traitor Calais,
Disbur'd I duly* to his highness' soldiers:
The other part reserv'd I by consent;
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt,
Upon remainder of a clear* account,
Since last I went to France to fetch his queen.
Now, swallow down that lie.—For Gloster's death,
I slew him not; but to mine own disgrace,
Neglected my sworn duty in that case.—
For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
The honourable father to my foe,
Once did I lay an ambush for your life,
A trespass that doth vex my grieved soul;
But, ere I last receiv'd the sacrament,
I did confess it, and exactly begg'd
Your grace's pardon, and, I hope, I had it.
This is my fault: as for the rest appeal'd,
It issues from the rancour of a villain,
A recrrent and most degenerate traitor;
Which in myself I boldly will defend,
And interchangeably hurl down my gage
Upon this overweening traitor's foot,
To prove myself a loyal gentleman
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom.
In haste whereof, most heartily I pray,
Your highness to assign our trial day.

_K. Rich._ Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be rul'd by me.
Let's purge this choler without letting blood:
This we prescribe, though no physician;
Deep malice makes too deep incision.
Forget, forgive; conclude, and be agreed;
Our doctors say this is no month to bleed.—
Good uncle, let this end where it began;
We'll calm the duke of Norfolk, you your son.

_Gaunt._ To be a make-peace shall become my age.—
Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolk's gage.

_K. Rich._ And, Norfolk, throw down his.

_Gaunt._ When, Harry? when?
Obedience bids, I should not bid again.

_K. Rich._ Norfolk, throw down; we bid; there is no boot.

_Nor._ Myself I throw, dread sovereign, at thy foot,
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death that lives upon my grave,
To dark honour's use thou shalt not have.
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled here;
Pierc'd to the soul with slander's venom'd spear;
The which no balm can cure, but his heart-blood
Which breath'd this poison.

_K. Rich._ Rage must be withstood.
Give me his gage:—lions make leopards' tane.

_Nor._ Yes, but not change his spots: take but my shame,
And I resign my gage. My dear, dear lord,
The purest treasure mortal times afford
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam, or painted clay.
A jewel in a ten times bard'd-up chest
Is a bold spirit in a loyal breast.
Mine honour is my life; both grow in one:
Take honour from me, and my life is done.
Then, dear my liege, mine honour let me try;
In that I live, and for that will I die.

SCENE III.

Boling. O! God defend my soul from such deep sin.

K. Rich. Shall I seem crest-fallen in my father's sight?

Boling. Or with pale beggar-fear impeach my height

K. Rich. Before this outward dastard? Ere my tongue

Boling. Shall wound mine honour with such feeble wrong,

K. Rich. Or sound so base a parle, my teeth shall tear

Boling. The slavish motive of recanting fear,

K. Rich. And spit it bleeding in his high disgrace,

Boling. Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbray's face.

[Exit Boling.

K. Rich. We were not born to sue; but to command:

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of Lancaster's Palace.

Enter Gaunt, and Duchess of Gloucester.

Gaunt. Alas! the part I had in Gloucester's blood doth more solicit me, than your exclamations,

To stir against the butchers of his life:

But since correction lieth in those hands,

Which made the fault that we cannot correct,

Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven;

Who when they see the hours ripe on earth,

Will win on offenders' heads.

Duch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?

Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?

Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one,

Were as seven phials of his sacred blood,

Or seven fair branches springing from one root:

Some of those seven are dried by nature's course,

Some of those branches by the destined cut;

But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloucester,

One phial full of Edward's sacred blood,

One flourishing branch of his most royal root,

Is crack'd; and all the precious liquor spilt;

Is haunc'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,

By envy's hand, and murder's bloody ax.

Ah! Gaunt, was this thy works, this thy deeds,

That metal, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee,

Made him a man; and though thou livest, and breath'st,

Yet art thou slain in him. Thou dost consent

In some large measure to thy father's death,

In that thou seest thy wretched brother die,

Who was the model of thy father's life.

Call it not patience, Gaunt; it is despair:

In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughtered,

Thou show'st the naked pathway to thy life,

Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee.

That which in mean men we entitle patience,

Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.

What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life,

The chiefest way is to venge my Gloucester's death.

Duch. God's is the quarrel; for God's substitute,

His deputy anointed in his sight,

Hath caus'd his death; the which, if wrongfully,

Let heaven revenge, for I may never lift

An angry arm against his minister.

Duch. Where then, alas! may I complain myself?

Gaunt. To God, the widow's champion and defence.

Duch. Why then, I will,—Farewell, farewell, old

Gaunt.

Thou goest to Coventry, there to behold

Our cousin Hereford and fall Mowbray's flight.

O! sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear,

That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast;

Or if misfortune miss the first career,

Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom,

That they may break his foaming courser's back,

And throw the rider headlong in the lists,

A caitiff recreant to my cousin Hereford.

Farewell, old Gaunt: thy sometime brother's wife

With her companion grief must end her life.

Gaunt. Sister, farewell! I must to Coventry.

As much good stay with thee, as go with me!

Duch. Yet one word more,—Grief boundeth where it falls,

Not with the empty hollowness, but weight:

I take my leave before I have begun,

For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done.

Command me to thy brother, Edmund York.

Lo! this is all:—nay, yet depart not so;

Though this be all, do not so quickly go;

I shall remember more. Bid him—O! what?

With all good speed at Flashy visit me.

Alack! and what shall good old York there see,

But empty lodgings and unfurnished walls,

Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones?

And what hear! there for welcome, but my grounds?

Therefore commend me; let him not come there,

To seek out sorrow that dwells everywhere,

Desolate, desperate, will I hence, and die:

The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Gosford Green, near Coventry.

Lists set out, and a Throne. Herald, &c. attending.

Enter the Lord Marshal, and Aumerle.

Mar. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?

Aum. Yea, at all points, and longs to enter in.

Mar. The duke of Norfolk, sprightly and bold,

Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.

Aum. Why then, the champions are prepar'd, and stay

For nothing but his majesty's approach.

Flourish. Enter King Richard, who takes his seat on his Throne; Gaunt, Bushy, Bacoit, Green, and others who take their places. A Trumpet is sounded, and answered by another Trumpet within. Then enter

Norfolk in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion

The cause of his arrival here in arms:

Ask him his name; and orderly proceed

To swear him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. In God's name, and the king's, say who thou art,

And why thou com'st thus knightly clad in arms:

Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel.

Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thine oath,

As so defend thee heavenly, and thy valour!

Nor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk;

Who hither come engaged by my oath,

(Which, God defend, a knight should violate!) Both to defend my loyalty and truth,

To God, my king, and my succeeding issue,

Against the duke of Hereford that appeals me;

And, by the grace of God and this mine arm,
To prove him, in defending of myself,
A traitor to my God, my king, and me:
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!
Trumpets sound. Enter BOLINGBROKE, in armour; preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms,
Both who he is, and why he cometh hither
Thus plated in habiliments of war;
And formally, according to our law,
Depose him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. What is thy name, and wherefore com'st thou hither,
Before King Richard in his royal lists?
Against whom com'st thou, and what is thy quarrel?
Speak like a true knight; so defend thee heaven!

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Am I; who ready here do stand in arms,
To prove by God's grace, and my body's valour,
In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
That he's a traitor, foul and dangerous,
To God of heaven, king Richard, and to me:
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Mar. Of all the show of death thou dost so bold,
Or daring hardy, as to touch the lists;
Except the marshal, and such officers
Appointed to direct these fair designs.

Boling. Lord marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's hand,
And bow my knee before his majesty:
For Mowbray and myself are like two men
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage;
Then let us take a ceremonious leave,
And loving farewell of our several friends.

Mar. The: applicant in all duty greets your highness,
And craves to kiss your hand, and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend, and fold him in our arms.
Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right,
So be thy fortune in this joyful fight.
Farewell, my blood; which if to-day thou shed,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

Boling. O! let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gored with Mowbray's spear.
As confident as is the falcon's flight
Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight.—
My loving lord, I take my leave of you:—
Of you, my noble cousin, lord Aumerle;—
Not sick, although I have to do with death,
But lusty, young, and cheerily drawing breath.
Lo! as at English feasts, so I regret
The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet:
O! thou, [To GAUNT.] the earthy author of my blood,—
Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
[Both with a two-fold vigour lift me up
To reach at victory above my head,
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers;
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point,
That it may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furnish new the name of John of Gaunt,
Even in the lusty 'aviour of his son.

Gaunt. God in thy good cause make thee prosperous!
Be swift like lightning in the execution;
And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like abundant thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy;
Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocence, and Saint George to thrive!—
Nor. However God, or fortune, cast my lot,
There lives or dies, true to king Richard's throne,
A loyal, just, and upright gentleman.

Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroul'd enfranchisement,
More than my dancing soul doth celebrate
This feat of battle with mine adversary.—
Most mighty liege, and my companion peers,
Take from my mouth the wish of happy years:
As gentle and as jovial, as to jest,—
Go I to fight... Truth hath a must breast.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I esp'y
Virtue with valour couched in thine eye.—
Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Receive thy lance; and God defend the right!

Boling. Strong as a tower in hope, I cry, amen.

Mar. Go bear this lance [To an Officer.] to Thomas, duke of Norfolk.

1 Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself,
On pain to be found false and recreant,
To prove the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,
A traitor to his God, his king, and truly;
And dares him to set forward to the fight.

2 Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk.
On pain to be found false and recreant,
Both to defend himself, and to approve
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
To God, his sovereign, and to him, disloyal;
Courageously, and with a free desire,
Attending but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound trumpets; and set forward, combatants.

[Act, sealed.

Stay, the king hath thrown his war'd down.
K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and their spears,
And both return back to their chairs again.—
Withdraw with us; and let the trumpets sound,
While we return these dukes what we decree.—

[Act, sounded.

Draw near, [To the Combatants.] and list, what with our council we have done.
For that our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd
With that dear blood which it hath fostered;
And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours' swords;
And for we think the eagle-winged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,
With rival-hating envy, set on you,
To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle
Draws the sweet infant-breath of gentle sleep;
So which rous'd up with boisterous untun'd drums,
With harsh resounding trumpets' dreadful bray,
And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,
Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace,
And make us wade even in our kindred's blood:
Therefore, we banish you our territories:
You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of life,
Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields,
Shall not reject our fair dominions,
But tread the stranger paths of banishment.

Boling. Your will be done. This must my comfort be,
That sun that warms you here shall shine on me;
And those his golden beams, to you here lent,
Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.

K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,
Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:
The fly's slow hours shall not determine

1 Just oft'n means a mask entertainment. 2 So the quarto, 1607; other eds. thy. 3 Truncheon. 4 This and the four following lines are omitted in the folio. 5 So the quarto; the folio: death. 6 sty. I in f. s.
The dateless limit of thy dear exile.
The hopeless word or—never to return
Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.
Nor. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege,
And all unlook'd for from thy highness' mouth:
A dearer merit, not so deep a main
As to be cast forth in the common air,
Have I deserv'd at thy highness' hands.
The language I have learn'd these forty years,
My native English, now I must forgo;
And now my tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstringed viol, or a harp;
Or like a cunning instrument cas'd up,
Or, being open, put into his hands
That knows no touch to tune the harmony.
Within my mouth you have enjaill'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd, with my teeth and lips;
And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance
Is made my jailor to attend on me.
I am too old to fawn upon a nurse,
Too far in years to be a pupil now;
What is thy sentence, then, but speechless death,
Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath?
K. Rich. It boots thee not to be compassionate:
After our sentence plaining comes too late.
Nor. Then, thus I turn me from my country's light,
To dwell in solemn shades of endless night. [Retiring.
K. Rich. Return again, and take an oath with thee.
Lay on our royal sword your banish'd hands;
Swear by the duty that ye owe to God,
(Of our part therein we banish with yourselves)
To keep the oath that we administer:—
You never shall (so help you truth and God!) Embrace each other's love in banishment;
Nor never? look upon each other's face;
Nor never write, regret, nor reconcile
This lowering tempest of your home-bred hate;
Nor never by advised purpose meet,
To plot, confive, or comploit any ill,
'Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land.
Boling. I swear.
Nor. And I, to keep all this.

[They kiss the king's sword.]

Boling. Norfolk, so fare^, as to mine enemy.—
By this time, had the king permitted us,
One of our souls had wander'd in the air,
Banish'd this frail sonchillers of flesh,
As now our flesh is banish'd from this land:
Confess thy treasons, ere thou fly the realm;
Since thou hast-far to go, bear not along
The clogging burden of a guilty soul.
Nor. No, Bolingbroke: if ever I were traitor,
My name be blotted from the book of life,
And I from heaven banish'd, as from hence.
But what thou art, God, thou, and I do know;
And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.—
Farewell, my liege.—Now no way can I stray:
Save back to England, all the world's my way. [Exit.
K. Rich. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
I see thy griefed heart: thy sad aspect
Hath from the number of his banish'd years
Pluck'd four away.—[To Bolingbroke] Six frozen winters spent,
Return with welcome home from banishment.
Boling. How long a time lies in one little word!
Four lagging winters and four wanton springs,
End in a word: such is the breath of kings.
Gaunt. I thank my liege, that in regard of me
He shortens four years of my son's exile;
But little vantage shall I reap thereby;
For, even in these years, that he hath to spend,
Can change their moons, and bring their times about,
My oil-dried lamp, and time-bewast'd light,
Shall be extinct with age and endless night:
My inch of taper will be burnt and done,
And blindfold death not let me see my son.
K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live.
Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou canst give:
Shoret in my days thou canst with sullen sorrow,
And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow.
Thou canst help time to ferrow me with age,
But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage:
Thy word is current with him for my death,
But, dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.
K. Rich. Thy son is banish'd upon good advice,
Whereeto thy tongue a party-verständ gave:
Why at our justice seem'st thou, then, to lower?
Gaunt. Things sweet to taste prove in digestion sour.
You urg'd me as a judge; but I had rather,
You would have bid me argue like a father.
O! had it been a stranger, not my child,^,
To smooth his fault I should have been more mild:
A partial slander sought I to avoid,
And in the sentence my own life destroy'd.
Alas! I look'd when some of you should say,
I was too strict to make mine own away;
But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue,
Against my will to do myself this wrong.
K. Rich. Cousin, farewell;—and, uncle, bid him so:
Six years we banish him, and he shall go.
[Flourish. Extent King Richard, and Train.
Atm. Cousin, farewell: what presence must not know,
From where do you remain, let paper show.
Mar. My lord, no leave take I; for I will ride,
As far as land will let me, by your side.
Gaunt. O! to what purpose dost thou hoard thy words,
That thou return'st no greeting to thy friends?
Boling. I have too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal
To breathe thy abundant dour of the heart.
Gaunt. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time.
Boling. Joy absent, grief is present for that time.
Gaunt. What is six winters? they are quickly gone.
Boling. To men in joy; but grief makes one hour ten.
Gaunt. Call it a travel, that thou tak'st for pleasure.
Boling. My heart will sigh when I missal it so,
Which finds it an enforced pilgrimage.
Gaunt. The sullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home-return.
Boling. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make^,
Will but remember me, what a deal of world
I wander from the jewels that I love.
Must I not serve a long apprenticeship
To foreign passages, and in the end,
Having my freedom, boast of nothing else
But that I was a journeyman to grief?
Gaunt. All places that the eye of heaven visits,
Are to a wise man ports and happy havens.
Teach thy necessity to reason thus:
There is no virtue like necessity:
Think not the king did banish thee,
But thou the king: woe doth the heavier sit,
Where it perceives it is but faintly borne.
Go, say I sent thee forth to purchase honour,
And not the king exil'd thee; or suppose,
Devouring pestilence hangs in our air,
And thou art flying to a fresher clime:
Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it
To lie that way thou go'st, not whence thou com'st:
Suppose the singing birds musicians,
The grass whereon thou tread'st the presence strew'd,
The flowers fair ladies, and thy steps no more,
Than a delightful measure, or a dance;
For gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks it, and sets it light.
Boling: O! who would hold a fire in his hand,
By thinking on the frosty Caucasus?
Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
By bare imagination of a feast?
Or wallow naked in December snow,
By thinking on fantastic summer's heat?
O! no: the apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse:
Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more,
Than when it bites, but lancess not the sore.
Gaunt. Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way:
Had I thy youth and cause, I would not stay.
Boling. Then, England's ground, farewell: sweet soil, adieu;
My mother, and my nurse, that bears me yet!
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman.[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Room in the King's Castle.

Enter King Richard, Bagot, and Green, at one door; Aumerle at another.

K. Rich. We did observe—Cousin Aumerle,
How far brought you high Hereford on his way?
Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so,
But to the next highway, and there I left him.
K. Rich. And, say, what store of parting tears were shed?
Aum. 'Tis faith, none for me; except the north-east wind,
Which then blew bitterly against our faces,
Awak'd the sleeping rhum, and so by chance
Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.
K. Rich. What said our cousin, when you parted with him?
Aum. Farewell: and, for my heart disdain'd my tongue
Should so profane the word, that taught me craft
To counterfeit oppression of such grief,
That words seem'd buried in my sorrow's grave.

Marry, would the word "farewell" have lengthen'd hours,
And added years to his short banishment,
He should have had a volume of farewells;
But, since it would not, he had none of me.

K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt,
When time shall call him home from banishment,
Whether our kinsman come to see his friends.
Ourself, and Bushy, Bagot here, and Green,
Observ'd his courtship to the common people:
How he did seem to dive into their hearts,
With humble and familiar courtesy;
What reverence he did throw away on slaves;
Wooing poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles,
And patient underbearing of his fortune,
As 't were to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an oyster wench;
A brace of draymen bid God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee
With — "Thanks, my countrymen, my loving friends:"—
As were our England in reversion his,
And he our subjects' next degree in hope.

Green. Well, he is gone; and with him go these thoughts.

Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
Ere farther leisure yield them farther means,
For their advantage, and your highness' loss.

K. Rich. We will ourself in person to this war:
And, for our coffers with too great a court,
And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light,
We are enforce'd to farm our royal realm;
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. If that come short,
Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters;
Whereeto, when they shall know what men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,
And send them after to supply our wants,
For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Bushy.

Bushy, what news?

Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my lord,
Suddenly taken, and hath sent post-haste,
To entreat your majesty to visit him.

K. Rich. Where lies he now?

Bushy. At Ely-house, my liege.

K. Rich. Now put it, God, in his physician's mind,
To help him to his grave immediately!
The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.—
Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him:
Pray God, we may make haste, and come too late!

[Exit.

ACT II.

Gaunt on a Couch; the Duke of York, and Others, standing by him.

Gaunt. Will the king come, that I may breathe my
In wholesome counsel to his unpaissed youth; [last York. Vex not yourself, nor strive with your breath;
For all in vain comes counsel to his ear.

Gaunt. O! but they say, the tongues of dying men
Enforce attention like deep harmony:

1 The quarto, 1597, has: he. 2 Expeditions. 3 So the quartos; the folio: is.
York. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds, As praises of his state: then, there are found! Lascivious metres, to whose venom sound The open ear of youth doth always listen: Report of fashions in proud Italy; Whose manners still our tardy apple nation Lips after, in base imitation.

Whereof doth the world thrust forth a vanity, So be it new there's no respect how vile, That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears? Then, all too late comes counsel to be heard, Where will doth mutiny with wit's regard. Direct him, whose way himself will choose: 'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath will thou lose.

Gaunt. Methinks, I am a prophet new inspir'd, And thus, expiring, do foretell of him. His rash fierce blaze of riot cannot last, For violent fires soon burn out themselves; Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short; He tires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes; With eager feeding food doth choke the feeder: Light vanity, insatiate cormorant, Consuming means, soon preys upon itself.

This royal throne of kings, this scepter'd isle, This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars, This other Eden, demi-paradise; This fortress built by nature for herself, Against infection, and the hand of war; This happy breed of men, this little world, This precious stone set in the silver sea, Which serves it in the office of a wall, Or as a most defensive to a house, Against the envy of less happy lands; This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England, This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings, Fear'd by their breed, and famous by their birth, Renowned for their deeds as far from home, For Christian service and true chivalry, As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's Son: This land of such dear souls, this dear, dear land, Dear for her reputation through the world, Is now lean'st out, I die pronouncing it, Like to a tenement, or pelting farm.

England, bound in with the triumphant sea, Whose rocky shore boats back the envious siege Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame, With inky blobs, and rotten parchment bonds: That England, that was wont to conquer others, Hath made a shameful conquest of itself. Ah! would the scandal vanish with my life, How happy then were my ensuing death.

Enter King Richard, and Queen; Aumerle, Bushy, Godwin, Exeter, and Winteringham.

York. The king is come: deal mildly with his youth; For young hot-coals, being urg'd, do rage the more.

Queen. How fares our noble uncle, Lancaster?

K. Rich. What, comfort, man! How is 't with aged Gaunt?

Gaunt. O! how that name befits my composition! Old Gaunt, indeed; and gaunt in being old: Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast; And who abstains from meat, that is not gaunt? For sleeping England long time have I watch'd; Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:

The pleasure that some fathers feed upon Is my strict fast, I mean my children's looks; And therein fasting hast thou made me gaunt. Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave, Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

Gaunt. No; misery makes sport to mock itself: Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me, I mock my name, great king, to flatter thee.

K. Rich. Should dying men flatter with those that live?

Gaunt. No, no; men living flatter those that die.

K. Rich. Then, now-a-dying, say'st thou flatter'st none.

Gaunt. O! no; thou diest, though I the sicker be.

K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee ill.

Gaunt. Now, He that made me knows I see thee ill; Ill in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill.

Thy death-bed is no lesser than the land, Wherein thou liest in reputation sick; And thou, too careless patient as thou art, Commit's thy nointed body to the cure Of those physicians that first wounded thee. A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown, Whose compass is no bigger than thy head; And yet, incaged in so small a v begging the wrongs of Edward, dam us with less than thy land. O! had thy grandsire, with a prophet's eye, Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons, From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame, Deposing thee before thou wert possess'd, Which art possess'd now to depose thyself. Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world, It were a shame to let this land by lease; But for thy world enjoying but this land, Is it not more than shame to shame it so? Landlord of England art thou now, not king: Thy state of law is bondsclave to the law, And thou—?

K. Rich. A lunatic lean-witted fool, Presuming on an age's privilege, Darest with thy frozen admonition Make pale our cheek, chasing the royal blood With fury from his native residence. Now, by my seat's right royal majesty, Wert thou not brother to great Edward's son, This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head, Should run thy head from thy unreverend shoulders.

Gaunt! O! spare me not, my brother Edward's son, For that was I his father Edward's son: That blood already, like the pelican, Hast thou tapp'd out, and drunkenly carous'd. My brother Gloster, plain well-meaning soul, Whom fair beaum in heaven amongst happy souls, May be a precedent and witness good. That thou respecting not spilling Edward's blood, Join with the present sickness that I have, And thy unkindness be like crooked age, To crop at once a too-long withered flower. Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee: These words hereafter thy tormentors be,— Convey me to my bed, then to my grave: Love they to live, that love and honour have.

[Exit, borne out by his Attendants.

K. Rich. And let them die, that age and sullens have, For both hast thou, and both become the grave.

1 The quarto, 1693, reads: As praises, of whose taste the wise are found (fond). 2 Folio, 1623: for. 3 Petty. 4 rag'd: in l.c. 5 The folio omits: with. 6 The folio: and. 7 So the quartos; the folio and most mod eds.: And—

K. Rich. And thou a lunatic, &c.
York. I do beseech your majesty, impute his words
To wayward sickness and age in him:
He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
As Harry, duke of Hereford, were he here.
K. Rich. Right, you say true; as Hereford's love, so his:
As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.
Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.
North. My liege, old Gaunt commends himself to your majesty.
K. Rich. What says he?
North. Nay, nothing; all is said.
His tongue is now a stringless instrument:
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.
York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt so!
Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.
K. Rich. The riper fruit first falls, and so doth he:
His time is spent; our pilgrimage must be.
So much for that.—Now for our Irish wars.
We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns,
Which live like venom, where no venom else,
But out-and-tomorrow, ills, us to-day;
And for these great affairs do ask some charge,
Towards our assistance we do seize to us
The plate, coin, revenues, and movables,
Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd.
York. How long shall I be patient? Ah! how long
Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?
Not Gloster's death, nor Hereford's banishment,
Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs,
Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke
About his marriage, nor my own disgrace,
Have ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.
I am the last of noble Edward's sons,
Of whom the prince, prince of Wales, was first:
In war was never lion ruder nor more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
Than was that young and princely gentleman.
His face then hast, for even so look'd he,
Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours;
But when he crow'd, it was against the French,
And not against his friends:—his noble hand
Did win what he did spend, and spent not that
Which his triumphant father's hand had won:
His hands were guilty of no kindred blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kin.
O, Richard! York is too far gone with grief,
O, that the conqueror would compare between,
K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter all?
York. O, my liege!
Pardon me, if you please; if not, I, pleas'd.
Not to be pardon'd, am content withal.
Seek you to seize, and gripe into your hands,
The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford?
Is not Gaunt dead, and doth not Hereford live?
Was not Gaunt just, and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserve to have an heir?
Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
Take Hereford's rights away; and take from time
His charters and his customary rights;
Let no man live to-day,
Be not thyself; for how art thou a king,
But by fair sequence and succession?
Now, afores God (God forbid, I say true!) If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,
Call in the letters patents that he hath By his attorneys-general to sue
His libery; and deny his offer'd homage,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,
You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts
Which honour and allegiance cannot think.
K. Rich. Think what you will: we seize into our hands
His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.
York. I'll not be by the while. My liege, farewell:
What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell;
But by bad courses may be understood,
That their events can never fall out good.
[Exit.
K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the earl of Wiltshire straight:
Bid him repair to us to Ely-house,
To see this business. To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow;
And we create, in absence of ourself,
Our uncle York lord governor of England,
For he is just, and always lov'd us well.—
Come on, our next day, too live.
Be merry, for our time of stay is short.[Flourish.
[Exeunt, RICHARD, QUEEN, BUSHY, AUMERLE, GREEN, and BAGOT.
North. Well, lords, the duke of Lancaster is dead.
Ross. And living too, for now his son is duke.
Willo. Barely in title, not in revenues.
North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.
Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence,
Ere 'tis be burden'd with a liberal tongue.
North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him never speak more,
That speaks thy words again to do thee harm!
Willo. Tends that thou dost speak, to the duke of Hereford?
If it be so, out with it boldly, man;
Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him.
Ross. No good at all that I can do for him,
Unless you call it good to pity him,
Bereft and gilded of his patrimony.
North. Now, afores God, 'tis shame such wrongs are borne
In him, a royal prince, and many more
Of noble blood in this declining land.
The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers; and what they will inform,
Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute,
'Gainst us, our wives', our children, and our heirs.
Ross. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,
And quite lost their hearts: the nobles hath he fin'd
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.
Willo. And daily new exactions are devis'd;
As blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what:
But what, o' God's name, doth become of this?
North. Wars have not wasted it, for warr'd he hath not,
But basely yielded upon compromise
That which his noble ancestors achiev'd with blows:
More hath he spent in peace, than they in wars.
Ross. The king of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm.
Willo. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken man.
North. Reproach, and dissolution, hangeth over him.
Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars,
His burdensome taxation notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banish'd duke.

North. His noble kin'sman: most degenerate king!
But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm;
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish.

Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoidable is the danger now,
For suffering so the causes of our wreck.

North. Not so: even through the hollow eyes of death,
I spy life peering; but I dare not say
How near the tidings of our comfort is.

Wil. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.

Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:
We three are but thyself; and, speaking so,
Thy words are but our thoughts: therefore, be bold.

North. Then thus,—I have from Port de Blanc, a bay
In Brittany, receiv'd intelligence,
That Harry duke of Hereford, Reginald lord Cobham,
That late broke from the duke of Exeter,
His brother, archbishop late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, sir John Ramsion,
Sir John Norbery, sir Robert Waterton, and Francis Quoint,
All these well furnish'd by the duke of Bretagne,
With eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expediency,
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore:
Perhaps, they had ere this, but that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If so, then shall we shake out of our slavish yoke,
Impout our drooping country's broken wing,
Redeem from breaking pawn the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our scepter's gait,
And make high majesty look like itself,
Away with me in post to Ravenspur;
But if you faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay and be secret, and myself will go.

Ross. To horse, to horse! urge doubts to them that fear.

Wil. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there. [Exit.]

SCENE II. The Same. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter QUEEN, BUSY, and BAGOT.

Busby. Madam, your majesty is too much sad:
You promis'd, when you parted with the king,
To lay aside life-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition.

Queen. To please the king, I did; to please myself,
I cannot do it; yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard. Yet, again, methinks,
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming towards me; and my inward soul
With nothing troubles: at some thing it grieves,
More than by parting from my lord, the king.

Busby. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,
Which show like grief itself, but are not so:
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives, which, rightly gaz'd upon,
Show nothing but confusion; eye'd awry,
Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty,
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Finds shapes of grief more than himself to wall;
Which, look'd on as it is, is nought but shadows
Of what it is not. Then, thrice gracious queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not: more's not seen;
Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye,
Which for things true weeps things imaginary.

Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me, it is otherwise: how'er it be,
I cannot but be sad; so heavy sad,
As, though unthinking, on no thought I think,
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

Busby. 'T is nothing but conceit, my gracious lady,

Queen. 'T is nothing less: conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so,
For nothing hath begot my something woe;
Or something hath the nothing that I guess:
'T is in reversion that I do possess,
But what it is, that is not yet known, what
I cannot name: 't is nameless woe, I wot.

Enter Green.

Green. God save your majesty:—and well met, gentlemen,—
I hope, the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland.

Queen. Why hop'st thou so? 'tis better hope he is,
For his designs crave haste. his haste good hope;
Then, wherefore dost thou hope, he is not shipp'd?

Green. That he, our hope, might have retir'd his power
And driven into despair an enemy's hope,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land.
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeats himself,
And with uplifted arms is safe arriv'd
At Ravenspur.

Queen. Now, God in heaven forbid!

Green. Ah! madam, 'tis too true: and what is worse,
The lord Northumberland, his son young Henry Percy,
The lords of Ross, Beaumond, and Willoughby,
With all their powerful friends, are fled to him.

Busby. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland,
And all the rest of the revolted faction, traitors?

Green. We have: whereupon the earl of Worcester
Hath broken his staff, resign'd his stewardship,
And all the household servants fled with him
To Bolingbroke.

Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife to my woe,
And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir:
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

Busby. Despair not, madam.

Queen. Who shall hinder me?
I will despair, and be at enmity
With cozening hope: he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which we hope lingers in extremity.

Enter the Duke of York, part-armed.

Green. Here comes the duke of York.

Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck.
KING RICHARD II.

ACT II.

SCENE III.—The Wolds in Glosstiirch, Enter Bolingbroke and Northumberland, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now?
North. Believe me, noble lord, I am a stranger here in Glosstire.

SCENE IV.—Berkley.

Boling. Enter Harry Percy.

Percy. How now, my lord?
Boling. You are not well defined, my lord, to have taken this town.

North. I am resolv'd to take the town.

Percy. No, my good lord; for that is not forgotten, which I was bid remember; to my knowledge, I never in my life did look on him.
North. Then learn to know him now: this is the duke.

Percy. My gracious lord, I tender you my service, such as it is, being tender, raw, and young, Which elder days shall ripen, and confirm To more approved service and desert.

Boling. I thank thee, gentle Percy; and be sure, I count myself in nothing else so happy,

Will the hateful commons perform for us, Except like curs to tear us all to pieces,— Will you go along with us?
Balog. No: I will to Ireland to his majesty. Farewell: if heart’s protestings be not vain, Where heart left part, there shall I meet again.
Busky. That’s as York thrives to beat back Bolivar broke.

Green. Alas, poor duke! the task he undertakes Is numbering sands, and drinking oceans dry
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly. Farewell at once: for once, for all, and ever.

Balog. I fear me, never. [Exeunt.

KING RICHARD II.

As in a soul remembering my good friends;
And as my fortune ripens with thy love,
It shall be still thy true love's recompense:
My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals it.

North. How far is it to Berkley? And what stir
Keeps good old York there, with his men of war?

Percy. There stands the castle, by yond' tuft of trees,
Many'd with three hundred men. As I have heard;
And in it are the lords of York, Berkley, and Seymour;
None else of name, and noble estimate.

Enter Ross and Willoughby.

North. Here come the lords of Ross and Wil- loughby,
Bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste.

Boling. Welcome, my lords. I wet, your love pursues
A banish'd traitor: all my treasury
Is but unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompense.
Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble lord.
Will. And far surmounts our labour to attain it.

Boling. Evermore thanks, th' exchequer of the poor:
Which, till my infant fortune comes to years,
Stands for my bound. But will you come here?

Enter Berkeley.

North. It is my lord of Berkley, as I guess.

Berk. My lord of Hereford, my message is to you.

Boling. My lord, my answer is—to Lancaster,
And I am come to seek that name in England;
And I must find that title in your tongue,
Before I make reply to aught you say.

Berk. Mistake me not, my lord: it's not my meaning,
To raze one title of your honour out.
To you, my lord, I come, what lord you will;
From the most gracious regent of this land,
The duke of York, to know what prieks you on
To take advantage of the absent time,
And fright our native peace with spoil'd arms.

Enter York attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by you;
Here comes his grace in person.—My noble uncle.

York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy knee,
Whose duty is deceivable and false.

Boling. My gracious uncle—
York. Tut, tut! Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle:
I am no traitor's uncle; and that word "grace,
In an ungracious month, is but profane.
Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs
Dar'd once to touch a dust of England's ground?
But more than that;—why have they dar'd to so
Many miles upon our peaceful bosom,
Frighting her pale-eyed villages with war,
And ostentation of despoothing arms?
Comst thou because th' anointed king is hence?
Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
Were I but now the lord of such hot youth,
As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself,
Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men,
From forth the ranks of many thousand French,
O! then, how quickly should this arm of mine,
Now prisoner to the paley, chastise thee,
And minister the correction to thy fault.

Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault:
On what condition stands it, and wherein?
York. Even in condition of the worst degree;
In gross rebellion, and detested treason:

Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come
Before the expiration of thy time,
In breaving arms against thy sovereign.

Boling. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Hereford;
But as I come, I come for Lancaster.
And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace,
Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye:
You are my father, for, methinks, in you
I see old Gaunt alive: O! then, my father,
Will you permit that I shall stand condemn'd
A wandering vagabond, my rights and royalties
Pluck'd from my arms perfidious, and given away
To upset untrifles. Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be king of England,
It must be granted I am duke of Lancaster.
You have a son, Aumerle, my noble kinsman;
Had you first died, and he been thus trod down,
He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father,
To rouse his wrongers, chase them to the bay.
I am denied to sue my livery here,
And yet my letters patent give me leave:
My father's goods are all distrain'd, and sold;
And them and all, am I, and all ye'd.
What would you have me do? I am a subject,
And challenge law: attorneys are denied me,
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To my inheritance of free descent.

North. The noble duke hath been too much abused.
Ross. It stands your grace upon to do him right.

Boling. Base men by his endowments are made great.
York. My lords of England, let me tell you this:
I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to do him right;
But in this kind to come; in breaving arms,
Be his own earver, and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrong,—it may not be:
And you, that do abstain him in this kind,
Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all.

North. The noble duke hath sworn, his coming is
But for his own: and for the right of that,
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid,
And let him see or see joy that breaks that oath.
York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms.
I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak, and all ill left;
But if I could, by him that gave me life,
I would await you all, and make you stop
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king:
But since I cannot, be it known unto you,
I do remain as neuter. So, farewell;
Unless you please to enter in the castle,
And there, my lords, repose you for this night.

Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept:
But we must win your grace, to go with us
To Bristol castle; which, they say, is held
By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices,
The caterpillars of the commonwealth,
Which I have sworn to weed and pluck away.
York. It may be I will go with you;—but yet I'll pause.
For I am loath to break our country's laws.
Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are:
Things past redress are now with me past care. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Camp in Wales.

Enter Salisbury, and a Welsh Captain.

Cap. My lord of Salisbury, we have stay'd ten days,
And hardly kept our countrymen together,
And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore, we will disperse ourselves. Farewell.
Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman:
The king reposeth all his confidence in thee.
Cap. 'Tis thought, the king is dead: we will not stay.
The bay-trees in our country are all wither'd,
And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven;
The pale-fac'd moon looks bloody on the earth,
And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change:
Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap,
The one in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other to enjoy by rage and war:
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.
Farewell: our countrymen are gone and dead,
As well assur'd Richard, their king, is dead.
Sal. Ah, Richard! with the eyes of heavy mi
I see thy glory, like a shooting star,
Fait to the base earth from the firmament.
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest:
Thy friends are fled to wait upon thy foes,
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes.  [Exit.

A C T III.

SCENE II.—The Coast of Wales. A Castle in view.

K. Rich. Barklowthy Castle call they this at hand?
Aum. Yes, my good lord. How brokers your grace the air,
After late tossing on the breaking seas?
K. Rich. Needs must I like it well: I weep for joy,
To stand upon my kingdom once again.—
Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand,
Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs:
As a long parted mother with her child
Plays fondly with her tears and smiles in meeting,
So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,
And do thee favour with my royal hand.
Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,
Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous sense;
But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way,
Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet,
Which with usurping steps do trample thee.
Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies:
And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,
Gird it, my thorny plant; let it be
A lurking adder, whose double tongue may with a mortal touch
Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.—
Mock not my senseless conjunction, lords:
This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellion's arms.

Bishop. Fear not, my lord: that power that made you king,
Hath power to keep you king, in spite of all.
The means that heavens yield must be embrac'd,
And not neglected; else, if heaven would,
And we will not, heaven's offer we refuse,
The profer'd means of succour and redress.

Aum. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss;
Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security,
Grows strong and great in substance, and in power.

K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! know'st thou not,
That when the searching eye of heaven is hid
Behind the globe, and lights the lower world,
Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,
In murders and in outrage, boldly here;
But when from under this terrestrial ball
He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines,
And darts his light through every guilty hole,
Then murders, treasons, and detected sins,
The cloak of night being pluck'd from off their backs,
Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves?
So when this thief, this traitor Bolingbroke,
Who all this while hath revelled in the night, 1
Whilst we were wandering with the antipodes,
Shall see us rising in our throne, the east,
His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But, self-frightened, tremble at his sin.
Not all the water in the rough rude sea
Can wash the balm from an anointed king:
The breath of worldly men cannot depose
The deputy elected by the Lord:
For every man that Bolingbroke hath press'd,
To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown.
God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay
A glorious angel: then, if angels fight,
Weak men must fall, for heaven still guards the right.

Enter Salisbury.
Welcome, my lord. How far off lies your power?
Sal. Nor near, nor farther off, my gracious lord,
Than this weak arm. Discomfort guides my tongue
And bids me speak of nothing but despair.
One day too late, I fear, my noble lord,
Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth.
O! call back yesterday, bid time return,
And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men:
To-day, to-day, unhappy day too late,
O'erthrows thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state;
For all the Welshmen, hearing thou wert dead,
Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispers'd, or fled.

Aum. Comfort, my liege! why looks your grace so pale?
K. Rich. But now, the blood of twenty thousand men
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled;
And till so much blood thisher come again,
But bear the stamp of the world and dead?
All souls that will be safe, fly from my side;
For time hath set a blot upon my pride.

Aum. Comfort, my liege! remember who you are.
K. Rich. I had forgot myself. Am I not king?
Awake, thou coward* majesty! thou sleepest.
Is not the king's name twenty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory.—Look not to the ground,
Ye favourites of a king: are we not high?
High be our thoughts. I know, my uncle York
Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who comes here?

Enter Scroop.
Scroop. More health and happiness betide my liege,
Than can my care-top'd tongue deliver him.
K. Rich. Mine ear is open, and my heart prepar'd:—
The worst is worldiy loss thou canst unfoild.
Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 't was my care;
And what loss is it to be rid of care?
Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?
Greater he shall not be: if he serve God,
We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so.
Revolt our subjects? that we cannot mend;
They break their faith to God, as well as us.
Cry woe, destruction, ruin, loss, decay.
The worst is death, and death will have his day.

Scroop. Glad am I, that your highness is so arm'd
To bear the tides of calamity.
Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolv'd to tears;
So high above his limits swells the rage
Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land
With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel.
White-beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps
Against thy majesty; and boys, with women's voices,
Strive to speak big, and clasp their feeble* joints
In still unquiet arms: 'gainst thy crown:
Thy very beardsmen learn to bend their bows
Of double-fatal yew against thy state;
Yea, distaff-women manage rusty bills
Against thy seat: both young and old rebel,
And all goes worse than I have power to tell.

K. Rich. Too well, too well, thou tell'st a tale so ill.
Where is the earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?
What is become of Bushy? where is Green?
That they have let the dangerous enemy
Measure our confines with such peaceful steps?
If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it. I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

Scroop. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord.
K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damn'd without redemption!
Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man!
Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my heart!
Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas!
Would they make peace? terrible hell make war
Upon their spotted souls for this offence!

Scroop. Sweet love, I see, changing his property,
Turns to the sorcest and most deadly hate.
Again uncurse their souls; their peace is made
With heads and not with hands: those whom you curse
Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound;
And lie full low, grav'd in the hollow ground.

Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire, dead?
And tell me if all of them have lost their heads.
Aum. Where is the duke, my father, with his power?
K. Rich. No matter where. Of comfort no man speak:
Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.
Let's choose executors, and talk of wills:
And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deposed bodies to the ground?
Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,
And nothing can we call our own but death,
And that small model of the barren earth,
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.
For God's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
And tell sad stories of the death of kings:
How some have been depos'd, some slain in war,
Some haunted by the ghosts they have depo'd,
Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd,
All murder'd,—for within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
Keeps death his court, and there the antick sits*;
Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp;
Allowing him a breath, a little scene,
To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks;
Infusing him with self and vain conceit,
As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
Were brass impregnable: and, humour'd thus,
Comes at the last, and with a little pin
Through his heart's bulk, and—drowneth all!—a king!
Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
With solemn reverence: throw away respect,
Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty,

For you have but mistook me all this while:
I live with bread like you, feel want,
Taste grief, need friends: subjected thus,
How can you say to me —I am a king?

Bishop. My lord, wise men ne'er sit and 'wail their
But presently present the ways to walk.
To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe,
And so your follies fight against yourself. 1
Fear, and be slain; no worse can come to fight:
And fight and die is death destroying death;
Where fearing dying pays death servile breath.

Aum. My father hath a power, enquire of him,
And learn to make a body of a limb.

K. Rich. Thou child'st me well.—Prond Bolingbroke,
I come
To change blows with thee for our day of doom.
This ague-fit of fear is over-blown:
An easy task it is, to win our own.—
Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?
Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.
Says, Lord judge by the complexion of the sky
The state and inclination of the day:
So may you by my dull and heavy eye,
My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.
I play the torturer, by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken.
Your uncle York is join'd with Bolingbroke;
And all your northern castles yielded up,
And all your southern gentlemen in arms
Upon his party.

K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.—
Bedew thee, cousin; [To Aumerle.] which didst lead me forth
Of that sweet day I was in to despair!
What says he now? What comfort have we now?
By heaven, I 'll hate him everlasting,
That bides me be of comfort any more.
Go to Flint castle: there I'll pine away;
A king, woe's share, shall kingly woe obey.
That power I have, discharge; and let them go
To ear the land that hath some hope to grow;
For I have none.—Let no man speak again
To alter this, for counsel is but vain.
Aum. My liege, one word.

K. Rich. He does me double wrong,
That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
Discharge my followers: let them hence away;
From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair day.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Wales. A Plain before Flint Castle.

Enter, with Drum and Colours, Bolingbroke and Forces; York, Northumberland, and Others.

Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn,
The Welshmen are dispers'd; and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed
With some few private friends upon this coast.
North. The news is very fair and good, my lord:
Richard, not far from hence, hath bid his head.
York. It would beseen the lord Northumberland,
To say, king Richard—Alack, the heavy day
When such a sacred king should hide his head!
North. Your grace mistakes me; only to be brief,
Left I his title out.
York. The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would

Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the head, your whole head's length.

Boling. Mistake not, uncle, farther than you should.
York. Take not, good cousin, farther than you should,
Lest you mistake: the heavens are o'er our heads. 4

Boling. I know it, uncle; and oppose not myself
Against their will.—But who comes here?

Enter Perc.

Welcome, Harry. What, will not this castle yield?
Percy. The castle royally is mann'd, my lord,
Against thy entrance.

Boling. Royally?
Why, it contains no king.
Percy. Yes, my good lord;
It doth contain a king: king Richard lies
Within the limits of yond' lime and stone;
And with him are the lord Aumerle, lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman
Of holy reverence, who, I cannot learn.
North. O! belike it is the bishop of Carlisle.

Boling. Noble lord.[To North.] Go to the ruin of that ancient castle;
Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parle
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver:
Henry Bolingbroke
On both his knees doth kiss king Richard's hand,
And sends allegiance, and true faith of heart,
To his most royal person; hither come
Even at his feet to lay my arms and power,
Provided that, my banishment repeal'd,
And lands restor'd again, be freely granted.
If not, I 'll use th' advantage of my power,
And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood,
Rain'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:
The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such emolument should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land,
My stooping duty tenderly shall show.
Go; signify as much, while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.
Let's march without the noise of threaten'ng drum,
That from the castle's tatter'd battlements
Our fair appointments may be well perus'd.
Methinks, king Richard and myself should meet
With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thundering shock 7
At meeting tears the cloudy checks of heaven.
Be he the fire, I 'll be the yielding water;
The rage be his, while on the earth I rain
My waters; on the earth, and not on him.—
March on, and mark king Richard how he looks.

A varlety sounded, and answered by a Trumpet within.

Flourish. Enter on the walls King Richard, the Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, Scroop, and Salisbury.
Boling. See, see, king Richard doth himself appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun
From out the fiery portal of the east,
When he perceives the envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the track
Of his bright passage to the occident.
York. Yet looks he like a king, behold, his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's: lighter forth
Controlling majesty. Alack, alack, for wee,
That any storm 9 should stain so fair a show!

K. Rich. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we stood [To Northumberland.

To watch the faithful bending of thy knee,
Because we thought ourself thy lawful king:
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence?
If we be not, show us the hand of God
That hath dismiss’d us from our stewardship:
For well we know, no hand of blood and bone
Can grip the sacred handle of our sceptre,
Unless he do profane, steal, or usurp.
And though you think that all, as you have done,
Have torn their souls by turning them from us,
And we are barren and bereft of friends,
Yet know, my master, God omnipotent,
Is mustering in his clouds on our behalf
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot,
That lift your vassal hands against my head,
And threat the glory of my precious crown.
Tell Bolingbroke, for yond’l methinks, he stands,
That every stride he makes upon my land
Is dangerous treason. He is come to ope
The purple testament of bleeding war;
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers’ sons
Shall ill become the flower of England’s face,
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indigination, and below
Her pastures’ grass with faithful English blood.

North. The king of heaven forbid, our lord the king
Should so with civil and unevil arms
Be rush’d upon. Thy thrice-noble cousin,
Harry Bolingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy hand;
And by the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon your royal grandsire’s bones,
And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Currents that spring from one most gracious head,
And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt,
And by the worth and honour of himself,
Comprising all that may be sworn or said,
His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy royal party granted once,
His glittering arms he will commend to rust,
His bar’d head to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty,
This swears he, as he is a prince, is just,
And, as a gentleman, I credit him.

K. Rich. Northumberland, say,—thus the king re-
His noble cousin is right wellcome hither;
Turns:
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish’d without contradiction.
With all the gracious utterance thou hast,
Speak to his gentle hearing kind demands.—

[NORTHUMBERLAND RETIVES TO BOLINGBROKE.

We do desease ourself, cousin, [To AUMERLE.] do we not,
To look so poorly, and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send
Defiance to the traitor, and so die?

Aum. No, good my lord: let’s fight with gentle words.
Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords.
K. Rich. O God! O God! that e’er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond’l proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth. O! that I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name,
Or that I could forget what I have been,
Or not remember what I must be now.
Swell’st thou, proud heart? I’ll give thee scope to beat,
[Unbuttoning.] 1

Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.

Aum. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. What must the king do now? Must he submit?

The king shall do it. Must he be depos’d?
The king shall be contented. Must he lose
The name of king? o’ God’s name, let it go:
I’ll give my jewels for a set of heads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an alms-man’s gown,
My figur’d goblets for a dish of wood,
My sceptre for a palmer’s walking staff,
My subjects for a pair of carved saints,
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little little grave, an obscure grave:
Or I’ll be buried in the king’s high-way,
Some way of common trade, where subjects’ feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign’s head;
For on my heart they tread, now whilst I live,
And, buried once, why not upon my head?—
Aumerle, thou weep’st; my tender-hearted cousin!—
We’ll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs and they shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a deaarth in this revolving land:
Or shall we play the wantons with our wees,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
As thus:—4o drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth; and, therein laid, there lies
Two kinsmen digg’d their graves with weeping eyes.
Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see
I talk but idly, and you mock at me. —
Most mighty prince, my lord Northumberland,
What says king Bolingbroke? will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says ay.

North. My lord, in the base court 2 he doth attend
To speak with you: may’t please you to come down?

K. Rich. Down, down, I come; like glistening
Phlegon, a w
Wanting the manage of unruly jades.

In the base court? Base court, where kings grow base,
To come at traitors’ calls, and do them grace.
In the base court? Come down, down, court! down, king!
For night-owls shriek, where mounting larks should sing.

[Exeunt, from above.

Boling. What says his majesty?

North. Sorrow and grief of heart
Make him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.

Enter King Richard, and his Attendants, below.

Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty.—

My gracious lord,—

Kneeling. K. Rich. Fair cousin, you despise your princely knee,
To make the base earth proud with kissing it:
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas’d eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up: your heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least, although your knee be low.

Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.
K. Rich. Your own is yours; and I am yours, and all.
Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love.

K. Rich. Well you deserve:—they well deserve to have,
That know the strongest and surest way to get.—
Uncle, give me your hand: nay, dry your eyes;
Tears show their love, but want their remedies.
Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir.
What you will have I will give, and willing too,
For do we must what force will have us do.—
Set on towards London.—Cousin, is it so?

Boling. Yea, my good lord.

K. Rich. Then I must not say no.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT III.

Enter the QUEEN, and two LADIES.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this garden,
To drive away the heavy thought of care?

1 Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls.

Queen. 'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,
And that my fortune runs against the bias.

1 Lady. Madam, we'll dance.

Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore, no dancing; girl; some other sport.

1 Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.

Queen. Of sorrow, or of joy?

1 Lady. Of either, madam.

Queen. Of neither; girl;
For if of joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy;
For what I have I need not to repeat,
And what I want it boots not to complain.

1 Lady. Madam, I'll sing.

Queen. 'Tis well that thou hast cause;
But thou should'st please me better, wouldst thou weep.

1 Lady. I could weep, madam; would it do you good?

Queen. And I could sing, would weeping do me good,
And never borrow any tear of thee.
But stay, here come the gardeners:
Let's step into the shadow of these trees.—

My wretchedness unto a row of pins,
They'll talk of state: for every one doth so
Against a change. Woe is forerun with woe.

[Queen and Ladies retire.

Enter a Gardener and two Servants.

Gard. Go, bind thou up yond' dangling apricocks,
Which, like unruly children, make their sire
Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight:
Give some supportance to the bending twigs.—
Go thou, and like an executioner,
Cut off the heads of two-fast-growing sprays,
That look too lofty in our commonwealth:
All must be even in our government.—
You thus employ'd, I will go root away
The noisome weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

1 Serv. Why should we, in the compass of a pale,
Keep law, and form, and due proportion,
Showing, as in a model, our firm estate,
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds; her fairest flowers chol'd up,
Her fruit-trees all unprom'd, her hedges ruin'd,
Her knots' disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillars?

2 Serv. That he hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring,
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf;
The weeds that his broad-spreading leaves did shelter,
That seem'd in eating him to hold him up,
Are pluck'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke;
I mean, the earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.

1 Serv. What! are they dead?

Gard. They are; and Bolingbroke
Hath seiz'd the wasteful king.—What is it, That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land,
As we this garden. At the time of year
We wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees,
Lest, being over-pride in sap and blood,
With too much riches it confound itself:
Had he done so to great and growing men,
They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste
Their fruits of duty. Superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughs may live:
Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
Which waste and idle hours have quite thrown down.

1 Serv. What! think you, then, the king shall be depos'd?

Gard. Depress'd he is already; and depos'd,
'T is doubt, he will be: letters came last night
To a dear friend of the good duke of York's,
That tell black tidings.

Queen. O! I am press'd to death, through want of [Coming forward.

Thou, old Adam's likeness, set to dress this garden,
How dares thy harsh, rude tongue sound this unpleasing
What Eve, what serpent hath suggested thee [news? To make a second fall of cursed man?
Why dost thou say king Richard is depos'd?
Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how,
Can'st thou by these ill tidings? speak, thou wretch.

Gard. Pardon me, madam: little joy have I,
To breathe these news, yet what I say is true.
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bolingbroke: their fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
And some few vanities that make him light;
But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
Besides himself, are all the English peers,
And with that odds he weighs king Richard down.
Post you to London, and you'll find it so;
I speak no more than every one doth know.

Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Dost not thy embassage belong to me,
And am I last that knows it? O! thou think'st
To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies, go
To meet at London London's king in woe.—
What! was I born to this, that my soul look
Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?
Gardener, for telling me these news of woe,
Pray God, the plants thou graft'st may never grow.

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

Gard. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no worse,
I would my skill were subject to thy curse.
Here did she fall; here, in this place, I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace: Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen.
In the remembrance of a weeping queen.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. Westminster Hall.

The Lords spiritual on the right side of the Throne; the Lords temporal on the left; the Commons below.

Enter Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Surrey, Northumberland, Percy, Fitzwater, another Lord, the Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Westminster, and Attendants.

Boling. Call forth Bagot—

Enter Bagot, guarded.¹

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind;
What thou dost know of noble Gloster's death;
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his timeless end.

Bagot. Then, set before my face the lord Aumerle.

Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

Bagot. My lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue
Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd,
In that dead time when Gloster's death was plotted,
I heard you say,—"¹ Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court,
As far as Calais, to mine uncle's head?”²

Amongst much other talk, that very time,
I heard you say, that you had rather refuse
The offer of an hundred thousand crowns,
Than Bolingbroke's return to England;
Adding withal, how blest this land would be
In this your cousin's death.

Aum. Princes, and noble lords,
What answer shall I make to this base man?
Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement?—
Either I must, or have mine honour soild,
With the attainer of his slanderous lips.—
There is my gage, the manuell seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell: I say, thou liest,
And will maintain what thou hast said is false
In thy heart-blood, though being all too base
To stain the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear: thou shalt not take it up.

Aum. Excepting one, I would have we the best
In all this presence, that hath mov'd me so.

Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathy,³
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine.
By that fair sun which shows me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloster's death.
If thou deny'st it twenty times, thou liest;
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Aum. Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see that day.

Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.

Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true
In this appeal, as thou art all unjust;
And, that thou art so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing. Seize it if thou dar'st.

Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe!

Lord. I task the earth to the like, forsworn Aumerle,⁴
And spue thee on with full as many lies

¹ F. e. add: Officers behind, with Banor. ² Not in f. e. ³ Equality of rank. ⁴ This and the next speech are not in the folio; all, but the quarto of 1597, read: take.
Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best became me to speak the truth.
Would God, that any in this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judge
Of noble Richard: then true nobles 3 would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here that is not Richard's subject?
Thieves are not judge'd but they are by to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them;
And shall the figure of God's majesty,
His captain, steward, deputy elet,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judge'd by subject and inferior breath,
And he not 7 present! O! forefend it, God,
That, in a Christian climate, souls refin'd
Should show so heinous, black, obscene a deed!
I speak to subjects, and a subject, speaks,
Stirr'd up by God thus boldly for his king.
My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king;
And if you crown him, let me prophesy
The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future ages groan for this foul act:
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And in this seat of peace tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny,
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha, and dead men's skulls.
O! if you raise this house against this house,
That ever fell upon this cursed earth,
Prevent, 8 resist it, let it be not so,
Lest child, child's children, cry against you—woe!
North. Well have you argued, sir; and, for your pains,
Of capital treason we arrest you here—
My lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To keep him safely till his day of trial.
May it please you, lords, to grant the commons' suit. 9
Boling. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may surrender; so we shall proceed
Without suspicion.
York. I will be his conduct. [Exit.
Boling. Lords, you that here are under our arrest,
Procure your sureties for your days of answer—
Little are we beholding to your love, 10 [To the Bishop.
And look for little at your helping hands.
Re-enter York, with King Richard, and Officers bearing the Crown, &c.
K. Rich. Alack! why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my limbs:
Give sorrow leave awhile to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, All hail! to me?
So Judas did to Christ; but he, in twelve,
Found truth in all, but one: I, in twelve thousand, none.
God save the king!—Will no man say, amen?
Am I both priest and clerk? well then, amen,
God save the king! although I be not he;
And yet, amen, if heaven do think me him.—
To do what service am I sent for hither?
York. To do that office of thine own good will,
Which tired majesty did make thee offer;

The resignation of thy state and crown
To Harry Bolingbroke.
K. Rich. Give me the crown.—Here, cousin, seize the crown; 11 [Crown brought.
Here, cousin, on this side my hand, and on that side,
yours.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes 13 two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down, unseen, and full of water:
That bucket down, and full of tears, am I,
Drinking my grief, whilst you mount up on high.
Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign.
K. Rich. My crown, I am; but still my griefs are mine.
You may my glories and my state depose,
But not my griefs: still am I king of those. 12 [crown.
Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your K. Rich. Your cares set up do not pluck my cares down.
My care is loss of care, by old care done;
Your care is gain of care, by new care won:
The cares I give, I have, though given away;
They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.
Boling. Are you contented to resign the crown?
K. Rich. Ay, no;—no, ay;—for I must nothing be;
Therefore no no, for I resign to thee.
Now mark me how I will undo myself.—
I give this heavy weight from off my head,
And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand,
The pride of kingly sway from out my heart:
With mine own tears I wash away my balm,
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,
With mine own breath release all duties, rites 14:
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manors, rents, revenues, I forego;
My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny:
God pardon all oaths that are broke to me!
God keep all vows unbrok'd that swear'd 15 to thee!
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd,
And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all achiev'd!
Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit!
God save king Henry, unking'd Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days!—
What more remains?
North. No more, but that you read [Offering a paper.
These accusations, and these grievous crimes, 16
Committed by your person and your followers,
Against the state and profit of this land;
That, by confessing them, the souls of men
May deem that you are worthy depos'd.
K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out
My weav'd up folly? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy offences were upon record,
Would it not shame thee, in so fair a troop,
To read a lecture of them? If thou wouldst,
There shouldst thou find one heinous article,
Containing the deposing of a king,
And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,
Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven.—
Nay, all of you, that stand and look upon me,
Whilst that my wretchedness doth baffle myself,
Though some of you, with Pilate, wash your hands,
Showing an outward pity; yet you Pilates
Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross,
And water cannot wash away your sin.

Scene I.

KING RICHARD II.

North. My lord, dispatch: read o'er these articles.
K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see;
And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
But they can see a sort 1 of traitors here.
Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
I find myself a traitor with the rest;
For I have given here my soul's consent,
To undock the pompos body of a king;
Made glory base, and 2 sovereignty a slave.

Proud majesty a subject; state a peasant.
North. My lord.
K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou haughty, insulting man,
Nor no man's lord: I have no name, no title,
No, not that name was given me at the font;
But 'tis usurped. —Alack, the heavy day!
That I have worn so many winters out,
And know not now what name to call myself.
O! that I were a mockery king of snow,
Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
To melt myself away in water drops! —
Good king, —great king, —and yet not greatly good,
And if my name 3 be sterling yet in England,
Let it command a mirror litter straight,
That it may show me what a face I have,
Sinces it is bankrupt of his majesty.

Boling. Go some of you, and fetch a looking-glass.

North. Read o'er this paper, while the glass doth come.
K. Rich. Fiend! thou torment'st me ere I come to hell.
Boling. Urge it no more, my lord Northumberland.
North. The commons will not then be satisfied.
K. Rich. They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough,
When I do see the very book indeed,
Where all my sins are writ, and that's myself.

Re-enter Attendant with a Glass.

Give me the glass 4 and therein will I read.—
No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds? —O, flattering glass!
Like to my followers in prosperity,
Thou dost beguile me. Was this the face, the face,
That every day under his household roof,
Did keep ten thousand men? Was this the face;
That like the sun did make beholder's wink? 5
Was this the face, that face'd so many follies,
And was at last outface'd by Bolingbroke?
A brittle glory shineth in this face:
As brittle as the glory is the face;

[Dashes the Glass against the ground.

For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers.

Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport:
How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.
Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd
The shadow of your face.
K. Rich. Say that again.
The shadow of my sorrow? Ha! let's see: —
'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of lament
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
That swells with silence in the tortured soul;
There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king,
For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st
Me cause to wail, but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
And then begone and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?
Boling. Name it, fair cousin.
K. Rich. Fair cousin! I am greater than a king;
For, when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects; being now a subject,
I have a king here to my flatterer.

Being so great, I have no need to beg.
Boling. Yet ask.
K. Rich. And shall I have it?
Boling. You shall.
K. Rich. Why then give me leave to go.
Boling. Whither?
K. Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your sights.
Boling. Go, some of you; convey him to the Tower.
K. Rich. O, good! Convey? —Conveyers 6 are you all,
That rise thus nimblly by a true king's fall.

[Exeunt K. Richard, and Guard, Boling.
Boling. On Wednesday next we solemnly set down
Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves.

[Exeunt all but the Abbot, Bishop of Carlisle, and Aumerle.
Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here beheld.
Bishop. The woeful to come: the children yet unborn
Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn.
Aum. You holy clergymen, is there no plot
To rid the realm of this pernicious blot?
Abbot. My lord, before I freely speak my mind herein,
You shall not only take the sacrament
To bury mine intents, but also to effect
Whatever I shall happen to devise.
I see your brows are full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears:
Come home with me to supper; I will lay
A plot, shall show us all a merry day.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

Scene I.—London. A Street leading to the Tower.

Enter Queen, and Attendants.

Queen. This way the king will come: this is the way
To Julius Caesar's ill-erected tower,
To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
Is doomed a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke.
Here let us rest, if this rebellions earth
Have any resting for her true king's queen.

Enter King Richard, and Guard.

But soft, but see, or rather do not see,
My fair rose winter: yet look up, behold,

1 Set, or company. 2 The folio: a. 3 The folio: word. 4 The rest of the line is added in the folio. 5 This sentence was added in the folio. 6 This word was applied to lawyers, or conveyancers, and thieves.
To grim necessity; and he and I
Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to France,
And cloister thee in some religious house:
Our holy lives must win a new world's crown,
Which our profane hours here have stricken down.
Queén. What! is my Richard both in shape and mind
Transform'd and weaken'd? Hath this Bolingbroke
Depos'd thine intellect? hath he been in thy heart?
The lion, dying, thrusteth forth his paw,
And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage
To be o'erpower'd; and wilt thou, pupil-like,
Take thy correction mildly? kiss the rod,
And fawn on rage with base humility,
Which art a lion, and a king of beasts?
K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed; if aught but beasts,
I had been still a happy king of men.
Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France:
Think I am dead; and that even here thou tak'st,
As from my death-bed, my last living leave.
In winter's tedious nights sit by the fire
With good old folks, and let them tell thee tales
Of woeful ages long ago betid;
And, ere thou bid good night, to quit their grief,
Tell thou the lamentable tale of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.
For why, the senseless brands will sympathize
The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,
And in compassion weep the fire out;
And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
For the depositing of a rightful king.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND. attended.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is chang'd:
You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.—
And, madam, there is order ta'en for you:
With all swift speed you must away to France.
K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder, wherewithal
The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,
The time shall not be many hours of age
More than it is, ere foul sin gathering head
Shall break into corruption. Thou shalt think,
Though he divide the realm, and give thee half,
It is too little, helping him to all:
And he shall think, that thou, which know'st the way
To plant unrighteous kings, wilt know again,
Being well goaded, to the best day
To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne.
The love of wicked friends converts to fear;
That fear to hate; and hate turns one, or both,
To worthy danger and deserved death.

North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end.
Take leave, and part, for you must part forthwith.
K. Rich. Doubly divorc'd!—Bad men, ye violate
A twofold marriage; 'twixt my crown and me,
And then, betwixt me and my married wife,
Let me unkiss the oath 'twixt thee and me;
[They embrace.]
And yet not so, for with a kiss 'twas made."
Part us, Northumberland: I towards the north,
Where shivering cold and sickness pine the clime;
My wife to France: from whence, set forth in pomp,
She came adorned hither like sweet May.
Sent back like Hallowmas, or shortest day.
Queen. And must we be divided? must we part?
K. Rich. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart
From heart.
Queen. Banish us both, and send the king with me.
North. That were some love, but little policy.
Queen. Then whither he goes, thou let me go.

K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one woe.
Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here;
Better far off, than near, being as 'eret the near.
Go; count thy way with sighs, I mine with groans.
Queen. So longest way shall have the longest moans.
K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way
Being short,
And piece the way out with a heavy heart.
Come, come, in woeing sorrow let's be brief,
Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief.
One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part:
Thus give I mine, and thus take I thy heart. [They kiss.
Queen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good part,
To take on me to keep, and kill thy heart.
[They kiss again.
So, now I have mine own again, begone,
That I may strive to kill it with a groan.
K. Rich. We make woe wanton with this fond delay.
Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke of York's Palace.

Enter York, and the Duchess.

Duch. My lord, you told me, you would tell the rest,
When weeping made you break the story off,
Of our two cousins coming into London.
York. Where did I leave?
Duch. At that sad stop, my lord,
Where rude misgovern'd hands, from windows' tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on king Richard's head.
York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,
With slow but stately pace kept on his course,
While all tongues cried—"God save thee, Bolingbroke!"
You would have thought the very windows spake,
So many greedy looks of young and old
Through casements darted their desiring eyes
Upon his visage; and that all the walls
With painted imagery had said at once,—
"Jesu preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!"
Whilst he, from one side to the other turning,
Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck,
Despake them thus:—"I thank you, countrymen." And Thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.
Duch. Alas, poor Richard! where rode he the whilst?
York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men,
After a well-grad'd actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious;
Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes
Did scowl on gentle Richard: no man cried, God save him;
No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home;
But dust was thrown upon his sacred head,
Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,
His face still combattting with tears and smiles,
The badges of his grief and patience,
That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd
The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted,
And barbarism itself have pitied him.
But heaven hath a hand in these events,
To whose high will we bound our calm contents.
To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now;
Whose state and honour I for aye allow.
Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle.
York. Aumerle that was;
KING RICHARD II.

SCENE III.—Windsor. A Room in the Castle.
Enter Bolingbroke as King; Percy, and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell me of my untruthy son? 'Tis full three months, since I did see him last:
If any plague hang over us, 'tis he.
I would to God, my lords, he might be found.
Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there,
For there they say, he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose companions;
Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers;
While he, young wanton, and effeminate boy,
Takes on the point of honour to support
So dissolute a crew.
Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the prince,
And told him of these triumphs held at Oxford.
Boling. And what said the gallant?
Percy. His answer was,—he would unto the stews;
And from the common'st creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour; and with that
He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.
Boling. As dissolute, as desperate: yet through both
I see some sparks of better hope, which elder days
May happen to bring forth. But who comes here?
Enter Aumerle, in great haste.

Aum. Where is the king?
Boling. What means our cousin, that he stares and looks
So wildly?

Aum. God save your grace. I do beseech your majesty,
To have some conference with your grace alone.

Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.—

[Exit Percy and Lords.

What is the matter with our cousin now?

Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth.

[Kneels.

My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth,
Unless a pardon, ere I rise, or speak.

Boling. Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If on the first, how heinous e'er it be,
To win thy after love I pardon thee.

Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the key,
That no man enter till my tale be done.

Boling. Have thy desire. [Aumerle locks the door.

To kill the king at Oxford.

Duch. He shall be none; We'll keep him here: then, what is that to him?
York. Away, fond woman! were he twenty times My son, I would appæarch him.

Duch. Hadst thou grace d for him, As I have done, thou wouldest be more pitiful.
But now I know thy mind: thou dost suspect,
That I have been disloyal to thy bed,
And that he is a bastard, not thy son.
Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind:
He is as like thee as a man may be,
Not like to me, nor any of my kin,
And yet I love him.

York. Make way, unruly woman. [Exit.

Duch. After, Aumerle! Mount thee upon his horse:
Spur, post, and get before him to the king,
And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.
I'll not be long behind: though I be old,
I doubt not but to ride as fast as York:
And never will I rise up from the ground,
Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee. Away! begone.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Windsor. A Room in the Castle.
Enter Aumerle.

Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not:
God knows, I had as lief be none, as one.
York. Well, bear you well in this new spring of time,
Lest ye be crop'd before you come to prime.
What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumphs?
Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do.
York. You will be there, I know.
Aum. If God prevent it not, I purpose so.
York. What seal is that, that hangs without thy bosom?
Yea, look'st thou pale? let me then see the writing.
Aum. My lord, 'tis nothing.
York. No matter, then, who sees it:
I will be satisfied, let me see the writing.
Aum. I do beseech your grace to pardon me.
It is a matter of small consequence,
Which for some reasons I would not have seen.
York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.
I fear, I fear.—

Duch. What should you fear?
'Tis nothing but some bond he's entered into
For gay apparel 'gainst the triumph day.
York. Bound to himself? what doth he with a bond
That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool.—
Boy, let me see the writing.
Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me: I may not show it.
York. I will be satisfied: let me see it, I say,

[Snatches it and reads.

Treason! foul treason! —villain! traitor! slave!
Duch. What is the matter, my lord?
York. Ho! who is within there? Saddle my horse.
God for his mercy! what treachery is here!
Duch. Why, what is it, my lord?
York. Give me my boots, I say: saddle my horse.—
Now by mine honour, by my life, my truth,
I will apprehend the villain.
Duch. What's the matter?
York. Peace, foolish woman.
Duch. I will not peace.—What is the matter,
Aumerle?
Aum. Good mother, be content: it is no more
Than my poor life must answer.
Duch. Thy life answer?
York. Bring me my boots! I will unto the king.

Enter Servant with boots.

Duch. Strike him, Aumerle.—Poor boy, thou art amaz'd—

Hence, villain! never more come in my sight.—

[Exit Servant.

York. Give me my boots, I say.

Duch. Why, York, what wilt thou do?
Willst thou not hide the trespass of thine own?
Have we more sons, or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age,
And rove—of a happy mother's name?
Is he not like thee? is he not thine own?
York. Thou fond, mad woman,
Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy,
A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament,
And interchangeably set down their hands,

1 Not in f. e. 2 that he is: in f. e. 3 Foolish.
York. [Within.] My liege, beware! look to thyself: Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.

Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe. [Drawing. Aum. Stay thy revengen hand: thou hast no cause to fear.

York. [Within.] Open the door, secure, fool-hardy king:
Shall I for love speak treason to thy face?
Open the door, or I will break it open.

[BOLINGBROKE OPENS THE DOOR, AND LOCKS IT AGAIN.]

Enter York. Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak; Recover breath: tell us how near is danger,
That we may arm us to encounter it.

York. Percive this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason that my haste forbids me show.
Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise past,
I do repent me; read not my name there:
My heart is not confederate with my hand.

York. It was villain, ere thy hand did set it down.—I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king:
Fear, and not love, begets his penitence.
Forget to pity them, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

Boling. O, heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy!—O, loyal father of a treacherous son!
Thou seem, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream through muddy passages
Hath held his current, and doff'd himself! Thy over-flow of good counsel to bad;
And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy digressing son.

York. So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd,
And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,
As thriftless sons their scraping fathers' gold.
Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies,
Or my shamed life in his dishonour lies:
Thou kill'st me in his life: giving him breath,
The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

Duch. [Within.] What ho! my liege! for God's sake let me in.

Boling. What shrill-voic'd suppliant makes this eager cry?

Duch. A woman, and a youth, great king; 'tis I.

Aum. Speak with me, pity me, open the door:
A beggar begs, that never begg'd before.

Boling. Our scene is altered, from a serious thing,
And now chang'd to 'The Beggar and the King.'—
My dangerous cousin, let your mother in:
I know, she's come to pray for your foul sin.

York: If thou do pardon, whosoever pray,
More sins for this forgiveness prosper may.
This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rest sound;
This, let alone, will all the rest confound.

[Enter Duchess.

Duch. O king! believe not this hard-hearted man:
Love, loving not itself, none other can.
York. Thou frantic woman, what dost thou make here?
Shall thy old dugs once more a traitor rear?

Duch. Sweet York, be patient. Hear me, gentle liege.

Boling. Rise up, good aunt.

Duch. Not yet, I thee beseech:
For ever will I walk upon my knees,
And never see day that the happy sees,
Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy,
By pardoning Ituatu, my transgressing boy.

Aum. Unto my mother's prayers, I bend my knee.

Kneels. York. Against them both, my true joints bended be.

[Duch. Nay, do not say—stand up.
But, pardon first, and afterwards, stand up.
An if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon should be the first word of thy speech.
I never long'd to hear a word till now;
Say—pardon, king: let pity teach thee how:
The word is short, but not so short as sweet;
No word like pardon, for kings' mouths so meet.
York. Speak it in French, king: say, pardonnez-moi.

Duch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?
Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord,
That set'st the word itself against the word!
Speak pardon, as 'tis current in our land;
The chopping French we do not understand.
Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there,
Or in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear,
That hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,
Pity may move thee pardon to rehearse.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. I do not sue to stand:
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.

Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.

Duch. O, happy vantage of a kneeling knee!
Yet am I sick for fear: speak it again;
Twice saying pardon doth not pardon twain,
But makes one pardon strong.

Boling. I pardon him with all my heart.

Duch. A god on earth thou art. [Rises.] Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law, and the abbots,
With all the rest of that consorted crew,
 Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.—Good uncle, help to order several powers To Oxford; or where else these traitors be: They shall not live within this world, I swear, But I will have them, so I once know where.
Uncle, farewell.—and cousin mine! adieu: Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you true.

Duch. Come, my old son; I pray God make thee now.[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Enter Sir Pierce of Exton, and a Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king, what words he spake?

"Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?"
Was it not so?

Serv. Those were his very words. [twice, Exton. "Have I no friend?" quoth he: he spake it And urg'd it twice together, did he not? Serv. He did.

KING RICHARD II

SCENE V.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare this prison, where I live, unto the world:
And for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it: yet I'll hammer 't out.
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul;
My soul, the father: and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world;
In humours like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better sort,
As thoughts of things divine, are intermix'd
With scruples, and do set the word itself
Against the word:—
As thus,—"Come, little ones," and then again,—
"It is as hard to come, as for a camel
To thread the postern of a small needle's eye." Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot
Unlikely, wonders: how these vain weak nags
May tear a passage through the flinty ribs
Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls;
And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.
Thoughts tending to content flatter themselves,
That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
Nor shall not be the last; like silly beggars,
Who, sitting in the stocks, refuse their shame
That many have, and others must sit there:
And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortune on the back
Of such as have before endur'd the like.
Thus play I, in one person, many people,
And none contented: sometimes am I king;
Then, treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: then, crushing penury
Persuades me I was better when a king:
Then, am I king'd again; and, by and by,
Think that I am unking'd by Bolingbroke,
And strange:—But sooner or later I am,
Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,
With nothing shall be pleas'd, till he be eas'd
With being nothing.—Music do I hear?
Ha! ha! keep time.—How sour sweet music is,
When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
So is it in the music of men's lives:
And here have I the daintiness of ear,
To check time broke in a disorder'd string,
But for the concord of my state and time,
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me;
For now hath time made me his numbering clock;
My thoughts are minutes, and with sighs they jar;
Their watchch on unto mine eyes the outward watch,
Whereo my finger, like a dial's point,
is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.
Now, for the sound, that tells what hour it is,
Are clamorous groans, that strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: so sighs, and tears, and groans,
Show minutes, times, and hours; but my time
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While I stand fouling here, his Jack o' the clock.
This music mads me: lest it sound no more,
For though it hath holpe madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad.
Yet, blessing on his heart this gives it me!
For 'tis a sign of love, and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch² in this all-hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!

K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer;
The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear,
What art thou? and how comest thou hither,
Where no man never comes, but that sad¹ dog
That brings me food to make misfortune live?

Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,
When thou went king; who, travelling towards York,
With much ado, at length have gotten leave
To look upon my sometime royal master's face.
O! how it yern'd my heart, when I beheld
In London streets that coronation day,
When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary!
That horse that thou so often lastest bestrid,
That horse that I so carefully have dres'd
K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle friend,
How went he under him?

Groom. So proud, as if he had disdain'd the ground.
K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back?
That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;
This hand hath made him proud with clapping him,
Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down,
(Since pride must have a fall) and break the neck O! that proud man that did usurp his back?
Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
Since thou, created to be aw'd by man,
Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse;
And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spur-gall'd and tire'd by jangling Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper, with a Dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place: here is no longer stay.

K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.

Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say.

[Exit Groom.

K. Rich. My lord, will 't please you to fall to?

K. Rich. Taste of it first, as thou art wont to do.

K. Rich. For my lord, I dare not: Sir Pierce of Exton, who lately came from the king, commands the contrary.

K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster, and thee!

Pattens is stale, and I am weary of it.

[Strikes the Keeper.

Keep. Help, help, help!

Enter Sir Pierce of Exton, and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault?

Villain, thine own hand yields thy death's instrument.

[Snatching a weapon, and killing one.

Go thou and fill another room in hell.

[He kills another: Exton strikes him down.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,
That stagger's thus my person.—Exton, thy fierce hand
Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own land.
Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high,
Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die.

Exton. As full of valour, as of royal blood:
Both have I spelt: O, would the deed were good!
For now the devil, that told me I did well,
Says that this deed is chronicled in hell.

This dead king to the living king I'll bear.—
Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.
[Exeunt the bodies]

SCENE VI.—Windsor. An Apartment in the Castle.

Flourish. Enter Bolingbroke, and York, with Lords and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear
Is, that the rebels have consum'd with fire
Our town of Cicester in Glosstershire;
But whether they be ta'en, or slain, we hear not.
[Enter Northumberland.]
Welcome, my lord. What is the news with you?1
North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all happiness:
The next news is,—I have to London sent
The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent:
The manner of their taking may appear
At large discoursed in this paper here.
[Presenting a Paper]

Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains,
And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.
[Enter Fitzwater.]

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London
The heads of Brocas, and Sir Benet Seely,
Two of the dangerous consorted traitors,
That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.

Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forget;
Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.
[Enter Percy, with the Bishop of Carlisle.]

Percy. The grand conspirator, abbot of Westminster,
With clog of conscience, and sour melancholy,
Hath yielded up his body to the grave;

1 These two words are not in f. e. 2 Carlisle, this is your doom : in f. e. 3 So the quarto, 1607; the others, and folio: slaughter.

But here is Carlisle living, to abide
Thy kingly doom, and sentence of his pride.

Boling. Bishop of Carlisle, this shall be your doom:—
Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,
More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life; So, as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife:
For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,
High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.
[Enter Exton, with Attendants bearing a Coffin.]

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present
Thy buried fear: herein all breathless lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bordeaux, by me hither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought
A deed of slander2 with thy fatal hand
Upon my head, and all this famous land. [Decem.]

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this Boling. They love not poison that do poison need,
Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead,
I hate the murderer, love him murdered.
The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,
But neither my good word, nor princely favour:
With Cain go wander through the shade of night,
And never show thy head by day nor light.—
Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,
That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow:
Come, mourn with me for that I do lament,
And put on sullen black. Incontinent
I'll make a voyage to the Holy land,
To wash this blood off from my guilty hand,
March sadly after: grace my mourning here,
In weeping after this untimely bier. [Exeunt.]

2 A word improperly inserted here, following the word 'slander.'

OF
KING HENRY IV.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

KING HENRY THE FOURTH.
HENRY, Prince of Wales.
PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER.
EARL OF WESTMORELAND.
SIR WALTER BLUNT.
THOMAS PERCY, Earl of Worcester.
HENRY PERCY, Earl of Northumberland.
HENRY PERCY, surnamed Hotspur, his Son.
EDMUND MORTIMER, Earl of March.
SCHROOP, Archbishop of York.
ARCHIBALD, Earl of Douglas.

Lords, Officers, Sheriff, Vintner, Chamberlain,

SCENE, England.

ACT I.

Enter King Henry, Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Others.

K. Hen. So shaken as we are, so wan with care, Find we a time for frightened peace to pant, And breathe short-windèd accents of new broils To be commenc’d in stronds afar remote. No more the thirsty entrance of this soil Shall daub her lips with her own children’s blood; No more shall trenching war channel her fields, Nor brusie her flowerets with the armed hoofs Of hostile paces; those opposed eyes, Which, like the meteors of a troubled heaven, All of one nature, of one substance bred, Did lately meet in the intestine shock And furious close of civil butchery, Shall now, in mutual, well-seeing ranks, March all one way, and be no more oppos’d Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies: The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife, No more shall cut his master: Therefore, friends, As far as to the sepulchre of Christ, Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross, We are impressed, and engag’d to fight, Forthwith a power of English shall we levy, Whose arms were moulded in their mother’s womb, To chase these pagans, in those holy fields, Over whose acres walk’d those blessed feet, Which fourteen hundred years ago were nail’d For our advantage on the bitter cross. But this our purpose is a twelve-month old,

1 Coleridge adopts Theobald’s view, that the “dry penetrability” of the soil of England was referred to. 2 Expedition. 3 Calculations of the expense. 4 The folio: like. 5 The folio: Far.
And pride of their contention did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.
K. Hen. Here is a dear, a true-industrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stain'd with the variation of each soil
Betwixt, that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The earl of Douglas is discomfited;
Ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains: of prisoners, Hotspur took Mordake earl of Fife, and eldest son
To beaten Douglas, and the earl of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and the bold Menteith;
And is not this an honourable spoil?
A gallant prize? ha! cousin, is it not?
West. 'Faith, 'tis a conquest for a prince to boast of.
K. Hen. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me sin,
In envy that my lord Northumberland
Should be the father to so blest a son:
A son that is the mak'ring of his tongue's;
Amongst a grove the very straightest plant;
Who is sweet fortune's minion, and her pride:
Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,
See riot and dishonour stain the brow
Of my young Harry! O! that it could be prov'd,
That some night-tripping fairy had exchang'd
In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,
And cal'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet:
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine.
But let him from my thoughts.—What think you, coz,
Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,
Which he in this adventure hath surpris'd,
To his own use he keeps; and sends me word,
I shall have none but Mordake earl of Fife.
West. This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester,
Malevolent to you in all aspects;
Which makes him prune himself, and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity.
K. Hen. But I have sent for him to answer this;
And for this cause awhile we must neglect
Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.
Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor; so inform the lords;
But come yourself with speed to us again,
For more is to be said, and to be done,
Than out of anger can be uttered.
West. I will, my liege.

[Exeunt.]

Scene II. — The Same. Another Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Henry, Prince of Wales, and Falstaff.

Fal. Now, Hal; what time of day is it, lad?
P. Hen. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly, which thou wouldest truly know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes cups, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping-houses, and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-colour'd taffeta, I see no reason why thou shouldst be so superfluously to demand the time of the day.

1 Raised in ridges, heaped. 2 These two words are not in f. e. 3 in f. e.: In faith, &c.

The Knight of the Sun, whose romantic adventures were translated and published in 1585. 4 An allusion to the name of Oldcastle, which Falstaff appears to have originally borne. Farmer says it is from, lad of Castle. 5 This was the dress of constables at the time of the play. 6 were it not here: in f. e. 7 Gib, was an old name for a tom-cat. 8 The Lincolnshire bagpipe is often mentioned by old writers.
P. Hen. What sayest thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch?
Fal. Thou hast the most unsavoury similes; and art, indeed, the most comparative, rascally, sweet young prince.—But, Hal, I pray thee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God, thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought. An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you; sir; but I marked him not; and yet he talked very wisely; but I regarded him not, and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too.

P. Hen. Thou didst well; for wisdom eres out in the street, and no man regards it.
Fal. O! thou hast damnable iteration, and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal:—God forgoe thee for it. Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, an I do not, I am a villain: I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom.

P. Hen. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow, Jack?
Fal. Zounds! where thou wilt, lad, I'll make one; an I do not, call me villain, and baffle me.

P. Hen. I send no recommendation of life thee from praying, to purse-taking.

Enter Poins, at a distance.
Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal: 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation. Poins!—Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match"—O! if men were to be saved by merit, what hell in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain, that ever eried, Stand! to a true man.

P. Hen. Good morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good morrow, sweet Hal.—What says monsieur Renmore? What says Sir John Sack-2nd-and-Sugar? Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good-Friday last, for a cup of Madeira, and a cold capon's leg?

P. Hen. Sir John stands to his word: the devil shall have his bargain, for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs; he will give the devil his due.

Poins. Then, art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

P. Hen. Else he had been damned for cozening the devil.

Poins. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Gadshill. There are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses; I have visors for you all, you have horses for yourselves. Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester; I have bespoken supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap: we may do it as secure as sleep. If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home, and be hanged.

Fal. Hear ye, Yedward; if I tarry at home, and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Poins. You will, chaps?
Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee; nor thou earn'st not of the blood royal, if thou darest not stand for ten shillings.

P. Hen. Well, then, once in my days I'll be a madcap.
Fal. Why, that's well said.
My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.
I'll so offend, to make offence a skill,
Re redeeming time, when men think least I will. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. Another Apartment in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Northumberland, Worcester, Hotspur, Sir Walter Blunt, and Others.

K. Hen. My blood hath been too cold and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities,
And you have found me; for, accordingly,
You tread upon my patience: but, be sure,
I will from henceforth rather be myself,
Mighty, and to be feared, than my condition,
Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,
And therefore lost that title of respect,
Which the proud soul ne'er pays but to the proud.

Wor. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves
The scourge of greatness to be used on it;
And that same greatness, too, which our own hands
Have up to make so sporty.

North. My good lord,—

K. Hen. Lord? Worcester, get thee gone; for I do see Danger and disobedience in thine eye.
O, sir! your presence is too bold and peremptory,
And majesty might never yet endure
The moody frontier of a servant bow.
You have good leave to leave us: when we need
Your use and counsel, we shall send for you.—

[Exit Worcester.

North. Yea, my good lord.

Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,
Which Harry Percy, here, at Holmedon took,
Were, as he says, not with such strength denied
As is deliver'd to your majesty:
Either envy, therefore, or misprision
Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.

Hot. My liege, I did deny no prisoners:
But, I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord, neat, trimly dress'd,
Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin, new reap'd,
Show'd like a stubble-land at harvest-home:
He was perfumed like a milliner,
And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pouncet-box, which ever and anon
He gave his nose, and took 't away again;
Who, therewith angry, when it next came there,
'Took it in snuff';—and still he snifld, and talk'd.
And, as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
He call'd them untaught knaves, unmannerly,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome corpse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility,
With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me; among the rest, demanded
My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf.
I then, all smarting, with my wounds being cold,
To be so pester'd with a popinjay,
Out of my grief and my impatience,
Answer'd neglectingly; I know not what,
He should, or he should not; for he made me mad,
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
And talk so like a waiting gentlewoman.
Of guns, and drums, and wounds, God save the mark!

And telling me, the sovereign's thing on earth
Was parmaecli for an inward bruise;
And that it was great pity, so it was,
This villainous salt-petre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly; and, but for these vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier.
This baid, unjointed chat of his, my lord,
I answer'd indirectly, as I said;
And, I beseech you, let not his report
Come current for an accusation,
Betwixt my love and your high majesty.

Blunt. The circumstance considered, good my lord,
Whate'er Lord Harry Percy then had said,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest re-told,
May reasonably die, and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.

K. Hen. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners,
But with proviso, and exception,
That we, at our own charge, shall ransom straight
His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer;
Who, on my soul, hath wilfully betray'd
The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against that great magician, damn'd Glendower,
Whose daughter, as we fear, that earl of March
Hath lately married. Shall our coffers, then,
Be emptied to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason, and indent with foes,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost,
To ransom home revoluted Mortimer.

Hot. Revoluted Mortimer!
He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war; to prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds,
Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took,
When on the gentle Severn's sodgy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower.
Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drink,
Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood;
Who then, affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp head in the hollow bank
Blood-stained with these valiant combatants.
Never did base and rotten policy
Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly:
Then, let him not be slander'd with revolt.

K. Hen. Thou dost belie him, Percy, thou dost belie him:
He never did encounter with Glendower.
I tell thee,
He durst as well have met the devil alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art thou not ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth
Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer.
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me.
As will displeasure you.—My lord Northumberland,
Revenge the jeering, and disdain'd contempt,
Of this proud king; who studies day and night
To answer all the debt he owes to you,
Even with the bloody payment of your deaths.
Therefore, I say,—

Wor. Peace, cousin! say no more.
And now I will unclasp a secret book,
And to your quick-conceiving discontents
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and adventurous spirit,
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.

Hot. If he fall in, good night!—or sink or swim,
Send danger from the east unto the west,
So honour cross it, from the north to south,
And let them grapple —o! the blood more stirs,
To rouse a lion, than to start a hare.

North. Imagination of some great exploit
Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

Hot. By heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap,
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon;
Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom-line could never touch the ground,
And pluck up drowned honour by the locks,
So he that doth redeem her thence might wear
Without corriall all her dignities:
But out upon this half-fac'd fellowship!

Wor. He apprehends a world of figures here,
But not the form of what he should attend.—
Good cousin, give me audience for a while. 3

Hot. I cry you mercy.

Wor. Those same noble Scots,
That are your prisoners,—

Hot. I'll keep them all.

By God, he shall not have a Scot of them:
No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not.
I'll keep them, by this hand.

Wor. You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes.
Those prisoners you shall keep.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat.
He said he would not ransom Mortimer;
Forbad my tongue to speak of Mortimer;
But I will find him when he lies asleep,
And in his ear I'll holla—Mortimer!
Nay, I'll have a startling shall be taught to speak
Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him,
To keep his anger still in motion.

Wor. Hear you, cousin, a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke:
And that same sword-and-buckler 7 prince of Wales,
But that I think his father loves him not,
And would be glad he met with some mischance,
I would have him poison'd 8 with a pot of ale.

Wor. Farewell, kinsman. I will talk to you,
When you are better temper'd to attend.

North. Farewell, kinsman. I will talk to you,
When you are better temper'd to attend.

Wor. Why, what a wasp-stung 9 and impatient fool
Art thou to break into this woman's mood,
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own!

Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourg'd with rods,
Netted, and stung with pismires; when I hear
Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke;
In Richard's time,—what doth call the place?—
A plague upon't!—it is in Gloucestershire;—
'T was where the mad-cap duke his uncle kept,

Enter a Carrier, with a Lantern in his hand.

1 Car. Heigh ho! An't be not four by the day, I'll be hanged: Charles's wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler!

Ost. [Within.] Anon, anon.

1 Car. I pr'ythee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all ease.

Enter another Carrier.

2 Car. Peas and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the boys: this house is turned upside down since Robin ostler died.

1 Car. Poor fellow! he never joyed since the price of oats rose: it was the death of him.

2 Car. I think, this be the most villainous house in all London road for fles: I am stung like a thcoth.

1 Car. Like a thcoth? by the mass, there is never a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock. 2 Car. Why, they will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we look in the chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach.

1 Car. What, ostler! come away and be hanged: come away.

2 Car. I have a gammon of bacon, and two razes of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing-cross.

1 Car. Oh, somebody! the turkeys in my pannier are quite starved. What, ostler!—A plague on thee! haste.

Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

Hot. I smell it:

Upon my life, it will do wondrous well.

North. Before the game's afoot, thou still let'st slip.

Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot:—And then the power of Scotland, and of York,

To join with Mortimer, ha?

War. And so they shall.

Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.

War. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed,

To save our heads by raising of a head;

For, bear ourselves as even as we can,
The king will always think him in our debt,

And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,

Till he hath found a time to pay us home:

And see already how he doth begin

To make us strangers to his looks of love.

Hot. He does, he does: we'll be revenge'd on him.

War. Cousin, farewell.—No farther go in this,

Than I by letters shall direct your course.

When time is ripe: (which will be suddenly)

I'll steal to Glendower, and lord Mortimer;

Where you, and Douglas, and our powers at once,

As I will fashion it, shall happily meet,

To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,

Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

North. Farewell, good brother: we shall thrive, I trust.

Hot. Uncle, adieu.—O! let the hours be short,

Till fields, and blows, and groans applaud our sport.

[Exeunt.

Act II.
company, last night at supper: a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already, and call for eggs and butter: they will away presently.

_Gods._ Sirrah, if they meet not with saint Nicholas's clerks, I'll give thee this neck.

_Cham._ No, I'll none of it: I pr'ythee, keep that for the hangman; for, I know thou worship'st saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

_Gods._ What talkest thou to me of the hangman? if I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallowes; for, if I hang, old sir John hangs with me, and thou knowest he's no starveling. _Tu!_ there are other Trojans that thou dreamest not of, the which, for sport sake, are content to do the profession some grace, that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am joined with no foot-languers, no long-staff, sixpeny strikers: none of these mad, mustachio purple-hued malt-worms; but with nobility and sanguinity; burgomasters, and great ones—yes, such as can hold in; such as will strike sooner than speak; and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray: and yet I lie; for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth; or, rather, not pray to her, but pray on her, for they rise up and down on her, and make her boots.

_Cham._ What! the commonwealth's their boots? will she hold up water in foul weather?

_Gods._ She will she will; justice hath dignified her. We steal as in a castle, cock-sure; we have the receipt of fern-seed, we walk invisible.

_Cham._ Nay, by my faith, I think you are more beholding to the night, than to fern-seed, for your walking invisible.

_Gods._ Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase, as I am a true man.

_Cham._ Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

_Gods._ Go to; _homo_ is a common name to all men. Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Road by Gadhill.

_Enter Prince Henry, and Poi's; Bardolph and Petoe, at some distance._

_Poi's._ Come, shelter, shelter: I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gimmed velvet.

_P. Hen._ Stand close.

_Bardolph._ Enter FALSTAFF.

_Fal._ Poi's! Poi's! and be hanged! Poi's!

_P. Hen._ Peace, ye fat-kidneyed rascal! What a brawling dost thou keep?

_Fal._ Where's Poi's, Hal?

_P. Hen._ He is walked up to the top of the hill: I'll go seek him.

_Pretends to go seek Poi's._

_Fal._ I am accursed to rob in that thief's company: the rascal hath removed my horse; and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the squire's further afoot I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I escape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two-and-twenty years, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged; it could not be else. I have drunk medicines—Poi's!—Hal!—a plague upon you both!—Bardolph!—Peto!—I'll starve, ere I'll rob a foot further. An I were not as good a deed as drink, to turn true man, and leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is three score and ten miles afoot with me, and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough. A plague upon't, when thieves cannot be true to one another! [They whistle.] Whew!—A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues: give me my horse, and be hanged.

_P. Hen._ Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down: lay thine ear close to the ground, and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

_Fal._ Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood! I'll not bear mine own flesh so far afoot, as for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to colt me thus?

_P. Hen._ Thou liest: thou art not colt'd, thou art uncolted.

_Fal._ I pr'ythee, good prince Hal, help me to my horse; good king's son.

_P. Hen._ Out, you rogue! shall I be your ostler?

_Fal._ Go, hang thyself in thine own heir-apparent garters! If I be ta'en, I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison: when a jest is so forward, and afoot too,—I hate it.

_Enter GADHILL._

_Gods._ Stand.

_Fal._ So do, against my will.

_Poi's._ O! 't is our seller: I know his voice.

_Enter BARDOLPH._

_Bard._ What news?

_Gods._ Case ye, case ye; on with your visors: there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

_Fal._ You lie, you rogue: 't is going to the king's tavern.

_Gods._ There's enough to make us all.

_Fal._ To be hanged.

_P. Hen._ Sire, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower; if they 'scape from your encounter, then they light on us.

_Peto._ But how many be there of them?

_Gods._ Some eight, or ten.

_Fal._ Zounds! will they not rob us?

_P. Hen._ What, a coward, sir John Paunch?

_Fal._ Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather; but yet no coward, Hal.

_P. Hen._ Well, we leave that to the proof.

_Poi's._ Sirrah Jack,—thy horse stands behind the hedge: when thou needest him, there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

_Fal._ Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

_P. Hen._ Ned, [Aside to Poins.] Where are our disguises?

_Poi's._ Here, hard by: stand close.

_Exeunt P. Hen and Poi's._

_Fal._ Now, my masters, happy man be his dole; say I: every man to his business.

_Enter Travellers._

_Trav._ Come, come, neigbour: the boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we'll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs.

Thieves. Stand!

_Trav._ Jesus bless us!

_Fal._ Strike; down with them; eat the villains' throats. Ah, whorson caterpillars! bacon-fed knives! they hate us youth: down with them: flceee them.

_Exeunt._

_Trav._ O! we are undone, both we and ours, for ever.

SCENE III.—Warwick. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Horseshoe, reading a Letter.

"O! for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house."—He could be contented,—why is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house:—he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. "The purpose you undertake, is dangerous!"—Why, that's certain: "it is dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my lord, out of this nettle, danger, we'll weave this fruit of safety. The purpose you undertake, is dangerous: the friends you have named, uncertain; the time itself unsorted, and your whole plot too light for the counterfeit of so great an opposition."—Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow, cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lackbrain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid: our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frothy-spirited rogue is this? Why, my lord of York commends the plot, and the general course of the action. 'Round! and I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and my cousin? Lord Edinburgh, my Lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, besides the Douglas? Have I not all their letters, to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month, and are they not, some of them, set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this! an infidel! Ha! you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the king, and lay open all our proceedings. Oh! I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Hang him! let him tell the king: we are prepared. I will set forward to-night.

KING

HENRY IV.

SCENE IV.—Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar’s
Head Tavern.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. Ned, pr’ythee, come out of that fat room, and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where hast been, Hal?

P. Hen. With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or four-score hogsheads. I have sounded the very base string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leach of drawers, and can call them all by their Christian names as Tom, Dick, and Francis.

They take it already upon their salvation, that though
I be but prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy, and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Fal-staff; but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy, (by the lord, so they call me), and when I am king of England, I shall command all the good lads in East-cheap. They call drinking deep, dying sweet; and when you breathe in your waterings, they cry hem! and bid you play it off.—To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned,—to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this penny-worth of sugar, clapped even now into my hand by an under-skinner1; one that never spake other English in his life, than, "Eight shillings and sixpence," and
"You are welcome;" with this shrill addition,—"Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon,2 or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I pr’ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling—Francis! that his tale to me may be nothing but—anon. Step aside, and I will show thee a precedent.

Poins. Francis! P. Hen. Thou art perfect.

Poins. Francis! [Exit Poins.

Enter Francis.

Franc. Anon, anon, sir.—Look down into the Pomegranate, Ralph.

P. Hen. Come hither, Francis.

Franc. My lord.

P. Hen. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Franc. Forsooth, five years, and as much as to—

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Franc. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Five years! by ’r lady, a long lease for the clinking! No, Francis, dost thou think I am so valiant, as to play the coward with thy indenture, and to show it a fair pair of heels, and run from it?

For, O lord, sir! I’ll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find it in my heart.

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Franc. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. How old art thou, Francis? [be—

Franc. Let me see,—about Michaelmas next I shall

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Franc. Anon, anon, sir. Pray you, stay a little, my lord.

P. Hen. Nay, but hark you, Francis. For the sugar thou gavest me,—I was a pennyworth, was ’t not?

Franc. O lord, sir! I would it had been two.

P. Hen. I will give thee for it a thousand pound:
ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Franc. Anon, anon.

P. Hen. Anon, Francis? No, Francis; but to-morrow, Francis; or, Francis, on Thursday; or, indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis—

Franc. My lord?

P. Hen. Wilt thou rob this leathern-jerkin, crystal-button, knot-pated,3 agate-ring, puke'-stocking, caddis-garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch,—

Franc. O lord, sir, who do you mean?

P. Hen. Why then, your brown bastard? Is your only drink: for, look you, Francis, your white canvas doubles will sully. In Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.

Franc. What, sir?

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

P. Hen. Away, you rogue! Dost not thou hear them call?

[Here they both call him; the Drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.

Enter Vintner.

Vint. What! stand’st thou still, and hear’st such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit Fran.

My lord, old sir John, with half a dozen more, are at the door: shall I let them in?

P. Hen. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit Vintner.] Poins.

Re-enter Poins.

Poins. Francis, anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door. Shall we be merry?

Poins. As merry as cricketts, my lad. But hark ye;
what cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what’s the issue?

P. Hen. I am now of all humours, that have show’d themselves humours, since the old days of Goodman
Adam to the pupil age of this present twelve o’clock at midnight. [Re-enter Francis, with Wine.] What’s o’clock, Francis?

Franc. Anon, anon, sir.

Franc. That over this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry is—up-stairs, and down-stairs; his eloquence, the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy’s mind, the Hotspur of the North; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife,—"Fie upon this quiet life? I want work." "O my sweet Harry," says he, "How many hast thou killed to-day?" "Give my roan horse a drench," says he, and answers. "Fourteen," an hour after; "a trifle, a trifle."—I pr'ythee, call in Falstaff; I'll play Percy, and that damned brawn shall play dame Mortimer his wife. "Rivo!" says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow.

Enter Falstaff, Bardolph, and Peto.

Pains. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been?

Fal. A plague of all cowards; I say, and a vengeance too! marry, and amen!—Give me a cup of sack, boy.—Ere I lead this life long, I'II sell neither-stocks, and mend them, and foot them too. A plague of all cowards!—Give me a cup of sack, rogue.—Is there no virtue extant?

[He drinks.]

P. Hen. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter? pitiful-hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun! if thou didst, then, behold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too; there is nothing but regurgity to be found in villainous man; yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it; a villainous coward.—Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if mankind, good mankind, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There live not three good men unhanged in England, and one of them is fat, and grows old: God help the while! a bad world, I say, I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or any thing. A plague of all cowards, I say still.

P. Hen. How now, wool-sack! what matter you?

Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You prince of Wales!

P. Hen. Why, you whoreson round man, what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? answer me to that? and Pains there?

Pains. 'Zounds! ye fat paunch, and ye call me coward, I'll stab thee.

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward; but I would give a thousand pound, I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders; you care not who sees your back. Call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me.—Give me a cup of sack: I am a rogue, if I drank to-day.

P. Hen. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunk'st last.

Fal. All's one for that. [He drinks.] A plague of all cowards, still say I.

P. Hen. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter? there be four of us here have't a thousand pound this day morning. [He drinks.]

P. Hen. Where is it, Jack! where is it?

Fal. Where is it? taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us. [He drinks.]

P. Hen. What, a hundred, man?

Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scaped by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet; four through the hose; my buckler cut through and through; my sword hacked like a hand-saw: ecce sig-

num. [Drawing it.] I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards!—Let them speak: if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains, and the sons of darkness.

P. Hen. Speak, sirs: how was it?

Bard. We four set upon some dozen,—Fal. Sixteen, at least, my lord.

Bard. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.

Bard. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us,—Fal. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

P. Hen. What! fought ye with them all?

Fal. All? I know not what ye call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish; if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then am I no two-legged creature.

P. Hen. Pray God, you have not murdered some of them.

Fal. Nay, that's a past praying for: I have pepered two of them: two, I am sure, I have paid; two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal,—if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward:—here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me,—

P. Hen. What, four? thou saidst but two even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

Pains. Ay, ay, he said four.

Fal. These four came all a-front, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus.

P. Hen. Seven? why, there were but four even now.

Fal. In buckram.

Pains. Ay, four in buckram suits.

Fal. Seven, by these hilts, or I am a villain else.

P. Hen. Pr'ythee, let him alone: we shall have more anon.

[To Pains.]

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

P. Hen. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so; for it is worth the listening to. These nine in buckram, that I told thee of,—

P. Hen. So, two more already.

Fal. Their points being broken,—

Pains. Down fell their hoes.

Fal. Began to give me ground; but I followed me close, came in, foot and hand, and with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid.

P. Hen. O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two.

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal-green, came at my back, and let drive at me;—for it was so dark, Hal, that thou couldst not see thy hand.

P. Hen. These lies are like the father that begats them; gross as a mountain; open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts, thou knotty-pated fool, thou whoreson, obscene, greasy tallow-keech. —

Fal. What! art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth, the truth?

P. Hen. Why, how couldst thou know these men in Kendal green, when it was so dark thou couldst not

Scene IV.

KING HENRY IV.

361

See thy hand? come, tell us your reason: what sayest thou to this?

POINS. Come, your reason, Jack; your reason.

Fal. What, upon compulsion? No; were I at the strappado! or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you upon compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! if reasons were as plentiful as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion.

P. Hen. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin: this sanguine coward, this bed-presser, this horse-breaker, this huge hill of flesh;

Fal. Away, you starveling, you elf-skin, you dried neat's-tongue, bull’s pizzle, you stock-fish, O, for breath to utter what is like thee!—you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing-tuck:

P. Hen. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again; and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

POINS. Mark, Jack.

P. Hen. We two saw you four set on four; you bound them, and were masters of their wealth.—Mark now, how plain a tale shall you drown?—Then did we two set you four, and, with a word, out-face'd you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can show it you here in the house. And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimly, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard bull-calf. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and then, say, it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole, cast thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

POINS. Come, let's hear, Jack: what trick hast thou now?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye, as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters: was it for me to kill the heir-apparent? Should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou knowest, I am as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct: the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter; I was a coward on instinct: I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life; I, for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money.—Hostess, clap to the doors: watch to-night, pray to-morrow.—Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the tittles of good fellowship come to you! What! shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

P. Hen. Content;—and the argument shall be, thy running away.

Fal. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me.

Enter Hostess.

Host. O Jesu! My lord the prince.—

P. Hen. How now, my lady the hostess! what say'st thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door would speak with you: he says, he comes from your father.

P. Hen. Give him as much as will make him a royal man, and send him back again to my mother.

Fal. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight?—Shall I give him his answer?

P. Hen. Pr'ythee, do, Jack. Fal. Faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exit. P. Hen. Now, sirs; by 'r lady, you fought fair;—so did you, Peto,—so did you, Bardolph; you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince, no;—fa!

Bard. 'Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

P. Hen. 'Faith, tell me now in earnest: how came Falstaff's sword so hacked?

Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger, and said, he would wear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight; and persuaded us to do the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear grass, to make them bleed: and then to beslubber our garments with it, and to swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven year before; I blushed to hear his monstrous devices.

P. Hen. O villain! thou stol'st a cup of sack eighteen years ago, andwert taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blushed extempore. Thou hastd fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou ranst away: what instinct hadst thou for it?

Bard. My lord, do you see these meteor's? do you behold these exhalations?

P. Hen. [To Host.] What is this, I pray you? Make haste, Mr. Hostess.

Bard. What think you they portend?

P. Hen. Hot livers and cold purses.

Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. Hen. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter Falstaff.

Here comes lean Jack; here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast!—How long is't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thy own knee?

Fal. My own knee? when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring: a plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder. There's villainous news abroad; here was sir John Bracey from your father: you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy; and he of Wales, that gave Amaimon the bastardize, and made Lucifer euckold, and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook,—what, a plague, call you him?—

POINS. O! Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen, the same; and his son-in-law, Mortimer; and old Northumberland; and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o' horseback up a hill perpendicular.

P. Hen. He that rides at high speed, and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

P. Hen. So did he never the sparrow.

Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him; he will not run.

P. Hen. Why, what a rascal art thou, then, to praise him so for running?

Fal. O' horseback, ye cuckoo! but, afoot, he will not budge a foot.

P. Hen. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps more. Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's head is turned white with the news: you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackarel.

P. Hen. Why then, it is like, if there come a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads as they buy hob-nails, by the hundred.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like, we shall have good trading that way. But, tell me,——

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow, when thou comest to thy father; if thou love me, practise an answer.

P. Hen. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I? content.—This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

P. Hen. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious ruff-crown for a pitiful bald crown!

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved. —Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will wrong in King Cymbeline's reign.

Fal. Well, here is my leg.

Fal. And here I speak. —Stand aside, nobility.

Host. O Jesu! this is excellent sport, i' faith.

Fal. Weep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are vain.

Host. O, the father! how he holds his countenance.

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my trifling queen, For tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

Host. O Jesu! he doth it as like one of these harlotry players as ever I see.

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot! peace, good tickle-brain! —Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied; for though men canonise, the more it is trodden on, the faster it grows, so youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. That art thy mother's son, partly my own opinion; but chiefly, a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If, then, thou be son to me, here lies the point—why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a mickey, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the sun of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile: so doth the company thou keepest; for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink, but in tears, not in pleasure, but in passion; not in words only, but in weeds also. —And yet there is a virtuous man, whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

P. Hen. What manner of man, an it like thy majesty?

Fal. A goodly, portly man! i' faith, and a corpulent: of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or, by' r Lady, inclining to threescore, and now I remember me, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be lowly given me, let me have one; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the tree may be known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree, then peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me, now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month?

P. Hen. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker, or a poulterer's hare.

P. Hen. Well, here I am set.

Fal. And here I stand.—Judge, my masters.

P. Hen. Now, Harry! whence come you?

Fal. My noble lord, from Eastcheap.

P. Hen. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous. Fal. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false. —Nay, I'll tickle thee for a young prince, i' faith.

P. Hen. Swearest thou, ungracious boy? henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace: there is a devil haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old man: a tun of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that hulk of humours, that bolting-hutch of bestiality, that swarm parcel of dropscies, that huge bombard, that stuffed old cloth-bag? why dost thou feed that pimple, with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice, that grey iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in —are? Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cunning, but in craft? wherein crafty, but in villainy? wherein villainous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

Fal. I would your grace would take me with you, whom means your grace?

P. Hen. That villainous abominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I know.

P. Hen. I know thou dost.

Fal. But to say, I know no more harm in him than in myself, were to say more than I know. That he is old, the more the pity, his white hairs do witness it: but that he is, saving your reverence, a whoremaster, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God help the wicked! If to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know, is damned: if to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine are to be loved. No, my good lord: banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poin; but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and, therefore more valiant, being, as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company: banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. Hen. I do, I will. —[A knocking heard.

[Exeunt Hostess, Francis, and Bardolph.

Re-enter BARDOLPH, running.

Bard. O! my lord, my lord! the sheriff, with a most monstrous watch, is at the door.

Fal. Out, you rogue! play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Hostess.

Host. O Jesu! my lord, my lord! —

P. Hen. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddlestick. What is the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door; they are coming to the sheriff house. Shall I let them in?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without seeming so.

SCENE I.

KI^G.

P. Hen. And thou a natural coward, without instinct.

Pol. I deny your major. If you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up. I hope I shall as soon be strangled with a halter as another.

P. Hen. Go, hide thee behind the arras:—the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face, and a good conscience.

Pol. Both which I have had; but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me.

[Exeunt all but the Prince and Peto.]

P. Hen. Call in the sheriff.

Enter Sheriff and Carrier.

Now, master sheriff, what's your will with me?

Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry

Hath follow'd certain men unto this house.

P. Hen. What men?

Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious lord;

A gross fat man.

Car. As fat as butter.

P. Hen. The man, I do assure you, is not here,

For I myself at this time have employ'd him.

And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee,

That I will, by to-morrow dinner-time,

Send him to answer thee, or any man,

For any thing he shall be charg'd withal:

And so, let me entertain you, leave the house.

Sher. I will, my lord. There are two gentlemen

Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks.

ACT

SCENE I.—Bangor. A Room in the Archbishop's House.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Mortimer, and Glendower.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure,

And our induction 2 full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer, and cousin Glendower, will you sit down?—And, uncle Worcester,—A plague upon it! I have forgot the map.

Glend. No, here it is.

Sit, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur;

For by that name as oft as Lancaster

Doth speak of you,

His cheek looks pale, and with a rising sigh

He wisheth you in heaven.

Hot. And you in hell, as often as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: at my nativity,

The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,

Of burning crescents; and at my birth,

The frame and huge foundation of the earth

Shak'd like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done at the same season,

If your mother's cat had but kitten'd, though yourself had never been born.

Glend. I say, the earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say the earth was not of my mind,

If you suppose as fearing you it shook.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire; the earth did tremble.

Hot. It may be so: if he have robb'd these men, He shall be answerable; and so, farewell.

Sher. Good night, my noble lord.

P. Hen. I think it is good morrow, is it not?

Sher. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock.

P. Hen. This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's.

Go, call him forth.

Peto. Falstaff!—fast asleep behind the arras, and snorting like a horse.

P. Hen. Hark, how hard he fetches breath. Search his pockets. [Peto searches.] What hast thou found?

Peto. Nothing but papers, my lord.

P. Hen. Let's see what they be: read them.

Peto. [Reads.] Item, A capon, 2s. 2d.

Item, Sauce 4d.

Item, Sack, two gallons, 5s. 6d.

Item, Anothing, and sack after supper, 2s. 6d.

Hot. Bread. [Exeunt.

P. Hen. O monstrous! but one half-pennyworth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack!—What there is else, keep close: we'll read it at more advantage. There let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the morning: we must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honourable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot; and, I know, his death will be a march of twelve-score. The money shall be paid back again with advantage. Be with me betimes in the morning; and so good morrow, Peto.

Peto. Good morrow, good my lord.

[Exeunt.]

III.

Hot. O! then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire,

And not in fear of your nativity.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth

In strange eruptions: oft the teeming earth

Is with a kind of chollic pinch'd and vex'd

By the imprisoning of unruly wind

Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving,

Shakes the old baldame earth, and topples down

Steeplings, and moss-grown towers. At your birth,

Our grandam earth, having this distemperature,

In passion shook.

Glend. Cousin, of many men

I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave

To tell you once again,—that at my birth,

The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes;

The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds

Were strangely clamorous in the frighted fields.

These signs have mark'd me extraordinary,

And all the courses of my life do show,

I am not in the roll of common men.

Where is he living,—clipp'd in with the sea.

That chides the banks of England, Scotland, Wales,—

Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me?

And bring him out, that is but woman's son,

Can trace me in the tedious ways of art,

And hold me pace in deep experiments.

Hot. I think, there is no man speaks better Welsh.

I'll to dinner.

Mort. Peace, cousin Percy! you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call spirits from the vastly deep.
Hot. Why, so can I, or so can any man: But will they come, when you do call for them?
Glend. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command the devil.
Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil,
By telling truth: tell truth, and shame the devil.
If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither,
And I'll be sworn, I have power to shame him hence.
O! while you live, tell truth, and shame the devil.
Mort. Come, come;
No more of this unprofitable chat.
Glend. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made head
Against my power: thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandie-bottom’d Severn, have I sent him
Bootless home, and weather-beaten back.
Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather too!
How 'scape’d he agues, in the devil’s name?
Glend. Come, here’s the map: shall we divide our right,
According to our three-fold order ta’en?
Mort. The archdeacon hath divided it
Into three limits, very equally.
England, from Trent and Severn hither;
By south and east is to my part assign’d:
All westward, Wales, beyond the Severn shore,
And all the fertile land within that bound,
To Owen Glendower:—and, dear coz, to you
The remnant northward, lying off from Trent.
And our indentures tripartite are drawn,
Which being sealed interchangeably,
(A business that this night may execute)
To-morrow, cousin Percy, you, and I,
And my good lord of Worcester, will set forth;
To meet your father, and the Scottish power,
As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury.
My father Glendower is not ready yet,
Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days.—
Within that space you may have drawn together.
[To Glendower.
Your tenants, friends, and neighbouring gentlemen.
Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords;
And in my conduct shall your ladies come;
From whom you must steal, and take no leave;
For there will be a world of women,
Upon the parting of your wives and you.
Hot. Menthinks, my moiety, north from Burton here,
In quantity equals not one of yours.
See, how this river comes me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land
A huge half-moon; a monstrous castle out.
I’ll have the current in this place dam’d up,
And here the snug and silver Trent shall run,
In a new channel, fair and evenly:
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here.
Glend. Not wind? it shall; it must; you see, it doth.
Mort. Yes, but mark; how he bears his course, and runs me up.
With like advantage on the other side;
Gelling the opposed continent, as much
As on the other side it takes from you.
Wor. Yes, but a little charge will trench him here,
And on this north side win this cape of land;
And then he runs all straight and evenly.
Hot. I’ll have it so: a little charge will do it.
Glend. I will not have it alter’d.
Hot.
Glend. No, nor you shall not.
Hot.
Glend. Why, that will I.
Hot. Let me not understand you then:
Speak it in Welsh.
Glend. I can speak English, lord, as well as you,
For I was train’d up in the English court;
Where, being but young, I framed to the harp
Many an English ditty, lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament;
A virtue that was never seen in you.
Hot. Marry, and I’m glad of it with all my heart,
I had rather be a kitten, and cry new;
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers:
I had rather hear a brazen can’t stick turn’d,
Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree;
And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing poetry.
’T is like the fore’d gait of a shuffling nag.
Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn’d.
Hot.
I do not care.
I’ll give thrice so much land to any well-deserving friend;
But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I’ll cavil on the ninth part of a hair.
Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone?
Glend. The moon shines fair; you may away by night:
I’ll haste the writer, and withal, I’ll break
With your young wives of your departure hence.
I am afraid my daughter will run mad,
So much she doth on her Mortimer.
[Exit.
Mort. Fie, cousin Percy! how you cross my father.
Hot. I cannot choose: sometime he angers me
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant,
Of the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies;
And of a dragon, and a finless fish,
A clip-wing’d griffin, and a moulten raven,
A couching lion, and a ramping cat,
And such a deal of skimble-skamble stuff
As puts me from my faith. I tell you what,—
He held me, last night, at the least nine hours,
In reckoning up the several days’ names,
That were my lackeys: I cried, “Humph,” and “Well,”
“Go to!”
But mark’d him not a word. O! he’s as tedious
As a tired horse, a railing wife;
Worse than a smoky house: I had rather live
With cheese and garlick in a windmill, far,
Than feed on cates, and have him talk to me,
In any summer-house in Christendom.
Mort. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman;
Exceedingly well read, and profited
In strange concealments; valiant as a lion,
And wondrous affable, and as bountiful
As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin?
He holds your temper in a high respect,
And curbs himself even of his natural scope,
When you do cross his humour; ‘faith, he does.
I warrant you, that man is not alive,
Might so have tempted him as you have done,
Without the taste of danger and reproof:
But do not use it oft, let me entreat you.
Wor. In faith, my willful lord, you are to blame,
And since your coming hither have done enough

Hot. I had rather hear, lady, my brach, howl in Irish.

Lady P. Wouldst thou have thy head broken?

Hot. No.

Lady P. Then be still.

Hot. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault.

Lady P. Now, God help thee!

Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.

Lady P. What's that?

Hot. Peace? she sings. [A Welsh Song by Lady M.]

Hot. Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.

Lady P. Not mine, in good sooth.

Hot. Not yours, in good sooth! 'Heart!

You swear like to a comfit-maker's wife.

Not yours, in good sooth; and, as true as I live;

As God shall mend me; and, as sure as day:

And giv'st such sacretne, surety for thy oaths,

As if thou never walk'd farther than Finsbury.

Swear me, Kate, like a lady as thou art,

A good-mouth-filling oath; and leave in sooth,

And such protests of pepper-gingerbread,

To velvet-guards, and Sunday-citizens.

Come, sing.

Lady P. I will not sing.

Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be red-bread teacher. An the indentures be drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so come in when ye will.

[Exit.]

Glend. Come on', lord Mortimer; you are as slow.

As hot lord Percy is on fire to go.

By this our book is drawn; we'll seal, and part?

To horse immediately.

Mort. With all my heart. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Prince of Wales, and Lords.

K. Hen. Lords, give us leave. The Prince of Wales and I,

Must have some private conference: but be near at hand.

For we shall presently have need of you.—

[Exeunt Lords.]

I know not whether God will have it so.

For some displeasing service I have done,

That, in his secret doom, out of my blood

He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;

But thou dost, in thy passages of life,

Make me believe, that thou art only mark'd

For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven,

To punish my mistreadings. Tell me else,

Could such inordinate, and low desires,

Such poor, such bare, such low'd; such mean attempts,

Such barren pleasures, rude society,

As thou art match'd withal, and grafted to,

Accompany the greatness of thy blood,

And hold their level with thy princely heart?

P. Hen. So please your majesty, I would, I could

Quit all offences with as clear excuse

As well as, I am doubtless, I can purge

Myself of many I am charg'd withal:

Yet such extremity let me beg,

As, in reproof of many tales devis'd,

Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear

By smiling pick-thanks and base newsmongers,

I may, for some things true, wherein my youth

Hath faulty wander'd, and irregular,

Find pardon on my true submission.
K. Hen. God pardon thee! - yet let me wonder,
At thy affections, which do hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors,
Thy place in counsell thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supplied;
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court, and princes of my blood:
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd; and the soul of every man
Prophetically doth fore-think thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-place'd in the eyes of men,
So state and cheap'd in all my company;
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession,
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark, nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir,
But like a comet I was wonder'd at;
That men would tell their children, "This is he;"
Others would say,- "Where? which is Bolingbroke?"
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
And dress'd myself in such humility,
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus do I keep my person fresh, and now;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Ne'er seen but wonder'd at: and so my state,
Seldom, but sumptuous, showed like a feast,
And won by raraeness such solemnity.
The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavins wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burn'd; discarded state;
Mingled his royalty with earing fools;
Had his great name profan'd with their scorn;
And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys, and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative;
Grew a companion to the common streets,
Enfled himself to popularity;
That, being daily swallowed by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honey; and began
To loathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much.
So, when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo is in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
As sick and blunted with community,
Aford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sun-like majesty,
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes;
But rather drowz'd, and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries.
Being with his presence glutt'd, gorg'd and full,
And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou;
For thou hast lost thy princely privilege,
With vile participation: not an eye
But is a-warey of common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more;
Which now doth that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

P. Hen. Do not think so; you shall not find it so:
And God forgive them, that so much have sway'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!
I will redeem all this on Percy's head,
And in the closing of some glorious day,
Be bold to tell you that I am your son;
When I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favour in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it.
And that shall be the day, when'er it lights,
That this same child of honour and renown,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet.
For every honour sitting on his helm,
Would they were multitudes; and on my head
My shames redoubled! for the time will come,
That I shall make this northern youth exchange
His glorious deeds for my indignities.
Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf;
And will I make him so strict account,
That he shall render every glory up,
Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
This, in the name of God, I promise here:
The which, if he be pleas'd I shall perform,
I do beseech your majesty, may salve
The long-grown wounds of my intemperance:
If not, the end of life cancels all bands;
And I will die a hundred thousand deaths,
Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.

K. Hen. A hundred thousand rebels die in this!
Thou shalt have change, and sovereign trust herein.

Enter BLUNT.
How now, good Blunt? thy looks are full of speed.
Rhut. So is the business that I come to speak of.
Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word, That Douglas, and the English rebels met, The eleventh of this month, at Shrewsbury.
A mighty and a fearful head they are, If promises be kept on every hand, As ever offer'd foul play in a state.

K. Hen. The earl of Westmoreland set forth to-day, With him my son, lord John of Lancaster;
For this advertisement is five days old.—
On Wednesday next, Harry; you shall set forward;
On Thursday we ourselves will march:
Our meeting is Bridgnorth; and, Harry, you shall march through Shropshire; by which account, Our business valued, some twelve days hence.
Our general forces at Bridgnorth shall meet,
Our hands are full of business: let's away;
Advantage feeds him fat, while men delay.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Eastecheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not bate? do I not dwindle?—Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown: I am wither'd like an old apple-John. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse. The inside of a church! Company, villainous company, have been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so frettful, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it.—Come, sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough: swore little; dined not above seven times a week; went to a bawdy-house not above once in a quarter—of an hour; paid money that I borrowed three or four times; lived well, and in good compass; and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass; out of all reasonable compass, sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life. Thou art our admiral, thou bearest the lantern not in the poop,—but 'tis in the nose of thee: thou art the knight of the burning lamp.

Bard. Why, sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No; I'll be sworn, I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's head, or a memento mori: I never see thy face, but I think upon hell-fire, and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, glowing. If thou wast any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face: my oath should be,

By this fire, that's God's angel: but thou art altogether given over, and wilt, indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou ran'st up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wild-fire, there's no purchase in money. O! thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire-light. Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the sack that thou hast drunk me, would have bought me lights as good cheap, at the dearest chandler's in Europe. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire any time this two and thirty years: God reward me for it!

Bard. 'Sblood! I would my face were in your belly. Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burned.

Enter Hostess.

How now, dame Partlet the hen? have you inquired yet who picked my pocket?

Host. Why, sir John, what do you think, sir John? Do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: tithe of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. You lie, hostess: Bardolph was shaved, and lost many a hair; and I'll be sworn, my pocket was picked. Go to, you are a woman; go.

Host Who I? No. I defy thee: God's light! I was never called so in mine own house before.

Fal. Go to; I know you well enough.

Host. No, sir John; you do not know me, sir John: I know you, sir John: you owe me money, sir John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it. I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Downes, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell! You owe money here besides, sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it: let him pay.

Host He? alas! he is poor: he hath nothing.

Fal. How! poor? look upon his face; what call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks. I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a yonker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's, worth forty mark.

Host. O Jesu! I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that ring was copper.

Fal. How! the prince is a Jack, a sneak-cup; 'Sblood! and he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would so.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins, marching.

Falstaff meets the Prince, playing on his truncheon, like a fife.

Fal. How now, lad! is the wind in that door, i' faith? must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate-fashion?

Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, mistress Quickly? How does thy husband? I love him well: he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Pr'ythee let her alone, and list to me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, Jack?

Fal. The other night I fell asleep, here, behind the arras, and had my pocket picked: this house is turned bawdy-house: they pick pockets.

P. Hen. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal ring of my grandfather's.

P. Hen. A trifle: some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my lord: and I said I heard your grace say so: and, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is, and said, he would cudgel you.

P. Hen. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury,

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, and Douglas.

Hot. Well said, my noble Scot: if speaking true,
In this fine age were not thought flattering,
Such attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world.
By God, I cannot flatter: I defy
The tongues of scothurs; but a braver place
In my heart's love hath no man than yourself.
Nay, task me to your word; approve me, lord.
Doug. Thou art the king of honour:
No man so potent breathes upon the ground, with any other injuries but these, I am a villain; and yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket it wrong.

Art thou not ashamed?

Fal.

Dost thou hear, Hal? thou knowest in the state of innocence, Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do, in the days of villainy?  Thou seest I have more flesh than another man, and therefore more frailty. You confess, then, you picked my pocket?

P. Hen. It appears so by the story.

Fal. Hostess, I forgive thee, Go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest condition.

Host. Do, my lord.

Fal. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

Bard. Indeed, sir John, you said so,

Fal. Yeas; if he said my ring was copper.

P. Hen. I say, 'tis copper: darest thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man,
I dare; but as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

P. Hen. And why not, as the lion.

Fal. The king himself is to be feared as the lion.

Dost thou think I'll fear thee as I fear my father? nay, an I do, I pray God, my girdle break!

P. Hen. O! if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this bosom of thine; it is filled up with guts and midnight.

Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket!
Why, thou whoreson, impudent, embossed rascal, if there were any thing in thy pocket but tavern reckonings, memorandums of bawdy-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy to make thee long-winded; if thy pocket were enriched

Doug. ’Faith, and so we should, Where now remains a sweet recession: We now! may boldly spend upon the hope Of what is to come in: A comfort of retirement lives in this. |

Hot. | A rendezvous, a home to fly unto, If that the devil and mischance look big Upon the maidenhead of our affairs. |

Wor. But yet, I would your father had been here. The quality and hair4 of our attempt Brooks no division: it will be thought By some, that know not why he is away, That wisdom, loyalty, and mere dislike Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence. And think, how such an apprehension May turn the tide of fearful faction, And breed a kind of question in our cause: For, well you know, we of the offering side Must keep aloof from strict arbitration, And stop all sight-eyes, every loop from whence The eye of reason may pry in upon us. This absence of your father’s draws a curtain, That shows the ignorant a kind of fear Before not dreamt of. |

Hot. | You strain too far, I, rather, of his absence make this use:— It lends a lustre, and more great opinion, A larger dare to our great enterprise, Than if the earl were here: for men must think, If we, without his help, can make a head To push against the kingdom, with his help, We should o’erturn it topsy-turvy down.— Yet all goes well; yet all our joints are whole. |

Doug. | As heart can think: there is not such a word Spoke of in Scotland as this term4 of fear. |

Enter Sir Richard Vernon. |

Hot. | My most excellent lord, welcome, by my soul. |

Ver. | Pray God my news be worth a welcome, lord. The earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong, Is marching hitherwards; with him, prince John. |

Hot. | No harm: what more? |

Ver. | And farther, I have learn’d, The king himself in person is set forth, Or hitherwards intendeth speedily, With strong and mighty preparation. |

Hot. | He shall be welcome too. Where is his son, The nimble-footed mad-emp prince of Wales, And his comrades, that daff’d the world aside, And bid it pass ? |

Ver. | All furnish’d, all in arms, All plum’d like estridges, that wing the wind, Bated4 like eagles having lately bath’d; Glittering in golden coats, like images; As full of spirit as the month of May, And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer, Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls. I saw young Harry, with his beaver on, His cusses on his thighs, gallantly arm’d, Rise from the ground like feather’d Mercury, And vaited with such ease into his seat, As if an angel dropp’d down from the clouds, To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus, And witch the world with noble horsemanship. |

Hot. | No more, no more: worse than the sun in March, This praise doth nourish agues. Let them come; They come like sacrifices in their trim, And to the fire-ey’d maid of smoky war, All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them: The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit, Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire, To hear this rich reprisal is so high, And yet not ours.—Come, let me taste4 my horse, Who is to bear me, like a thunderbolt, Against the bosom of the prince of Wales: Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse, Meet, and ne’er part, till one drop down a corse.— O, that Glendower were come! |

Ver. | There is more news: I learn’d in Worcester, as I rode along, He cannot draw his power this fourteen days. |

Doug. | That’s the worst tidings that I hear of yet. |

Wor. | Ay; by my faith, that bears a frosty sound. |

Hot. | What may the king’s whole battle reach unto? |

Ver. | To thirty thousand. |

Hot. | Forty let it be: My father and Glendower being both away, The powers of us may serve so great a day, Come, let us take a muster speedily: Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily. |

Doug. | Talk not of dying: I am out of fear Of death, or death’s hand, for this one halfyear. |

SCENE II.—A public Road, near Coventry. Enter Falstaff and Bardolph. |

Fal. | Bardolph, get thee hence to Coventry: fill me a bottle of sack. Our soldiers shall march through; we’ll to Sutton-Cosford to-night. |

Bard. | Will you give me money, captain? |

Fal. | Lay out, lay out. |

Bard. | This bottle makes an angel. |

Fal. | An if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all, I’ll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town’s end. |

Bard. | I will; captain: farewell. |

soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds. I pressed me none but good householders, yeomen's sons; inquired me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the bans; such a commodity of warm slaves, as had as lief hear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver, worse than a struck fowl, or a hurt wild-duck. I pressed me none but such toast and butter, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs licked his sores; and such as, indeed, were never soldiers, but discarded unjust serving men, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted tapsters, and ostlers trade-fallen; the cankers of a calm world, and a long peace; ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old pieced ancient; and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think that I had a hundred and fifty tatter'd prodigals, lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draf't and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me I had unloaded all the giblets, and pressed the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scarecrows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat—nay, and the villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyrus on; for, indeed, I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half in all my company: and the half shirt is two napkins, tacked together, and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at St. Albans, or the red-nosed inn-keeper of Daventry. But that's all one; they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enter Prince Henry and Westmoreland.

P. Hen. How now, blown Jack! how now, quilt!
Fal. What, Hal! how now, mad wag! what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire?—My good lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy: I thought your honour had already been at Shrewsbury.

West. 1st Faith, sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there and you too; but my powers are there already. The king, I can tell you, looks for us all: we must away all night.

Fal. Tut, ever fear me: I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

P. Hen. I think, to steal cream indeed; for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack; whose fellows are these that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

P. Hen. I did never see such pitiful rascals.

Fal. Tut, tut! good enough to toss; food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit, as well as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but, sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare; too beggarly.

Fal. 'Faith, for their poverty, I know not where they have found; nor, in their bareness, I am sure, they never learned that of me.

P. Hen. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs, bare. But, sirrah, make haste: Percey is already in the field.

Fal. What, is the king encamped?
West. He is, sir John: I fear we shall stay too long.

Fal. Well, To the latter end of a fray, and the beginning of a feast, Fits a dull fighter, and a keen guest.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.
Wor. It may not be.
Dou. You give him, then, advantage.
Ver. Not a whit.
Hot. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?
Ver. So do we.
Hot. His is certain, ours is doubtful.
Wor. Good cousin, be advis'd: stir not to-night.
Ver. Do not, my lord.
Dou. You do not counsel well.
You speak it out of fear, and a cold heart.
Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my life, And I dare well maintain it with my life, If well-respected honour bid me on,
I hold as little counsel with weak fear, As you, my lord, or any Scot that lives.' Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle, Which of us fears.

Dou. Yea, or to-night.
Ver. Come, come, it may not be.
I wonder much,
Being men of such great leading as you are,
That you foresee not what impediments
Drag back our expedition: certain horse
Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up: Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day; And now their pride and mettle is asleep.
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,
That not a horse is half the half himself.
Hot. So are the horses of the enemy,
In general, journey-bated, and brought low;
T' the better part of ours are full of rest.
Wor. The number of the king excelled ours:
For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.
[The Trumpet sounds a parley,

Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king,
If you vouchsafe me hearing and respect.
Hot. Welcome, sir Walter Blunt; and would to God
You were of our determination!
Some of us love you well; and even those some Envy your great deservings, and good name,
Because you are not of our quality,
But stand against us like an enemy.
Blunt. And God defend but still I should stand so,
So long as out of limit and true rule,
You stand against anointed majesty.
But, to my charge.—The king hath sent to know
The nature of your griefs; and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility, teaching his duteous land
Audacious cruelty? That if the king
Have any way your good resolutions forgot,
Which he contracted to be manifold,
He bids you name your griefs, and with all speed,
You shall have your desires with interest,
And pardon absolute for yourself, and these,
Herein misled by your suggestion.

Hot. The king is kind; and, well we know, the king
Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.
My father, with* my uncle, and myself,
Did give him that same royalty he wears;

* According to Fynes Morison's itinerary (1617), Londoners, were "in reproach" called Cockneys, and eaters of buttered toast. Used for covering walls. * faced; in f. e. Old copies: not; mod. eds: but. * So the quartos; folio: to-night. * Toss on a pike. * that this day lives: in f. e. * and: in f. e.
And when he was not six-and-twenty strong,
Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,
A poor unmindful outlaw sneaking home,
My father gave him welcome to the shore:
And, when he heard him swear, and vow to God,
He came but to be duke of Lancaster,
To sue his livery; and beg his peace,
With tears of innocency, and terms of zeal,
My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd,
Sware him assistance, and perform'd it too.
Now, when the lords and barons of the realm
Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him,
The more and less came in with cap and knee;
Met him in boroughs, cities, villages,
Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,
Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their oaths,
Gave him their heirs, as pages follow'd him,
Even at the heels, in golden multitudes.
He presently, as greatness knows itself,
Steps me a little higher than his vow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor,
Upon the naked shore at Ravenspur;
And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts, and some strait decrees,
That lie too heavy on the commonwealth;
Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
Over his country's wrongs; and, by this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for:
Process and farther, cut me off the heads
Of all the favourites, that the absent king
In deputation left behind him here,
When he was personal in the Irish war.

Blunt. Tut! I came not to hear this.

Hot. Then, to the point.
In short time after he depos'd the king;
Soon after that, depriv'd him of his life;
And, in the neck of that, task'd the whole state;
To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman March
(Who is, if every owner were due place'd,
Indeed his king) to be engag'd in Wales,
Without ransom to lie forfeited;
Disgrac'd me in my happy victories;
Sought to entrap me by intelligence;
Rated my uncle from the council-board;
In rage dismiss'd my father from the court;
Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong,
And, in conclusion, drove us to seek out
This head of safety; and, withal, to pray
Into his title, the which we find
Too indirect for long-continuance.

Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king?

Hot. Not so, sir Walter: we'll withdraw awhile.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The King's Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter King Henry, Prince Henry, Prince John of Lancaster, Sir Walter Blunt, and Sir John Falstaff.

K. Hen. How bloodyly the sun begins to peer Above yond! a busky hill: the day looks pale
At his distemperature.

P. Hen. The southern wind

Doth play the trumpet to his purposes;
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretells a tempest, and a blustering day.

K. Hen. Then, with the losers let it sympathise,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.—

[Trumpet sounds.]

Enter Worcester and Vernon.

How now, my lord of Worcester! 'tis not well,
That you and I should meet upon such terms
As now we meet. You have deceiv'd our trust,
And made us dell our easy robes of peace,
To crush and hang our old monarch:
This is not well, my lord; this is not well.
What say you to it? Will you again unlend
This churlish knot of all-abhorred war,
And move in that obdient orb again,
Where you did give a fair and natural light,
And be no more an exhal'd meteor,
A prodigy of fear, and a portent
Of breach'd mischief to the unborn times?
Wor. Hear me, my liege.
For mine own part, I could be well content
To entertain the lag-end of my life
With quiet hours; for, I do protest,
I have not sought the day of this dislike. [then?]
K. Hen. You have not sought it! I say, how comes it
Fad. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.
P. Hen. Peace, cheswet, peace!
Wor. It pleas'd your majesty, to turn your looks
Of favour, from myself, and all our house;
And yet I must remember you, my lord.
We were the first and dearest of your friends.
For you my staff of office did I break
In Richard's time; and posted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
When yet you were in place, and in account,
Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
It was myself, my brother, and his son,
That brought you home, reputedly did outlodge
The danger of the time. You swore to us,
And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,
That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state,
Nor claim no farther than your new-fall'n right,
The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster.
To this we swore our aid; but, in short space,
It rain'd down fortune showering on your head,
And such a flood of greatness fell on you,
What with our help, what with the absent king,
What with the injuries of a wanton time,
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,
And the contrary winds that held the king
So long in fish wars,
That all in England did big with joy
And, from this swarm of fair advantages,
You took occasion to be quickly woud
To grip the general sway into your hand;
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster,
And, being fed by us, you us'd so
As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird,
Useth the sparrow, did oppress our nest,
Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk,
That even our love durst not come near your sight,
For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
We were enforc'd, for safety sake, to fly
Out of your sight, and raise this present head:
Whereby we stand and present you this
As you yourself have forg'd against yourself,
By unclead usage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworn to us in your younger enterprise.
K. Hen. These things, indeed, you have articulate
Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With some fine colour, that may please the eye
Of fickle changelings, and poor discontent
Which gape, and rub the elbow, at the news
Of hurriedly innovation:
And never yet did insurrection want

Such water-colours to impair his cause
Nor moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pellmell havoc and crouching
P. Hen. In both our armies, there is many a soul
Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
The prince of Wales doth join with all the world
In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes,
This present enterprise set off his head,
I do not think, a braver gentleman,
More active-valiant, or more valiant-young,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry,
And so, I hear, he doth account me too;
Yet this before my father's majesty:
I am content, that he shall take the odds
Of his great name and estimation,
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight.

K. Hen. And, prince of Wales, so dare we venture
Albeit considerations infinite
Do make against it.—No, good Worcester, no,
We love our people well; even those we love,
That are misled upon your cousin's part;
And, will they take the offer of our grace,
Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his.
So tell your cousin, and bring me word
What he will do; but if he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. So, be gone.
We will not now be troubled with reply:
We offer fair, take it advisedly.

[Exeunt Worcester and Vernon.
P. Hen. It will not be accepted, on my life.
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confidant against the world in arms.
K. Hen. Hencefore, every leader to his charge,
For, on their answer, will we set them on;
And God befriend us as our case is just.

[Exeunt King, Brunt, and Prince Jorn.
Fal. Hal, he will make me down in the battle,
And bestride me, so: 'tis a point of friendship.
P. Hen. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.
Fal. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all well.
P. Hen. Why, thou owest God a death.

Fal. 'Tis not due yet: I would be loth to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well, 'tis no matter; honour pricks me on. Yea, but how if honour pricks me off when I come on? how then? Can honour set to a leg?
No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honour hath no skill in surgery, then? No. What harm is? A word. What is in that word, honour? What is that honour? Air. A trick reckoning!—Who hath it? He that died o' Wednesday.
Dost he feel it? No. Dost he hear it? No.
Is it insensible, then? Yea, to the dead.
But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Detraction will not suffer it:—therefore, I'll none of it: honour is a mere scutcheon, and so ends my catechism.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The Rebel Camp.
Enter Worcester and Vernon.
Wor. O, no! my nephew must not know, sir Richard,
The liberal kind offer of the king.
There did he pause: but let me tell the world,
If he outlive the envy of this day,
England did never owe so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in his wantonness.

Hot. Cousin, I think thou art enamoured
Upon his follies: never did I hear
Of any prince so wild o' liberty.
But be he as he will, like the fox,
Who, ne'er so tame, so cheerful'd, and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
Look how we can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks;
And we shall feed like oxen at a stall,
The better cheerful'd, still the nearer death.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot,
It hath the excuse of youth, and heat of blood;
And an adopted name of privilege,
A hare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen.
All his offences live upon my head,
And on his father's: we did train him on;
And, his corruption being ta'en from us,
We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.
Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know
In any case the offer of the king.

Ver. Deliver what you will, I'll say, 'tis so.
Here comes your cousin.

Enter Hotspur and Douglas; Officers and Soldiers, behind.

Hot. My uncle is return'd:—Deliver up
My lord of Westmoreland.—Uncle, what news?
Wor. The king will bid you battle presently.
Dou. Defy him by the lord of Westmoreland.
Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.
Dou. Marry, and shall, and very willingly. [Exit Wor.]
Hence. There is no seeming mercy in the king.
Hot. Did you bega?—And did you, Harry?
Wor. I told him gently of our grievances,
Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus:
By now forswoaring that he is forsworn:
He calls us rebels, traitors: and will scourge
With haughty arms this hateful name in us.

Re-enter Douglas.

Dou. Arm, gentlemen! to arms! for I have thrown
A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth,
And Westmoreland, that was engag'd, did hear it,
Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.
Wor. The prince of Wales stepp'd forth before the king,
And, nephew, challenged you to single fight.
Hot. O! would the quarrel lay upon our heads;
And that no man might draw short breath to-day,
But I, and Harry Mowmouth! Tell me, tell me,
How shew'd his tasking? seem'd it in contempt?
Ver. No, by my soul: I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms.
He gave you all the duties of a man,
Trimm'd up your praises with a princely tongue,
Spoke your deservings like a chronicle,
Making you ever better than his prais'd,
By still dispraising prais'd, valued with you;
And, while you became him like a prince indeed,
He made a blushingly great of himself;
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd then a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning, instantly.

Sensibly furnish'd like the king himself.
Dong. A fool go with thy soul, where'er it goes!
A borrow'd title hath thou bought too dear:
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?
Hot. The king hath many masking2 in his coats.
Dong. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats:
I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece,
Until I meet the king.
Hot.

Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day.  [Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free at London, I shar the shot here; here's no scaring, but upon the pate.—Soft! who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt:—
there's honour for you; here's no vanity.—I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too: God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than mine own bowels.
—I have led my raglanmuffs where they are peppered: there's not three of my hundred, and fifty left alive, and they are for the town's end, to beg during life.
But who comes here?

Enter Prince Henry.
P. Hen. What! stand'st thou idle here? lend me
Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff [thy sword:
Under the hoods of vanishing enemies,
Whose deaths are yet unreveng'd. I pr'ythee, lend me your sword.
Fal. O Hal! I pr'ythee, give me leave to breathe a while.—Turk Gregory2 never did such deeds in arms, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.
P. Hen. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee.
I pr'ythee lend me thy sword.
Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou gu'lt'st not my sword: but take my pistols thou wilt.
P. Hen. Give it me. What, is it in the case?
Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot: there's that will sack a city.
[The Prince draws out a bottle of sack.
P. Hen. What! is 't a time to jest and daily now?
[Throws it at him, and exit.

Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll promise him. If he do come in my way, so: if he do not, if I come in his, willingly, let him make a carbonado3 of me. I like not such grinning honour as sir Walter hath: give me life; which I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlooked for,
and there's an end.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the King, Prince Henry,
Prince John, and Westmoreland.

K. Hen. I pr'ythee,
Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much.—
Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.
P. John. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.
P. Hen. I do beseech your majesty, make up,
Lest your retirement do amaze your friends.
K. Hen. I will do so.—My lord of Westmoreland,
Lead him to his tent.

West. Come, my lord, I'll lead you to your tent.
P. Hen. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help:
And heaven forbid, a slender scratch should drive
The prince of Wales from such a field as this,
Where stain'd nobility lies trodden on,
And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!
P. John. We breathe too long.—Come, cousin Westmoreland, our duty this way lies: for God's sake, come.
[Exeunt Prince John and Westmoreland.
P. Hen. By God thou hast deceiv'd me, Lancaster,
I did not think thee lord of such a spirit:
Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John,
But now, I do respect thee as my soul.
K. Hen. I saw him hold lord Percy at the point,
With luster maintenance than I did look for
Of such an ungrown warrior.
P. Hen.
O! this boy
Lends mettle to us all.  [Exit.

Alarums. Enter Douglas.

Doug. Another king! they grow like Hydra's heads,
I am the Douglas, fatal to all those
That wear those colours on them:—what art thou,
That counterfeit'st the person of a king?
K. Hen. The king himself; who, Douglas, grieves at heart,
So many of his shadows thou hast met,
And not the very king. I have two boys
Seek Percy, and thyself, about the field:
But, seeing thou fail'st on me so luckily,
I will assay thee; and defend thyself.

Doug. I fear thou art another counterfeit,
And yet, if in faith, thou hast the king a way:
But mine I am sure thou art, whose' thon be,
And thus I win thee.

[They fight: the King being in danger, enter
P. Henry.
P. Hen. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art like Never to hold it up again! the spirits
Of valiant Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms:
It is the prince of Wales that threatens thee,
Who never promiseth, but he means to pay.—

They fight: Douglas flies.

Cheerly, my lord: how fares your grace?—
Sir Nicholas Gauwayne hath for succour sent,
And so hath Clifton; I'll to Clifton straight.
K. Hen. Stay, and breathe a while.
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion;
And show'd thou mak'st some tender of my life,
In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.
P. Hen. O God! they did me too much injury,
That ever said I hearten'd for your death.
If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you;
Which would have been as speedy in your end,
As all the poisonous potions in the world,
And sav'd the treacherous labour of your son.
K. Hen. Make up to Clifton: I'll to sir Nicholas
Gauwayne.  [Exit King Henry.

Enter Hotspur.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.
P. Hen. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.
Hot. My name is Harry Percy.
P. Hen.
Why, then I see
A very valiant rebel of that name.
I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more:
Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere;
Nor can one England brook a double reign,
Of Harry Percy, and the prince of Wales.
Hot. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come
To end the one of us; and would to God
Their name in arms were now as great as mine!
P. Hen. I'll make it greater, ere I part from thee;
And all the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head.
Hot. I can no longer brook thy vanities. [They fight.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal!—Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.
Enter Douglas: he fights with Falstaff, Who falls down as if he were dead, and exit Douglas. Hotspur is wounded, and falls.

Hot. O, Harry! thou hast robb'd me of my youth.
I better brook the loss of brittle life.
Than those proud titles thou hast won of me;
They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword my flesh—
But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. O! I could prophesy,
That the earthy and cold hand of death
Lies on my tongue.—No, Percy, thou art dust,
And food for—[Dies.

P. Hen. For worms, brave Percy. Fare thee well, great heart!—
Ill-wea'rd ambition, how much art thou shrunk!
When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound;
But now, two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough:—this earth that bears thee dead,
Bears not alive so stout a gentleman.
If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
I should not make so dear a show of zeal:
But let my favours hide thy mangled face,
And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself
For doing these fair rites of tenderness.
Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven:
Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave,
But not remember'd in thy epitaph.—

[Seeing Falstaff on the ground.

What! old acquaintance! could not all this flesh
Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell.
I could have better spar'd a better man.
O! I should have a heavy miss of thee,
If I were much in love with vanity.
Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day,
Though many dearer, in this bloody day.—

Embowell'd will I see thee by and by;
Till then, in blood by noble Percy lie. [Exit.

Fal. [Rising.] Embowell'd! if thou embowell me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder me, and eat me too, to-morrow. 'Sblood! 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me seet and lot too.

Counterfeit? I lie; I am no counterfeit: to die, is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, and will have the life of the man: but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereof liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valour is discretion, in the which better part, I have saved my life. 'Zounds! I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead. How, if he should counterfeit too, and rise? By my faith, I am afraid he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure; yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise, as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me: therefore, sirrah, with a new wound in your thigh come you along with me. [He takes Hotspur on his back.

Re-enter Prince Henry and Prince John.

P. Hen. Come, brother John; full bravely hast thou flesh'd.

Art thou alive, or is it phantasy?
That plays upon our eyesight? I pr'ythee, speak;
We will not trust our eyes, without our ears.
Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain: I am not a double man; but if I am Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack. There is Percy: [Thrusting down his body] if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

P. Hen. Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou?—Lord, lord, how this world is given to lying!—I grant you I was down and out of breath, and so was he; but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so: if not, let them that should reward valour bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh: if the man were alive, and would deny it, 'zounds! I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

P. John. This is the strangest tale that e'er I heard.

P. Hen. This is the strangest fellow, brother John.—

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back:
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

[A Retreat is sounded.

The trumpet sounds retreat; the day is ours.

Come, brother, let us to the highest of the field,
To see what friends are living, who are dead.

[Exit Prince Henry and Prince John.

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, God reward him; if I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do.

[Exit, dragging out Percy's Body.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

The Trumpets sound. Enter King Henry, Prince Henry, Prince John, Westmoreland, and Others, with Worcester, and Vernon, prisoners.

K. Hen. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.—

Ill-spirited Worcester, did we not send grace,
Pardon, and terms of love to all of you?
And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary?
Misuse the ter'f of thy kinsman's trust?

Three knights upon our party slain to-day,
A noble earl, and many a creature else,
Had been alive this hour,
If, like a Christian, thou hadst truly borne
Betwixt our armies true intelligence.

Wor. What have I done, my safety urg'd me to,
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Which not to be avoided falls on me.?

K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon too;
Other offenders we will pause upon.—

[Exit Worcester and Vernon, guarded.

How goes the field?

P. Hen. The noble Scot, lord Douglas, when he saw The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him, The noble Percy slain, and all his men Upon the foot of fear, fled with the rest; And falling from a hill he was so bruis'd, That the pursuers took him. At my tent The Douglas is, and I beseech your grace, I may dispose of him.

7Since not to be avoided, it falls on me.
K. Hen. With all my heart.

P. Hen. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you This honourable bounty shall belong.

Go to the Douglas, and deliver him

Up to his pleasure, ransomless, and free:

His valour, shown upon our crests to-day,

Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,

Even in the bosom of our adversaries.

P. John. I thank your grace for this high courtesy,

Which I shall put in act without delay.¹

K. Hen. Then this remains,—that we divide our power,—

You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland,

Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest speed,

To meet Northumberland, and the prelate Scroop,

Who, as we hear, are busily in arms:

Myself, and you, son Harry, will towards Wales,

To fight with Glendower and the earl of March.

Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,

Meeting the check of such another day:

And since this business so fair is done,

Let us not leave till all our own be won. [Exeunt.

¹ Which I shall give away immediately: in i.e. This speech is found in the four earliest, but not in the two latest quartos, or the folio.
SECOND PART

Lords, and Attendants; Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, Drawers, Beadles, Grooms, &c.

Can play upon it. But what need I thus
My well-known body to anatomize
Among my household? Why is Rumour here?
I run before king Harry's victory;
Who in a bloody field by Shrewsbury
Hath beaten down young Hotspur, and his troops,
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
Even with the rebel's blood. But what mean I
To speak so true at first? my office is
To noise abroad, that Harry Monmouth fell
Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword;
And that the king before the Douglas' rage
Stoop'd his appointed head as low as death.
This have I rumour'd through the pleasant towns
Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone,
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland,
Lies crafty-sick: the posts come tiring on,
And not a man of them brings other news.
Than they have learnt of me; from Rumour's tongues
They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true

SCENE, England.

INDUCTION.

Workworth. Before Northumberland's Castle.

Enter RUMOUR, painted full of Tongues.1

Rum. Open your ears; for which of you will stop
The vent of hearing, when loud rumour speaks?
I, from the orient to the dropping west,
Making the wind my post-horse, still unfold
The acts commenced on this ball of earth:
Upon my tongues continual soldiers ride,
The which in every language I pronounce,
Stuffing the ears of men with false reports.
I speak of peace, while covert enmity,
Under the smile of safety, wounds the world:
And who but Rumour, who but only I,
Make fearful musters, and prepar'd defence;
Whilst the big year, swolin with some other grief,
Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war;
And no such matter? - Rumour is a pipe
Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures;
And of so easy and so plain a stop,
That the blunt monster with uncounted heads,
The still-discordant wavering multitude,

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter Lord BARDOLPH.2

Bard. Who keeps the gate here? ho! Where is the earl?

Enter Warder, above.4

Ward. What shall I say you are?

Bard. Tell thou the earl, that the lord Bardolph doth attend him here.

Ward. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard:

1 This direction is only in the quarto, 1600. Rumour, or Fame, was often so represented.
2 peasant: in f. e.
3 Porter before the Gate;
4 Not in f. e.
Enter Morton.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf,
Foretells the nature of a tragic volume:
So looks the strown, whereon th' imperious flood
Hath left a witness'd usurpation.
Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?
Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord;
Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask,
To fright our party.

North. How doth my son and brother? Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek
Is up in that thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him, half his Troy was burn'd:
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue,
And I my Percy's death, ere thou report'st it.
This thou wouldst say,—Your son did thus; and thus;
Your brother, thus; so fought the noble Douglas;
Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds,
But in the end, to stop mine ear indeed,
Thou hast a sigh to blow away this praise,
Ending with,—brother, son, and all are dead.
Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother, yet;
But for my lord, your son,

North. Why, he is dead.—

See,—what a ready tongue suspicion hath!
He that but fears the thing he would not know,
Hath by instinct knowledge from others' eyes,
That what he fear'd is chaned. Yet speak, Morton:
Tell thou thy ear his divination lies,
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace,
And make thee rich for doing me such wrong.
Mor. You are too great to be by me gain'd
Your spirit is too true; your fears too certain.

North. Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead.—
I see a strange confession in thine eye:
Thou shak'st thy head; and hold'st it fear, or sin,
To speak the truth. If he be slain, say so; 4
The tongue offends not, that reports his death;
And lie doth sin that doth belie the dead,
Not he which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd knocking a departing friend.
Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.
Mor. I am sorry I should force you to believe
That which I would to heaven I had not seen;
But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Rendering faint quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Harry Monmouth; whose swift wrath beat down
The never-daunted Percy to the earth,
From whence with life he never more sprung up.
In few, his death, whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dullest peasant in his camp,
Being bruited once, took fire and heat away
From the best temper'd courage in his troops:
For from his metal was his party steel'd;
Which once in him abated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead.
And as the thing that's heavy in itself,
Upon enforcement flies with greatest speed,
So did our man, heavy in Hotspur's lead,
Lend to this weight such lightness with their fear,
That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim,
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
The gentle archbishop of York is up,
With well-appointed powers: he is a man,
Who with a double surety binds his followers.
My lord your son had only but the corps,
But shadows and the shows of men, to fight;
For that same word, rebellion, did divine
The action of their bodies from their limbs,
And they did fight with quesains, constrain'd
As men drink potions, that their weapons only
Seem'd on our side: but, for their spirits and souls,
This word, rebellion, it had froze them up,
As fish are in a pond. But now, th' archbishop Turns insurrection to religion:
Suppos'd sincere and holy in his thoughts,
He's follow'd both with body and with mind,
And doth enlarge his rising with the blood
Of fair king Richard, scrap'd from Pomfret stones;
Derives from heaven his quarrel, and his cause;
Tells them, he doth bestride a bleeding land,
Gasping for life under great Bolingbroke,
And more, and less, do flock to follow him.

North. I knew of this before; but, to speak truth,
This present grief had wip'd it from my mind.
Go in with me; and counsel every man
The aptest way for safety, and revenge.
Get posts and letters, and make friends with speed:
Never so few, and never yet more need.

SCENE II.—London. A Street.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, with his Page bearing his Sword and Buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter, more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee, like a sow that hath overweighed all her litter but one: if the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then, I have no judgment. Thou wondrous mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap, than to wait at my heels. I was never manned with an agate till now: but I will in'st* ye neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel; the juvenile, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fleshted. I will sooner have a beard grown in the palm of my hand, than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say, his face is a face-royal. God may finish it when he will, it is not a hair amiss yet: he may keep it still as a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn six-pence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man ever since his father was a bachelor. He may keep his own grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him. What said Master Dumbelt about the satin for my short cloak, and my slops?

Page. He said, sir, the doctor should give him better assurance than Bardolph; he would not take his bond and yours: he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned like the glutton: may his tongue be hotter. A woreson Achitophel; a rascally yea-forsore knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security!—The woreson smooth-pates do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, then must they stand upon security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth, as offer to stop it with security. I looked he should have sent me truth and twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security; for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it; and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lantern to light him.—Where’s Bardolph?

Page. He’s gone into Smithfield to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paul’s, and he’ll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get me but a wife in the stews, I were married, horned, and wived.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, and an Attendant.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait close; I will not see him.

Ch. Just. What’s he that goes there?

Atten. Falstaff, an’t please your lordship.

Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery?

Atten. He, my lord; but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury, and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the lord John of Lancaster.

Atten. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him I am deaf.

Page. You must speak louder, my master is deaf.

Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of anything good.—Go, pluck him by the elbow; I must speak with him.

Atten. Sir John,—

Fal. What! a young knave, and begging? Is there not wars? is there not employment? Doth not the king lack subjects? do not the rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it.

Atten. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? setting my knighthood and my soldiership aside, I had lied in my throat if I had said so.

Atten. I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiership aside, and give me leave to tell you, you lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so? I lay aside that which grows to me? If thou getst any leave of me, hang me: if thou tak’st leave, thou wilt better be hanged. You hunt-counter, hence! avaunt!

Atten. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord!—God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad: I heard say, your lordship was sick: I hope, your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time, and I would humbly beseech your lordship to have a reverend care of your health.

Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. An’t please your lordship, I hear his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales.

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty.—You would not come when I sent for you.

Fal. And I hear, moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy.

Ch. Just. Well, heaven mend him.—I pray you, let me speak with you.

Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of lethargy, an’t please your lordship; a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath its original from much grief; from study, and perturbation of the brain. I have read the cause of his effects in Galen: it is a kind of deafness.

Ch. Just. I think you are fallen into the disease, for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well; my lord, very well; rather, an’t please you, it is the disease of not listening; the malady of not marking, that I am troubled withal.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not, if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me, in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or, indeed, a scruple itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As it was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt cannot live in less.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise: I would my means were greater, and my waist slendracer.

Ch. Just. You have misled the youthful prince.

Fal. The young prince hath misled me: I am the fellow with the great belly, and he my dog.

Ch. Just. Well, I am loth to gall a new-healed wound. You shall be present at Shrewsbury hath been a little gilded over your night’s exploit on Gadshill: you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet o’er-posting that action.

Fal. My lord—

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.

Fal. To wake a wolf, is as bad as to smell a fox.

Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A wassell! candle, my lord; all tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face, but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravity, gravely, gravely.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fal. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light, but, I hope, he that looks upon me will take me without

SCENE III.

KING HENRY IV.

KING. I will have thee, Hotspur,
Curse thee with my behests to-day.

Enter Archbishop of York, the Lords Hastings, Mowbray, Earl Marshal, and Bardolph.

ARCHBISHOP. Thus have ye heard our cause, and know
Our means; and, my noble friends, I pray you all,
Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes. —
And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?
MOXB. Well, I will allow the occasion of our arms;
But gladly would be better satisfied,
How, in our means, we should advance ourselves
To look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the power and puissance of the king.

HA. Our present musters grow upon the file
To five and twenty thousand men of choice:
And our supplies live largely in the hope
Of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns
With an incensed fire of injuries.

BARD. The question then, lord Hastings, standeth thus:
Whether our present five and twenty thousand
May hold up head without Northumberland.

HA. With him, we may.

BARD. Ay, marry, there's the point: But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My judgment is, we should not step too far;
Till we had his assistance by the hand;
For in a theme so bloody and as this,
Conjecture, expectation, and surplus
Of aids incertain should not be admitted.

ARCH. 'Tis very true, lord Bardolph; for, indeed,
It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

BARD. It was, my lord; who find's himself with hope,
Eating the air on promise of supply,
Flattering himself with project of a power
Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts:
And so, with great imagination,
Proper to madmen, led his powers to death,
And winking leap'd into destruction.

HA. But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt,
To lay down likelihoods, and forms of hope.

BARD. Yes, in this present quality of war;15
Indeed the instant act, and cause16 on foot,
Lives so in hope, as in an early spring
We see th' appearing buds; which, to prove fruit,

(The scene closes.)
Hope gives not so much warrant, as despair
That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And, when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the erection;
Which if we find outweighs ability,
What do we then, but draw anew the model
In fewer offices, or, at last, despair.
To build at all? Much more, in this great work,
(Which is, almost, to pluck a kingdom down,
And set another up) should we survey
The plot, the situation, and the model;
Consult upon a sure foundation;
Question surveyors, know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo.
A careful leader sums what force he brings
To weigh against his opposite; or else,
We fortify on paper, and in figures,
Using the names of men, instead of men:
Like one that draws the model of a house
Beyond his power to build it; who, half through,
Gives over, and leaves his part-created cost
A naked subject to the weeping clouds.
And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.

Host. Grant, that our hopes, yet likely of fair birth,
Should be still-born, and that we now possess
The utmost man of expectation,
I think we are a body strong enough,
Even as we are, to equal with the king.

Bard. What! is the king but five and twenty thousand?

Host. To us, no more; nay, not so much, lord Bardolph;
For his divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads: one power against the French,
And one against Glendower; perforce, a third
Must take up us. So is the uniform king
In three divided, and his coffers sound
With hollow poverty and emptiness.

Arch. That he should draw his several strengths
Together,
And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welsh
Buy ing him at the heels: never fear that.

Bard. Who, is it like, should lead his forces hither?

Hast. The duke of Lancaster, and Westmoreland:
Against the Welsh, himself and Harry Mornmouth;
But who is substituted against the French,
I have no certain notice.

Arch. Let us on.
And publish the occasion of our arms.
The commonwealth is sick of their own choice;
Their over-greedy love hath surfeited;
An habitation giddy and unsafe
Hath he, that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O, thou fond many! with what loud applause
Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Bolingbroke,
Before he was what thou wouldst have him be;
And being nowtrimm'd in thine own desires,
Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him,
That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgrace
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard,
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up,
And howl'st to find it. What trust is in these times?
They that, when Richard liv'd, would have him die,
Are now become enamour'd on his grave;
Thou, that throw'st dust upon his goodly head,
When through proud London he came sighing on
After th' admired heels of Bolingbroke,
Cry'st now, "O earth, yield us that king again,
And take thou this!" O, thoughts of men accurst!
Past, and to come, seem best; things present, worst.

Host. Shall we go draw our numbers, and set on?

Hast. We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone.

[Exit.]
Fal. How now! whose mare's dead; what's the matter?
Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of mistress Quickly.

Fal. Away, varlets!—Draw, Bardolph: cut me off the villain's head: throw the queen in the channel.
Fal. Keep thine oath, Bardolph.
Fang. A rescue! a rescue!

Host. Good people, bring a rescue or two.—Thou wilt not? thou wilt not? do, do, thou rogue! do, thou hemp-seed!

Fal. Away, you scoundrel! you rampallion! you fistilarian! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, attended.

Ch. Just. What is the matter? keep the peace here, ho!

Host. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you, stand to me!
Ch. Just. How now, sir John! what, are you brawling here?

Host. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all, all I have. He hath eaten me out of house and home: he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his; but I will have some of it out again, or I will ride thee o' nights, like the mare.

Fal. I think, I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantage of ground to get up.

Ch. Just. How comes this, sir John?—Fie! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation?—Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own?

Fal. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?
Host. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself, and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Whitsun week, when the prince broke thy head for likening his father to a singing-man of Windsor; thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me, and make me thy lady wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Koch, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me gossip Quickly? coming in to borrow a mess of vinegar; telling us, she had a good dish of prawns, whereby thou didst desire to eat some, whereby I told thee, they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiarity with such poor people; saying, that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-oath: deny it, if thou canst.

Fal. My lord, this is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you. She hath been in good case, and the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foolish officers, I beseech you, I may have redress against them.
Ch. Just. Sir John, sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent sauciness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration; you have, as it appears to me, practised upon the easy-yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in purse and person.

Host. Yes, in truth, my lord.

Ch. Just. Pr'ythee, peace—Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villainy you have done with her: the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance.

Fal. My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply. You call honourable boldness, impudent sauciness; if a man will make court'sy, and say nothing, he is virtuous. No, my lord, my humble duty remember'd, I will not be your suitor: I say to you, I do desire deliverance from these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs.

Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong: but answer in the effect of your reputation, and satisfy the poor woman.

Fal. Come hither, hostess. [Taking her aside. Enter Gover.

Ch. Just. Now, master Gover! what news?

Gover. The king, my lord, and Henry prince of Wales are near at hand: the rest this paper tells. [C.J. reads.]

Fal. As I am a gentleman.

Host. Faith, you said so before.

Fal. As I am a gentleman. Come, no more words of it.

Host. By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate, and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking: and for thin walls,—a pretty slight drollery, or the story of the prodigal, or the German hunting in water-work?, is worth a thousand of these bed hangings, and these fly bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound, if thou canst. Come, an it were not for thy humours, there is not a better wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action. Come, thou must not be in this humour with me; dost not know me? Come, come, I know thou wast set on to this.

Host. Pray thee, sir John, let it be but twenty nobles; i' faith I am loath to pawn my plate, in good earnest, la.

Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift: you'll be a fool still.

Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope, you'll come to supper. You'll pay me all together.

Fal. Will I live?—Go, with her, with her; hook on, hook on.

Host. Will you have you Doll Tear-sheet meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words: let's have her.

[Exeunt Hostess, BARDOLOPH, Officers, and Page.

Ch. Just. I have heard better news.

Fal. What's the news, my good lord?

Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night?

Gover. At Basingstoke, my lord.

Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well; what is the news, my lord?
Ch. Just. Come all his forces back?
Gow. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse, are march'd up to my lord of Lancaster, against Northumberland and the archbishop.

Fal. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?

Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently: come, go along with me, good master Gower. Fal. My lord!

Ch. Just. What's the matter?

Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?

Gow. I must wait upon my good lord here: I thank you, good sir John.

Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, master Gower?

Ch. Just. What foolish master taunt you these manners, sir John?

Fal. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me. —This is the right fencing grace, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair.

Ch. Just. Now, the Lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Street.

Enter Prince Henry and Poi.n.s.

P. Hen. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

Poi.n.s. Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.

P. Hen. 'Tis faith, it doth me, though it discourses the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Doth it not show videuly in me to desire small beer?

Poi.n.s. Why, a prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weak a composition.

P. Hen. Belike then, my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? or to know thy face to-morrow? or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast; viz, these, and those that were thy peach-coloured ones? or to hear the inventory of thy shirts; as, one for superfluity, and one other for use?—but that the tennis-court-keeper knows better than I, for it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not rackets there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low-countries have made a shift to eat up thy Holland? and God knows, whether those that bawl out the ruins of thy linen, shall inherit his kingdom; but the midwives say, the children are not in the fault, whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mighty strengthened.

Poi.n.s. How ill it follows, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idly! Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?

P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poi.n.s.?

Poi.n.s. Yes, faith, and let it be an excellent good thing.

P. Hen. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poi.n.s. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.

P. Hen. Marry, I tell thee,—it is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee, (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend) I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Poi.n.s. Very hardly upon such a subject.

P. Hen. By this hand, thou think'st me as far in the devil's book, as thou and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistency; let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my heart bleeds inwardly; that my father is so sick; and keeping such vile company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me all ostentation of sorrow.

Poi.n.s. The reason?

P. Hen. What wouldst thou think of me, if I should weep?

Poi.n.s. I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.

P. Hen. It would be every man's thought; and thou art a beloved fellow, to think as every man thinks: never a man's thought in the world keeps the road-way better than thine: every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what accites your most worshipful thought to think so?

Poi.n.s. Why, because you have been so lewd, and so much engraffed to Falstaff.

P. Hen. And to thee.

Poi.n.s. By this light, I am well spoken on; I can hear it with mine own ears: the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second brother, and that I am a fellow of my hands, and these two things, I confess, I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

P. Hen. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: he had him from me christiant; and look, if the fat villain have not transformed him ape.

Enter Bardolph and Page.

Bard. God save your grace.

P. Hen. And yours, most noble Bardolph.

Bard. Come, you virtuous ass, [To the Page.] you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man at arms are you become? Is it such a matter to get a pottepole's maidenhead?

Page. He called me even now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window; at last, I spied his eyes; and, methought, he had made two holes in the ale-wife's new red petticoat, and peeped through.

P. Hen. Hath not the boy profited?

Bard. Away, you whoreson upright rabbit, away! Page. Away, you rascally Althea's dream, away!

P. Hen. Instruct us, boy: what dream, boy?

Page. Marry, my lord, Althea* dreamed she was delivered of a fire-brand, and therefore I call him her dream.

P. Hen. A crown's worth of good interpretation.—There it is, boy. [Giving him money.

Poi.n.s. Q. that this good blossom could be kept from canteries!—Well, there is sixpence to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him be hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong.

P. Hen. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town: there's a letter for you.

Poi.n.s. Delivered with good respect.—And how doth the matlemess, your master?

Bard. In bodily health, sir.

Poi.n.s. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him: though that he sick, it dies not.

P. Hen. I do allow this wen to be as familiar with me as my dog; and he holds his place, for look you how he writes.

Poi.n.s. [Reads.] "John Falstaff, knight,"—every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself; even like those that are kin to the king, for they never prick their finger, but they say, "There is some of the king's blood spilt:" "How comes that?" says he, that takes upon him not to conceive: the answer is, as ready as a borrower's cap; "I am the king's poor cousin, sir."

P. Hen. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japheth. But to the letter:—

Pois. "Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, nearest his father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting."—Why, this is a certificate.

P. Hen. Peace!

Pois. "I will imitate the honourable Romans in brevity,"—he sure means brevity in breath, short-winded.—"I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he sweares, thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou may'st, and so farewell.

"Thine, by yea and no, (which is as much as to say, as thou useth him,) Jack Falstaff, with my kinsfamiliars; John, with my brothers and sisters; and sir John with all Europe."

My lord, I will steep this letter in sack, and make him eat it.

P. Hen. That's but to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your sister?

Pois. God send the wench no worse fortune! but I never said so.

P. Hen. Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds, and mock us.—Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yes, my lord.

P. Hen. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank?

Bard. At the old place, my lord, in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. What company?

Page. Epheians, my lord; of the old church.

P. Hen. Sup any women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old mistress Quickly, and mistress Doll Tear-sheet.

P. Hen. What pagan may that be?

Page. A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.

P. Hen. Even such kin as the parish helpers are to the town bull.—Shall we steer upon them, Ned, at supper?

Pois. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you.

P. Hen. Sirrah, you boy,—and Bardolph,—no word to your master that I am yet come to town: there's for your silence. [Giving money.]

Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir, I will govern it.

P. Hen. Fare ye well; go. [Exit E Zenith BARDOLPH and Page.]

P. Hen. This Doll Tear-sheet should be some road.

Pois. I warrant you, common as the way between Saint Albans and London.

P. Hen. How might we see Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen?

Pois. Put on two leathen jerkins, and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

P. Hen. From a god to a bull? a heavy descension! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice? a low transformation! that shall be mine; for in every thing the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me, Ned. [E Zenith.]

SCENE III.—Warkworth. Before the Castle.

Enter Northumberland, Lady Northumberland, and Lady Percy.

North. I pray thee, loving wife and gentle daughter, Give even way unto my rough affairs: Put not you on the visage of the times, And be like them to Percy troublesome. Lady N. I have given over, I will speak no more. Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas, sweet wife, my honour is at pawn, And, but my going, nothing can redeem it. Lady P. O, yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars! The time was, father, that you broke your word, When you were more endear'd to it than now; When your own Percy, when my heart-dear Harry Threw many a northward look, to see his father Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain. Who then persuaded you to stay at home? There were two honours lost, yours, and your son's: For yours,—may heavenly glory brighten it! For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun In the grey vault of heaven: and, by, his light, Did all the chivalry of England move To do brave acts, he was, indeed, the glass Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves; He had no legs, that practis'd not his gait; And speaking thick, which nature made his blemish, Became the accents of the valiant; For those that could speak low, and tardily, Would turn their own perfection to abuse, To seem like him: so that, in speech, in gait, In diet, in affections of delight, In military rules, humours of blood, He was the mark and glass, copy and book, That fashion'd others. And him,—O wondrous him! An miracle of men!—him did you leave, (Second to none, unseconded by you) To look upon the hideous god of war In disadvantage; to abide a field, Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name Did seem defensible:—so you left him, Never, O! never, do his ghost the wrong, To hold his honor more precise and nice With others whom him joined, let them alone. The marshal, and the archbishop, are strong: Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers, To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck, Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

North. Beshrew your heart, Fair daughter! you do draw my spirits from me, With new lamenting ancient oversights. But I must go, and meet with danger there, Or it will seek me in another place, And find me worse provided.

Lady N. O! fly to Scotland. Till that the nobles, and the armed commons, Have of their bounty made a little taste. Lady P. If they get ground and vantage of the king, Then join you with them, like a rib of steel, To make strength stronger; but, for all our loves, First let them try themselves. So did your son; He was so suffer'd; so came I a widow, And never shall have length of life enough, To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes, That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven, For recordation to my noble husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me. 'Tis with my mind,
As with the tide swelleth up unto its height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way:
Fain would I go to meet the archbishop,
But many thousand reasons hold me back.—
I will resolve for Scotland: there am I,
Till time and vantage crave my company. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern, in Eastcheap.

Enter Two Drawers.

2 Draw. Mass, thou sayest true. The prince once set a dish of apple-Johns before him, and told him, there were five more sir Johns; and, putting off his hat, said, "I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old, withered knights." It angered him to the heart, but he hath forgot that.

1 Draw. Why then, cover, and set them down: and see if thou canst find out Sneak's noise; mistress Tear-sheet would fain hear some music. Dispatch;—the room where they supped is too hot; they'll come in straight.

2 Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince, and master Poins anon; and they will put on two of our jerkins and aprons, and sir John must not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

1 Draw. By the mass, here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem.

2 Draw. I'll see, if I can find out Sneak. [Exit. Enter Hostess and Doll Tear-sheet.

Host. I' faith, sweet heart, methinks now you are in an excellent good temperateness: your pulsidge beats as extraordinarily as heart would desire, and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose: but, i' faith, you have drunk too much canaries, and that's a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say, what's this? How do you now?

Dol. Better than I was. Hem.

Fal. "When Arthur first in court"—Empty the jordan.—And was a worthy king. [Exit Drawer.

How now, mistress Doll?

Host. Sick of a calm: yea, good sooth.

Fal. So is all her sex; an they be once in a calm, they are sick.

Dol. You muddy rascal, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat rascals, mistress Doll.

Dol. I make them? gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases, Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my pure* virtue, grant that.

Dol. Yea, joy*; our chains, and our jewels.

Fal. "Your brooches, pearls, and ooches"—for to serve bravely, is to come halting off, you know; to come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely:—

Dol. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!*

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion: you two never meet, but you fall to some discord. You are both, in good trotch, as rheumatic as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another's confirmities. What the good year! one must bear, and that must be you: you are the weaker vessel; as they say, the emptier vessel.

Dol. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hogstead? there's a whole merchant's venture of Bordeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold.—Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again, or no, there is nobody—cares.

Re-enter Drawer.

Dol. Sir, ancient* Pistol's below, and would speak with you.

Host. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him not come hither: it is the foul mouth'dst rogue in England.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: no, by my faith; I must live amongst my neighbours; I'll no swaggerers. I am in good name and fame with the very best.—Shut the door;—there comes no swaggerers here: I have not lived all this while, to have swaggering now.—Shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?

Host. Pray you, pacify yourself, sir John: there comes no swaggerers here.

Dol. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient.

Host. Tilly-valley, sir John, never tell me: your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before master Tisick, the deputy, &' other day; and, as he said to me,—it was no longer ago than Wednesday last,—"Neighbour Quickly," says he,—muster Dumb, our minister, was by then:—"Neighbour Quickly," says he, "receive those that are civil; for," said he, "you are in an ill name?"—now, he said so, I can tell whereupon; "for," says he, "you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive;" says he, "no swaggering companions."—There comes none here:—you would bless you to hear what he said.—No, I'll no swaggerers.

Fal. He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater, i' faith; you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound: he will not swagger with a Barbary hen, if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance.—Call him up, draw not in.

Host. Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater; but I do not love swaggering: by my troth, I am the worse, when one says—swagger. Feel, masters, how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

Dol. So do you, hostess.

Host. Do I? yea, in very truth do I, an' t were an aspen leaf. I cannot abide swaggerers.

Enter Pistol, Bardolph, and Page.

Pist. God save you, sir John!

Fal. Welcome, ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon mine hostess.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly offend her.

Host. Come, I'll drink no proofs, nor no bullets.

I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no man's pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you, mistress Dorothy: I will charge you.

Dol. Charge me? I scorn you, scurvy companion.
What you poor, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linen mate! Away, you moulid rogue, away! I am meet for your master.

Pist. I know you, mistress Dorothy.

Dol. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung, away! By this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your moulid chaps, an you play the saucy cuttle with me.
Away, you bottle-ale rascal! you basket-hilt stale jiggler, you!—Since when, I pray you, sir?—God's light! with two points on your shoulder! much!

Pist. I will murder your ruff for this.

Fal. No more, Pistol: I would not have you go off here. Discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Host. No, good captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

Dol. Captain! thou abominable damned cheat, art thou not ashamed to be called captain? An captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. You a captain, you slave! for what? for tearing a poor whoreson's ruff in a bawdy-house? He a captain!—Hang him, rogue! He lives upon moulid stewed prunes, and dried cakes. A captain! these villains will make the word captain as odious* as the word occupant, which was an excellent good word before it was ill sorted: therefore captains had need look to't.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Fal. Hark thee hither, mistress Dell.

Pist. Not I: I tell thee what, corporal Bardolph; I could fear her,—I'll be revenged of her.

Page. Pray thee, go down.

Pist. I'll see her damned first;—to Pluto's damned lake, by this hand, to the infernal deep, with Erebus and tortures vile also. Hold hook and line, say I. Down? down, dogs! down fates! Have we not Hiren here?

Host. Good captain Peesell, be quiet; it is very late, i'faith. I beseech you now, aggravate your choler.

Pist. These be good humours, indeed! Shall pack'em hollow-pampered jades of Asia, [horses, Which cannot go but thirty miles a day,

Compare with Caesars, and with Cannibals,
And Trojan Greeks? nay, rather damn them with King Cerberus, and let the welkin roar.

Shall we fall foul for toys?

Host. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Begone, good ancient; this will grow to a brawl anon.

Pist. Die men, like dogs; give crowns like pins. Have we not Hiren here?

Host. On my word, captain, there's none such here.

What the good-year! do you think I would deny her? for God's sake, be quiet.

Pist. Then feed, and be fat, my fair Calipolis.

Come, give 's some sack.

Se fortuna me tormenta, il sperare me contenta.—

Fear we broadsides? no, let the fiend give fire:
Give me some sack; and, sweethearth, lie thou there.

[Resuming his sword.

Come we to full points here, and are et ceteras nothing?

Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.

Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif.*—What! we have seen the sev'nx acts.

Dol. For God's sake, thrust him down stairs: I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.

Pist. Thrust him down stairs! know we not Galloway nags?

Fal. Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-groat shilling*, nay, an he do nothing but speak nothing, he shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.

Pist. What! shall we have incision? shall we imbibe?—[Snatching up his sword.

Then, death, rock me asleep, abridge my doleful days! Why then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds
Untwine the sisters three!—Come, Atropos, I say!

Host. Here's goodly stuff toward!

Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do no draw.

Fal. Get you down stairs.

[Drawing.

Host. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forswear keeping house, afore I'll be in these territs and frights. So; murder, I warrant now.—Alas, alas! put up your naked weapons; put up your naked weapons.

[Exit BARDOLPH and PISTOL.

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet: the rascal is gone.

Ah! you whoreson little valiant villain, you.

Host. Are you not hurt i' the groin? methought he made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

Fal. Have you turned him out of doors?

Bard. Yes, sir: the rascal's drunk. You have hurt him, sir, in the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal, to brave me!

Dol. Ah, you sweet little rogue, you! Alas, poor ape, how thou sweat'st! Come, let me wipe thy face;—come on, you whoreson chaps.—Ah, rogue! i' faith, I love thee. Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamenon, and ten times better than the nine worthies. Ah, villain!

Fal. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Dol. Do, if thou darest for thy heart: if thou dost, I'll canvass thee between a pair of sheets.

Enter Music.

Page. The music is come, sir.

Fal. Let them play.—Play, sir.—Sit on my knee, Doll.—A rascal braggling slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

Dol. I' faith, and thou followedst him like a church. Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting o' days, and joining o' nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter behind, Prince Henry and POINS, disguised like [Drapers.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a death's head: do not bid me remember mine end.

Dol. Sirrah, what humour is the prince of?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow; he would have made a good pantler, he would have chipped bread well.

Dol. They say, Poins has a good wit.

Fal. He a good wit? hang him, baboon! his wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard: there is no more conceit in him, than is in a mallet.

* Roast pig was a favourite delicacy at Bartholomew Fair.
Dol. Why does the prince love him so, then?
Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness; and he plays at quoits well; and cats conger and fensell; and drinks off candles' ends for 'flap-dragons'; and rides the wild mare* with the boys; and jumps upon joint-stools; and sweats with a good grace; and wears his boot very smooth like unto the sign of the leg; and breeds no bate* with telling of discreet stories; and such other gumble faculties he has, that show a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him; for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoidance.

P. Hen. Would not this nave of a wheel have his ears cut off?
Poins. Let's beat him before his whore.
P. Hen. Look, whether the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.
Poins. Is it not strange, that desire should so many years outlive performance?
Fal. Kiss me, Doll.
P. Hen. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction! what says the almanack to that?
Poins. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon* his man, be not a workman to his master's old tables, his note-book, his counsel-keeper.
Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses.
Dol. Nay, truly; I kiss thee with a most constant heart.
Fal. I am old, I am old.
Dol. I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all.
Fal. What stuff wilt have a kipple of? I shall receive money on Thursday; thou shalt have a cap tomorrow. A merry song come; it grows late; we'll to bed. Thou 'lt forget me, when I am gone.
Dol. By my troth, thou 'lt set me weeping, an thou sayest so: prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return. Well, hearken the end.
Fal. Some sack, Francis!
Fal. Ha! a bastard son of the king's.—And art not thou Poins, his brother?
P. Hen. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead.
Fal. A better than thou: I am a gentleman; thou art a drawer.
P. Hen. Very true, sir, and I come to draw you out by the ears.
Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by my troth, welcome to London.—Now, the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesu! are you come from Wales?
Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty.—by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome. [Placing his hand upon DOLL.
Dol. How, you fat fool! I scorn you.
Poins. My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge, and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.
P. Hen. You whoreson candle-mine, you, how wisely did you speak of me even now, before this honest, virtuous, civil gentleman.
Host. God's blessing of your good heart! and so she is, by troth.
Fal. Didst thou hear me?
P. Hen. Yes; and you knew me, as you did, when you ran away by Gad's-hill: you knew, I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose to try my patience.
Fal. No, no, no; not so; I did not think thou wast within hearing.
P. Hen. I shall drive you, then, to confess the wilful abuse; and then I know how to handle you.
Fal. No abuse, Hal, on mine honour; no abuse.
P. Hen. Not to displease me, and call me pantler, and bread-chipper, and I know not what?
Fal. No abuse, Hal.
Poins. No abuse.
Fal. No abuse, Ned, 'tis the world; honest Ned, none. I disprais'd him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him—in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend, and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal!—none, Ned, none;—no, 'faith boys, none.
P. Hen. See now, whether pure fear, and entire cowardice, doth not make thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to close with us? Is she of the wicked? Is thine hostess here of the wicked? Or is thy boy of the wicked? Or honest Bardolph, whose zeal burns in his nose, of the wicked?
Poins. Answer, thou dead clm, answer.
Fal. The fiend hath pricked down Bardolph irrecoverably; and his face is Lucifer's privy kitchen, where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms. For the boy,—there is a good angel about him, but the devil outwits* him too.
P. Hen. For the women?
Fal. For one of them, she is in hell already, and burns, poor soul. For the other, I owe her money, and whether she be damned for that, I know not.
Host. No, I warrant you.
Fal. No, I think thou art not; I think, thou art quit for that. Marry, there is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law; for which I think, thou wilt howl.
Host. All victuallers do so: what's a joint of mutton or two in a whole Lent?
P. Hen. You, gentilwoman.—
Dol. What says your grace?
Fal. His grace says that which his flesh rebels against. [Knocking heard.
Host. Who knocks so loud at door? look to the door there, Francis.

Enter Peto.
P. Hen. Peto, how now! what news?
Peto. The king your father is at Westminster, And there are twenty weak and wearied posts Come from the north; and as I came along I met, and overtook, a dozen captains, Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns, And asking every one for sir John Falstaff. [blame.
P. Hen. By heaven, Poin, I feel me much to So idly to profane the precious time, When tempest of commotion, like the south Borne with black vapour, doth begin to melt, And drop upon our bare unarm'd heads. Give me my sword, and cloak.—Falstaff, good night. [Exeunt Prince Henry, Poins, Peto, and Bardolph.

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence, and leave it unpicked. More knocking at the door? [Knocking heard. How now? what's the matter?

Act

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter King HENRY in his Nightgown, with a Page.

K. Hen. Go, call the earls of Surrey and of Warwick; But, ere they come, bid them o'er-read these letters, And well consider of them. Make good speed.

[Exit Page.

How many thousand of my poorest subjects Are at this hour asleep!—O sleep! O gentle sleep! Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down, And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky efts, Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee, And shudd'rid with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber, Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great, Under high canopies of costly state, And lul'd with sound of sweetest melody? O, thou duff God! why liest thou with the vile, In loathsome beds, and leave'st the kingly couch, A watch-case, or a common larum bell? Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains In cradle of the rude impetuous surge, And in the visitation of the winds, Who take the ruffian billows by the top, Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them With deafening clamours in the slippery shrouds? That with the hurly death itself awakes? Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude; And in the calmest and most stillest night, With all appliances and means to boot, Deny it to a king? Then, happy low, lie down!* Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good morrows to your majesty! K. Hen. Is it good morrow, lords? War. 'Tis one o'clock; and past.

K. Hen. Why then, good morrow to you all, my lords. Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you?

War. We have, my liege.

K. Hen. Then you perceive, the body of our kingdom How foul it is; what rank diseases grow, And with what danger, near the heart of it. War. It is but as a body, yet, distemper'd, Which to his former strength may be restor'd, With good advice, and little medicine. My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.

K. Hen. O God! that one might read the book of fate, And see the revolution of the times Make mountains level, and the continent, Weary of solid firmness, melt itself Into the sea: and, other times, to see The beachy girdle of the ocean Too wide for Neptune's hips; how chances mock, And changes fill the cup of alteration With divers liquors!—O, if this were seen, The happiest youth, viewing his progress through, What peril past, what crosses to ensue, Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.® 'Tis not ten years gone, Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends, Did feast together, and in two years after Were they at wars: it is but eight years, since This Percy was the man nearest my soul: Who like a brother toil'd in my affairs, And laid his love and life under my foot; Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard, Gave him defiance. But which of you was by, (You, cousin Nevil, as I may remember) To Warwick, When Richard, with his eye brimful of tears, Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy? "Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne?"— Though then, God knows, I had no such intent, But that necessity so bow'd the state, That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss. "The time shall come," thus did he follow it, "The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head, Shall break into corruption,"—so went on, Foretelling this same time's condition, And the division of our amity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives, Figuring the nature of the times decreas'd; The which observ'd, a man may prophesy, With a near aim, of the main changes of things As yet not come to life, which in their seeds, And weak beginnings, lie inunseared. Such things become the hatch and brood of time; And, by the necessary form of this, King Richard might create a perfect guess, That great Northumberland, then false to him, Would, of that seed, grow to a greater falseness, Which should not find a ground to root upon, Unless on you.

K. Hen. Are these things, then, necessities? Then let us meet them like necessities; And that same word even now cries out on us. They say, the bishop and Northumberland

* The rest of the speech is not in the folio. Dyce says, "She comes blubbered," is a stage direction.® The whole in f. a.® Clouds: in f. a.® Warburton suggested: happy, lowly clown.® This sentence, beginning with, "Oh, if" is not in the folio.
dead!—he would have clapped in the clout at twelve score; and carried you a foroehold shaft a fourteen and fourteen and a half, that it would have done a man’s heart good to see.—How a score of eves now? Sil. Thereafter as they be; a score of good ewes may be worth ten pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead!

Sil. Here come two of sir John Falstaff’s men, as I think.

Shal. Good morrow, honest gentlemen.

Bard. I beseech you, which is justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of this county; and one of the king’s justices of the peace. What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My captain, sir, commends him to you; my captain, sir John Falstaff: a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He greets me well, sir: I knew him a good backsword man. How doth the good knight? may I ask, how my lady his wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon; a soldier is better accommodated than with a wife.

Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated!—it is good; yea, indeed, is it: good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated:—it comes of accommodate: very good; a good phrase.

Bard. Pardon me, sir; I have heard the word. Phrase, call you it? By this good day, I know not the phrase: but I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldier-like word, and a word of exceeding good command, by heaven. Accommodated; that is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated; or, when a man is,—being,—whereby,—he may be thought to be accommodated, which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falstaff.

Shal. It is very just.—Look, here comes good sir John.—Give me your good hand, give me your worship’s good hand. By my troth, you like* well, and bear your years very, very well: welcome, good sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good master Robert Shallow.—Master Sure-card, as I think.

Sil. No, sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.

Fal. Good master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good worship is welcome.

Fal. Vie! this is hot-weather.—Gentlemen, have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?

Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where’s the roll? where’s the roll? where’s the roll?—Let me see, let me see: so, so, so, Yea, marry, sir.—Ralph Mouldy!—let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so.—Let me see; where is Mouldy?

Moul. Here, an it please you.

Shal. What think you, sir John? a good limbed fellow: young; strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Moul. Yea, an it please you.

Fal. ’Tis the more time thou wert used.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, i’ faith! things that are模具 Lord use: very singular good!—In faith, well said, sir John; very well said.

1 This passage is cited to prove the identity of Falstaff with Sir John Oldcastle—the latter having been page to Mowbray. 2 The name of a jest. 3 Scorgan’s Jest. 4 Was a popular book in Shakespeare’s time. 5 Hit the pin which held up the target, at twelve score paces. 6 everywhere: in fo. 7 Not in folio. 8 lock: in folio.
Fal. Prick him.
Moul. I was pricked well enough before; an you could have let me alone: my old dame will be undone now, for one to do her handbrandy, and her drudgery. You need not to have pricked me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.
Fal. Go to; peace, Mouldy! you shall go. Mouldy, it is time you were spent.
Mould. Spent!
Shal. Peace, fellow, peace! stand aside; know you where you are?—for the other, sir John:—let me see.
—Simon Shadow!
Fal. Ye, marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.
Shal. Where's Shadow?
Shad. Here, sir.
Fal. Shadow, whose son art thou?
Shad. My mother's son, sir.
Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough; and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male. It is often so, indeed; but not of the father's substance.
Shal. Do you like him, sir John?
Fal. Shadow will serve for summer, prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the master-book.
Shal. Thomas Wart!
Wart. Where's he?
Wart. Here, sir.
Fal. Is thy name Wart?
Wart. Yea, sir.
Fal. Thou art a very ragged wart.
Shal. Shall I prick him, sir John?
Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.
Shal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well.—Francis Fleeble!
Fec. Here, sir.
Fal. What trade art thou, Fleeble?
Fec. A woman's tailor, sir.
Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?
Fal. You were forth but if he had been a man's tailor, he would have pricked you. Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?
Fec. I will do my good will, sir: you can have no more.
Fal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Fleeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove, or most magnanimous mouse.—Prick the woman's tailor well, master Shallow: deep master Shallow.
Fec. I would Wart might have gone, sir.
Fal. I would thou wert a man's tailor, that thou mightest mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier, that is the leader of so many thousands: let that suffice, most forcible Fleeble. Fec. It shall suffice, sir.
Fal. I am bound to thee, reverend Fleeble. Who is next?
Shal. Peter Bull-calf of the green!
Fal. Yea, marry, let us see Bull-calf.
Bull. Here, sir.
Fal. 'Fore God, a likely fellow!—Come, prick me.
Bull-calf till he roar again.
Bull. O lord! good my lord captain,—
Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou art pricked?
Bull. O Lord! sir, I am a diseased man.
Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bull. A whoreson cold, sir; a cough, sir; which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day, sir.
Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown. We will have away thy cold; and I will take such order, that thy friends shall ring for thee. —Is here all?
Shal. Here is two more called than your number; you must have but four here, sir: —and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.
Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, by my troth, master Shallow.
Shal. O, sir John! do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's fields?
Fal. No more of that, good master Shallow; no more of that.
Shal. Ha, it was a merry night. And is Jane Night-work alive?
Fal. She lives, master Shallow.
Shal. She never could away with me.¹
Fal. Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide master Shallow.
Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a bona-roba. Dost she hold her own well?
Fal. Old, old, master Shallow.
Shal. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old; certain she's old, and had Robin Night-work by old Night-work, before I came to Clement's-inn.
Sil. That's fifty-five year ago.
Shal. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hast seen that that this knight and I have seen!—Ha, sir John, said I well?
Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight, master Shallow.
Shal. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, sir John, we have. Our watch-word was, "Hem, boys!" —Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner.
—O, the days that we have seen!—Come, come.
[Exeunt Falstaff, Shallow, and Silence.
Bull. Good master corporal Bardolph, stand my friend, and there is four Harry ten shillings in French crowns for you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief be hanged, sir, as go: and yet, for mine own part, sir, I do not care; but rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends: else, sir, I did not care, for mine own part, so much.
Bard. Go to; stand aside.
Moul. And good master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she has nobody to do any thing about her, when I am gone; and she is old, and cannot help herself. You shall have forty, sir.
Bard. Go to; stand aside.
Fec. By my troth, I care not; a man can die but once;—we owe God a death. I'll ne'er bear a base mind: —an't be my destiny; so; an't be not; so. No man's too good to serve his prince; and let it go which way it will, he that dies this year is quit for the next.
Bard. Well said; thou art a good fellow.
Fec. 'Faith, I'll bear no base mind.
—Re-enter Falstaff, and Justices.
Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have?
Shal. Four, of which you please.
Bard. Sir, a word with you. —I have three pound to free Mouldy and Bull-calf.
Fal. Go to; well.
Shal. Come, sir John, which four will you have?
Fal. Do you choose for me.

¹ Abide.
Shal. Marry then,—Mouldy, Bull-calf, Feeble, and Shadow.

Fal. Mouldy, and Bull-calf.—For you, Mouldy, stay at home till you are past service:—and, for your part, Bull-calf, grow till you come unto it: I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, sir John, do not yourself wrong. They are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fal. Will you tell me, master Shallow, how to choose a man?—Care I for the limb, the thewes, the stature, bulk and big assembly of a man?—Give me the spirit, master Shallow.—Here's war:—you see what a ragged appearance it is: he shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a pewterer's hammer; come off, and on, swifter than he; that giblets on the brewer's bucket. And this same half-faced fellow, Shadow,—give me this man: he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. And, for a retreat,—how swiftly will this Feeble, the woman's tailor, run off? O, give me the spare men, and spare me the great ones.—Put me a caliver1 into Wart's hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold, Wart; traverse: thus, thus, thus.

Fal. Come, manage me your caliver. So,—very well,—go to:—very good,—exceeding good.—Give me always a little, lean, old, chapped, bald shot. Well said, 't faith, Wart: thou'rt a good scab; hold, there's a taster for thee.

Shal. He is not his craft's master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end green, (when I lay at Clement's inn) I was then sir Dagonet in Arthur's show2, there was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus: and he would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in: "rah, tah, tah," would he say; "bounce," would he say; and away again would he go, and again would he come.—I shall never see such a fellow.

Fal. These fellows will do well, master Shallow.—God keep you, master Silence: I will not use many words with you.—Fare you well, gentlemen both: I thank you: I must a dozen mile to-night.—Bardolph, give the soldiers coats.

Shal. Sir John, the Lord bless you, and God prosper your affairs, and send us peace. At your return, visit our house. Let our old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure, I will with you to the court.

Fal. 'Fore God, I would you would.

Shal. Go to; I have spoke at a word. Fare you well.

[Exeunt Shallow and Silence.

Fal. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen. Oh, Bardolph; lead the men away. [Exeunt Bardolph, Recruits, &c.] As I return, I will fetch off these justees: I do see the bottom of justice Shallow. Lord, lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same starving justice hath done nothing but pate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbull-street; and every third word a lie, duer paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's-inn, like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved up with a knife: he was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invisible; he was the very genius of famine; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him—mandrake. He came ever in the rear-ward of the fashion3: and sung those tunes to the ever-scuffed harps that he had heard the drummers whistle, and swore that they were his fancies, or his good-nights4. And now is this Vice's dagger5 become a square, and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard, and then he burst6 his head, for crowding among the marshals' men. I saw it; and told John of Gaunt, he beat his own name; for you might have thrust7 him, and all his apparel, into an eel-skin: the case of a treble haubboy was a mansion for him, a court; and now has he land and beeces. Well, I will be acquainted with him, if I return; and it shall go hard, but I will make him a philosopher's two stones to me. If the young dace be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason in the law of nature but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end.

[Exit.

ACT IV

SCENE I.—A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and Others.

Arch. What is this forest call'd?

Hast. 'Tis Gaultree forest, an't shall please your grace.

Arch. Here stand, my lords; and send discoverers forth,

To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

Arch. 'Tis well done.—My friends and brethren in these great affairs, I must acquaint you, that I have received

New-dated letters from Northumberland;

Their cold intent, tenour and substance, thus:—Here doth he wish his person, with such powers

1 A hand-gun. 2 An exhibition of archery at Mile-end green, where the archers assumed the characters of King Arthur's round-table.

Sir Dagonet was the fool or buffoon of Arthur's court. As in folio. 3 my: in folio. 4 The rest of the sentence ending in mandrake, is not in the folio. 5 Scotch'd, cut and slashed by the beadle's whip. 6 Sound lyrical pieces, for the voice. 7 The Vice, a character of the early English drama, resembling a harlequin, was armed with a dagger of lath.

As might hold sortance with his quality,
The which he could not levy; whereupon
He is retir'd, to ripe his growing fortunes,
To Scotland; and concludes in hearty prayers,
That your attempts may overlie the hazard,
And fearful meeting of their opposite.

Mowbr. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch ground,
And dash themselves to pieces.

[Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now, what news?

Mess. West of this forest, scarcely off a mile,
In goodly form comes on the enemy:
And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number
Upon, or near, the rate of thirty thousand.

Mowbr. The just proportion that we gave them out,
Let's away12 on, and face them in the field.

18
Enter Westmoreland.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here?
Mowb. I think it is my lord of Westmoreland.

West. Health and fair greeting from our general,
The prince, lord John and duke of Lancaster.

Arch. Say on, my lord of Westmoreland, in peace,
What doth concern your coming?

West. Then, my lord,
Unto your grace do I in chief address
The substance of my speech. If that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rags;
And countenanced by boys, and beggary;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not here, to dress the ugly form
Of base and bloody insurrection
With your fair honours. You, lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd;
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd;
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd;
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove and very blessed spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war?
Turning your books to gloves, your ink to blood,
Your pens to lances, and your tongue divine
To a loud trumpet, and report of war?
Arch. Wherefore do I this?—so the question stands:
Briefly to this end.—We are all diseas'd;
And, with our surfeiting, and wanton hours,
Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,
And we must bleed for it: of which disease
Our late king, Richard, being infected, died.
But, my most noble lord of Westmoreland,
I take not on me here as a physician,
Nor do I, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in the throngs of military men;
But, rather, show a while like fearful war,
To diet rank minds, sick of happiness,
And purge th' obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd,
What wrongs our army may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences.
We see which way the stream of time doth run,
And are enforc'd from our most quiet chair
By the rough torrent of occasion;
And have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve, to show in articles,
Which, long ere this, we offer'd to the king,
And might by no suit gain an audience.
When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
We are denied access unto his person,
Even by those men that most have done us wrong.
The dangers of the days but newly gone,
Whose memory is written on the earth
With yet appearing blood, and the examples
Of every minute's instance, present now,
Have put us in these ill-becoming arms,
Not to break peace, or any branch of it,
But to establish here a peace indeed,
Concurring both in name and quality.

West. When ever yet was your appeal denied?

Wherein have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been sobred to grace on you,
That you should seal this lawless bloody book
Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine,
And consecrate commotion's bitter edge?
Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth,
To brother born an household cruelty
i make my quarrel in particular.

West. There is no need of any such redress;
Or, if there were, it not belongs to you.
Mowb. Why not to him, in part, and to us all,
That feel the bruises of the days before,
And suffer the condition of these times
To lay a heavy and unequal hand
Upon our honours?
West. O! my good lord Mowbray,
Construe the times to their necessities,
And you shall say indeed, it is the time,
And not the king, that doth you injuries.
Yet, for your part, it not appears to me,
Either from the king, or in the present time,
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief on. Were you not restor'd
To the duke of Norfolk's signories,
Your noble and right-well-remember'd father's?
Mowb. What thing, in honour, had my father lost,
That need to be reviv'd, and breath'd in me?

The king that lov'd him, as the state stood then,
Was, force perforce, compel'd to banish him:
And when that Harry Bolingbroke, and he
Being mounted, and both roused in their seats,
Their neighing coursers daring of the spur,
Their armed staves in charge, their beavers down,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel,
And the loud trumpet blowing them together;
Then, then, when there was nothing could have stay'd
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O! when the king did throw his warder down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw;
Then threw he down himself, and all their lives,
That, by indictment, and by dint of sword,
Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.

West. You speak, lord Mowbray, now you know not what.

The earl of Hereford was reputed then,
In England the most valiant gentleman;
Who knows, on whom fortune would then have smiled?
But if your father had been victor there,
He ne'er had borne it out of Coventry;
For all the country, in a general voice,
Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers, and love,
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And bless'd, and grac'd, indeed, more than the king.
But this is mere digression from my purpose.

Here come I from our princely general,
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace,
That he will give you audience; and wherein
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them; every thing set off,
That might so much as think you enemies.

Mowb. But he hath for'd us to compel this offer,
And it proceeds from policy, not love.

West. Mowbray, you overween, to take it so.
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear;
For, lo! within a ken our army lies,
Upon mine honour, all too confident.
To give admittance to a thought of fear.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best:
Then, reason will our hearts should be as good;
Say you not, then, our offer is compell'd?

_Moeb._ Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley.
_West._ That argues but the shame of your offence:
A rotten case abides no handling.

_Host._ Hath the prince John, a full commission,
In very ample virtue of his father,
To hear, and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon?

_West._ That is intended in the general's name.
I muse you make so slight a question.

_Arch._ Then take, my lord of Westmoreland, this schedule,
For this contains our general grievances:
Each several article herein redress'd;
All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are insinu'd to this action,
Acquainted by a true substantial form;
And present evidence of your wills
To us, and to our purposes, confin'd.
We come within our awful banks again,
And knot our powers to the arm of peace.

_West._ This will I show the general. Please you, lords,
In sight of both our battles we may meet:
And either end in peace, which God so frame,
or to the place of difference call the swords
Which must decide it.

_Arch._ My lord, we will so do. [Exit West.]

_Moeb._ There is a thing within my bosom tells me,
That no conditions of our peace can stand.

_Host._ Fear you not that: if we can make our peace
Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
As our conditions shall consist upon,
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

_Moeb._ Ay, but our valuation shall be such,
That every slight and false-derived cause,
Yea, every idle, nice, and wanton reason,
Shall to the king taste of this action:
That were our royal faiths martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.

_Arch._ No, no, my lord. Note this,—the king is weary
Of dainty and such picky grievances:
For he hath found, to end one doubt by death
Revives two greater in the heirs of life.
And therefore will he wipe his tables clean,
And keep no tell-tale to his memory,
That may repeat and history his loss
To new remembrance. For full well he knows,
He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoubts present occasion:
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unsafely do, and shake a friend.
So that this land, like an offensive wife,
That hath engag'd her man1 to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution.

_Host._ Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;

1 Malone, and most mod. eds. read: consag'd. 2 enrag'd him on: in f. &. 3 seal: in f. &.
Hast. And though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them;
And so success of mischief shall be born,
And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel up,
Whilest England shall have generation.

P. John. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow,
To sound the bottom of the after-times.
West. Pleaseth your grace, to answer them directly,
How far forth you do like their articles.

P. John. I like them all, and do allow them well:
And swear, here, by the honour of my blood,
My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning, and authority.—
My lord, these griefs shall be with speed redress'd;
Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your powers unto their several counties,
As we will ours; and here, between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace,
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love, and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these redresses,
P. John. I give it you, and will maintain my word thereupon I drink unto your grace. [word:
Hast. Go, captain, [To an Officer] and deliver to the army
This news of peace: let them have pay, and part.
I know, it will please them: lie thee, captain.

[Exit Officer.

Arch. To you, my noble lord of Westmoreland.
[Drinks?

West. I pledge your grace: [Drinks? and, if you knew what pains
I have bestowed to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely; but my love to you
Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.—Health to my lord, and gentle cousin, Mowbray.

[Drinks.

Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am, on the sudden, something ill.
Arch. Against ill chances men are ever merry,
But heaviness foreruns the good event.
West. Therefore be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow
Serves to say thus,—some good thing comes to-morrow.

Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowb. So much the worse, if your own rule be true,

P. John. The word of peace is render'd. Hark, how they shout!

Mowb. This had been cheerful, after victory.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest,
For then both parties nobly are subdued,
And neither party loser.

P. John. Go, my lord,
And let our army be discharged too.—

[Exit Westmoreland.

And good my lord, so please you, let your trains
March by us, that we may peruse the men
We should have cop'd withal.

Arch. Go, good lord Hastings; and, ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by.

P. John. I trust, lords, we shall lie to-night togeth'r.—

---

Re-enter Westmoreland.

Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still?
West. The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak.

P. John. They know their duties.

[Exit Hastings.

Hast. My lord, our army is dispers'd already,*
Like youthful steers unsus'd, they take their courses
East, west, north, south; or, like a school broke up,
Each hurries towards his home and sporting-place.

West. Good tidings, my lord Hastings; for which I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason:—
And you, lord archbishop,—and you, lord Mowbray;
Of capital treason I attach you both.

Mowb. Is this proceeding just and honourable?

West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

P. John. I pawn'd thee none.

I promis'd you redress of these same grievances,
Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honour,
I will perform with a most christian care.
But, for you, rebels, look to taste the due
Meet for rebellion; and such acts as yours.
Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.—
Strike up our drums! pursue the scatter'd stray;
Heaven, and not we, hath safely fought to-day:—
Some guard these traitors to the block of death:
Treason's true bed, and yielder up of breath. [Exitunt.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Forest.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Falstaff and Colevile, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you; and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is Coleville of the dale.

Fal. Well then, Colevile is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place, the dale: Colevile shall still be your name, a traitor your degree, and the dungeon your dale,—a dale deep enough; so shall you be still Colevile of the dale.

Cole. Are not you sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, who'er I am. Do ye yield, sir, or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are the drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death: therefore, rouse up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy.

Cole. I think, you are sir John Falstaff, and in that thought yield me.

Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a belly of any indifferency, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe: my womb, my womb undoeth me.

—Here comes our general.

Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Westmoreland, and Others.

P. John. The heat is past, follow no farther now.—Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.—

[Exit West.

Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while?
When every thing is ended, then you come:—
These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life,
One time or other break some gallows' back.

Fal. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus: I never knew yet but robke and check was the reward of valour. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow; or a bullet? have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility: I have foundered nine-score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken sir John Colevile of the dale, a most famous knight, and valorous enemy. But what of that?
he saw me; and yielded; that I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome, I came, saw, and overcame.

P. John. It was more of his courtesy than your deserving.

Fal. I know not: here he is, and here I yield him, and I beseech your grace, let it be hooked with the rest of this day's deeds; or, by the lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it, Colevile kissing my foot. To which course if I be enforced, if you do not all show like gilt two-pence to me, and I, in the clear sky of fame, o'ershine you as much as the full moon doth the inders of the element, which show like pins' heads to her, believe not the word of the noble. Therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

P. John. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Fal. Let it shine then.

P. John. Thine's too thick to shine.

Fal. And if it shine, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

P. John. Is thy name Colevile?

Col. It is, my lord.

Fal. And a famous true subject took him.

Cole. I am, my lord, but as my better are,
That led me hither: had they been ruled by me,
You should have won them dearer than you have.

Fal. I know not how they sold themselves, but thou, like a kind fellow, gavest thyself away gratis; and
I thank thee for thee.

Re-enter Westmoreland,

P. John. Now, have you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made, and execution stay'd.

P. John. Send Colevile, with his confederates,
To York, to present execution.—
Blunt, lead him hence, and see you guard him sure.

[Exit Colevile, guarded.

And now despatch we toward the court, my lords.
I hear, the king my father is sore sick:
Our news shall go before us to his majesty.—
Which, cousin, you shall bear—to comfort him;
And we with sober speed will follow you.

Fal. My lord, I beseech you, give me leave to go through Gloshtershire; and, when you come to court, stand my good lord, pray, in your good report.

P. John. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition
Shall better speak of you than you deserve.

[Exit.

Fal. I would, you had but the wit: 't were better than your dukedom.—Good faith, this same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me, nor a man cannot make him laugh; but 'tis no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof, for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-meals, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness: and then, when they marry, they get wenches. They are generally fools and cowards, which some of us should be too, but for information. A good sherris-sack hath a two-fold operation in it: it drowns me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish, and dull, and cruddy vapours which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetful, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which, delider'd o'er to the voice, (the tongue) which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is, the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice:
but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. It illumineth the face, which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to arm; and then the vital commoners, and inland petty spirits, muster me all to their captain, the heart, who, great, and puffed up with this shining doth and deed of courage: and this valour comes of sherris. So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack, for that sets it a-work; and learning, a mere hoard of gold kept by a devil, till sack commences it, and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it, that prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath,
like lean, sterile, and bare land, manured, husbanded,
and tilled, with excellent endeavour of drinking good,
and good store of fertile sherris, that he is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first human principle I would teach them should be, to forbear thin potations, and to addict themselves to sack.

[Enter Bardolph.

How now, Bardolph?—

Bard. The army is discharged all, and gone.

Fal. Let them go. I'll through Gloshtershire; and there will I visit master Robert Shallow, esquire: I have him already, tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Clarence, Prince Humphrey,
Warwick, and Others.

K. Hen. Now, lords, if God doth give successful end
To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctified.
Our navy is address'd, our power collected,
Our substitutes in absence, well invested,
And every thing lies level to our wish:
Only, we want a little personal strength,
And pause us, till these rebels, now afoot,
Come underneath the yoke of government.

War. Both which, we doubt not but your majesty
Shall soon enjoy.

K. Hen. Humphrey, my son but of Gloster,
Where is the prince your brother?

P. Humph. I think, he's gone to hunt, my lord, at Windor.

K. Hen. And how accompanied?

P. Humph. I do not know, my lord.

K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

P. Humph. No, my good lord: he is in presence here.

Clu. What would my lord and father?

K. Hen. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clas-

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?
He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas.
Thou hast a better place in his affection,
Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy,
And noble offices thou may'st effect
With that blessed hand.

Between his greatness and thy other brethren.
Therefore omit him not: blunt not his love,
SCENE IV.
KING HENRY IV.

Nor lose the good advantage of his grace, By seeming cold, or careless of his will, For he is gracious, if be he observ’d. He hath a tear for pity, and a hand Open as day for melting charity; Yet, notwithstanding, being incens’d, he’s flirt, As humorous as winter, and as sudden As flaws1 congealed in the spring of day. His temper, therefore, must be well observ’d; Chide him for faults, and do it reverently When you perceive his blood inclin’d to mirth, But, being moody, give him line and scope, Till that his passions, like a whale on ground, Confound themselves with working. Learn this, Thomas, And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends, A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in, That the united vessel of their blood, Mingled with venom of suggestion2, (As, force perforce, the age will pour it in) Shall never leak, though it do work as strong As aconitum, or rash gunpowder. Clá. I shall observe him with all care and love. K. Hen. Why art thou not at Windsor with him, Thomas? Clá. He is not there to-day: he dines in London. K. Hen. And how accompanied?3 canst thou tell that? Clá. With Sir John Poins, and other his continual followers. K. Hen. Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds, And he, the noble image of my youth, Is overspread with them: therefore, my grief Stretches itself beyond the hour of death. The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape In forms imaginary, th unguided days, And rotten times, that you shall look upon When I amsleeping with my ancestors. For when his headstrong riot hath no curb, When rage and hot-blood are his counsellors, When means and lavish manners meet together, Or, with what wings shall his affections fly Towards fruition peril and oppos’d decay! War. My gracious lord, you are beyond him quite, The prince but studies his companions, Like a strange tongue: wherein, to gain the language, ’Tis needful, that the most immodest word Be look’d upon, and learnt; which once attain’d, Your highness knows, comes to no further use, But to be known, and hated. So, like gross terms, The prince will, in the perfection of time, Cast off his followers, and their memory Shall as a pattern or a measure live, By which his grace must mete the lives of others, Turning past evils to advantages. K. Hen. It’s seldom, when the bee doth leave her comb In the dead carriion. [Enter Westmoreland.] Who’s here? Westmoreland? West. Health to my sovereign, and new happiness Added to that that I am to deliver! Prince John, your son, doth kiss your grace’s hand: Mowbray, the bishop Scoop, Hastings, and all, Are brought to the correction of your law. There is not now a rebel’s sword unsheath’d, But peace puts forth her olive everywhere. The manner how this action hath been borne, Here at more leisure may your highness read, With every course in his particular. [Giving a paper.] K. Hen. O Westmoreland! thou art a summer bird, Which ever in the haunch of winter sings The lifting up of day. [Enter Harcourt.] Look! here’s more news. Har. From enemies heaven keep your majesty; And, when they stand against you, may they fall As those that I am come to tell you of. The earl Northumberland, and the lord Bardolph, With a great power of English, and of Scots, Are by the sherrif of Yorkshire overthrown. The manner and rude order of the flight, This packet, please it you, contains at large. [Giving a packet.] K. Hen. And wherefore should these good news make me sick? Will fortune never come with both hands full, But write her fair words still in foulest letters? She either gives a stomach, and no food,— Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast, And takes away the stomach,—such are the rich, That have abundance, and enjoy it not. I should rejoice now at this happy news, And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy,— O me! come near me; now I am much ill. [Falls back.] P. Humph. Comfort, your majesty! Clá. O my royal father! West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself: look up! War. Be patient; princes: you do know, these fits Are with his highness very ordinary. Stand from him, give him air; he’ll straight be well. Clá. No, no; he cannot long hold out these pangs. Th’ incessant care and labour of his mind Hath wrought the mure, that should confine it in, So thin. that life looks through, and will break out! P. Humph. The people fear me,4 for they do observe Unfather’d heirs, and lostly births of nature: The seasons change their manners, as the year Had found some months asleep, and leap’d them over. Clá. The river hath thrice flow’d, no ebb between; And the old folk, time’s doting chronicles, Say, it did so, a little time before That our great grandsire, Edward, sick’d and died. War. Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers. P. Humph. This apoplexy will, certain, be his end. K. Hen. I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence Into some other chamber: softly, pray. [They place the king on a bed in a inner part of the room. Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends; Unless some dull and favourable hand Will whisper music to my weary spirit. War. Call for the music in the other room. K. Hen. Set me the crown upon my pillow here. Clá. His eye is hollow, and he changes much. War. Less noise, less noise! [Enter Prince HENRY. P. Hen. Who saw the duke of Clarence? Clá. I am heir, brother, full of heaviness. P. Hen. How now! rain within doors, and none abroad? How doth the king? P. Humph. Exceeding ill. P. Hen. Heard he the good news yet? Tell it him. P. Humph. He alter’d much upon the hearing it. P. Hen. If he be sick with joy, he will recover Without physic.

SECOND PART OF

ACT IV.

War. Not so much noise, my lords.—Sweet prince, speak low;
The king your father is dispos'd to sleep.
Cla. Let us withdraw into the other room.
War. Will 't please your grace to go along with us?
P. Hen. No; I will sit and watch here by the king.

[Exeunt all but Prince Henry.]

Why doth the crown lie there, upon his pillow;
Being so troublesome a bedfellow?
O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night, sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggin bound,
Snores out the watch of night.
O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy blear, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scales with safety.—By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather, which stirs not:
Did he suspect, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move.—My gracious lord! my father!—
This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep,
That from this golden ring! hath divorc'd So many English kings. Thry due from me To tears and heavy sorrows of the blood,
Which nature, love, and filial tenderness,
Shall, O dear father! pay thee plenteously:
My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me.—Lo! here sits it,

[Putting it on his head.
Which heaven shall guard; and put the world's whole strength
Into one giant arm, it shall not force
This lineal honour from mee. This from thee
Will I to mine leave, as it is left to me.

[K. Hen. Warwick! Gloster! Clarence!]

[Re-enter Warwick, and the rest.]

Cla. Doth the king call?
War. What would thy majesty? How fares thy grace?
K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords?
Cla. We let the prince, my brother, here, my liege,
Who undertook to sit and watch by you.
K. Hen. The prince of Wales? Where is he? let me see him:
He is not here. 1

War. This door is open; he is gone this way.
P. Humph. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.
K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from my pillow?
War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.
K. Hen. The prince hath ta'en it hence;—go, seek him out.
Is he so hasty, that he doth suppose
My sleep my death?—
Find him, my lord of Warwick; chide him hither.

[Exit Warwick.]

This part of his conjointh with my disease,
And helps to cale me.—See, sons, what things you are; How quickly nature falls into revolt,
When gold becomes her object.
For this thee foolish over-careful fathers Have broke their sleep's with thoughts,
Their brains with care, their bones with industry:
For this they have engrossed and pil'd up
The canker'd heaps of strange-achieved gold;

For this they have been thoughtfull to invest Their sons with arts, and martial exercises;
When, like the bee, tolling from every flower The virtuous sweets; 2
Our thighs pack'd with wax. Our mouths with honey, We bring it to the hive, and like the bees, Are murder'd for our pains. This bitter taste Yield his engrossments to the ending father.—

Re-enter Warwick.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long, Till his friend sickness' hands determin'd me?
War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room, Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks;
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow That tyranny, which never quaff'd but blood,
Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.
K. Hen. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter Prince Henry.

Lo, where he comes.—Come hither to me, Harry,— Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.

[Exeunt Clarence, Prince Humphrey, Lords, &c.
P. Hen. I never thought to hear you speak again.
K. Hen. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought: I stay too long, he gives me weary throughs.
Dost thou so hunger for mine empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honours
Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee! Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind,
That it will quickly drop: my day is dim.
Thou hast stol'n that; which, after some few hours,
Were thine without offence, and at my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation:
Thy life did manifest thou lov'dst me not,
And thou wilt have me die assur'd of it. Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life:
What! canst thou not bear me half an hour? Then get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear That thou art crown'd, not that I am dead.
Let all the tears that should bedew my hearne,
Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head;
Only compound me with forgotten dust:
Give that which gave thee life unto the worms. Pluck down my officers; break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form.
Harry the fifth is crown'd!—Up, vanity! Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence; And to the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness!
Now, neighbour confines, purge you of your scum: Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink, dance, Revel the night, rob, murder, and commit The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?
Be happy, he will trouble you no more:
England shall double gild his treble guilt,
England shall give him office, honour, might;
For the fifth Harry from curb'd licence plucks The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog Shall flash his teeth in every innocent,
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows! When that my care could not withhold thy riots, What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O! thou wilt be a wilderness again.

Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants.

_P. Hen._ O, pardon me, my liege! but for my tears,

The most impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke, and I had heard
The course of it so far. There is your crown;
And He that wears the crown immortally,
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
Than as your honour, and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,
Which my most true and inward duteous spirit
Teacheth, this prostrate and exterior bending.
Heaven witness with me, when I here came in,
And found no course of breath within your majesty,
How cold it struck my heart! if I do seign, O! let me in my present wilderness die,
And never live to show th' incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed.
Coming to look on, you thinking you dead,
And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,
I spake unto the crown, as having sense,
And thus upbraided it: "The care on thee depending,
Hath fed upon the body of my father;
Therefore, thou, best of gold, art worst of gold.
Other, less fine in carat, is more precious,
Preserving life in medicine potable:
But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,
Hast made thy better up." Thus, my most royal liege,
Accusing it, I put it on my head;
To try with it, as with an enemy
That had before my face murder'd my father,
The quarrel of a true inheritor:
But if it did infect my blood with joy,
Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride;
If any rebel or vain spirit of mine
Did, with the least affection of a welcome,
Give entertainment to the weight of it,
Let God for ever keep it from my head,
And make me as the poorest vassal is,
That doth with awe and terror kneel to it!

_K. Hen._ O my son!

God put it in thy head to take it hence,
That thou mightest win the more thy father's love,
Pleading so wisely in excuse of it.
Come hither, Harry; sit thou by my bed,
And hear, I think, the very latest counsel
That ever I shall breathe. God knows, my son,
By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
Better opinion, better confirmation;
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. It seem'd in me,
But as an honour snatch'd with boisterous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances;
Which daily grew to quarrel, and to bloodshed,
Wounding supposed peace. All these bold fears,
Thou seest, with peril I have answered;
For all my reign hath been but as a scene
Acting that argument, and now my death
Changes the mode: for what in me was purchase,
Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort;
So, thou the garland wear'st successively.
Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough; since griefs are green,
And all my friends, which thou must make thy friends,
Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out;
By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose power I well might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd. Which to avoid,
I cut some o'ff; and had a purpose now
To lead out many to the Holy Land,
Lest rest, and lying still, might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry,
Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne out,
May waste the memory of the former days:
More would I, but my lungs were wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.
How I came by the crown, O God, forgive,
And grant it may with thee in true peace live!

_P. Hen._ My gracious liege,

You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;
Then plain, and right, must my possession be:
Which, I with more than with a common pain,
'Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

_Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Warwick, Lords, and Others._

_K. Hen._ Look, look, here comes my John of Lan-_oshier._

_P. John._ Health, peace, and happiness, to my royal father!

_K. Hen._ Thou bring'st me happiness, and peace, son John:

But health is back, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, wither'd trunk: upon thy sight,
My worldly business makes a period.
Where is my lord of Warwick?

_P. Hen._ My lord of Warwick!

_K. Hen._ Doth any name particular belong
Unto the lodging where I first did swoon
War. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord.

_K. Hen._ Laud be to God!—even there my life must end.

It hath been prophesied to me many years,
I should not die but in Jerusalem,
Which vainly I supposed the Holy Land. —
But bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie:
In that Jerusalem shall Harry die.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

_Enter Shallow, Falstaff, Bardolph, and Page._

Shal. By cock and pie, sir, you shall not away to-night.—What, Davy, I say!

_P. Fal._ You must excuse me, master Robert Shal_low._

_Shal._ I will not excuse you; you shall not be ex_cused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no ex_cuse shall serve; you shall not be excused.—Why, Davy!

"Not in the quarto. 2 f. e.: purchased; i. e., not obtained by inheritance. 3 thy: in f. e. 4 them: in f. e. 5 This line is not in the quarto.
Enter Davy.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy, Davy,—let me see, Davy; let me see:—yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus; those precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir, shall we sow the headland with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook, are there any young pigeons?

Davy. Yes, sir.—Here is, now, the smith's note for shoeing, and plough irons.

Shal. Let it be cast, and paid.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had:—and, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. He shall answer it.—Some pigeons, Davy: a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kishkeshaws, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir?

Shal. Yes, Davy: 1 will use him well. 2 A friend! 3 the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy; for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are back bitten 4 sir; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well conceived, Davy. About thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Wincot against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy; against that Visor: that Visor is an arrant knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship, that he is a knave, sir; but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight yeares; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knave is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, 5 let him be countenanced.

Shal. Go to: I say, he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. [Exit Davy.] Where are you, Sir John? Come, come, come; off with your boots.—Give me your hand, master Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind master Bardolph.—And welcome, my tall fellow. [To the Page.] Come, sir John. [Exit Shal.]

Fal. I'll follow you, good master Robert Shallow. Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exit Bardolph and Page.] If I were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermit's staves as master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblable coherence of his men's spirits and his: they, by observing him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like serving man. Their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of scribble, that they flock together in consent, like so many wild geese. If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would honour his men with the imputation of being near their master: if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow, that no man could better command his servants. It is certain, that either wise bearing, or ignorant carriage, is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow, to keep prince Harry in continual laughter the wearing-out of six fashions, (which is four terms, or two actions) and he shall laugh without intervalums. O! it is much, that a lie with a slight oath, and a jest with a sud brow, will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders. O! you shall see him laugh, till his face be like a wet clock ill kept.

Enter Warwick, and the Lord Chief Justice.

War. How now, my lord chief justice! whither away?

Ch. Just. How doth the king?

War. Exceeding well: his cares are now all ended.

Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature, and to our purposes he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I would, his majesty had call'd me with him:

The service that I truly did his life, hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed, I think the young king loves you not.

Ch. Just. I know he doth not, and do arm myself To welcome the condition of the time;

Which cannot look more hideously upon me Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

Enter Prince John, Prince Humphrey, Clarence, Westmoreland, and Others.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead Harry: O! that the living Harry had the temper Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen! How many nobles then should hold their places, That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort.

Ch. Just. O God! I fear all will be overturn'd.

P. John. Good morrow, cousin Warwick, good morrow.

P. Humph. Cia. Good morrow, cousin.

P. John. We meet like men that had forgot to speak.

War. We do remember; but our argument Is all too heavy to admit much talk.

P. John. Well, peace be with him that hath made us heavy!

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier!

P. Humph. O! good my lord, you have lost a friend, indeed;

And I dare swear, you borrow not that face Of seeming sorrow: it is, sure, your own.

P. John. Though no man be sure what grace to You stand in coldest expectation: [find, I am the sorrier; 'twould 'twere otherwise.

Cia. Well, you must now speak sir John Falstaff fair, Which swims against your stream of quality.

Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in honour, Led by th' impartial conduct of my soul; And never shall you see, that I will beg A ragged and forestall'd remission. If truth and upright innocence fail me, I'll to the keystone murder, that is dead, And tell him who hath sent me after him.

War. Here comes the prince.

Enter King Henry V.

Ch. Just. Good morrow, and heaven save your majesty!

1 Warrants. 2 bitten: in folio. 3 I beseech you: in quarto. 4 imperial: in folio.
King. This new and gorgeous garment, majesty, Sits not so easy on me as you think.—
Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear: This is the English, not the Turkish court; Not Amurath and Amurath succeeds, But Harry Harry. Yet be sad, good brothers, For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you: Sorrow so royally in you appears, That I will deeply put the fashion on, And wear it in my heart. Why then, be sad; But entertain no more of it, good brothers, Than a joint burden laid upon us all. For me, by heaven, I bid you be assurance, I'll be your father and your brother too; Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares: Yet weep, that Harry's dead, and so will I; But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears, By number, into hours of happiness.

P. John, &c. We hope no other from your majesty.

King. You all look strangely on me;—and you must.

[To the Chief Justice.

You are, I think, assurance I love you not.
Ch. Just. I am assurance, if I be measured rightly, Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

King. No! How might a prince of my great hopes forget So great indignities you laid upon me? What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison The immediate heir of England! Was this easy? May this be wasn't I in Lethe, and forgotten?

Ch. Just. I think, I did use the person of your father; The image of his power lay then in me: And, in the administration of his law While I was busy for the commonwealth, Your highness pleased to forget my place, The majesty and power of law and justice, The image of the king whom I presented, And struck me in my very seat of judgment: Whereon, as an offended to your father, I gave bold way to my authority, And did commit you. If the deed were ill, Be you contented, wearing now the garland, To have a son set your decrees at nought; To pluck down justice from your awful beach; To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword That guards the peace and safety of your person: Nay, more; to spurn at your most royal image, And mock your workings in a second body. Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours, Be now the father, and propose a son; Hear your own dignity so much profound, See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted, Behold yourself so by a son disdained, And then imagine me taking your part, And in your power soft silencing your son. After this cold consideration, sentence me; And, as you are a king, speak in your state What I have done, that miscarried my place, My person, or my that the Turkish court.

King. You are right, justice; and you weigh this well. Therefore still bear the balance, and the sword; And I do wish your honours may increase, Till you do live to see a son of mine. Offend you, and obey you, as I did. So shall I live to speak my father's words:—
"Happy am I, that have a man so bold, That dares do justice on my proper son; And not less happy, having such a son, That would deliver up his greatness so

Into the hands of justice."—You did commit me, For which, I do commit into your hand The untaught sword that you have used to bear; With this remembrance,—that you use the same With the high bold, just, and impartial spirit, As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand. You shall be as a father to my youth: My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear, And I will stoop and humble my intents To your well-practiced, wise directions.— And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you; My father is gone wild into his grave, For in his tomb lie my affections, And with his spirit sadly I survive, To mock the expectation of the world, To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down. After my seeming. The tide of blood in me Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now: Now doth it turn, and ebb back to the sea, Where it shall mingle with the state of floods, And flow henceforth in formal majesty. Now, call we our high court of parliament, And let us choose such limbs of noble counsel, That the great body of our state may go In equal rank with the best govern'd nation; That war, or peace, or both at once, may be As things acquainted and familiar to us, In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.—

[To the Lord Chief Justice.

Our coronation done, we will proceed As I before remember'd, all our state, And (God consigning to my good intents) No prince, nor peer, shall have just cause to say, God shorten Harry's happy life one day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Glosstershire. The Garden of Shallow's House.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Silence, Bardolph, the Page, and Davy.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard; where, in an arbouret, we shall eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth.—Come, cousin Silence;—and then to bed.

Fal. Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, sir John,—marry, good air.—Spread, Davy; spread, Davy;—well said, Davy.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses: he is your serving-man, and your husband.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, sir John.—By the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper:—a good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down.—Come, cousin.

Sil. Ah, sirrah! quothe—a, we shall Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer, [Singing. And praise heaven for the merry year; When flesh is comely and females dear, And lusty lads room here and there; So merrily, And ever among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart!—Good master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon. Shal. Give master Bardolph some wine, Davy. Davy. Sweet sir, sit; I'll be with you anon:—most sweet sir, sit.—Master page, good master page, sit: profuse! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink, But you must bear: the heart's all. [Exit.
Shal. Be merry, master Bardolph:—and my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has all; [Singing,
For women are shrives, both short and tall:
'Tis merry in hall, when beards wag all,
And welcome merry shrive-tide.

Be merry, be merry, &c.

Fal. I did not think master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who I? I have been merry twice and once, ere now.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. There is a dish of leather-coats 1 for you.

[Setting them before BARDOLPH.

Shal. Davy,—

Davy. Your worship,—I 'll be with you straight—

A cup of wine, sir,

Sil. A cup of wine, that 's brisk and fine., [Singing,
And drink unto the lemon mine;
And a merry heart lives long-a.

Fal. Well said, master Silence.

Sil. An we shall be merry, now comes in the sweet of the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, master Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come;

I 'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: if thou wantest any thing, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart.—Welcome, my little tiny thief; and welcome, indeed, too—

I 'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaliers about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,—

Shal. By the mass, you 'll crack a quart together.

Ha! will you not, master Bardolph?

Bard. Yea, sir, in a pottle pot.

Shal. By God's legins I thank thee.—The knife will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out; he is true bred.

Bard. And I 'll stick by him, sir.

Fal. Why, now you have done me right.

To SILENCE, who drinks a bumper.

Singing.

Sil. Do me right,^3

And dub me knight:

Samingo.

Is 't not so?

Fal. 'T is so.

Sil. Is 't so? Why, then say, an old man can do somewhat.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. An't please your worship, there 's one Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court? let him come in.—

Enter Pistol.

How now, Pistol?

Pist. Sir John, God save you, sir.

Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol?

Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man 2 to good. Sweet knight, th' art now one of the greatest men in the realm.

Sil. By 'r lady, I think he be, but goodman Puff of

Barson. 3

Puff in teeth, most recreant coward base!—

Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend,

And heller-skeleton have I rode to thee.

And tidings do I bring, and lucky joys,

And golden times, and happy news of price.

Fal. I pr'ythee now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pist. A foutra for the world, and worldlings base!

I speak of Africa, and golden joys.

Fal. O base Assyrian knight! what is thy news?

Let king Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John. 4

Pist. Shall dunghill curs confront the Heilcoms?

And shall good news be baffled.

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies' lap.

Shal. Honest gentleman, I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why then, lament therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir— if, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it, there is but two ways, either to utter them, or to conceal them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pist. Under which king, Bezonian 5 speak, or die.

Shal. Under king Harry.

Pist. Harry the fourth? or fifth?

Shal. Harry the fourth.

Pist. A foutra for thine office!—

Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king; Harry the fourth, the man. I speak the truth:

When Pistol lies, do this; and let me, like

The bragging Spaniard.

Fal. What 's is the old king dead?

Pist. As nail in door: the things I speak are just.

Bard. O joyful day!—I would not take a knighthood for my fortune.

Fal. Carry master Silence to bed.—Master Shallow, my lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am fortune's steward. Get on thy boots; we 'll ride all night.—O, sweet Pistol!—Away, Bardolph. [Exit Barn.]—Come, Pistol, utter more to me; and, withal, devise something, to do thyself good.—Boot, boot, master Shallow: I know, the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses; the laws of England are at my commandment. Happy are they which have been my friends, and woe unto my lord chief justice!

Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also!

"Where is the life that late I led," 6 say they;—

Why, here it is: welcome this pleasant day! 7 [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Street.

Enter Beadle, dragging in Hostess Quickly, and Doll Tear-sheet.

Host. No, thou arrant knave: I would to God I might die, that I might have thee hanged; thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.

1 Read. The constables have delivered her over to me, and she shall have whipping-cherenough, 8 I warrant her. There hath been a man or two lately killed about her.

Dol. Nut-hook, nut-hook, you lie. Come on: I 'll tell thee what, thou damned tripe-visaged rascal, an the child I now go with do miscarry, thou hadst better thou hadst struck thy mother, thou paper-thin villain.

Host. O, the Lord, that sir John were come! he would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God the fruit of her womb miscarry! 9

1 Russet apples. 2 A phrase used in drinking healths. 3 none: in folio. 4 A term of reproach, derived from the Italian bigaugga, signifying a ' fresh, needy soldier.' 5 insert, by putting the thumb between the fore and middle finger; fcu, has the same signification. 6 This quotation is also made in "Taming of the Shrew." 7 These pleasant days: in folio. 8 Not in the quartos.
KING. My lord chief justice, speak to that vain man.
Ch. Just. Have you any wits? know you what 'tis for you speak?
Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!
KING. I know thee not, old man: fall to thy prayers;
How ill white hairs become a fool, and jester!
I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so profane;
But, being awake, I do despise my dream.
Make less thy body, hence, and more thy grace;
Leave gormandizing; know, the grave doth gape
For thee thrice wider than for other men,
Reply not to me with a fool-born jest:
Presume not that I am the thing I was;
For God doth know, so shall the world perceive,
That I have turn'd away my former self:
So will I those that kept me company.
When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots:
Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misleaders,
Not to come near our person by ten mile.
For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil;
And as we hear you do reform yourselves,
We will, according to your strength and qualities,
Give you advancement.—Be it your charge, my lord,
To see perform'd the tenor of our word.—
Set on.
[Exeunt King and his Train.
Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.
Shal. Ay, marry, sir John; which I beseech you to let me have in my home with me.
Fal. That can hardly be, master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this: I shall be sent for in private to him. Look you, he must seem thus to the world.
Fear not your advancement; I will be the man yet that shall make you great.
Shal. I cannot perceive how, unless you should give me your doublet, and stuff me out with straw.
I beseech you, good sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.
Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard was but a colour.
Shal. A colour, I fear, that you will die in, sir John.
Fal. Fear no colours: go with me to dinner. Come, lieutenant Pistol;—come, Bardolph.—I shall be sent for soon at night.
Re-enter Prince John, the Chief Justice, Officers, &c.
Ch. Just. Go, carry sir John Falstaff to the Fleet.
Take all his company along with him.
Fal. My lord, my lord!—
Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear you soon.
Take them away.
Pist. Se fortuna me tormenta, il sperare me contenta.
P. John. I like this fair proceeding of the king's.
He hath intent, his wonted followers
Shall all be very well provided for;
But all are banish'd, till their conversations
Appear more wise and modest to the world.
Ch. Just. And so they are.
P. John. The king hath call'd his parliament, my lord.
Ch. Just. He hath.
P. John. I will lay odds, that, ere this year expire,
We bear our civil swords, and native fire,
As far as France. I heard a bird so sing,
Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king.
Come, will you hence?

1 In the quarto ed., the king and his train here pass across the stage.
EPLOGUE,

BY ONE THAT CAN DANCE.

First my fear, then my courtesy, last my speech. My fear is your displeasure, my courtesy my duty, and my speech to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech, now, you undo me; for what I have to say, is of mine own making, and what indeed I should say, will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture.—Be it known to you, (as it is very well) I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise you a better. I did mean, indeed, to pay you with this; which, if, like an ill venture, it come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here, I promised you, I would be, and here I commit my body to your mercies: bate me some, and I will pay you some; and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment, to dance out of your debt; but a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me; if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much cloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France; where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary; when my legs are too, I will bid you good night: and so kneel down before you; but I need, to pray for the queen.

[End with a dance.]

CHORUS.

Enter Chorus, as Prologue. O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
Then should the war-like Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and at his heels,
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentle all,
The flat unrais'd spirit that hath dard'd,
On this unworthy scaffold, to bring forth
So great an object: can this cockpit hold
The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
Within this wooden O' the very casques,
That did alight the air at Agincourt?
O! pardon, since a crooked figure may
Attest in little place a million; And let us, cyphers to this great accomp't,
On your imaginary forces work.
Suppose, within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies,
Whose high uprear'd andimaginative puissance:
Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
Printing their proud hoofs i' the receiving earth;
For 't is your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry them here and there, jumping o'er times,
Turning th' accomplishment of many years
Into an hour-glass: for which the supply,
Admit me chorus to this history;
Who, prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play. 1

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. An Antechamber in the King's Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.

Cont. My lord, I'll tell you, that self bill is urg'd,
Which in thy eleventh year of the last king's reign
Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
But that the scrambling and inquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.

1 The words, as Prologue: not in f. e. 2 The Globe Theatre, where the play was probably first acted. 3 All the choruses were first printed in the folio. 4 Scrambling.
Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houses, right well supplied;
And to the coffers of the king beside.
A thousand pounds by the year. Thus runs the bill.
Ely. This would drink deep.
Cant. 'T would drink the cup and all.
Ely. But what prevention?
Cant. The king is full of grace, and fair regard.
Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.
Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not.
The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too: yea, at that very moment,
Consideration like an angel came,
And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him,
Leaving his body as a paradise,
T' envelop and contain celestial spirits.

Never was such a sudden scholar made:
Never came reformation in a flood,
With such a heady current, scouring faults;
Nor never Hydra-headed wildfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king.
Ely. We are blessed in the change.
Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the thing were made a prelate:
Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
You would say, it hath been all-in-all his study:
List his discourse of war, and you shall hear
A fearful battle render'd you in music:
Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordan knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter; that, when he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honeyed sentences;
So that the art and practice part of life
Must be the mistress to this theoretic:
Which is a wonder, how his grace should glean it,
Since his addiction was to courses vain;
His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports;
And never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity.
Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality:
And so the prince obscure'd his contemplation
Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt,
Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,
Unseen, yet creasive in his faculty.
Cant. It must be so; for miracles are cease'd,
And therefore we must needs admit the means,
How things are perfected.
Ely. But, my good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urg'd by the commons? Dost his majesty
Incline to it, or no?
Cant. He seems indifferent,
Or, rather, swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing th' exhibitors against us;
For I have made an offer to his majesty, —
Upon our spiritual conversation,
And in regard of causes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
As touching France,—to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy yet

1 So the second folio; the first: earnest. 2 In the quartos, the play commences here.
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salique is in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe;
Where Charles the great, having subdued the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certain French;
Who, holding in disdain the German women
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establish'd then this law,—to wit, no female
Should be inheritrix in Salique land:
Which Salique, as I said, twixt Elbe and Sala,
Is at this day in Germany call'd Meissen.
Then doth it well appear, the Salique law
Was not devised for the realm of France;
Nor did the French possess the Salique land
Until four hundred and twenty years
After defunctio of king Pharamond,
Idly supposed the founder of this law;
Who died within the year of our redemption
Four hundred twenty-six, and Charles the great Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the river Sala in the year
Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
King Pepin, which deposed Childerick,
Did, as heir general, being descended
Of Blitihild, which daughter to king Clothair,
Make claim and title to the crown of France.
Hugh Capet also,—who usur'd the crown
Of Charles the duke of Lorain, sole heir male
Of the true line and stock of Charles the great,—
To found his title with some shows of truth,
Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,
Convey'd himself as th' heir to the lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son
Of Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son
Of Charles the great. Also king Lewis the tenth,
Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied.
That fair Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lineal of the lady Ermengarde,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorain:
By the which marriage the line of Charles the great
Was reunited to the crown of France.
So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,
King Pepin's title, and Hugh Capet's claim,
King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear
To hold in right and title of the female,
So do the kings of France unto this day,
Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law,
To bar your highnesses claiming from the female;
And rather choose to hide them in a net,
Than amply to imbaro their crooked titles
Usur'd from you and your progenitors.
K. Hen. May I with right and conscience make this
Now a solemn question?

Cant. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign;
For in the book of Numbers is it writ,
When the man dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
Stand for your own; unwind your bloody flag;
Look back into your mighty ancestors:
Go, my dread lord, to your great grandsire's tomb,
From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,
And your great uncle's, Edward the black prince,
Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy;
Making defeat on the full power of France,
While their most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility.

O noble English! that could entertain
With half their forces the full pride of France,
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action.

Elly. Awako remembrance of these valiant dead,
And with your puissant arm renew their feats. You are their heir, you sit upon their throne;
The blood and courage, that renowned them,
Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege
Is in the very May-morn of his youth,
Ripe for exploits, and mighty enterprises.

Exe. Your brother kings, and monarchs of the earth,
Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,
As did the former lions of your blood.

West. They know your grace hath cause, and means,
and might;
So hath your highness—never king of England
Had nobles richer, and more loyal subjects,
Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England,
And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

Cant. O! let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
With blood, and sword, and fire, to win your right:
In aid whereof, we of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of your ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only and at one time invade the French,
But lay down our proper rights to defend Against the Scot; who will make road upon us
With all advantages.

Cant. They of those marches, gracious sovereign,
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilling borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the coursing snatchers only,
But fear the main intention of the Scot,
Who hath been still a greedy neighbour to us:
For you shall read, that my great grandfather
Never went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot on his unfurnished kingdom
Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and his force's fitness of force;
Galling the gleaned land with hot essays,
Girding with grievous siege castles and towns;
That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook, and trembled at th' ill neighbourhood.

Cant. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd,
my liege;
For hear her but exampled by herself:
When all her chivalry hath been in France,
And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
She hath herself not only well defended,
But taken, and impounded as a stray,
The king of Scots; whom she did send to France,
To fill king Edward's train with prisoner kings,
And make his monument rich with praise,
As is the oze and bottom of the sea.

With sunken wreck and sunless treasuries.

West. But there 's a saying, very old and true,—
"If that you will France win,
Then with Scotland first begin."

For once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weasel, Scot,
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs;
Playing the mouse in absence of the cat,
To tear and havoc more than she can eat.

Exe. It follows then, the cat must stay at home:
Yet that is not a crush'd necessity,
Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
Th' advised head defends itself at home:
For government, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one consent,
Congreasing in a full and natural close,
Like music.

Cant. Therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience; for so work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a rule in nature teach
The art in order to a peopled kingdom:
They have a king, and officers of state;
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home,
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad,
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's violet buds;
Which pillage they with merry march bring home
To the tent-royal of their emperor:
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold,
The civil citizens kneading up the honey;
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate,
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Deliver o'er to executioners, and
The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,—
That many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariously;
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Come to one mark; as many ways unite; 2
As many fresh streams meet in one salt sea;
As many lines close in the dial's center;
So may a thousand actions, once afoot,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore, to France, my liege,
Divide your happy England into four;
Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with this our union, can destroy,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried, and our nation lose
The name of hardness, and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin.

[Exit an Attendant.

Now are we well resolv'd: and, by God's help,
And yours, the noble sinews of our power,
France being ours, we'll bend it to our weal,
Or break it all to pieces: or there we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms,
Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tomblest with no name and a well-known home:
Either our history shall, with a full mouth,
Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worship'd with a waxen epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for we hear,
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.

Amb. May't please your majesty, to give us leave
Freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly show you far off,
The Dauphin's meaning, and our embassy?

K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king,
Unto whose grace our passion is as subject,
As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons;
Therefore, with frank and with uncurbed plainness,
Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

Amb. Thus then, in few;
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, Edward third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says, that you savour too much of your youth,
And bids you be advis'd, there's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.
He therefore bids you, meeter for your spirit,
This turn of treasure: and, in lieu of this, shewing it 3 desires you, let the dukedoms, that you claim,
Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin speaks.

K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?

Exe. Tennis-balls, my liege. [Opening it. 4
K. Hen. We are glad the Dauphin is so pleasant with us.
His present, and your pains, we thank you for:
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.
Tell him, he hath made a match with such a wrangler,
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chances; are not these, my liege?—What say you?
How comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never valued this poor seat of England,
And therefore, living here, did give myself
To barbarous license; as 't is ever common,
That men are merriest when they are from home.
But tell the Dauphin,—I will keep my state;
Be like a king, and show my soul 5 of greatness,
When I do rasce me in my throne of France:
For here I have laid by my majesty,
And plodded like a man for working days,
But I will rise there with so full a glory,
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yet strike the Dauphin backward on us,
And tell the pleasant prince, this mock of his
Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones; 6 and his soul
Shall stand sore charg'd for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows
Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down,
And some are yet ungotten, and unborn,
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn.
But this lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; and in whose name,
Tell you the Dauphin, I am coming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightful cause, in a well hallow'd cause,
So get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin,
His jest will savour but of shallow wit,
When thousands weep, more than did laugh at it.—
Convey them with safe conduct.—Fare you well.

[Exeunt Ambassadors.

K. Hen. This was a merry message.

Exe. This was a merry message.

K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.
Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour,
That may give furtherance to our expedition;
For we have now no thought in us but France,
Save those to God, that run before our business.
Therefore, let our propensions for these wars
Be soon collected, and all things thought upon,
That may with seasonable delight add
More feathers to our wings; for, God before,
We'll chide this Dauphin at his father's door.

ACT II.

Nym. 'Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it: and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly; and, certainly, she did you wrong, for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell: things must be as they may:
men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time, and some say knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a tired jade, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Mrs. Quickly.

Bard. Here comes ancient Pistol, and his wife.—
Good corporal, be patient here.—How now, mine host Pistol?

Pist. Base take', call'st thou me host?

Now, by this hand I swear, I scorn the term;
Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Quick. No, by my troth, not long: for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, that die honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight. [Nym drags his sword.] O well-a-day, lady! if he be not ehewn now!—we shall see willful adultery and murder committed.

Bard. Good lieutenant—good corporal, offer nothing here.

Nym. Fish!

Pist. Pish for thee, Iceland dog; thou prick-eared cur of Iceland! [Draws his sword.]"

Quick. Good corporal Nym, show thy valour, and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus."

Pist. Solus, egregious dog? O viper vile!

The solus in thy most marvellous face;
The solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat,
And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdye;
And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do retract the solus in thy bowels:
For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up,
And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbason; you cannot conjure me.
I have an humour to knock you indifferently well. If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may; and that's the humour of it.

Pist. O braggart vile, and damned furious wight!
The grave doth gap, and doating death is near;
Therefore exhale."

Bard. Hear me: hear me what I say:—he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilt, as I am a soldier.

[Draws.

Pist. An oath of mickle might, and fury shall abide.
Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give;
Thy spirits are most tall."

[Enter Pistol and Nym sheathe their swords."

Enter Nym and Bardolph.

Bard. Well met, corporal Nym.

Nym. Good morrow, lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. What, are ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part I care not; I say little; but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles—but that shall be as it may. I date not fight; but I will wink, and hold out mine iron. It is a simple one; but what though? it will toast cheese, and it will endure cold as another man's sword will; and there's an end."

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends; and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France: let it be so, good corporal Nym.
KING HENRY V.

SCENE II.—Southampton. A Council-Chamber.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, and Westmoreland.

Bed. 'Tis true, God, his grace is bold to trust these traitors.

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear themselves, as if allegiance in their bosoms sat, Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty.

Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend, by interception which they dream not of.

Exe. Now, but the man that was his bedfellow, Whom he hath dulled and cloyed with gracious favours; That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell
His sovereign's life to death and treachery!

Trumpets sound. Enter King Henry, Scroop, Cambridge, Grey, Lords, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard. My lord of Cambridge, and my kind lord of Mars- sham,—

And you, my gentle knight, give me your thoughts: Think you not, that the powers we bear with us Will cut their passage through the force of France, Doing the execution, and the act,

For which we have in hand enabled them?

Scroop. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best. K. Hen. I doubt not that: since we are well persuaded, We carry not a heart with us from hence, That grows not in a fair consent with ours; Nor leave not one behind, that doth not wish Success and conquest to attend on us.

Cam. Never was monarch better feared, and lov'd, Than is your majesty: there's not a subject, That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness Under the sweet shade of your government.

Grey. True: those that were your father's enemies, Have steep'd their galls in honey, and do serve you With hearts created of duty and of zeal. [Ruffles.

K. Hen. We therefore have great cause of thank- And shall forget the office of our hand, Sooner than quittance of desert and merit, According to the weight and worthiness.

Scroop. So service shall with steeled sinews toil, And labour shall refresh itself with hope; To do your grace incessant services.

K. Hen. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter, Enlarge the man committed yesterday, That rail'd against our person: we consider, It was excess of wine that set him on; And, on our^ more advice, we pardon him.

Scroop. That's mercy, but too much security: Let him be punish'd, sovereign; last example Breed by his sufferance more of such a kind.

K. Hen. O! let us yet be merciful, my lord.

Cam. So may your highness, and yet punish too.

Grey. You show great mercy, if you give him life After the taste of much correction.

K. Hen. Alas! your too much love and care of me Are heavy orisons against this poor wretch. If little faults, proceeding on distemper, Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye, When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear before us?—We'll yet enlarge that man, Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey, in their dear care, And tender estimation of our person, Would have him punish'd. And now to our French causes:

Who are the state® commissioners?

Cam. I one, my lord:

1 The folio adds: to go to; which mod. eds. usually print: go to. only in the quarto.
2 Not in f. e.
3 *This speech is not in f. e. The practice here alluded to, seems to have been not unusual.
4 *This speech is late: in f. e.
5 Donors in f. e.
Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.

Scoop. So did you me, my liege.

Grey. And I, my royal sovereign.

K. Hen. Then, Richard, earl of Cambridge, there is yours:—

There yours, lord Scoop of Marsham:—and, sir knight,
Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:—

Read them; and know, I know your worthiness.—

[They read and start!]

My lord of Westmoreland, and uncle Exeter,
We will aboard to-night.—Why, how now, gentlemen!

What see you in those papers, that you lose
So much complexion?—look ye, how they change:

Their cheeks are paper.—Why, what read you there,
That hath so cowarded and chaz'd your blood
Out of appearance?

Cam. I do confess my fault,
And do submit me to your highness' mercy,

Grey. Scoop. To which we all appeal.

K. Hen. The mercy that was quick in us but late,
By your own counsel is suppose and kill'd:

You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy;

For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,
As dogs upon their masters, worrying you.

See you, my princes, and my noble peers,

These English monsters! My lord of Cambridge here,—
You know, how apt our love was to accord

To furnish him with all appertinents
Belonging to his honour; and this man

Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir'd,
And sworn unto the practices of France,

To kill us here in Hampton: to the which,

This knight, no less for bounty bound to us,

Than your own counsel is suppose and kill'd:—But O!—

What shall I say to thee, lord Scoop? thou cruel,

Ingrateful, savage, and inhuman creature!

Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsellors,

That knew'st the very bottom of my soul,

That almost mightst have coin'd me into gold,

Wouldst thou have practis'd on me for thy use?

May it be possible, that foreign hire

Could out of thee extract one spark of evil,

That might annoy my finger? it is so strange,

That, though the truth of it stands off as gross
As black and white, my eye will scarcely see it.

Treason and murder ever kept together,

As twin devils sworn to either's purpose,

Working so grossly in a natural course,

That admiration did not whoop at them:

But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in

Wonder to want on treason, and on murder:

And whatsoever cunning fiend it was,

That wrought upon thee so preposterously,

Hath got the voice in hell for excellence,

And other devils, that suggest by treasons,

Do both and bungle up damnation

With patches, colours, and with forms, being fecht'd

From glistening semblances of piety:

But he that temper'd thee bade thee stand up,

Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,

Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.

If that same demon, that hath gull'd thee thus,

Should with his lion gait walk the whole world,

He might return to vasty Tartar back,

And tell the legions—I can never win

A soul so easy as that Englishman's.

O, how hast thou with jealousy infected

The sweetness of affiance! Show men dutiful?

1 Not in f. c. 2 them: in quarto. 3 make: in folio. Theobald changed the word. 4 The quarto have no trace of this, or the thirty-seven previous lines. 5 from the quarto.
SCENE III.—London. Mrs. Quickly’s House, in Eastcheap.

Enter PISTOL, Mrs. QUICKLY, Nym, BARDOLPH, and Boy.

Quick. Pr’ythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pist. No; for my manly heart doth yearn—

Bardolph, be blythe: Nym, rouse thy vaunting veins:
Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he is dead, and we must yearn therefore.

Bard. ’Would I were with him, where’some’er he is, either in heaven, or in hell.

Quick. Nay, sure, he’s not in hell: he’s in Arthur’s bosom, if ever man went to Arthur’s bosom. ’A made a fine end and went away, as it had been any christom child; ’a parted ev’n just between twelve and one, ev’n at the turning o’ the tide: for after I saw him tumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and shine upon his finger’s end, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen on a table of green frize. How now, sir John? quoth I: what, man! ’be of good cheer. So ’a cried out—God, God, God! three or four times: now I, to comfort him, bid him, ’a should not think of God; I hoped, there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So, ’a bade me lay more clothes on his feet; I put my hand into the bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward, and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say, he cried out of sack.

Quick. Ay, that ’a did.

Bard. And of women.

Quick. Nay, that ’a did not.

Boy. Yes, that ’a did; and said, they were devils incorrigible.

Quick. ’A could never abide carnation; ’t was a colour he never liked.

Boy. ’A said once; the devil would have him about women.

Quick. ’A did in some sort, indeed, handle women; but then he was rheumatic, and talked of the whore of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember, ’a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph’s nose; and ’a said it was a black soul burning in hell?

Bard. Well, the fuel is gone that maintained that fire, that is all the riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog? the king will be gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let’s away.—My love, give me thy lips.

Look to my chattels, and my moveables:
Let senses rule; the word is, “Pithec and pay;”

Trust none;
For oaths are straw, men’s faiths are wafer-cakes, And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck:
Therefore, avete be thy counsellor.

Go, clear thy crystals.—Yoke-fellows in arms,
Let us to France: like horse-leeches, my boys, To suck, to suck; the very blood to suck!

Boy. And that is but unwholesome food, they say.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farewell, hostess. [Kissing her.

Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but adieu. [command.

Farewell; adieu. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—France. A Room in the French King’s Palace.

Flourish. Enter the French King attended; the Dauphin, the Duke of Burgundy, the Constable, and Others.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power upon us, and more than carefully it us concerns,
To answer royally in our defences.
Therefore the dukes of Berry, and of Bretagne, Of Brabant, and of Orleans, shall make forth, And you, prince Dauphin, with all swift dispatch,
To line, and new repair, our towns of war
With men of courage, and with means defendant: For England his approaches makes as fierce, As waters to the sucking of a gulph.
It fits us, then, to be as provident
As fear may teach us, out of late examples
Left by the fatal and neglected English Upon our fields.

Dau. My most redoubted father, It is most meet we arm us’gainst the foe;
For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom, (Though war, nor no known quarrel, were in question) But that defences, munsters, preparations, Should be maintain’d, assembled, and collected, As were a war in expectation.

Therefore, I say, ’tis meet we all go forth, To view the sick and feeble parts of France; And let us do it with no show of fear; No, with no more, than if we heard that England Were busied with a Whitson morris dance;
For, my good liege, she is so lofty king’d, Her reception so magnanimously borne
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth, That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, prince Dauphin! You are too much mistaken in this king.

Question your grace the late ambassadors, With what great state he heard their embassy, How well supplied with noble counsellors, How modest in exception, and, withal,
How terrible in constant resolution, And you shall find, his vanities forespent Wereto but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly; As gardeners do with ordure to those roots That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Dau. Well, ’tis not so, my lord high constable; But though we think it so, it is no matter: In cases of defence, ’tis best to weigh The enemy more mighty than he seems, So the proportions of defence are fill’d; Which, of a weak and rigidly projection, Doth like a miser, spoil his coat with scanting A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we king Harry strong? And, princes, look, you strongly arm to meet him. The kindred of him hath been flesh’d up upon us, And he is bred out of that bloody strain,
That haunted us in our familiar paths: Witness our too much memorable shame, When Cressy battle fatally was struck, And all our princes captiv’d by the hand Of that black name, Edward black prince of Wales;

1 The chrisom, was a white cloth placed upon the head of a child after it was anointed with the chrisom, or sacred oil. The name was afterwards given to the white cloth in which the child was wrapped at the ceremony, and which was used as its shroud, if it died within a month of its birth. Children so dying were called Chriseus, in the old bills of mortality. 2 The old copy read:—a table of green fields; which Theobald conjecturally altered to: “a babbled of green fields.”
Whilst that his mighty sire, on mountain standing,
Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,
Saw his herculean seed, and smil'd to see him,
Mangle the work of nature, and deface
The patterns that by God, and by French fathers,
Had twenty years been made. This is a stem
Of that victorious stock; and let us fear
The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Harry King of England
Do crave admittance to your majesty.
Fr. King. We'll give them present audience. Go, and bring them.

Exeunt Mess. and certain Lords.

You see, this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.

Dau. Turn head, and stop pursuit; for coward dogs
Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,
Take up the English short, and let them know
Of what a monarch you are the head:
Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with Exeter and Train.

Fr. King. From our brother of England?
Exe. From him; and thus he greets your majesty.
He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divest yourself, and lay apart
The borrowed glories, that by gift of heaven,
By law of nature, and of nations, long
To him, and to his heirs; namely, the crown,
And all wide-stretched honours that pertain,
By custom and the ordinance of times,
Unto the crown of France. That you may know,
'T is no sinister, nor no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd,
He sends you this most memorable line,

[Giving a pedigree.

In every branch truly demonstrative;
Willing you overlook this pedigree,
And when you find him evenly deriv'd
From his most fam'd of famous ancestors,
Edward the third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held
From him, the native and true challenger.
Fr. King. Or else what follows?
Exe. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown
Even in your hearts, there will he rage for it:
Therefore, in fierce tempest is he coming,

In thunder, and in earthquake, like a Jove,
That, if requiring fail, he will compel:
And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,
Deliver up the crown, and to take mercy
On the poor souls, for whom this hungry war
Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head
Turning the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,
The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans,
For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers,
That shall be swallowed'd in this controversy.
This is his claim, his threat'nig, and my message;
Unless the Dauphin be in presence here,
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.
Fr. King. For us, we will consist of this farther:
To-morrow shall you bear our full intent
Back to our brother of England.

Dau. For the Dauphin,
I stand here for him: what to him from England?

Exe. Scorn, and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misbecome
The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus says my king: and, if your father's highness
Do not, in grant of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,
He'll call you to so hot an answer of it,
That caves and wony vaul'tings of France
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent of his ordinance.

Dau. Say, if my father render fair return,
It is against my will: for I desire
Nothing but odds with England: to that end,
As matching to his youth and vanity,
I did present him with the Paris balls.

Exe. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe.
And, be assur'd, you'll find a difference,
As we his subjects have in wonder found,
Between the promise of his greener days,
And these he masters now. Now he weighs time,
Even to the utmost grain; that you shall read
In your own losses, if he stay in France.

Fr. King. To-morrow shall you know our mind at full.

Exe. Despatch us with all speed, lest that our king
Come here himself to question our delay,
For he is footed in this land already.

Fr. King. You shall be soon despatch'd with fair conditions.

A night is but small breath, and little pause,
To answer matters of this consequence.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Thus with imag'd wing our swift scene flies,
In motion of no less celerity
Than that of thought. Suppose, that you have seen
The well-appointed king at Hampton p'cer
Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phaebus fanning;
Play with your fancies, and in them behold,
Upon the haenpen tackle ship-boys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus'd: beheld the threaden sails,
Blown 2 with th' invisible and creeping wind,

1 in f. e. 2 Borne: in f. e.

Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,
Breasting the lofty surge. O! do but think,
You stand upon the rivage, and behold
A city on th' inconstant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harfleur. Follow, follow!
Grapple your minds to stertage of this navy;
And leave your England, as dead midnight .

Guarded with grand'ises, babies, and all women,
Either past, or not arriv'd to, pith and puissance:
For who is he, whose chin is but curli'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These cu'ld and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?
Work, work your thoughts, and therein see a siege:
Behold the ordnance on their carriages,
With fatal mouths gaping on girded Harfleur,
Suppose, th’ ambassador from the French comes back;
Tells Harry that the king doth offer him
Katharine his daughter; and with her, to dowry,
Some petty and unprofitable dower.
The offer likes not; and the nimble paragon
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,
[Alarum; and Chambers go off.
And down goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind. [Exit.

SCENE I.—France. Before Harfleur.

Aalarums. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Gloster, and Soldiers, with Scaling Ladders.

K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead!
In peace, there’s nothing so becomes a man; As modest stillness, and humility;
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-fav’rd rage:
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o’erwhelm it,
As fearfully, as doth a galled rock
O’erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill’d with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide;
Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit
To his full height!—Oh, on, on, you noblest English!
Whose blood is as the English Parliament’s war-proof,
Fathers, that, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn till even fought,
And shear’d their swords for lack of argument.
Dishonour not your mothers: now attest,
That those whom you call’d fathers did beget you.
Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war.—And you, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
The mettle of your pasture: let us swear
That you are worth your breeding; which I doubt not,
For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the starting. The day’s at one:
Fellow your spirit; and upon this charge,
Cry—God for Harry! England! and Saint George!
[Exeunt. Aalarum, and Chambers go off.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Forces pass over; then enter Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy.

Bard. Oh, on, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!

Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay: the knockers are too hot;
And for mine own part, I have not a case of lives; the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.

Pist. The plain song is most just, for humours do abound;
Knocks go and come,
To all and some;
God’s vassals feel the same;
And sword and shield,
In bloody field,
Do’s win immortal fame.

Boy. Would I were in an alehouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale, and safety.

Pist. And I:
If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But thither would I now.

Boy. And as duly,
But not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Up to the breach, you dogs! avants, you culions! [Driving them forward.

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!
Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage;
Abate thy rage, great duke!
Good bawcock, bate thy rage; use lenity, sweet chuck!
Nym. These be good humours!—your honour wins bad humours.

[Fluellen drives out Nym, Pistol, and Bardolph.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashers. I am boy to them all three, but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for, indeed, three such antics do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-livered, and red-faced; by the means whereof, ’a faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol, he hath a killing tongue, and a quiet sword; by the means whereof ’a breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym, he hath heard, that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he swears to say his prayers, lest ’a should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are match’d with as few good deeds; for ’a never broke any man’s head but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal any thing, and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case; bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three halfpence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in-filching, and in Gaol they stole a fire-shovel: I knew by that piece of service the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men’s pockets, as their gloves or their handkerchiefs; which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another’s pocket, to put into mine, for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service: their villany goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up.

[Exit.

Re-enter Fluellen, Gower following.

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines: the duke of Gloster would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines? tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines; for, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war: the cavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, th’ aversary (you may discuss unto the duke, look you) is digged himself four yards under the countermines. By Cheshu, I think, ’a will plow up all, if there is not better di-

Gow. The duke of Gloster, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman; a very valiant gentleman, ’ faith.

Flu. It is captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. I think it be.

Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the world. I will verify as much in his peard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.

Enter Macmorris and Jamy, at a distance.

Gouv. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captain, captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous furious gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition, and knowledge in the ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Chosht, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Jamy. I say, gade day, captain Fluellen.

Flu. Godden to your worship, good captain James.

Gouv. How now, captain Macmorris! have you quit the mines? have the pioneers given o'er?

Mac. By Chris! Ia, tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my hand, I swear, and my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over; I would have blowed up the town, so Chrisht save me, la, in an hour. O! tish ill done, tish ill done; by my hand, tish ill done.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I penseech you now will you vonchesafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the wars, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly, to satisfy my opinion, and partly, for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline: that is the point.

Jamy. It sall be very gude, gude feith, gude captains bath: and I sall quit' you with gude lewe, as I may pick occasion; that sall I marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Chrisht save me. The day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes; it is no time to discourse. The town is besieged, and the trumpet calls us to the breach, and we talk, and, by Chrisht, do nothing: 'tis shame for us all; so God sa' me, 'tis shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand: and there is threats to be cut, and works to be done, and there ish nothing done, so Chrisht sa' me, la.

Jamy. By the mess, ere these eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, aile do gude service, or aile lig' the grand for it; ay, or go to death; and aile pay it as valorously as I may, that sall I surely do, that is the brief and the long. Marry, I wad full faire heard some question 'tween you twa.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—

Mac. Of my nation! What ish my nation? ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal? What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation?

Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, captain Macmorris, peradventure, I shall think you do not touch with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as goot a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of wars, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself; so Chrisht sa' me, I will cut off your head.

Gouv. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Jamy. An! that's a foul fault. [A Parley sounded.

Gouv. The town sounds a parley.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more better opportunity to be required, look you, I will be so bold as to tell you, I know the disciplines of wars; and there is an end.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before the Gates of Harfleur.

Enter King Henry, his Train and Forces. The Governor and some Citizens on the Walls.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town?

This is the latest parle we will admit: Therefore, to our best mercy give yourselves, Or, like to men proud of destruction, Dely us to our worst; for, as I am a soldier, A name that in my thoughts becomes me best,

If I begin the battery once again, I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur,

Till in her ashes she lie buried.

The gates of mercy shall be all shut up;

And the flesh'd soldier, rough and hard of heart,

In liberty of bloody hand shall range

With conscience wide as hell, moving like grass

Your fresh fair virgins, and your flowering infants.

What is it then to me, if impious war,

Array'd in flames like to the prince of fiends,

Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feasts

Enlink'd to waste and desolation?

What is't to me, when you yourselves are cause,

If your pure maidens fall into the hand

Of hot and forcing violation?

What rein can hold licentious wickedness,

When down the hill he holds his fierce career?

We may as booleless spend our vain command

Upon th' enraged soldiers in their spoil,

As send precepts to the Leviathan

To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur,

Take pity of your town, and of your people,

Whilest yet my soldiers are in my command;

Whilest yet the cool and temperate wind of grace

O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds

Of heady murder, spoil, and villainy.

If not, why, in a moment look to see

The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand

Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;

Your fathers taken by the silver beards,

And their most reverend heads dash'd to the walls;

Your naked infants spitted upon pikes,

Whilest the mad mothers with their bowls confus'd

Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry

At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen.

What say you? will you yield, and this avoid,

Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroyed?

Gouv. Our expectation hath this day an end.

The Dauphin, whom of succour we entreated,

Returns us that his powers are not yet ready

To raise so great a siege. Therefore, great king,

We yield our town and lives to thy soft mercy.

Enter our gates; dispose of us, and ours,

For we no longer are defensible.

K. Hen. Open your gates!—Come, uncle Exeter,

Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain. [Gates opened.

And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:

Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,

The winter coming on, and sickness growing

Upon our soldiers, we will retire to Calais.

To-morrow in Harfleur will we be your guest:

To-morrow for the march are we address.

[Flourish. The King isc. enter the Town.

SCENE IV.—Rouen. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Katherine and Alice.

Kath. Alice, tu as esté en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langue.

Alice. Un peu, madame.
Kath. Je te prie, m’enseigne : il faut que j’apprenne à parler. Comment appelles vous la main, en Anglois ?
Alice. La main? elle est appelée, de hand.
Kath. De hand. Et les doigts?
Alice. Les doigts? ma foi, je oublie les doigts ; mais je me souviendrai. Les doigts? je pense, qu’ils sont appelé de fingres; ouy, de fingres.
Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fingres. Je pense, que je suis le bon écolier. J’ai gagné deux mots d’Anglois vistement. Comment appelles vous les ongles ?
Alice. Les ongles ? les appellons, de nails.
Kath. De nails. Ecoutez; dites mot, si je parle bien; et ne donnez pas, de nails.
Alice. C’est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon Anglois.
Kath. Dites moi l’Anglois pour le bras.
Alice. De arm, madame.
Kath. Et le coude.
Alice. De elbow.
Kath. De elbow. Je m’en fais la répétition de tous les mots, que vous avez appris dès à présent.
Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.
Kath. Excuses moi, Alice ; écoutez: de hand, de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arm, de bilbow.
Alice. De elbow, madame.
Kath. O Seigneur Dieu! je m’en oublie; de elbow.
Comment appelles vous le col ?
Alice. De neck, madame.
Kath. De neck: Et le menton ?
Alice. De chin.
Alice. Oui. Savez votre honneur; en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les natifs d’Angleterre.
Kath. Je ne doute point d’apprendre par la grâce de Dieu, et en peu de temps.
Alice. N’avez vous pas déjà oublé ce que je vous ay enseigné ?
Kath. Non, je réciterai à vous promptement. De hand, de fingre, de nails,——
Alice. De nails, madame.
Kath. De nails, de arms, de ilbow.
Alice. Savez vous votre honneur, de elbow.
Kath. Ainsi dis je ; de elbow, de neck, et de sin.
Comment appelles vous le pied et la robe ?
Alice. De foot, madame; et de con.
Kath. De foot, et de con? O Seigneur Dieu! ces mots sont de son mawais, corruptible, grosse, et impudique, et non pour les dames d’honneur d’user. Je ne voudrois prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France, pour tout le monde. Il faut de foot, et de con, néantmoins. Je réciterai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: de hand, de fingre, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de neck, de sin, de foot, de con.
Alice. Excellent, madame !
Kath. C’est assez pour une fois: allons nous à diner. [Exeunt.]"}

SCENE V.—The Same. Another Room in the Same.

Enter the French King, the Dauphin, Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. 'Tis certain, he hath passed the river Somme.

Con. And if he be not fought withal, my lord, Let us not live in France: let us quit all, And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Dau. O Dieu vinent ! Shall a few sprays of us, The emptying of our fathers’ luxury, Our seisons, put in wild and savage stock, Spirit up so suddenly into the clouds, And overlook their graziers?

Bour. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards.

Mort de ma vie! if they march along
Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom,
To buy a slobbery and a dirty farm
In that nook-atomt pamphlet, isle of Albion.

Con. Dieu de batailles! where have they this mettle?
Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull,
On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale,
Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sudden water,
A drench for sun-rein’d jades, their barley broth,
Dessert of their own body, and bane of man?
And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,
Seem frosty? O! for honour of our land,
Let us not hang like roping ieciles
Upon our houses’ thatch, whiles a more frosty people
Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields,
Poor we may call them, in their native lords.

Dau. By faith and honour,
Our madams mock at us; and plainly say,
Our mettle is bred out; and they will give
Their bodies to the lust of English youth,
To new-store France with bastard warriors.

Bour. They bid us to the English dancing-schools,
And teach lavoltes’ high, and swift coranios;
Saying, our only hope, our only heart,
And that we are most lofty runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjoy, the herald? speed him hence;
Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.
Up, princes! and, with spirit of honour, edged
More sharper than your swords, hie to the field.
Charles De-la-bret, high constable of France;
You dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berry,
Alençon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy;
Jaques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,
Beaumont, Grandpré, Rouassi, and Fauconberg,
Poix, Lestrale, Bouciquault, and Charolais;
High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights,
For your great states, now quit you of great shame.
Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land
With penmons painted in the blood of Harleur;
Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow
Upon the valleys, whose low vassal seat
The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon.
Go, down upon him,—you have power enough,—
And in a captive chariot into Rouen,
Bring him our prisoner.

Con. This becomes the great.
Sorry am I, his numbers are so few,
His soldiers sick, and famish’d in their march,
For, I am sure, when he shall see our army,
He’ll drop his heart into the sink of fear,
And for achievement offer us his ransom.

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Montjoy;
And let him say to England, that we send
To know what willing ransom he will give.—
Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.

Dau. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.

Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us.—
Now, forth, lord constable, and princes all,
And quickly bring us word of England’s fall. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The English Camp in Picardy.

Enter Gower and Fluellen.

Gow. How now, captain Fluellen? come you from the bridge?

---

1 An island that shoots out into capes and promontories.
2 An Italian dance resembling a waltz.
Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent services committed at the bridge.

Gow. Is the duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and a man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my uttermost power: he is not (God be praised, and pandered!) any hurt in the world; but keeps the pride most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an ancient, lieutenant, there, at the bridge.—I think, in my very conscience, he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony, and he is a man of no estimation in the world: but I did see him do as gallant service.

Gow. What do you call him?

Flu. He is called ancient Pistol.

Gow. I know him not.

Enter Pistol.

Flu. Here is the man.

Pist. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours: The duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise Got; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a soldier firm and sound of heart, And buxom value, hath, by cruel fate And giddy fortune's furious fickle wheel, That goddess blind, That stands upon the rolling restless stone,—

Flu. By your patience, ancient Pistol. Fortune is painted plインド, with a muffer afore her eyes, to signify to you that fortune is plインド; and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and mutability, and variation: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a sphorical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls. In good truth, the poet makes a most excellent description of it: fortune is an excellent moral.

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on him: For he hath stol'n a pac, and hanged must a be. A damned death!

Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free,
And let not hemp his wine-pipe succotane.
But Exeter hath given the doom of death,
For pacz of little price:
Therefore, go speak to the duke will hear thy voice, And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut.

With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach:
Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee requece.

Flu. Ancient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Pist. Why then, rejoice therefore.

Flu. Certainly, ancient, it is not a thing to rejoice at; for, if look, you were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure, and put him to execution, for discipline ought to be used.

Pist. Die and be damned; and fie for thy friendship!

Flu. It is well.

Pist. The sig of Spain! [Exit Piston; making the [sign],

Flu. Very good.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal: I remember him now; a bawd; a cutpurse.

Flu. I'll assure you, a utter'd as prave words at the bridge, as you shall see in a summer's day. But it is very well, what he has spoken to me; that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why, it's a gull, a rogue; a that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself at his return into London under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders' names, and they will learn you by rote where services were done:—at such and such a scence, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on: and this they can perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with new-coined oaths: and what a heard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such sliders of the age, or else you may be marvellously mistook.

The captain Gower; I do perceive he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the world he is: if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him my mind. [Drum heard.] Hark you, the king is coming, and I must speak with him from the bridge.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, and Soldiers* sick and tattered.

Flu. Got press your majesty!

K. Hen. How now, Fluellen? can't sthou from the bridge?

Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pride: the French is gone off, look you, and there is gallant and most brave passages. Marry, th' anniversary was have possession of the pride, but he is enforced to retire, and the duke of Exeter is master of the pride. I can tell your majesty, the duke is a brave man.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The pertilion of th' anniversary hath been very great, reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church; one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubbles, and whelps, and knobs, and flames of fire; and his lips plows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes ple, and sometimes red; but his nose is executed, and his fire's out.

K. Hen. We would have all such offenders so cut off: and we give express charge, that in our marches through the country, there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for; none of the French unprapped, or abused in dissemblant language for when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. You know me by my habit.

K. Hen. Well then, I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Mont. My master's mind.

K. Hen. Unfold it.

Mont. Thus says my king:—Say thou to Harry of England, Though we seemed dead, we did but sleep; advantage is a better soldier than rashness. Tell him, we could have rebuked him at Harfleur; but that we thought not good to bruise an injury, till it were full ripe: now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial. England shall repeat his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance. Bid him, therefore, consider of his ransom: which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which, in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under. For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the murther of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add defiance; and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master: so much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mont. Montjoy.

K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back, and tell thy king, I do not seek him now. But could be willing to march on to Calais. Without impeachment; for to say the sooth, though it is no wisdom to confess so much unto an enemy of craft and vantage, my people are with sickness much enfeebled; my numbers lessen'd, and those few I have, almost no better than so many French: who, when they were in health, I tell thee, herald, I thought upon one pair of English legs. Did march three Frenchmen. Yet, forgive me, God, that I do brag thus!—this your air of France hath bewitched me; I must repent. Go, therefore, tell thy master, here I am: my ransom is this frail and worthless trunk, my army but a weak and sickly guard; yet, God before, tell him we will come on, though France himself, and such another neighbour, stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness.

[Exit Montjoy.]

Glo. I hope they will not come upon us now.

K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs. March to the bridge; it now draws toward night. Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves, and on to-morrow bid them march away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The French Camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Rambures, the Duke of Orleans, the Dauphin, and others.

Con. Tut! I have the best armour of the world. Would it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armours.

Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world.

Dau. What a long night is this!—I will not change my horse with any that tread on four pasterns. If ha! he bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were air, le cheval volant, the Pegasus, qui a les marines de feu. When I bestride him, I soar, I am a hawk; he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

Dau. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire, and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness, while his rider mounts him: he is, indeed, a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palfreys: his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath not wit, that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all. 'T is a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world (familiar to us, and unknown) to lay apart their particular functions, and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise, and began thus: "Wonder of Nature!"—

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress. Dau. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my mistress; for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your horse bears well.

Dau. Me well: which is the prescript praise, and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Nay, for methought yesterday, your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dau. So, perhaps, did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. Oh! then, belike, she was old and gentle; and you rode, like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your Strait trowsers.

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dau. Be warned by me, then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bags. I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears her own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sot to my master.

Dau. Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la true lavée au Bourbier: thou makest use of any thing.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress; or any such proverb, so little kin to the purpose.

Ram. My lord constable, the armour, that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars, or sons, upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be: for you bear a many superfluously, an't were more honour some were away.

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well, were some of your brads dismounted.

Dau. Would? I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way; but I would it were morning, for I would fain be about the ears of the English.

Ram. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty prisoners of your mistress?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dau. 'T is midnight: I'll go arm myself. [Exit.]

Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.
Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your ground.

Con. Who hath measured the ground?

Mes. The lord Grandpré.

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman.—Would it were day!—Alas, poor Harry of England!—He longs not for the dawning, as we do.

Orl. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge.

Con. If the English had any apprehension, they would run away.

Orc. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Ram. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures: their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

Orc. Foolish ears! that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crushed like rotten apples. You may as well say that's a valiant idea, that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming on, leaving their wits with their wives: and, then, give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.

Orc. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.

Con. Then shall we find to-morrow they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm: come, shall we about it?

Orc. It is now two o'clock: but, let me see; by ten, We shall have each a hundred Englishmen. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Enter Chorus.

Cho. Now entertain conjecture of a time,
When creeping murmur and the pining dark,
Fills the wide vessel of the universe.
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army stilly sounds,
That the fixed sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch:
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umb'red face:
Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs
Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents,
The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation.
The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning's nam'd.
Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lustful French
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cripple, tardy-gaited night,
Who, like a soul and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away. The poor condemned English,
Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The morning's danger; and their gesture sad,
Investing lank-lean cheeks, and war-worn coats,
Presenteth them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. O! now, who will behold

The royal captain of this ruin'd band,
Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent,
Let him cry—Praise and glory on his head!
For forth he goes, and visits all his host,
Bids them good-morrow with a modest smile,
And calls them brothers, friends, and countrymen.
Upon his royal face there is no note,
How dread an army hath encompassed him,
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watched night;
But freshely looks, and over-bears attendant,
With cheerful semblance, and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his look.
A largess universal, like the sun,
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear, that mean and gentle all,
Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night.
And so our scene must to the battle fly;
Where, O for pity! we shall much disgrace—
With four or five most vile and ragged foils,
Right ill-disposed, in brawl ridiculous,—
The name of Agincourt. Yet, sit and see;
Minding true things by what their mockeries be. [Exit.

SCENE I.—The English Camp at Agincourt.

Enter King Henry, Bedford, and Gloster.

K. Hen. Gloster, 'tis true that we are in great danger;
The greater, therefore, should our courage be.
Good morrow, brother Bedford.—God Almighty! There is some soul of goodness in things evil, would men observing distil it out. For our bad neighbour makes us early stirrers, which is both healthful, and good husbandry: Besides, they are our outward consciences, and preachers to us all:—admonishing, that we should dress us fairly for our end, thus may we gather honey from the weed, and make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham: A good soft pillow for that good white head were better than a churlish turf of France.

Erp. Not so, my liege: this lodging likes me better; since I may say, now lie I like a king. K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present pains, upon example: so the spirit is eased: and when the mind is quenched, out of doubt, the organs, though defunct and dead before, break up their drowsy grave, and newly move with casted slough and fresh levity. Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas.—Brothers both, commend me to the princes in our camp; do my good morrow to them; and, anon, desire them all to my pavilion. Glo. We shall, my liege.

[Exit Gloster and Bedford.

Erp. Shall I attend your grace?

K. Hen. No, my good knight: Go with my brothers to my lords of England: I and my bosom must debate a while, and, then, I would no other company.

Erp. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry! [Exit Erpingham.

K. Hen. God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speakest cheerfully.

Enter Pistol.

Pist. Qui va là?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discuss unto me; art thou officer? Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Traist thou the puissant pike? K. Hen. Even so. What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor. K. Hen. Then you are better than the king.

Pist. The king's a basewitted, and a heart of gold! A lad of life, an imp of fame; Of parents good, of fist most valiant: I kiss his dirty shoe, and from heart-string I love the lovely bully. What's thy name?

Pist. Le Roy! a Cornish name: art thou of Cornish blood?

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman. [Crew.

Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate; Upon Saint David's day, when we enterured that day, last he knocked that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The face for thee then!

K. Hen. I thank you. God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol called.

K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen and Gower, severally.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!

Flu. So, in the name of Cheshu Christ, speak lower. It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and ancient prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept. If you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no fiddle taddle, or pipele pabble, in Pompey's camp: I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him all night.

Flu. If the enemy is an ass and a fool, and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb? in your own conscience now?

Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beseech you, that you will.

K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion, there is much care and valour in his Welshmen.

Enter John Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

Will. A good old commander, and a most kind gentleman. I pray you, what is the name of your estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

K. Hen. No; nor it is not meet he should; for, though I speak it to you, I think the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him, as it doth to me: the element shows to him, as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man, and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing. Therefore, when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his care, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: yet in reason no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may show what outward courage he will; but I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in Thames up to the neck: and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think, he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then, I would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.

K. Hen. I dare say, you love him not so ill; to wish him here alone, howsoever you speak this, to feel other men's minds. Methinks, I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable.

Will. That's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects.
KING HENRY V.

SCENE I.

If his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Will. But, if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make: when all these lords, men of the mettle of a battle, shall join together at the latter day, and cry all—"We died at such a place:" some swearing, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left. I am afraid there are few die well, that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it, whom to disbelieve were against all proportion of subjection.

K. Hen. So, if a son, that is by his father sent about merchandise, do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers, and die in many irreconciled iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation. But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers. Some, peradventure, have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pilg rage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law, and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his bale: war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished, for before-breach of the king's laws, in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away, and where they would be safe, they perish: then, if they die unpardoned, no more is the king guilty of their damnation, than he was before guilty of these impieties for the which they are now punished. Every subject's duty is the king's; and every subject's soul is his own. Therefore, should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience; and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gained: and, in him that escapes, it were not sin to think, that making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head: the king is not to answer it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Hen. I myself heard the king say, he would not be ransomed.

Bates. Ay, he said so to make us fight cheerfully; but when our threats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we ne'er the wiser.

K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then! That's a perilous shot out of an elder gun, that a poor and a private displeasure can do against a monarch. You may as well go about to turn the sun to ice with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after! come, 'tis a foolish saying.

K. Hen. Your reproof is something too round: I should be angry with myself, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.

K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet; then, if ever thou darest acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove: give me another of thine.

K. Hen. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, "This is my glove," by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou darest as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends: we have French quarrels now, if you could tell how to reckon.

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one they will beat us, for they bear them on their shoulders; but it is no English treason to cut French crowns, and to-morrow the king himself will be a clipper.

[Exit Soldiers.

Upon the king! let us our lives, our souls, Our debts, our careful wives, our children, and Our sins, live on the king!—we must bear all.

O hard condition! twin born-with greatness, Subject to the breath of every fool, Whose sense no more can feel, but his own wringing! What infinite heart's ease must kings neglect, That private men enjoy?

And what have kings, that privates have not too, Save ceremony, save general ceremony? And what art thou, thou idol ceremony? What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers? What are thy rents? what are thy comings-in? O ceremony, show me but thy worth! What is thy soul but adulation? Art thou a king; thou art a king, and to that degree, and form, Creating awe and fear in other men, Wherin thou art less happy, being fear'd, Than they in fearing.

What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet, But poison'd flattery? O! be sick, great greatness, And bid thy ceremony give thee cure.

Think'st thou, the fiery fever will go out With titles blown from adulation? Will it give place to flexure and low bending? Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee, Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream, That play'st so subtly with a king's repose: I am a king; that find thee, and I know, That is not the haute acceit, and the ball, The sword, the mace, the crown imperial, The inter-tissue robe of gold and pearl, The farced title running fore the king, The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp That beats upon the high shore of this world; No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony, Not all these laid in bed majestical, Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave, Who, with a body fill'd, and vacant mind, Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distasteful bread,
Never sees horrid night, the child of hell,
But, like a lackey, from the rise to set,
Sweats in the eye of Phœbus, and all night
Sleeps in Elysium; next day, after dawn,
Doth rise and help Hyperion to his horse,
And follows so the ever running year
With profitable labour to his grave:
And, but for ceremony, such a wretch,
Winding up days with toil, and nights with sleep,
Hath the fore-hand and vantage of a king.
The slave, a member of the country's peace,
Enjoys it, but in gross brain little wots,
What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,
Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Enter Erpingham.

Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence,
Seek through your camp to find you.
K. Hen. Good old knight,
Collect them all together at my tent:
I'll be before thee.
Erp. I shall do 't, my lord.
K. Hen. O, God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts!
Possess them not with fear; take from them now
The sense of reckoning; it's th' opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them!—Not to-day, O Lord!
O! not to-day, think not on the fault
My father made in compassing the crown.
I Richard's body have interred new,
And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears,
Than from it issued forced drops of blood.
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold up
Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built
Two chantries, where the sad and solemn priests
Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do;
Though all that I can do is nothing worth,
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. My liege!
K. Hen. My brother Gloster's voice?—Ay;
I know thy errand, I will go with thee.—
The day, my friends, and all things stay for me.

Scene II.—The French Camp.

Enter Dauphin, Orleans, Ramuriers, and others.

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour: up, my lords!
Dau. Montez à cheval!—My horse! valet la cavray! ha!
Orl. O brave spirit!
Dau. Voici!—les eaux et la terre!
Orl. Rien puis? E'stce et le feu!
Dau. Ciel! cousin Orleans.

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord Constable!
Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh.
Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their hides,
That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And doubt them with superfluous courage: Ha!
Ram. What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?
How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.
Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!
Do but behold you poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales* and husks of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins,

To give each naked curtle-ax a stain,
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheath for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,
The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.
*T is positive gain all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battles, were enow
To purge this field of such a hilding foe,
Though we upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honours must not.
What's to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then, let the trumpets sound
The tucket-sonnance*, and the note to mount:
For our approach shall so much dare the field,
That England shall crouch down in fear, and yield.

Enter Grandpere.

Grand. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
Yon island carrioles, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favour'dly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully.
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps.
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hands,* and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips,
The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouths the gimmal* bit
Lies, fowl with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words,
To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Con. They have said their prayers, and they stay for
Dau. Shall we go send them dinners, and fresh suits,
And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them?
Con. I stay but for my guard. On, to the field!
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day.

Scene III.—The English Camp.

Enter all the English Host; Gloster, Bedford, Exeter, Salisbury, and Westmoreland.

Glo. Where is the king?
Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.
West. Of fighting men they have full three-score thousand.

Ezr. There's five to one; besides, they all are fresh.
Sal. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.
God be with you, princes all; I'll to my charge:
If we no more meet, till we meet in heaven,
Then, joyfully—my noble lord of Bedford,—
My dear lord Gloster,—and my good lord Exeter,—
And my kind kinsman,—warriors all, adieu!
Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!
Ezr. Farewell, kind lord. Fight valiantly to-day:
And yet I do thee wrong, to mind thee of it,
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.

Exeunt Salisbury.

Bed. He is as full of valour, as of kindness;
Primely in both.
West. O! that we now had here

---

1 of: in folio: which Singer retains, removing the period from the middle of the next line to its close.
2 Shells.
3 The blast of a trumpet.
4 Candlesticks were often made in the figure of a knight, the candle being set in the hand.
5 Double.
Enters King Henry.

But one ten thousand of those men in England,
That do no work to-day.

K. Hen. What's he, that wishes so?
My cousin Westmoreland?—No, my fair cousin:
If we are mark'd to die, we are now
To do our country loss; and if to live,
The fewer men, the greater share of honour.

God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold;
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost;
It yearns 1 me not if men my garments wear;
Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
But, if it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending soul alive.

No, 'tis faith, my coze, wish not a man from England:
God's peace! I would not lose so great an honour,
As one man more, methinks, would share from me,
For the best hope I have. O! do not wish one more:
Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,
That he, which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convoy put into his purse:
We will not die in this man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us.

This day is call'd—the feast of Crispian:
He, that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd, 2
And rouse him at the name of Crispian.

He, that shall live this day, and see 3 old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his friends,
And say—toward the Saint Crispian:
Then will he strip his sleeve, and show his scars.
Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But he'll remember with advantages
What feats he did that day. Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouths as household words,—
Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Glaster,—
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.
This story shall the good man teach his son,
And Crispian Crispian shall never go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remembered;

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers:
For he, to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother: be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle 4 his condition:
And gentlemen in England, now a-bed,
Shall think themselves accurs'd they were not here,
And hold their manhoods cheap, whilst any speaks
That fought with us upon Saint Crispian's day.

Sol. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:
The French are bravely in their battles set,
And with all expedience charge on us.

K. Hen. All things are ready, if our minds be so.
West. Perish the man whose mind is backward now!
K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England, cousin?

West. God's will! my liege, would you and I alone,
Without more help, might fight this royal battle.

K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand
Which likes me better than to wish us one.—[men,
You know your places. Good be with you all!
Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, king Harry,
SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field of Battle.

Retreat sounded. [Enter Davipson, Orleans, Bourbon, Constable, Rambures, and others.]

Con. O diable! Orl. O seigneur! le jour est perdu! tout est perdu! Deu. Mort de ma vie! all is confounded, all!

Reproach and everlasting shame
Sit mocking in our plumes.—O méchante fortune!—

Do not run away. [A short Alarum.]

Con. Why, all our ranks are broke. Deu. O perdurable shame!—let's stab ourselves.

Boe these the wretches that play'd at dice for? Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom? Boure. Shame, and eternal shame, nothing but shame!

Let us not fly. !—in! Once more back again;
And he that will not follow Bourbon now,
Let him go hence, and, with his cap in hand,
Like a base pandar, hold the chamber-door,
Whilst by a slave, no gentler than my dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminate.

Con. Disorder, that hath spoil'd us, friend us now! Let us in haps go offer up our lives.

Orl. We are enough, yet living in the field,
To smoother up the English in our throngs,
If any order might be thought upon.

Bour. The devil take order now! I'll to the throng;
Let life be short, else shame will be too long. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Another part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter King Henry and Forces; Exeter and others.

K. Hen. Well, have we done, thrice valiant countrymen;
But all is not done; yet keep the French the field.

Exe. The duke of York commends him to your majesty.

K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle? thence within this hour
I saw him down, thrice up again, and fighting;
From helmet to the spur all blood he was.

Exe. In which array, brave soldier, doth he lie, Loading the plain; and by his bloody side,
(Young fellow to his honour-saving wounds)
The noble earl of Suffolk also lies.

Suffolk first died: and York, all haggled over;
Came to him, where in gore he lay insceip'd,
And takes him by the beard, kisses the gashes,
That bloodily did yawn upon his face;
He cries aloud. —Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk! My soul shall thine keep company to heaven;
Tarry, sweet soul, for mine; then fly a-breast,
As in this glorious and well-foughten field,
We kept together in our chivalry.]

Upon these words I came and cheer'd him up:
He smil'd me in the face, raught me his hand,
And, with a feeble grip, says, "Dear my lord,
Command my service to my sovereign."

So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck
He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips;
And so, espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd
A testament of noble-ending love.

The pretty and sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd;
But I had not so much of man in me,
But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears.

K. Hen. I blame you not;
For, hearing this, I must perforce compound

1 A name for a sword. 2 The cave in which the bowels are wrapped.—Cato's Dic., 1677. 3 An allusion to the Old Morallities in which the devil usually took part. 4 Alarums: in f. e. 5 Let us die instant: in f. e. 6 Larding: in f. e.
SCENE VII.

With mistful eyes, or they will issue too.—[Alarum.

But, hark! what new alarum is this same?—
The French have reinforce'd their scatter'd men:—
Then, every soldier kill his prisoners!
Give the word through.

[Exit.

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Flu. Kill the poys and the luggage! 'tis expressly against the law of arms: 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offered. In your conscience now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certain, there's not a boy left alive; and the cowardly rascals, that ran from the battle, have done this slaughter: besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent; wherefore the king most worthy hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. O! 'tis a gallant king.

Flu. Ay, he was born at Monmouth, captain Gower.

What call you the town's name, where Alexander the pig was born?

Gow. Alexander the great.

Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig, great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnan-mimous, are all one reckonings; save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think, Alexander the great was born in Macedon: his father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think, it is in Macedon, where Alexander is perish'd. I say to you, captain,—if you look in the maps of the world, I warrant, you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon, and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth: it is called Wye at Monmouth, but it is out of my prains, what is the name of the other river; but 'tis all one,
't is alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there:
is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well,
Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander, God knows, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wrathes, and his cholers, and his moods; and his dis-pleasures, and his indignations, and also being a little indegious, did, in biles and his angers, look you, kill his pest friend, Clytus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that: he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finished.
I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: as Alexander killed his friend Clytus, being in his ales and his cups, so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgments, turned away the fat knight with the great pelly-doublet: he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaveryes, and mocks; I have forgot his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he. I'll tell you, there is goot men born at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

Alarum. Enter King Henry, with a Part of the English Forces and Prisoners; Warwick, Gloster,
Exeter, and others.

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France

Until this instant.—Take a trumpet, herald;
Ride thou unto the horsemen on yond' hill:
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field; they do offend our sight.

[If they'll do neither, we will come to them,
And make them skirr away, as swift as stones
Enforced from the old Assyrian slings.

Besides, I'll cut the throats of those we have;
And not a man of them that we shall take,
Shall taste our mercy.—Go, and tell them so.

[Enter Montjoy.

Exe. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

Glo. His eyes are humbler than they us'd to be.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald? know'st thou not,

That I have find'd these bones of mine for ransom?
Com'st thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king: I come to thee for charitable license,
That we may wander o'er this bloody field,
To look our dead, and then to bury them;
To sort our nobles from our common men;
For many of our princes, woe the while!
Lien drove'd and sook'd in mercenary blood;

So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes, and their wounded steeds
Fret fretlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,
Killing them twice. O! give us leave, great king,
To view the field in safety, and dispose
Of their dead bodies.

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald,
I know not if the day be ours, or no;
For yet a many of your horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.

K. Hen. Praiseth be God, and our strength, for it!

What is this castle call'd, that stands hard by?

Mont. They call it Agincourt,

K. Hen. Then call we this the field of Agincourt,

Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the plack prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles,

Fought a most brave pattle here in France.

K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true. If your majesty is enquired of it, the Welshmen did good service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps, which your majesty knows, to this hour is an honourable padge of the service; and, I do believe, your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour;
For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welsh plood out of your body, I can tell you that: Got pless it, and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Cheeshu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the world:
I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be
God, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so!—Our heralds go with him:

Bring me just notice of the numbers dead,
On both our parts.—Call yonder fellow hither.

[Points to WILLIAMS. Exeunt Montjoy and others.

Exe. Soldier, you must come to the king.

K. Hen. Soldier, why wear'st thou that glove in thy cap?

Will. An't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman?

Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal that swagged with me last night; who, if 'tis a live, and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' the ear; or, if I can see my glove in his cap, (which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear, if alive) I would strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you, captain Fluellen? Is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a craven and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my presence.

K. Hen. It may be, his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as goot a gentlemen as the devil is, as Lucifer and Belzebuth himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath. If he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is asarrant a villain, and a Jack-sauce, as ever his placd shoe trod upon Got's ground and his earth, in my conscience, la.

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meet'st the fellow.

Will. So I will, my liege, as I live.

K. Hen. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under Captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a goot captain, and is goot knowledge, and literatururd in the wars.

K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my liege.

[Exit.]

K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap. When Alençon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alençon, and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost me love.

Flu. Your grace does me as great honours, as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove, that is all; but I would fain see it once, and the soldier strike of his grace, that I might see.

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?

Flu. He is my dear friend, and please you.

K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him.

[Exit.

K. Hen. My lord of Warwick, and my brother

Gloster,

Follow Fluellen closely at the heels.

The glove, which I have given him for a favour,
May happily purchase him a box o' the ear:
It is the soldier's; I, by bargain, should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick:
If that the soldier strike of his grace, I will
By his blunt bearing, he will keep his word
Some sudden mischief may arise of it,
For I do know Fluellen valiant,
And, touch'd with choleric, hot as gunpowder,
And quickly will return an injury:
Follow, and see there be no harm between them.—
Go you with me, uncle of Exeter.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Before King Henry's Pavillion.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, captain.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Got's will and his pleasure, captain, I pesech you now, come apace to the king: there is more got toward you, peradventure, than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove?

Flu. Know the glove? I know, the glove is a glove.

Will. I know this, and thus I challenge it.

Flu. 'Shlood! an arrant traitor, as any's in the universal world, or in France, or in England.

Gow. How now, sir! you villain!

Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand away, captain Gower! I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That's a lie in thy throat.—I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him: he is a friend of the duke Alençon's.

Enter Warwick and Gloster.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Flu. My lord of Warwick, here is, praised be God for it! a most contemptuous treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

Enter King Henry and Exeter.

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter?

Flu. My liege, here is a villain, and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alençon.

Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it; and he that I gave it to, in strange promised to wear it in his cap: I promised to strike him if he did.

I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now, saving your majesty's manhood, what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lowey knave it is. I hope your majesty is near me testimony, and witness, and avouchments, that this is the glove of Alençon, that your majesty is give me, in your conscience now.

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier: look, here is the fellow of it.

'T was I, indeed, thou promisedst to strike;
And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. An please your majesty, let his answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world.

K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my lord, come from the heart: never came any from mine, that might offend your majesty.

K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse.

Will. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you, take it for your own fault, and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I had made no offence; therefore, I beseech you highness, pardon me.

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with crowns,
And give it to this fellow.—Keep it, fellow,
And wear it for an honour in thy cap,
Till I do challenge it.—Give him the crowns.—
And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his belly.—Hold, there is twelve pence for you, and I pray you to serve Got, and keep you out of praws, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dissensions; and, I warrant you, it is the better for you.

Will. I will none of your money.

Flu. It is with a good will. I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes: come, wherefore should you be so pashful? your shoes is not so goot: it is a goot silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.
Enter an English Herald.

K. Hen. Now, herald, are the dead number'd? Her. Here is the number of the slaughter'd French. [Delivers a Paper.]

K. Hen. This note doth tell me of ten thousand French, That in the field lie slain: of princes, in this number, And nobles bearing banners, there lie dead [Reads: One hundred and twenty-six: added to these, Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen, Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which, Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd knights: So that, in these ten thousand they have lost, There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries; The rest are princes, barons, lords, knights, squires, And gentlemen of blood and quality. The names of those their nobles that lie dead— Charles De-la-bret, high constable of France; Jacques Chatillon, admiral of France; The master of the cross-bows, lord Rambures; [pbn; Great-master of France, the brave sir Guisachau Dau- John duke of Alençon; Antony duke of Brabant, The brother to the duke of Burgundy; And Edward duke of Bar: of lusty ears, Grandpré, and Roussi, Fauconberg, and Foix, Beaumont, and Marle, Vaudemont, and Lestrale.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Vouchsafe all those that have not read the story, That I may prompt them: and for such as have, I humbly pray them to admit th' excuse Of time, of numbers, and due course of things, Which cannot in their huge and proper life Be here presented. Now, we bear the king Toward Calais: grant him there; those seen, Heave him away upon your winged thoughts, Athwart the sea. Behold, the English beach Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys, Whose shouts and claps out-voise the deep-mouth'd sea, Which, like a mighty whiffeter!, 'fore the king Seems to prepare his way. So, let him land, And solemnly see him set on to London. So swift a pace hath thought, that even now You may imagine him upon Blackheath; Where, that his lords desire him, to have borne Hisbruised helmet, and his bended sword, Before him, through the city, he fords it, Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride, Giving full trophy, signal, and ostent, Quite from himself, to God. But now behold, In the quick forge and workinghouse of thought, How London doth pour out her citizens. The mayor, and all his brethren, in best sort, Like to the senators of th' antique Rome, With the plebeians swarming at their heels, Go forth, and fetch their conquering Caesar in: As, by a lower but by loving likelihood, Were now the general of our gracious empress —

Here was a royal fellowship of death! — Where is the number of our English dead? [Herald presents another Paper.]

Edward the duke of York, the earl of Suffolk, Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam, esquire: None else of name, and of all other men But five and twenty. O God! thy arm was here. [Kneeling.]

And not to us, but to thy arm alone, Ascribe we all.—[Rising.] When, without stratagem, But in plain shock, and even play of battle, Was ever known so great and little loss, On one part and on th' other?—Take it, God, For it is only thine!

K. Hen. Come, go we in procession to the village: And be it death, proclaimed through our host, To boast of this, or that praise from God, Which is his only.

Flu. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed? K. Hen. Yes, captain; but with this acknowledgment, That God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good. K. Hen. Do we all holy rites: Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum. The dead with charity enclos'd in clay, And then to Calais; and to England then, Where nè'er from France arriv'd more happy men. [Exit.]

ACT V.

[As in good time he may] from Ireland coming, Bringing rebellion broached on his sword, How many would the peaceful city quit, To welcome him! much more, and much more cause, Did they this Harry. Now, in London place him. As yet the lamentation of the French Invites the king of England's stay at home: The emperor's coming in behalf of France, To order peace between them; and omit All the occurrences, whatever chan'd; Till Harry's back-return again to France: There must we bring him: and myself have play'd The interim, by remembering you, it is past. Then brook abridgment, and your eyes advance, After your thoughts, straight back again to France. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—France. An English Court of Guard. Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Flu. There is occasions, and causes, why and wherefore, in all things: I will tell you, as my friend, captain Gower. The rascally, scald, beggarly, lewry, praging knave, Pistol, which you and yourself, and all the world, know to be no better than a fellow, look you now, of no merits, he is come to me, and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and bid me eat my leek. It was in a place where I could not breed no contention with him; but I will be so bold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Gow. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.
Enter Pistol.

Flu. 'T is no matter for his swellings, nor his turkey-cocks.—Got pless you, ancient Pistol! you scurvy, lowly knave, Got pless you!

Pist. Ha! art thou bedlam? dost thou thurst, base Trojan,

To have me fold up Parea's fatal web? Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Flu. I persecute you heartily, scurvy lowly knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek; because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites, and your digestions, does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader, and all his goats.

Flu. There is one goat for you. [Strikes him.] Will you be so gott, scald knave, as eat it?

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Flu. You say very true, scald knave, when God's will is. I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals: come, there is sauce for it. [Striking him again.] You called me yesterday, mountain-squire, but I will make you to-day a squire of low degree!—I pray you, fall to: if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain: you have astonished him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days.—Plee, I pray you; it is got for your green wound, and your bloody coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly, and out of doubt, and out of question too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge. I eat, and eat I swear—

Flu. Eat, I pray you. Will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swallow.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel: thou dost see, I eat.

Flu. Much gott do you, scald knave, heartily. Nay, pray you, throw none away; the skin is got for your broken coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at 'em; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is gott.—Hold you; there is a great to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a great!

Flu. Yes; verily, and in truth, you shall take it, or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy great in earnest of revenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing I will pay you in cudgels: you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God be wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate. [Exit.

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. When you mock at an ancient tradition, begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predecessor valour, and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleek[1] and galling at this gentlemen twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel? you find it otherwise; and, henceforth, let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition.

Flu. It may do well. [Exit.

Pist. Doth fortune play the huswife with me now? News have I, that my Nell is dead i' the spital, Of malady of France;
And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.
Old I do wax, and from my weary limbs
Honour is cudgelled. Well, bawd I'll turn,
And something lean to cupurse of quick hand.
To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:
And patches will I get unto these cudgell'd scars.
And swear, I got them in the Gallia wars. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Troyes in Champagne. An Apartment in the French King's Palace.

Enter, at one door, King Henry, Bedford, Glouster, Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, and other Lords; at another, the French King, Queen Isabel, the Princess Katharine, Lords, Ladies, &c., the Duke of Burgundy, and his Train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met. Unto our brother France, and to our sister, Health and fair time of day:—joy and good wishes To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine:— And, as a branch and member of this royalty, By whom this great assembly is contriv'd, We do salute you, duke of Burgundy:— And, princes French, and peers, health to you all.

Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your face, Most worthy brother England: fairly met:— So are you, princes English, every one. Q. Isa. So happy be the issue, brother England, Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting, As we are now glad to behold your eyes; Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them Against the French, that met them in their bent, The fatal balls of murdering basiliks: The venom of such looks, we fairly hope, Have lost their quality, and that this day Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.

K. Hen. To cry amen to that we appear. Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you. Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love, Great kings of France and England, that I have labour'd With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavours, To bring your most imperial majesties Unto this bar and royal interview, Your mightiness on both parts best can witness. Since, then, my office hath so far prevail'd, That face to face, and royal eye to eye, You have congregated, let it not disgrace me, If I demand before this royal view,

What rub, or what impediment, there is, Why that the naked, poor, and mangled peace, Dear nurse of arts, plenty, and joyful births, Should not in this best garden of the world, Our fertile France lift up her lovely visage? Alas! she hath from France too long been chas'd, And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps, Corruption in its own fertility. Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,

Unpruned dies: her hedges even-pleached[2], Like prisoners wildy overgrown with hair;
Put forth disorder'd twigs: her fallow leas The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory, Do root upon, while that the coulter rusts, That should deracinate such savagery:
The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth The fickled cowslip, burnet, and green clover, Wanting the sower, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceits by idleness, and nothing teems,

[This is the title of an old English romance. This and the fifty-five following lines are not in quarto. put: in t. e. 1 Flatted, interwoven. 2]
But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility;
And as our vineyards, fallows, meads, and hedges,
Defective in their natures, grow to wildness;
Even so our houses, and ourselves, and children,
Have lost, or do not learn, for want of time,
The sciences that should become our country,
But grow, like savages,—as soldiers will
That would not do but meditate on blood,—
To swearing, and stern looks, diffus'd attire,
And every thing that seems unnatural.
Which to reduce into our former favour,
You are assembled; and my speech entreats,
That I may know the let, why gentle peace
Should not expel these inconveniences,
And bless us with her former qualities.
K. Hen. If, duke of Burgundy, you would the peace,
Whose want gives growth to th' imperfections
Which you have eft, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenours and particular effects
You have, ensamble'd briefly, in your hands.
But the King hath heard them; to which, as yet,
There is nothing made.
K. Hen. Well then, the peace,
Which you before so urg'd, lies in his answer.
Fr. King. I have but with a cursory eye
O'er-glan'd the articles: pleaseth your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them, we will suddenly
Pass, or accept, and peremptory answer.
K. Hen. Brother, we shall.—Go, uncle Exeter,—
And brother Clarence,—and you, brother Glover,—
Warwick, and Huntingdon,—go with the king;
And take with you free power, to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisest best
Shall see advantage,4 for our dignity,
Any thing in, or out of, our demands,
And we'll consign thereto.—Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes, or stay here with us?
Q. Isa. Our gracious brother, I will go with them.
Haply a woman's voice may do some good,
When articles, too nicely urg'd, be stood on.
K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here with us:
She is our capital demand, compris'd
Within the fore-rank of our articles.
Q. Isa. She hath good leave.
[Exeunt all but King Henry, Katharine, and her Gentlewoman.
K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair!
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms,
Such as will enter at a lady's ear,
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?
Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.
K. Hen. O fair Katharine! if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?
Kath. Pardonnez moi; I cannot tell vat is,—like me.
K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate; and you are like an angel.
Kath. Qu' est-il? que je suis semblable à tes anges?
Alise. Oui, vraiment, soyez votre grace, ainsi dit-il.
K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine, and I must not blush to affirm it.
Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.
1 all: in folio. 2 passe our accept: in f. e. 3 advantageable: in f. e. 4
K. Hen. What says she, fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?
Alise. Ouy; dat de tongues de de mans is be full of deceits; dat is de princesses.
K. Hen. The princess is the better English-woman. I' faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding: I am glad thou canst speak no better English; for, if thou couldst, thou wouldst find me such a plain king, that thou wouldst think I had old thy farm. O my crown. I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say—I love you: then, if you urge me farther than to say—Do you in faith? I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; i' faith, do, and so clap hands and a bargain. How say you, lady?
Kath. Sain't vostre honmeur, I understand well.
K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses, or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you offend me: for the one, I have neither words nor measure; and for the other, I have no strength in measure; yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour under the correction of braging he is spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife; or if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off; but, before God, Kate, I cannot look greenly, nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use till urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not sunburnt, that never looks in his glass for love of any thing he sees there, let thine eye be th'y cook. I speak to thee plain soldier: if thou canst love me for this; take me; if not, to say to thee that I shall die, is true; but for thy love, by the Lord, not yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, I take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy, for he perform must do th'e right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places; for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours, they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall, a straight back will stoop, a black beard will turn white, a curled pate will grow bald, a fair face will wither, a full eye will wax hollow; but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon; or, rather, the sun, and not the moon, for it shines bright, and never changes, but keeps its course truly. If thou wouldst have such a one, take me: and take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king; and what sayst thou then to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.
Kath. Is it possible dat I should love de enemy of France?
K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate; but, in loving you, you should love the friend of France, for I love France so well, that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine: and, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine.
Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.
K. Hen. No, Kate? I will fell thee in French, which I am sure will hang upon you more-like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off.—Quand j'ai la possession de France, et quand vous avez la possession de moi, (let me see, what then? Saint Denis be my speed!)—donc vostre est France, et vous êtes miene. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom, as to speak so much more French. I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, le François que vous parlez, est meilleur que l'Anglois que je parle.

K. Hen. No, 'faith, is 't not, Kate; but thy speaking of language, thou art a fool, and must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English? Canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know thou lovest me: and at night when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will, to her, dispraise those parts in me, that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me mercifully, the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou be 'st mine, Kate, (as I have a saving faith within me tells me thou shalt) I get thee with sembling, and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldier-bred. Shall not thou and I, between Saint Dennis and Saint George, compound a boy, half French, half English, that shall go to Constantiopolle, and take the Turk by the beard? shall we not? what sayest thou, my fair flour-de-luce?

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No: 't is hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a boy, and for my English moiety take the word of a king and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon très chère et divine déesse?

Kath. Your majesty have fausse French enough to deceive de most sage damoiselle dat is en France.

K. Hen. Ah! thou art wiser than I thought, Kate. By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate: by which honour I dare not swear, thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempting effect of my visage. Now shew my father's ambition; he was thinking of civil wars when he got me: therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when I come to wo ladies, I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appear: my comfort is, that old age, that ill layer-up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better. And therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say—Harry of England, I am thine: which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will tell thee aloud—England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken music, for thy voice is music, and thy English broken; therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English: will thou have me?

Kath. Dat is, as it shall de vous mon père.

K. Hen. Nay, I will please him well, Kate: it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it shall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I kiss your hand, and I call you my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez! Moi fai, je ne veux point que vous abaissez votre grandeur, en baisant la main d'une vostre indigne serviteure: excusez moi, je vous suppute, mon très puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames, et damoiseilles, pour estre baisées devant leurs nœurs il n'est pas la coutume de France.

K. Hen. Madam, my interpreter, what says she?

Alice. Eux, il n'est pas de fashion pour les ladies de France.—Canst thou tell what is, baiser, in English.

K. Hen. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entend bettre que moi.

K. Hen. It is not a fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say?

Alice. Oui, vraiment.

K. Hen. O, Kate! nice customs curtesy to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places stops the mouths of all found-faults, as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently, and yielding. [Kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them, than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England, than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your father.

Enter the French king and Queen, Burgundy, Bedford, Gloster, Exeter, Westmoreland, and other French and English Lords.

Bur. God save your majesty. My royal cousin, Teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongues are rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her you must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked, and blind. Can you blame her, then, being a maid yet roset over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to

K. Hen. Yet they do wink, and yield, as love is blind and enforces.

Bur. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent winking.

Bur. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids, well summered and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral ties me over to time, and a hot summer; and so I shall catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Bur. As she was before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so: and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness, who cannot see many a fair French city, for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively: the cities turned into a maid, for they are all girdled with maiden walls, that war hath not entered.
K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?
Fr. King. So please you.
K. Hen. I am content, so the maiden cities you talk of, may wait on her; so the maid, that stood in the way of my wish, shall show me the way to my will.
Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.
K. Hen. Is't so, my lords of England?
West. The king hath granted every article:
His daughter, first; and then in sequel, all,
According to their firm proposed natures.
Eze. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this:—
Where your majesty demands,—that the king of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition, in French,—Notre tres cher fils Henry rois d'Angleterre, heretier de France; and thus in Latin.—Præclarissimus filius noster Henricus, rex Angliae, et hæres Franciae.
Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied,
But your request shall make me let it pass.
K. Hen. I pray you, then, in love and dear alliance
Let that one article rank with the rest;
And, thereupon, give me your daughter.
Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her blood raise up
Issue to me, that the contending kingdoms
Of France and England, whose very shores look pale,
With envy of each other's happiness,
May cease their hatred; and this dear conjunction Plant neighbourhood and christian-like accord
In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance
His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.
All. Amen!
K. Hen. Now welcome, Kate:—and bear me wit-
ess all,

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Westminster Abbey.

Dead March. The Corpse of King Henry the Fifth is discovered, lying in state; attended on by the Dukes of BEDFORD, GLOSTER, and EXETER: the Earl of WARWICK, the Bishop of Winchester, Heralds, &c.

Bed. Hung be the heavens with black, yield day to night!
Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky,
And with them scourge the bad revolting stars;
That have consented unto Henry’s death!
Henry the fifth, so famous to live long!
England ne’er lost a king of so much worth.

Glo. England ne’er had a king until his time.
Virtue he had deserving to command:
His brandish’d sword did blind men with his beams;
His arms spread wider than a dragon’s wings;
His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun force bent against their faces.
What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech:
He ne’er lift up his hand, but conquered.

Exc. We mourn in black: why mourn we not in blood?
Henry is dead, and never shall revive,
Upon a wooden coffin we attend;
And death’s dishonourable victory

We with our stately presence glorify,
Like captives bound to a triumphant car.
What! shall we curse the planets of mishap,
That plotted thus our glory’s overthrow?
Or shall we think the subtle-witted French
Conjurors and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,
By magic verses have contriv’d his end?

Win. He was a king, bless’d of the King of kings.
Unto the French the dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be, as was his sight.
The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought:
The church’s prayers made him so prosperous.

Glo. The church! where is it? Had not church-men pray’d,
His thread of life had not so soon decay’d:
None do you like but an effeminate prince,
Whom, like a school-boy, you may over-awe.

Win. Gloster. whate’er we like, thou art protector,
And lookst to command the prince, and realm.
Thy wife is proud; she holdeth thee in awe.
More than God, or religious churchmen may.

Glo. Name no religion, for thou lov’st the flesh;
And ne’er throughout the year of church thou go’st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these jars, and rest your minds in peace.
Let’s to the altar:—Heralds, wait on us,—
Instead of gold, we’ll offer up our arms.
Since arms avail not, now that Henry's dead.
Postierly, await for wretched years,
When at their mothers' moist eyes babes shall suck,
Our isle be made a nourish' salt tears,
And none but women left to wall the dead. —
Henry the fifth! thy ghost I invoke;
Preserve this gem, keep it from civil broils;
Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!
A far more glorious star thy soul will make,
Than Julius Caesar, or bright Cassiope.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to you all.
Sad tidings bring to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture:
Guillem. Champaigne, Rheims, Orleans,
Paris, Guyssors, Poictiers, are all quite lost.
Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's corse?
Speak softly, or the loss of those great towns
Will make him burst his lead, and rise from death.

Glo. Is Paris lost? is Rouen yielded up?
If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost.

Ezr. How were they lost? what treachery was used?
Mess. No treachery; but want of men and money.

Among the soldiers this is muttered,—
That here you maintain several factions;
And whilst a field should be despatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals.
One would have lingering wars with little cost;
Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;
A third man thinks, without expense at all,
By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd.
Awake, awake, English nobility!
Let not sloth dim your honours new-beget.
Crop'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Ezr. Were our tears wanting to this funeral,
These tidings would call forth her flowing tides.
Bed. Me they concern; recent I am of France.
Give me my steed's coat! I'll fight for France.
Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!
Wounds will I lend the French instead of eyes,
To weep our intermisible miseries.

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad mis-

France is revolted from the English quite,
Except some petty towns of no import:
The Dauphin, Charles, is crowned king in Rheims;
The bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;
Reignier, duke of Anjou, doth take his part;
The duke of Alencon delteth to his side.
Ezr. The Dauphin crowned king! all fly to him!
O! whither shall we fly from this reproach?
Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' throats.
Bedford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.
Bed. Glaster, why doubt'st thou of my forwardness?
An army have I musterd in my thoughts,
Whereewith already France is over-run.

3 Mess. My gracious lords, to add to your lament,
Wherewith you now behold king Henry's hearse,
I must inform you of a dismal fight,
Betwixt the stout lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What! wherein Talbot overcame? is't so?
3 Mess. O! no; wherein lord Talbot was o'erthrown:
The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.

The tenth of August last, this dreadful lord,
Retiring from the siege of Orleans,
Having full scarce six thousand in his troop,
By three-and-twenty thousand of the French,
Was round encompassed and set upon.
No leisure had he to current his
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof, sharp stakés, plac'd out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground confusingly,
To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.
More than three hours the fight continued;
Where valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him;
Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew,
The French exclaim'd, the devil was in arms;
All the whole army stood agaz'd on him.
His soldiers, sayng his unaunted spirit,
A Talbot! A Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.
Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up,
If sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward:
He being in the rearward placed behind
With purpose to relieve and follow them,
Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke.
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre:
Enclosed were they with their enemies.
A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back;
Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength,
Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then, I will slay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease,
Whilst such a worthy leadeth wanting aid,
Unto his dastard foe-men is betray'd.

3 Mess. O! no! he lives; but is taken prisoner,
And lord Scales with him, and lord Hungerford:
Most of the rest slaughter'd, or took, likewise.
Bed. His ransom, there is none but I shall pay.
I'll hale the Dauphin headlong from his throne;
His crown shall be the ransom of my friend:
Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours:
Farewell, my masters; to my task will I.
Bonfires in France with forth I am to make,
To keep our great Saint George's feast withal:
Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take;
Whose bloody deeds shall cause all Europe waked.
3 Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is besieg'd.
The English army is grown weak and faint;
The earl of Salisbury crazeth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,
Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Ezr. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn,
Either to quell the Dauphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoke:
Bed. I do remember it; and here take my leave,
To go about my preparation.

Glo. I'll to the Tower, with all the haste I can,
To view th' artillery and munition;
And then I will proclaim young Henry king.

Ezr. To Eltham will I, where the young king is;
Being ordain'd his special governor
And for his safety I'll best advise.

Win. Each hath his place and function to attend:
I am left out; for me nothing remains.
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office;
The king from Eltham I intend to steal,
And sit at chiefest stern of public weal.

SCENE II.—France. Before Orleans.

Flourish. Enter CHARLES, with his Forces; ALÉON, Reignier, and others.

Char. Mars his true moving, even as in the heavens. So in the earth, to this day is not known.

Late did he shine upon the English side; Now we are victors, upon us he smiles. What arms of any moment but have? At pleasure here we lie near Orleans. The whiles, the famish'd English, like pale ghosts, Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

Alen. They want their porridge, and their fat bull-bees: Either they must be dictates like mules, And have their provender tied to their mouths, Or pitcuses they will look like drowned mice.

Reig. Let's raise the siege. Why live we idly here? Talbot is taken whom we wont to fear:
Remaineth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury, And he may well in fretting spend his gali; Nor men, nor money, hath he to make war.

Char. Sound sound, sound! alarum! we will rush upon them. Now, for the honour of the forborne French! Him I forgive my death that killeth me.

When he sees me go back one foot, or flee. [Exeunt.

Alarums: Excursions; afterwards a Retreat.

Re-enter CHARLES, ALÉON, Reignier, and others.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I!— Dogs! cowards! dastards!—I would ne'er have fled, But that they left me 'midst my enemies.

Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide; He fighteth as one weary of his life: The other lords, like lions wanting food, Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Alen. I think, a countryman of ours, records, England all Olivers and Rowlands bred, During the time Edward the third did reign. More truly now may this be verified; For none but Samsons, and Goliasse, It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten! Lean raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose They had such courage and audacity?

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brain'd slaves, And hunger will enforce them be more eager: Of old I knew them; rather with their teeth The walls they'll tear down, than forsake the siege.

Reig. I think, by some odd gimmels' or device, Their arms are set like clocks still to strike on; Else ne'er could they hold out so, as they do. By my consent, we'll c'en let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the prince Dauphin? I have news for him.

Char. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.

Bast. Methinks your looks are sad, your cheer appalled: Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence? Be not dismayed, for succour is at hand: A holy maid lunier with me I bring, Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven, Ordained is to raise this tedious siege, And drive the English forth the bounds of France. The spirit of deep prophecye she hath, Exceeding the nine sibyls of old Rome; What's past and what's to come, she can descry.

Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my words, For they are certain and unfallible.

Char. Go, call her in. [Exit Bastard.] But first, to try her skill, Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place: Question her proudly, let thy looks be stern. By this means shall we sound what skill she hath.

[Retires.

Enter LA PECELLE, Bastard of Orleans, and others.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wondrous feats?

Puc. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me? Where is the Dauphin?—Come, come from behind; I know thee well, though never seen before. Be not amaz'd, 'tis nothing hid from me: In private will I talk with thee apart.—Stand back, my lords, and give us leave awhile.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

[They retire.

Puc. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's daughter. My wit untrain'd in any kind of art. Heaven and our gracious Lady' hath it pleas'd To shine in my alarm, to smile upon me. Lo! whilst I waited on my tender lambs, And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks, God's mother deigned to appear to me; And, in a vision full of majesty, Will'd me to leave my base vocation, And free my country from calamity. Her aid she promis'd, and assured success: In complete glory she reveal'd herself; And, whereas I was black and swart before, With those clear rays which she infused on me, That beauty am I bless'd with, which you see. Ask me what question thou canst possible, And I will answer unpremeditated. My courage try by combat, if thou dar'st, And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex. Resolve on this: thou shalt be fortunate, If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

Char. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms. Only this proof I'll of thy valour make: In single combat thou shalt buckle with me, And if thou vanquish's, thy words are true; Or, I renounce all confidence in you. [Puc. I am prepar'd. Here is my keen-edg'd sword, Deck'd with five flower-de-lices on each side; The which at Touraine, in Saint Katharine's churchyard, Out of a great deal of old iron I chose forth. Char. Then, come o' God's name: I fear no woman.

Puc. And, while I live, I'll ne'er fly from no man.

[They fight.

Char. Stay, stay thy hands! thou art an Amazon, And fightest with the sword of Deborah. Puc. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too weak.

Char. Whoe'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must help me. Impatiently I burn with thy desire; My heart and hands thou hast at once subdued. Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so, Let me thy servant, and not sovereign, be: T is the French Dauphin sueth thus to thee. Puc. I must not yield to any rites of love, For my profession's sacred from above: When I have chased all thy foes from hence, Then will I think upon a recompense.

Char. Mean time look gracious on thy prostrate thrill.

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

[They talk apart.\(^{10}\)

SCENE III.

KING HENRY VI.

Glo. Faint-hearted Woodville, prizest him 'fore me? Arrogant Winchester, that haughty prelate, Whom Henry, our late sovereign, ne'er could brook? Thou art no friend to God, or to the king:—

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

1 Serv. Open the gates unto the lord protector:—

We'll burst them open, if you come not quickly.

Enter WINCHESTER, and SERVANTS in tawny coats.

Win. How now, ambitious Humphrey! what means this?

Glo. Pilgrim priest, dost thou command me be shut out?

Win. I do, thou most usurping viceroy, And not protector, of the king's realm.

Glo. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator, Thou that contiv'st to murder our dear lord; Thou that giv'st those indulgences to sin,

I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat, If thou proceed in this thy insolence.

Win. Nay, stand thou back; I will not budge a foot: This be Damascus,* be thou cursed Cain, To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Glo. I will not stay thee, but I'll drive thee back. Thy scatter'd robes, as a child's bearing-cloth I'll use to carry thee out of this place.

Win. Do what thou dar'st; I'll hear thee to thy face.

Glo. What! am I dar'd, and bearded to my face?—

Draw, men, for all this is a privileg'd place: Blue coats! to tawny coats. Priest, beware your beard! [GLOSTER and his Men attack the Bishop.]

I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly. Under my feet I stamp thy cardinal's hat, In spite of pope or dignities of church;

Here by the cheeks I'll drag thee up and down.

Win. Gloster, thou 'rt answer this before the pope.

Glo. Winchester goes! I cry—a rope! a rope!—

Now beat them hence; why do you let them stay?—

Thee I'll chase hence, thou wolf in sheep's array,—

Out, tawny coats!—out, scarlet hypocrites! [Here GLOSTER's Men beat out the Cardinal's Men, and enter, in the hurly-burly, the Mayor of London and his Officers.]

May. Die, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates, Thus contumeliously should break the peace!

Glo. Peace, mayor! thou knowest little of my wrongs.

Here's Beaufort, that regards nor God nor king, Hath here distrust'd the Tower to his use.

Win. Here's Gloster too, a foe to citizens; One that still motions war, and never peace, O'recharging your free purses with large fines; That seeks to overthrow religion,

Because he is protector of the realm; And would have armour, here, out of the Tower, To crown himself king, and suppress the prince.

Glo. I will not answer thee with words, but blows. [Here they skirmish again.

May. Nought rests for me, in this tumultuous strife, But to make open proclamation.—

Come, officer; as loud as thou canst cry.

Off. All manner of men, assembled here in arms this day, against God's peace, and the king's, we charge and command you, in his highness' name, to repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, handle, or use, any sword, weapon, or dagger, henceforward, upon pain of death.

Glo. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law; But we shall meet, and break our minds at large.

Win. Gloster, we'll meet to thy dear cost be sure;
Thy heart-blood I will have for this day's work.
May. I'll call for clubs if you will not aw.
This cardinal's more haughty than the devil.
Glo. Mayor, farewell! thou dost but what thou may'st.
Win. Abominable Gloster! guard thy head;
For I intend to have it off ere long.
May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.
Good God! that nobles should such stomachs bear!
I myself fight not once in forty year.

SCENE IV.—France. Before Orleans.
Enter on the Walls, the Master-Gunner and his Son.
M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieged,
And how the English have the suburbs won.
Son. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them,
How'er unfortunate I miss'd my aim.
M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou guid'd by me:
Chief master-gunner am I of this town;
Something I must do to procure me grace.
The prince's espiels have informed me,
How the English, in the suburbs close entrenched,
Wont through a secret grate of iron bars
In yonder tower, to overpeer the city;
And thence discover, how, with most advantage,
They may vex us with shot, or with assault.
To intercept this inconvenience,
A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd;
And full even these three days have I watch'd,
If I could see them. Now, boy, do thou watch,
For I can stay no longer on my post.
If thou spy'st any, run and bring me word,
And thou shalt find me at the governor's.

Son. Father, I warrant you; take you no care:
I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them.

Enter, in an upper Chamber of a Tower, the Lords Salisbury and Talbot; Sir William Glansdale,
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and others.
Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy! again return'd?
How wert thou handled, being prisoner,
Or by what means got'st thou to be releas'd,
Discovered any plan, or other's top.
Tal. The duke of Bedford had a prisoner,
Called the brave lord of Ponton de Santrailles;
For him I was exchange'd and ransomed.
But with a baser man of arms by far,
Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me:
Which I, disdaining, scorn'd; and craved death,
Rather than I would be so vile esteem'd:
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desired.
But! O! the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my heart:
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If now had him brought into my power.
Sal. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wast entertain'd?
Tal. With scorns, oaths, and curst contumelious taunts.
In open market-place produc'd they me,
To be a public spectacle to all:
Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scare-crow that affrights our children so.
Then broke I from the officers that led me,
And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame.
My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure;
So great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread,
That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant.
Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had

That walk'd about me every minute-while,
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.
Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endur'd,
But we will be reveng'd sufficiently.
Now, it is supper-time in Orleans:
Here, through this grate, I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify:
Let us look in; the night will much delight thee.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glansdale,
Let me have your express opinions,
Where is best place to make our battery next.
Gar. I think, at the north gate; for there stand lords.
Glan. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge.
Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd,
Or with light skirmishes forlorn'd.

[Exeunt.

[Shot from the Town. Salisbury and Sir Tho.
Sal. O Lord! have mercy on us, wretched sinners.
Gar. O Lord! have mercy on me, woeeful man.
Tal. What chance is this, that suddenly hath cross'd
Speak Salisbury; at least, if thou canst speak: [us?—
How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men?
One of thine eyes, and thy cheek's side struck off!—
A consecrated tower! accursed fatal hand,
That hath contriv'd this woeful tragedy!
In thirteen battles Salisbury o'creame;
Henry the fifth he first train'd to the wars;
When it was any ground, he first struck up,
His sword did not leave striking in the field.—
Yet live'st thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,
One eye thou hast to look to heaven for grace:
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.—
Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury want mercy at thy hands!—
Bear hence his body, I will help to bury it.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?
Speak unto Talbot; say, look up to him.
Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort;
Thou shalt not die, whiles—
He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me,
As who should say, "When I am dead and gone,
Remember to enrage me with the French."—
Plantagenet, I will; and, Nere-like,
Play on the lute, beholding the town's burn:
Wretched shall France be only in my name.
[An Alarum : it thunders and lightens.
What stir is this? What tumult's in the heavens?
Whence cometh this alarum, and the noise?
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. My lord, my lord! the French have gather'd
The Dauphin, with one Joan La Pucelle join'd, [head:
A holy prophetess, new risen up,
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.
[Salisbury lift'sh himself up and groans.
Tal. Hear, hear, how doth Salisbury doth groan!
It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd.—
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you,
Pucelle or puzzel, dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mingled brains.—
Convey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then we'll try what dastard Frenchmen dare.
[Exeunt, bearing out the bodies.

SCENE V.—The Same. Before one of the Gates.
Alarum. Skirmishings. Talbot pursues the Dauphin,
And drives him; then enter Joan La Pucelle, driving
Englishmen before her. Then enter Talbot.
Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force?

Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them;
A woman clad in armour chaseth them.

_Enter La Pucelle._

Here, here she comes. — I'll have a bout with thee:
Devil, or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee;
Blood will I draw on thee; thou art a witch,
And straightway give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

_Puc._ Come, come; 't is only I that must disgrace thee.

[They fight.]

_Tal._ Heaven's, can you suffer hell so to prevail?
My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

_Puc._ Talbot, farewell; thy hour is not yet come:
I must go victual Orleans forthwith.
'Overtake me if thou canst; I scorn thy strength.
Go, go, cheer up thy hunger-starved men;
Help Salisbury to make his testament:
This day is ours, as many more shall be.

_Pucelle enters the town, with Soldiers._

_Tal._ My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel;
I know not where I am, nor what I do.
A witch by fear, not force, like Hannibal,
Drives back our troops, and conquers as she lists:
So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away.
Theycall'd us for our fierceness English dogs;
Now, like to whelps, we crying run away.

[Short _Alarum._]

Hark, countrymen! either renew the fight,
Or tear the lions out of England's coat;
Renounce your soul, give sheep in lions' stead:
Sheep run not half so treacherous from the wolf,
Or horse, or oxen, from the leopard,
As you from your oft-subdued slaves.

[Alarum. Another skirmish.]

It will not be.—Retire into your trenches:
You all consented unto Salisbury's death,
For none would strike a stroke in his revenge.—
Pucelle is enter'd into Orleans

---

_SCENE IV._

_In spite of us, or aught that we could do.
O! would I were to die with Salisbury.
The shame hereof will make me hide my head._

_Atall._ Retreat. _Exeunt_ Talbot and his Forces.

(Scene VI.—The Same.

_Florish._ Enter, on the Walls, Pucelle, Charles, Reignier, Alençon, and Soldiers.

_Puc._ Advance our waving colours on the walls!
Rescue our Orleans from the English wolves;*
Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word:
Char. Divinest creature, bright Astraea's daughter,
How shall I honour thee for this success?
Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.—
France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess! —
Recover'd is the town of Orleans:
More blessed hap did never befall our state.

_Reign._ Why ring not out the bells aloud throughout the town?
Daunphin, command the citizens make bonfires
And feast and banquet in the open streets,
To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.
_Alen._ All France will be replete with mirth and joy,
When they shall hear how we have play'd the men.

_Char._ 'Tis Joan, not we, by whom the day is won,
For which I will divide my crown with her;
And all the priests and friars in my realm
Shall in procession sing her endless praise.
A statelier pyramis to her I'll rear,
Than Rhadopès', or Memphis', ever was:
In memory of her, when she is dead,
Her ashes, in an urn more precious
Than the rich-jewel'd coffer of Darius,
Transported shall be at high festivals
Before the kings and queens of France.
No longer on Saint Dennis will we cry,
But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint.
Come in; and let us banquet royally,
After this golden day of victory._

[Flourish. _Exeunt._

---

(Scene I.—The Same.

_Enter the Gates, a French Sergeant, and Two Sentinels._

_Serg._ Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant,
If any noise, or soldier, you perceive,
Near to the walls, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.

[Exit Sergeant._

_I._ Sergeant, you shall. Thus are poor servitors
(When others sleep upon their quiet beds)
Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

_Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, and Forces, with scaling Ladders; their Drums beating a dead march._

_Tal._ Lord regent, and redoubted Burgundy,
By whose approach the regions of Artois,
Walloon, and Picardy, are friends to us,
This happy night the Frenchmen are secure,
Having all day carous'd and banqueted.
Embrace we, then, this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit,
Contriv'd by art, and baleful sorcery.

_Bed._ Coward of France!—how much he wrongs his fame,

* It was an old popular belief, that if a witch lost blood, her power was ended.
* hung'ry: in _f. a._
* Pope reads: timorous.
* wolves

---

(Scene II.

_Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches, and the help of hell._

_Bur._ Traitors have never other company.
But what's that, Pucelle, whom they term so pure?

_Tal._ A maid, they say.

_Bed._ A maid, and be so martial?

_Bur._ Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long;
If underneath the standard of the French,
She carry armour, as she hath begun.

_Tal._ Well, let them practice and converse with spirits;
God is our fortress, in whose conquering name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Bed._ Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow thee.

Tal._ Not all together: better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways,
That if it chance the one of us do fall
The other yet may rise against their force.

_Bed._ Agreed. I'll to you corner.

_Bur._ And I to this.

_Tal._ And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave.—
Now, Salisbury, for thee, and for the right,
Of English Henry, shall this night appear

---

From the second folio.
How much in duty I am bound to both.

[The English scale the Walls, crying St. George! a Talbot! and all enter the Town.

Sent. [Within.] Arm! arm! the enemy doth make assault!

Frenchmen leap over the Walls in their shirts. Enter several ways, Bastard, Alencon, Reignier, half ready and half unready.

Alencon. How now, my lords! what, all unready so?

Bastard. Unready! ay, and glad we 'scap'd so well.

Reignier. It was time, I trow, to wake and leave our beds,

Hearing alarms at our chamber doors.

Alencon. Of all exploits, since first I followed arms,

Ne'er heard I of a warlike enterprise

More venturous, or desperate than this.

Bastard. I think, this Talbot be a fiend of hell.

Reignier. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour him.

Alencon. Here cometh Charles: I marvel, how he sped.

Enter Charles and La Pucelle.

Bastard. Tut! holy Joan was his defensive guard.

Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame?

Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal,

Make us partakers of a little gain,

That now our loss might be ten times so much?

Pucelle. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?

At all times will you have my war alike?

Sleeping or waking must I still prevail,

Or will you blame, and lay the fault on me?—

Improvind soldiers! had your watch been good,

This sudden mischief never could have fallen.

Char. Duke of Alencon, this was your default,

That, being captain of the watch to-night,

Did look no better to that weighty charge.

Alencon. Had all your quarters been as safely kept,

As that whereof I had the government,

We had not been thus shamefully surpris'd,

Bastard. Mine was secure.

Reignier. And so was mine, my lord.

Char. And for myself, most part of all this night,

Within her quarter, and mine own precept,

I was employ'd in passing to and fro,

About relieving of the sentinels:

Then, how, or which way, should they first break in?

Pucelle. Question, my lords, no further of the case,

How, or which way: 'tis sure, they found some place

But weakly guarded, where the breach was made;

And now there rests no other shift but this,—

To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,

And lay new platforms to endamage them.

Alarum. Enter an English Soldier, crying, a Talbot — a Talbot!—They fly, leaving their Clothes behind.

Soldiers. I'll be so bold to take what they have left.

The cry of Talbot serves me for a word;

For I have loaden me with many spoils,

Using no other weapon but his name.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Orleans. Within the Town.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, a Captain, and others.

Talbot. The day begins to break, and night is fled,

Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.

Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.

[Retreat sounded.

Bedford. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury;

And here advance it in the market-place,

The middle centre of this cursed town.

Now have I paid my vow unto his soul;

For every drop of blood was drawn from him.

There have at least five Frenchmen died to-night.

And that hereafter ages may behold

What ruin happen'd in revenge of him,

Within their chiepest temple I'll erect

A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be inter'd;

Upon the which, that every one may read,

Shall be engrav'd the sack of Orleans,

The treacherous manner of his mournful death,

And what a terror he had been to France.

But, lords, in all our bloody massacre,

I muse, we met not with the Dauphin's grace,

His now-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc,

Nor any of his false confederates.

Bedford. 'Tis thought, lord Talbot, when the fight began,

Rous'd on the sudden from their drowsy beds,

They did, amongst the troops of armed men,

Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.

Burst. Myself, as far as I could well discern,

For smoke, and dusky vapours of the night,

Am sure I scarr'd the Dauphin, and his trull;

When arm in arm they both came swiftly running,

Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves,

That could not live asunder, day or night.

After that things are set in order here,

We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! Which of this princely train

Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts

So much applauded through the realm of France?

Talbot. Here is the Talbot; who would speak with him?

Mess. The virtuous lady, countess of Auvergne,

With modesty admiring thy renown,

By me entreats, great lord, thou wouldst vouchsafe

To visit her poor castle where she lies;

That she may boost she hath beheld the man

Whose glory fills the world with loud report.

Burst. Is it even so? Nay, then, I see, our wars

Will turn unto a peaceful comic sport,

When ladies crave to be encounter'd with—

You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.

Talbot. Ne'er trust me then; for when a world of men

Could not prevail with all their oratory,

Yet hath a woman's kindness over-ruled—

And therefore tell her, I return great thanks,

And in submission will attend on her—

Will not your honours bear me company?

Bedford. No, truly, it is more than manners will;

And I have heard it said, unbidden guests

Are often welcomest when they are gone.

Talbot. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,

I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.

[mind.

Come hither, captain. [Whisper.] You perceive my

Capt. I do, my lord, and mean accordingly.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—Auvergne. Court of the Castle.

Enter the Countess and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge;

And, when you have done so, bring the keys to me.

Porter. Madam, I will.

[Exit.

Count. The plot is laid; if all things fall out right,

I shall as famous be by this exploit,

As Scythian Thymiris by Cyrus' death.

Great is the rumour of this dreadful knight,

And his achievements of no less account;

Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,

To give their censure of these rare reports.
Enter Messenger and Talbot.

Mess. Madam, according as your ladyship desir'd, by message crave'\d, so is lord Talbot come.

Count. And he is welcome.—What! is this the man?

Mess. Madam, it is.

Count. Is this the scourge of France?

Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad, That with his name the mothers still their babes? I see report is fabulous and false:
I thought I should have seen some Hercules, A second Hector for his grim aspect, And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs. Alas! this is a child, a silly dwarf; It cannot be, this weeny and writhed shrimp. Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been bold to trouble you; But, since your ladyship is not at leisure, I'll sort some other time to visit you.

Count. What means he now?—Go, ask him, whither he goes.

Mess. Stay, my lord Talbot; for my lady craves To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Tal. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief, I go to certify her Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter, with Keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.

Tal. Prisoner! to whom?—To me, blood-thirsty lord; And for that cause I train'd thee to my house. Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me, For in my gallery thy picture hangs; But now the substance shall endure the like, And I will chain these legs and arms of thine, That hast by tyranny these many years, Wasted our country, slain our citizens, And sent our sons and husbands captive.

Tal. Ha, ha, ha!

Count. Laughter thou, wretch? thy mirth shall turn to monn.

Tal. I laugh to see your ladyship so fond, To think that you have aught but Talbot's shadow; Wherein to practise such severity.

Count. Why, art not thou the man?

Tal. Count. Then have I substance too.

Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself: You are deceiv'd, my substance is not here; For what you see, is but the smallest part And least proportion of humanity. I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here, It is of such a spacious lofty pitch, Your roof were not sufficient to contain it.

Count. This is a riddling merchant\ 1 for the nonce; He will be here, and yet he is not here: How can these contradictions agree?

Tal. That will I show you, lady,\ 2 presently. He waves his Horn. Drums strike up; a Peal of Ordnance. The Gates being forced, enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded, That Talbot is but shadow of himself? These are his substance, sinews, arms, and strength, With which he yoketh your rebellions necks, Razath your cities, and subverts your towns, And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot, pardon my abuse: I find, thou art no less than fame hath bruit'd, And more than may be gather'd by thy shape. Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath; For I am sorry, that with reverence

I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue The mind of Talbot, as you did mistake The outward composition of his body.

What you have done hath not offended me: No other satisfaction do I crave, But only, with your patience, that we may Taste of your wine, and see what cates you have; For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well.

Count. With all my heart; and think me honoured To feast so great a warrior in my house. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—London. The Temple Garden.

Enter the Earls of Somerset, Suffolk, and Warwick; Richard Plantagenet, Vernon, and a Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords, and gentlemen, what means this Dare no man answer in case of truth? [silence? Suf. Within the Temple hall we were too loud:
The garden here is more convenient.

Plan. Then say at once, if I maintain'd the truth, Or else was wrangling Somerset in the error?

Suf. Faith, I have been a truant in the law, And never yet could frame my will to it: And, therefore, frame the law unto my will.

Som. Judge you, my lord of Warwick, then, betwixt us.

War. Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch, Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth, Between two blades, which bears the better temper, Between two horses, which doth bear him best, Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye, I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment; But in these nice sharp quillets of the law, Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.

Plan. Tut, tut! here is a mannerly forbearance: The truth appears so naked on my side, That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparel'd, So clear, so shining, and so evident, That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Plan. If you are tongue-tied, and so loath to speak, In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts.

Let him, that is a true-born gentleman, And stands upon the honour of his birth, If he suppose that I have pleaded truth, From off this brier pluck a white rose with me.

Som. Let him that is no coward, nor no flatterer, But dare maintain the party of the truth, Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me. War. I love no colours; and, without all colour Of base insinuating flattery, I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet.

Suf. I pluck this red rose with young Somerset; And say with that, I think he hold the right.

Ver. Stay, lords, and gentlemen; and pluck no more, Till you conclude that he, upon whose side The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree, Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good master Vernon, it is well object'd: If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Plan. And I.

Ver. Then, for the truth and plainness of the case, I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here, Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off; Last, bleeding, you do paint the white rose red, And fall on my side so, against your will.

---

1 This word was often used as a term of contempt. 2 This word is not in f. e.
Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt,
And in the wound, shall make me whole as I am.
Som. Well, well, come on: who else?
Law. Unless my study and my books be false,
The argument you held was wrong in you;
In sign whereof, I pluck a white rose too.
Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?
Som. Here, in my seabbard; meditating that,
Shall dye your white rose in a bloody red.
Plan. Mean time, your cheeks do counterfeit our rose;
For pale they look with fear, as witnessing
The truth on our side.
Som. I'll have no Plantagenet,
'Tis not for fear, but anger; and thy cheeks
Blush for pure shame to counterfeit our rose,
And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.
Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?
Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?
Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth,
Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.
Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding-roses;
That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.
Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
I scorn thee and thy faction*, peevish boy.
Suf. Turn not thy scorn this way, Plantagenet.
Plan. Froud Poole, I will; and scorn both him and thee.
Suf. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.
Som. Away, away, good William De-la-Poole.
We grace the yeoman, by conversing with him.
War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him, Somerset:
His grandfather was Lionel, duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward, king of England.
Spring erstwhile yeomen from so deep a root?
Plan. He braves him on the place's privilege,
Or durest not, for his craven heart, say thus.
Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my words
On any plot of ground in Christendom.
Was not thy father, Richard earl of Cambridge,
For treason executed in our late king's days?
And by his treason standst thou not attained,
Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry?
His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;
And till thou be restor'd, thou art a yeoman.
Plan. My father was attainted, not attainted,
Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor;
And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset,
Were growing time once ripen'd to my will.
For your partaker Poole, and you yourself,
I'll note you in my book of memory,
To scourge you for this apprehension:
Look to it well, and say you are well warn'd.
Som. Ah! thou shalt stand and suffer for thee still,
And know us by these colours for thy foes;
For these my friends in spite of thee shall wear.
Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose,
As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for ever, and my faction, wear,
Until it wither with me in my grave,
Or flourish to the height of my degree.
Suf. Go forward, and be chok'd with thy ambition:
And so farewell, until I meet thee next.
Som. Have with thee, Poole.—Farewell, ambitious Richard.
[Exit.

Plan. How I am brav'd, and must perform endure it!
War. This blot, that they object against your house,
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament,
And for the true'st of Winchester and Gloster,
And if thou be not then created York,
I will not live to be accounted Warwick.
Mean time, in signal of my love to thee,
Against proud Somerset, and William Poole,
Will I upon thy party weat this rose.
And here I prophesy,—this brawl to-day,
Grown to this faction in the Temple garden,
Shall send, between the red rose and the white,
Ten thousand souls to death and deadly night.
Plan. Good master Vernon, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalf—would pluck a flower.
Ver. In your behalf still will I wear the same.
Law. And so will I.
Plan. Thanks, gentle sir:
Come, let us four to dinner. I dare say,
This quarrel will drink blood another day. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Room in the Tower.

Enter Mortimer, blind*, brought in a Chair by two Keepers.

Mor. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,
Let dying Mortimer here rest himself.—
Even like a man new haled from the rack;
So fare my limbs with long imprisonment;
And these grey locks, the pursuivants of death,
Nestor-like, aged in a cage of care,
Argue the end of Edward Mortimer.
These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent;* Weak shoulders, overborne with burdening grief,
And pitiless arms, like to a wither'd vine
That droops his sapless branches to the ground:
Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,
As witting I no other comfort have.—
But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?
1 Keep. Richard Plantagenet, my lord, will come:
We sent unto the Temple, to his chamber,
And answer was return'd that he will come.

[Exit Keeper.]

Mor. Enough! my soul shall then be satisfied.—
Poor gentleman, his wrong doth equal mine.
Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had;
And even since then hath Richard been obscure'd,
Depriv'd of honour and inheritance:
But now, the arbitrator of despairs,
Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement dethis commision me;
I would his troubles likewise were expir'd,
That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter Richard Plantagenet, and Keeper.^

1 Keep. My lord, your loving nephew now is come,
Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?
Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly us'd,
Your nephew, late despis'd Richard, comes.
Mor. Direct mine arms I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp.
O! tell me, when my lips do touch his cheek,
That I may kindly give one fainting kiss.—
And now declare, sweet stem from York's great stock,
Why didst thou say,—of late thou wert despis'd?
KING. First, lean thine aged back against mine arm, And in that case I'll tell thee my disease. This day, in argument upon a case, Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me; Amongst which terms he us'd his lavish tongue, And did upbraided me with my father's death: Which obloquy set bars before my tongue; Else with the like I had requited him. Therefore, good uncle, for my father's sake, In honour of a true Plantagenet, And for alliances' sake, declare the cause My father, earl of Cambridge, lost his head. Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd me, And hath detain'd me all my flow'r'ing youth Within a leathsome dungeon, there to pine, Was cursed instrument of his decease. Plan. Discover more at large what cause that was: For I am ignorant, and cannot guess. Mor. I will, if that my fading breath permit, And death approach not ere my tale be done. Henry the fourth, grandfather to this king, Depos'd his nephew Richard, Edward's son, The first-begotten, and the lawful heir Of Edward, king the third of that descent: During whose reign the Percies of the north, Finding his usurpation most unjust, Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. The reason mov'd these warlike lords to this, Was for that young king Richard thus remov'd, (Leaving no heir begotten of his body) I was the next by birth and parentage; For by my mother I derived am From Lionel duke of Clarence, the third son To king Edward the third, whereas he From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree, Being but fourth of that heroic line. But mark: as, in this haughty great attempt They laboured to plant the rightful heir, I lost my liberty, and they their lives. Long after this, when Henry the fifth, (Succeeding his father Bolingbroke) did reign, Thy father, earl of Cambridge, then deriv'd From famous Edmund Langley, duke of York, Marrying my sister, that thy mother was, Again, in pity of my hard distress,

ACT III.

The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes, That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able, Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen: No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness, Thy lewd, pestiferous, and disに入ってください。
If I were covetous, ambitious, proud, 1
As he will have me, how am I so poor?
Or how hap it, I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling?
And for dissension, for peace.
More than I do, except I be provok'd?
No, my good lords, it is not that offends;
It is that not that hath incensed the duke:
It is, because no one should sway but he;
No one but he should be about the king;
And that engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth.
But he shall know, I am as good——
Glo. As good?
Thou bastard of my grandfather! —
Win. Ay, lordly sir; for what are you, I pray,
But one imperious in another's throne?
Glo. Am I not the protector, saucy priest?
Win. And am I not a prelate of the church?
Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,
And usest it to patronize his theft.
Win. Unreverent Gloster!
Glo. Thou art reverent
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.
Win. Rome shall remedy this.
War. Roam thither then.
My lord, it was your duty to forbear.
Som. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.
Methinks, my lord should be religious,
And know the office that belongs to such.
War. Methinks, his lordship should be humbler:
It is better not to press so close.
Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so near.
War. State holy, or unhallow'd, what of that?
Is not his grace protector to the king?
Plan. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his tongue;
[Aside.
Lest it be said, "Speak, sirrah, when you should;
Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords?"
Else would I have a fling at Winchester.
K. Hen. O, my good lords, and virtuous Henry,
The special watchmen of our English weal,
I would prevail, if prayers might prevail,
To join your hearts in love and amity.
O! what a scandal is it to our crown,
That two such noble peers should hold jar.
Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell,
Civil dissension is a viperous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.—
[A noise within: Down with the tauny cows! What tumult's this?
War. An uproar, I dare warrant,
Begun through malice of the bishop's men.
[Enter the Mayor of London, and some Citizens. 2
[Enter the Mayor of London, and some Citizens.
May. O, my good lords, and virtuous Henry,
Pity the city of London, pity us!
The bishop's and the duke of Gloster's men,
Forbidden long to carry any weapon.
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble-stones:
And banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do poll so fast at one another's pates,
That many have their giddy brains knocked out.
Our windows are broke down in every street,
And we for fear compell'd to shut our shops.
[Enter, skirmishing, the Retainers of Gloster, and Winchester, with bloody pates.
K. Hen. We charge you, on allegiance to ourself, To hold your slaughtering hands, and keep the peace.
Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife.
1 Serv. Nay, if we be Forbidden stones, we'll fall to it with our teeth.
2 Serv. Do what ye dare; we are as resolute.
[Skirmish again.
Glo. You, of my household, leave this peevish broil,
And set this unaccustomed fight aside.
1 Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a man
Just and upright; and, for your royal birth,
Inferior to none but to his majesty;
And ere that we will suffer such a prince,
So kind a father of the commonwealth,
To be disgraced by an inkhorn' mate,
We, and our wives, and children, all will fight,
And have our bodies slaughter'd by thy foes.
3 Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails
Shall pitch a field, when we are dead.[Skirmish again.
Glo. And, if you love me, as you say you do.
Let me persuade you to forbear awhile.
K. Hen. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul! —
Can you, my lord of Winchester, behold
My sighs and tears, and will not once relent?
Who should be pitiful, if ye be not?
Or who should study to preserve a peace,
If holy churchmen take delight in broils?
War. Yield, lord protector; and yield, Winchester;
Except you mean, with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sovereign, and destroy the realm.
You see what mischief, and what murder too,
Hath been enacted through your enmity;
Then, be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.
Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.
Glo. Compassion on the king commands me stooj;
Or I would see his heart out, ere the priest
Should ever get that privilege of me.
War. Behold, my lord of Winchester, the duke
Hath banish'd moody discontented fury,
As by his smoothed brows it doth appear:
Why look you still so stern, and tragical?
Glo. Here, Winchester; I offer thee my hand.
[Winchester refuses it. 3
K. Hen. Fye, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you profess
That malice was a great and grievous sin;
And will not you maintain the thing you teach,
But prove a chief offender in the same?
War. Sweet king! —the bishop hath a kindly gird.
For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent:
What! shall a child instruct you what to do?
Win. Well, duke of Gloster, I will yield to thee;
Love for thy love, and hand for hand I give.
[Give his hand.
Glo. Ay; but I fear me, with a hollow heart.  [Aside.
See here, my friends; and loving countrymen;
This token serveth for a flag of truce,
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers.
So help me God, as I dissemble not!
Win. So help me God, as I intend it not!  [Aside.
K. Hen. O, loving uncle, and kind duke of Gloster,
How joyful am I made by this contract! —
Away, my masters; trouble us no more.
But join in friendship, as your lords have done.
1 Serv. Content: I'll to the surgeon's.
2 Serv. And so will I.
3 Serv. And I will see what physic the tavern affords.
[Exeunt Mayor, Citizens; Servants, &c.
War. Accept this scroll, most gracious sovereign,
Which in the right of Richard Plantagenet
We do exhibit to your majesty.

Glo. Well urg'd, my lord of Warwick:—for, sweet
And if your grace mark every circumstance,
You have great reason to do Richard right;

Especially for those occasions
At Eltham-place I told your majesty.

K. Hen. And these occasions, uncle, were of force:
Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is,
That Richard be restored to his blood.

War. Let Richard be restored to his blood;
So shall his father's wrongs be recompens'd.

Win. As will the rest, so will Ithelitch Winchester.

K. Hen. If Richard will be true, not that alone,
But all the whole inheritance I give,
That doth belong unto the house of York.

From whence you spring by lineal descent.

Plan. Thy honour'd servant vows obedience,
And humble service, till the point of death.

K. Hen. Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;
And in reguernon of that duty done,
I girt thee with the valiant sword of York.
Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet,
And rise created princely duke of York.

Plan. And so thrive Richard as thy foes may fall:
And as my duty springs, so perish they.

That grudge one thought against your majesty.
All. Welcome, high prince, the mighty duke of York!

Som. Parish, base prince, ignoble duke of York!

[Glo. Now will it best avail your majesty,
To cross the seas, and to be crown'd in France.
The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends,
As it disanimates his enemies.

K. Hen. When Gloucester says the word, King Henry goes;

Glo. Your ships already are in readiness.

[Flourish. Excitall but Exeter.

Exe. Ay, we may march in England, or in France,
Not seeing what is likely to ensue.

This late dispersion, grown betwixt the peers,
Burns under feigned ashes of froward love,
And will at last break out into a flame:
As foster'd members rot but by degrees,
Till bones, and flesh, and sinews, fall away,
So will this base and envious discord breed.
And now I fear that fatal prophecy,
Which, in the time of Henry, nam'd the fifth,
Was in the mouth of every sucking babe,—
That Henry, born at Monmouth, should win all,
And Henry, born at Windsor, should lose all:
Which is so plain, that Exeter doth wish
His days may finish ere that hapless time.

SCENE II.—France. Before Rouen.

Enter La Pucelle disguised, and Soldiers dressed like Countrymen, with Sacks upon their Backs.

Puc. These are the city gates, the gates of Rouen,
Through which our policy must make a breach.
Take heed, be wary how you place your words;
Talk like the vulgar sort of market-men,
That come to gather money for their corn.
If we have entrance, (as I hope we shall)

And that we find the slothful watch but weak,
I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.

Sold. Our sacks shall be a mean to seek the city,
And we be lords and rulers over Rouen;
Therefore we'll knock.

Guard. [Within.] Qui est là?

Puc. Paisans, les pouvoirs gens de France:
Poor market-folks that come to sell their corn.

Guard. Enter; go in: the market-bell is rung.

[opening the gates.

Puc. Now, Rouen, I'll shakethy bulwarks to the ground.

[Exeunt Pucelle, &c. enter the City.

Enter Charles, Bastard of Orleans, Alençon, and Forces.

Char. Saint Dennis bless this happy stratagem,
And once again we'll sleep secure in Rouen.

Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle, and her practisants.
Now she is there, how will she specify
Where is the best and safest passage in?

Alen. By thrusting out a torch from yonder tower;
Which, once discern'd, shows, that her meaning is,—
No way to that, for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter La Pucelle on a Battlement, holding out a Torch burning.

Puc. Behold! this is the happy wedding torch,
That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen,
But burning fatal to the Talbots.

Bast. See, noble Charles, the beacon of our friend;
The burning torch in yonder turret stands.

Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge,
A prophet to the fall of all our foes!

Alen. Defer no time; delays have dangerous ends:
Enter, and cry The Dauphin! presently,
And then do execution on the watch.

[They enter.

Alarums. Enter Talbot, and English Soldiers.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,
If Talbot but survive thy treachery.

Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress,
Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares,
That hardly we escap'd the pride of France.

[Exeunt to the Town.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter, from the Town, Bedford, brought in sick in a Chair; with Talbot, Burgundy, and the English Forces. Then, enter on the Walls,

La Pucelle, Charles, Bastard, Alençon, Reinier, and others.

Puc. Good morrow, gallants. Want ye corn for bread?
I think, the duke of Burgundy will fast,
Before he'll buy again at such a rate.

'T was full of dainties; do you like the taste?
Burr. Scoff on, vile fiend, and shameless courtier! I trust, ere long, to choke thee with thine own,
And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.

Char. Your grace may starve, perhaps, before that time.

Bed. O! let no words, but deeds, revenge this treason.

Puc. What will you do, good grey-beard? break a lancet,
And run a tilt at death within a chair?

Tal. Foul fiend of France, and bag of hell's? despite,
Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours,
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age,
And twit with cowardice a man half dead?
Damsel, I'll have a bout with you again,
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Puc. Are you so hot, sir?—Yet, Pucelle, hold thy
If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow.— [peace;

[Talbot, and the rest, consult together.}
Bur. Warlike and matchless Talbot, Burgundy
Enshrinethis in his heart; and there erects
Thynoble deeds, asvalour's monument.

Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle now?

I think her old familiar is asleep:
Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeks?;

What, all a-might? Rouen hangs her head for grief,
That such a valiant company are fled.

Now will we take some order in the town,
Placing therein some expert officers,
And then depart to Paris to the king,
For there young Henry with his nobles lies.

Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget
The noble duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,
But see his exequies fulfill'd in Rouen:
A braver soldier never couched lance,
A gentler heart did never sway in court;
But kings, and mightiest potentates must die,
For that's the end of human misery. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. The Plains near the City.

Enter CHARLES, the Bastard, ALÉNÇON, LA PUCELLE, and Forces.

Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident,
Norgrieve that Rouen is so recovered:
Care is no cure, but rather corrosive,
For things that are not to be remedied.
Letfrantie Talbot triumph for a while,
Andlike a peacock sweep along his tail,
We'll pull his plumes, and take away his train,
If Dauphin and the rest will be but rul'd.

Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy cunning had no difficulties,
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Best. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
And we will make thee famous through the world.

Alen. We'll set thy statue in some holy place,
And have thee reverenced like a blessed saint:
Employ thee, then, sweet virgin, for our good.

Puc. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise,
By fair persuasions, mix'd with sugar'd words,
We will entice the duke of Burgundy
To leave the Talbot, and to follow us.

Char. Ay, marry; sweeting, if we could do that.
France were no place for Henry's warriors;
Nor should that nation boast it so with us,
But be extirp'd from our provinces.

Alen. For ever should they be expuls'd from France,
And not have title of an earldom here.

Puc. Your honours shall perceive how I will work,
To bring this matter to the wished end.

[Drums heard after off.]

Hark! by the sound of drum you may perceive
Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

An English March. Enter, and pass over, Talbot and his Forces.

There goes the Talbot, with his colours spread,
And all the troops of English after him.

A French March. Enter the Duke of Burgundy and his Forces.

Now, in the rearward comes the duke, and his:
Fortune in favour makes him leg behind.
Summon a parley; we will talk with him.

Char. A parley with the duke of Burgundy.

Bur. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy?
KING HENRY VI.

SCENE I.—The Prince of Wales, now Duke of York, assembles his followers with the purpose of invading France. The Earl of Suffolk, Sir John Fastolfe, and other noblemen are present.

KING. Now let us on, my lords, and join our powers, And seek how we may prejudice the foe. [Execut.]

SCENE II.—A Room in the Palace. The Duke of York and his followers are gathered there. The Duke announces his intention to invade France.

KING. My gracious prince, and honourable peers, Hearing of your arrival in this realm, I have a while given truce unto my wars, To do my duty to my sovereign:—

By your obedience fifty fortresses, Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of strength,

Befehl the wounds, the most unnatural wounds, Which thou thyself hast given her woful breast.

O! turn thy edged sword another way; Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help.

When Talbot hath set footing once in France, And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill, Who then but English Henry will be lord,

More than the worst infamy, and to the scathe, By loving friend of all, and true, and dear,

They set him free, without his ransom paid,

From the true monarch's waste, and loss of land,

The tongues of nations, and the pride of men,

That will not trust thee but for profit's sake.

You have set foot once in France, and fashion'd thee that instrument of ill,

Who, with the help of your friends, and your faith,

For the true monarch of the waste, and loss of land,

That you may, when you shall return to your friends,

And for your faith to the true monarch,

That they may, when you return to your friends,

And so, farewell, Talbot; I'll no longer trust thee.

Bur. Done like a Frenchman, turn, and turn again! [Aside.]
Enter Sir John Fastolfe.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais,
To haste unto your coronation,
A letter was deliver'd to my hands,
Writ to your grace from the duke of Burgundy. [Gives it.]

Tal. Shame to the duke of Burgundy, and thee!
I vow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee next,
To tear the garter from thy craven's leg;
[Plucking it off.]

Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast installed in that high degree.—
Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest.
This dastard, at the battle of Patay,
When but in all I was six thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,
Before we met, or that a stroke was given,
Like to a trusty square, did run away:
In which assault we lost twelve hundred men;
Myself, and divers gentlemen beside,
Were there surpris'd, and taken prisoners.
Then, judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;
Or whether that such cowards ought to wear
This ornament of knighthood, yea, or no?
Glo. To say the truth, his fact was infamous,
And ill besembling any common man,
Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.

Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,
Knights of the garter were of noble birth,
Valiant and virtuous, full of haughty courage,
Such as was grown to credit by the wars;
Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress,
But always resolve in worst extremes.
He, then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaning this most honourable order;
And should (if I were worthy to be judge)
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen! thou hear'st thy doom:
Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight.
Henceforth we banish thee on pain of death.—

Enter FASTOLFE.

And, now, my lord protector, view the letter
Sent from our uncle duke of Burgundy.
Glo. What means his grace, that he hath chang'd his style?
No more but, plain and bluntly,—"To the king!"
Hath he forgot he is his sovereign?
Or doth this churlish superscription
Portend some alteration in good will?
What's here? [Reads.] "I have upon especial cause,—
Mov'd with compassion of my country's wreck,
Together with the pitiful complaints
Of such as your oppression feeds upon,—
Forsaken your pernicious faction,
And join'd with Charles, the rightful king of France."
O, monstrous treachery! Can this be so?
That in alliance, amity, and oaths,
There should be found such false dissembling guile?

K. Hen. What! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt?
Glo. He doth, my lord; and is become thy foe.
K. Hen. Is that the worst this letter doth contain?
Glo. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes.
K. Hen. Why then, lord Talbot, there, shall talk with him,
And give him chastisement for this abuse.—
How say you, my lord; are you not content?

†Not in f. e. * mock: in f. e. † pretend: in f. e. ‡ shall: in f. e.
SCENE III.

KING HENRY VI.

Exe. It grieves his highness: good my lords, be friends.

K. Hen. Come hither, you that would be combatants.

Honest friend, I charge you, as you love our favour,
Quite to forget this quarrel, and the cause.—
And you, my lords, remember where we are;
In France, amongst a fickle waverling nation.
If they perceive dissension in our looks,
And that within ourselves we disagree,
How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd
To wilful disobedience, and rebel?
Beside, what infancy will there arise,
When foreign princes shall be certified,
That for a toy, a thing of no regard,
King Henry's peers, and chief nobility,
Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France?
O! think upon the conquest of my father,
My tender years; and let us not forget
That for a trifle, that was bought with blood.
Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife.
I see no reason, if I wear this rose,

[Putting on a red Rose.

That any one should therefore be suspicious
I more incline to Somerset than York:
Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both.
As well they may upbraid me with my crown,
Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is crown'd.
But your discretions better can persuade,
Than I am able to instruct or teach them.
And therefore, as we hither came in peace,
So let us still continue peace and love.—
Cousin of York, we institute your grace
To be our regent in these parts of France:
And, good my lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot;
And, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,
Go cheerfully together, and digest
Your angry choler on your enemies.
Ourself, my lord protector, and the rest,
After some respite, will return to Calais;
From thence to England; where I hope ere long
To be presented by your victories
With Charles, Alençon, and that traitorous rout.

[FLOURISH. Exeunt King Henry, Glo., Som.,
Win., Suff., and Basset.

War. My lord of York, I promise you, the king
Prettily, methought, did play the orator.
York. And so he did; but yet I like it not,
In that he wears the badge of Somerset.
War. Tush! that was but his fancy, blame him not;
I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.
York. And, if I wist, he did.—But let it rest;
Other affairs must now be managed.

[Exeunt York, Warwick, and Vernon.

Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thine voice;
For, had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear, we should have seen theecephal'd there.
More rancorous spite, more fur'ious raging broils,
Than yet can be imaginy'd or supposed.
But howso' er, no simple man that sees
This jarring discord of nobility,
This shouldering of each other in the court,
This factious bandying of their favourites,
But that it doth presage some ill event.
'T is much, when sceptres are in children's hands,
But more, when envy breeds unkind division:
There comes the ruin, there begins confusion.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—France. Before Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot, with his Forces.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpeter:
Summon their general unto the wall.
Trumpet sounds a Parley. Enter, on the Walls, the General of the French Forces, and others.

English John Talbot, captains, calls you forth,
Servant in arms to Harry king of England;
And thus he would.—Open your city gates,
Be humble to us, call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects,
And I'Il withdraw me and my bloody power;
But, if you frown upon this propos'd peace,
You tempt the fury of my three regiments,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire;
Who, in a moment, even with the earth
Shall lay your stately and air-braving towers,
If you forsake the offer of their love.

Gen. Thou omenous and fearful owl of death,
Our nation's terror, and their bloody scourge,
The period of thy tyranny approacheth.
On us thou canst not enter but by death;
For, I protest, we are well fortified,
And strong enough to issue out and fight:
If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snakes of war to tangle thee.
On either hand thee there are squadrions pitch'd
To wall thee from the liberty of descendents,
And no way canst thou turn thee for redress,
But death doth front thee with apparent spoil,
And pale destruction meets thee in the face.
Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament,
To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot.
Lo! there thou standst, a breathing valiant man,
Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit;
This is the latest glory of thy praise,
That I, thy enemy, 'due' thee withal;
For ere the glass, that now begins to run,
Finish the process of his sandy hour,
These eyes, that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.

[Drum afar off. Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning bell,
Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul;
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

[Exeunt General, &c., from the Walls.

Tal. He fables not; I hear the enemy.—
Out, some light horsemen, and peruse their wings.—
O, negligent and heedless discipline!
How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs!
If we be English deer, be then in blood;
Not raceal-like to fall down with a pinch,
But rather moody mad, and desperate stage,
Turn on the bloody bounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay:
Sell every man his life as dear as mine,
And they shall find dear deer of us. my friends.—
God, and Saint George, Talbot, and England's right,
Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains in Gascony.

Enter York, with Forces; to him, a Messenger.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin?
Mess. They are return'd, my lord; and give it out,
That he is march'd to Bourdeaux with his power,
To fight with Talbot. As he march'd along,
By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led,
Which join'd with him, and made their march for Bourdeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset,
That thus delays my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege!
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid,
And I am bow't by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier.

God comfort him in this necessity!
If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English strength,
Never so needful on the earth of France,
Spur to the rescue of the noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron,
And hemm'd about with grim destruction.
To Bourdeaux, warlike duke! to Bourdeaux, York!
Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's honour.

York. O God! that Somerset—who in proud heart
Doth stop my corneets—were in Talbot's place!
So should we save a valiant gentleman,
By forfeiting a traitor and a coward.
Mad ire, and wrathful fury, make me weep,
That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep.

Lucy. O, send some succours to the distress'd lord!
York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word:
We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get.
All long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then, God take mercy on brave Talbot's soul!
And on his son, young John; whom two hours since
I met in travel toward his warlike father.
This seven years did not Talbot see his son,
And now they meet where both their lives are done.
York. Alas! what joy shall noble Talbot have,
To bid his young son welcome to his grave?
Away! vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends grieve in the hour of death.—
Lucy, farewell! no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot name.
Maine, Blois, Poitiers, and Tours are won away,
Long all of Somerset, and his delay.

[Exit York, with his Forces.

Lucy. Thus, while the vulture of sedition
Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders,
Sleeping negligence doth betray to loss
The conquest of our scarce-cold conqueror,
That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the fifth. Whiles they each other cross,
Lives, honours, lands, and all, hurry to loss.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—Other Plains of Gascony.

Enter Somerset, with his Army; an Officer of Talbot's with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now.
This expedition was by York, and Talbot,
Too rashly plotted; all our general force
Might with a salty of the very town
Be buckled with. The over-daring Talbot
Hath appli'd all his glos of former honour,
By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure.
York set him on to fight, and die in shame,
That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the name.

Off. Here is sir William Lucy, who with me
Set from our o'er-mate'd forces forth for aid.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Som. How now, sir William! whither were you sent?

Lucy. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold lord
Talbot;
Who, ring'd about with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset,
To beat assailing death from his weak legions:
And whiles the honourable captain there
Drops bloody sweat from his war-wareied limbs,
And, in advantage lingering, looks for rescue,
You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour,
Keep off aaloof with worthless emulation.
Let not your private discord keep away
The levied succours that should lend him aid,
While he, revengeful Sir William, doth yield
His life up to the world against odds.

Orleans the Bastard, Charles, and Burgundy,
Alençon, Reignier, compass him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. York set him on; York should have sent him
Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims;
Swareing that you withhold his levied host,
Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lies: he might have sent and had the
I own him little duty, and less love,
And take full scorn to fawn on him by sending.

Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now entrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot!
Never to England shall he bear his life,
But dies betray'd to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come, go; I will despatch the horsemen straight:
Within six hours they will be at his aid.

Lucy. Too late comes rescue: he is ta'en, or slain,
For fly he could not, if he would have fled,
And fly would Talbot never, though he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot, then adieu!
Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The English Camp near Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot and John his Son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee,
To tutor thee in stratagems of war,
That Talbot's name might be in thee reviv'd,
When sapless age, and weak unable limbs,
Should bring thy father to his drooping chair.
But,—O, malignat and ill-boding stars!—
Now thou art come unto a feast of death,
A terrible and unavowed? danger:
Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest horse,
And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sudden flight. Come, daily not; begone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son?
And shall I fly? O! if you love my mother,
Dis honour not her honourable name,
To make a bastard, and a slave of me:
The world will say he is not Talbot's blood,
That basely fled, when noble Talbot stood.

Tal. Fly to revenge my death, if I be slain.

John. He that flies so well ne'er return again.

Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to die.

John. Then let me stay; and father, do you fly;
Your loss is great, so your regard should be;
My worth unknown, no loss is known in me.

Upon my death the French can little boast,
In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.
Flight cannot stain the honour you have won,
But mine it will, that no exploit have done:
You fled for 'vantage every one will swear,
But if I fly, they 'll say it was for fear.
There is no hope that ever I will stay,
If the first hour I shrink, and run away.
Here, on my knee, I beg mortality,
Rather than life preserv'd with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb?
John. Ay, rather than I'll shame my mother's womb.

Tal. Upon my blessing I command thee go.
John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.

Tal. Part of thy father may be sav'd in thee.
John. No part of him but will be shamed in me.

Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not lose it.
John. Yes, your renowned name; shall flight absuirt?
Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain.

John. You cannot witness for me, being slain.
If death be so apparent, then both fly.

Tal. And leave my followers here, to fight, and die?
My age was never tainted with such shame.

John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame?
No more can I be sever'd from your side.
Than can yourself yourself in twain divide:
Stay, go, do what you will, but do I;
For live I will not, if thy father die.

Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.

Come, side by side together live and die,
And soul with soul from France to heaven fly.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—A Field of Battle.

Alarum: Excursions, whereon Talbot's Son is hemmed about, and Talbot rescues him.

Tal. Saint George and victory! fight, soldiers, fight!
The regent hath with Talbot broke his word,
And left us to the rage of France's sword.

Where is John Talbot?—pause, and take thy breath;
I gave thee life, and rescued thee from death.

John. O, twice my father! twice am I thy son:
The life thou gav'st me first was lost and done;
Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck fire,
It warn'd thy father's heart with proud desire
Of bold-fac'd victory. Then leaden age,
Quicken'd with youthful spleen and warlike rage,
Beat down Alençon, Orleans, Burgundy,
And from the pride of Gallia rescu'd thee.
The ierful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, and had the maidenhood
Of thy first fight; I soon encountered,
And, interchanging blows, I quickly shed
Some of his bastard blood; and, in disgrace,
Respoke him thus: 'Tis Contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood I spit of mine,
Mean and right poor; for that pure blood of mine,
Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy!'

Here purposing the Bastard to destroy,
Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father's care,
Art thou not wary, John? How dost thou fare?
Wilt thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly,
Now thou art seal'd the son of chivalry?
Fly to revenge my death, when I am dead;
The help of one stands me in little stead.
O! too much folly is it, well I wot,
To hazard all our lives in one small boat.
If I today die not with Frenche'man's rage,
To-morrow I shall die with mickle age:

By me they nothing gain, and if I stay,
'Tis but the short'ning of my life one day:
In thee thy mother dies, our household's name,
My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame.
All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay;
All these are sav'd, if thou wilt fly away.

John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me smart;
These words of yours, I pray, from life-blood from my heart.
On that advantage, bought with such a shame,
(To save a paltry life, and stay bright fame)
Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly,
The coward horse that bears me fall and die!
And like me to the peasanboys of France,
To be shame's scorn, and subject of mischance!
Surely, by all the glory you have won,
An if I fly I am not Talbot's son:
Then, talk no more of flight, it is no boot,
If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot.

Tal. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Crete,
Thou feareas. Thy life to me is sweet:
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side,
And, commendable prov'd, let's die in pride.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Same.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Talbot wounded, supported by a Soldier.

Tal. Where is my other life?—mine own is gone:
O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant John?—
Triumphant death, smear'd with captivity,
Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee.
When he perceive I'd me shrink; and on my knee,
His bloody sword he brandish'd over me,
And like a hungry lion did commence
Rough deeds of rage, and stern impatience;
But when my angry guardian stood alone,
Tender's'my ruin, and assail'd of none,
Dizzy-ey'd fury, and great rage of heart,
Suddenly made him from my side to start
Into the clust'ring battle of the French:
And in that sea of blood my boy did drench
His overmounting spirit; and there died
My learsus, my blossom, in his pride.

Enter Soldiers, bearing the body of John Talbot.
Sold. O, my dear lord! ho, where your son is borne!
Tal. Thou antick, death, which laugh'st us here to scorn,
Anon, from thy insulting tyranny,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuity,
Two Talbots, winged through the lither's sky,
In thy despite shall 'scape mortality.
O! thou whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,
Speak to thy father, ere thou yield thy breath:
Brave death by speaking, whether he will or no:
Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy foe;—
Poor boy! he smiles, methinks; as who should say,
Had death been French, then death had died to-day.
Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms.
My spirit can no longer bear these harms.
Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have,
Now my old arms are young John Talbot's grave.
[Dies]

Alarums, Exeunt Soldiers, leaving the two bodies.
Enter CHARLES, ALÉNÇON, BURGUNDY, BASTARD, LA PUCELLE, and FORCES.
Char. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in,
We should have found a bloody day of this.
Bast. Hest the young whoop of Talbot's, raging wood.
FRIST PART OF

Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Puc. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said,
"Thou maiden youth be vanquish'd by a maid!"
But with a proud, majestic high scorn,
He answered thus: "Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillage of a gigot wench." So, rushing in the bowels of the French,
He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.
But. Doubtless, he would have made a noble knight.
See, where he lies interred in the arms
Of the still bleeding nurse of his harms.

Bast. Hew them to pieces, hack their bones asunder,
Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.
Char. O, no! forbear; for that which we have fled
During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter Sir William Lucy, attended; a French Herald preceding.

Lucy. Herald, conduct me to the Dauphin's tent,
To know who hath the glory of the day.
Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?
Lucy. Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere French word;
-We English warriors not what it means.
I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en,
And to survey the bodies of the dead.
Char. For prisoners ask'd thou? hell our prison is.
But tell me briefly* whom thou sekest now.
Lucy. But where's the great Alcides of the field,
Valiant lord Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury?
Created, for his rare success in arms,
Great earl of Washford*, Waterford, and Valence;
Lord Talbot of Goodrich and Urchinfield,
Lord Strange of Blackmere, lord Verdun of Alton,

Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, lord Furnial of Sheffield,
The three victorious lord of Falconbridge;
Knight of the noble order of St. George,
Worthy Saint Michael, and the golden fleece;
Great marshall to Henry the sixth.

Of all his wars within the realms of France?
Puc. Here is a silly stately style indeed!
The Turk, that two and fifty kingdoms hath,
Writes not so tedious a style as this,—

Dear, that thou magnisfist with all these titles,
Stinking, and fly-blown, lies here at our feet.

Lucy. Is Talbot slain? the Frenchman's only scourge,
Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?
O! were mine eye-balls into bullets turn'd,
That I in rage might shoot them at your faces.
O! that I could but call these dead to life,
It were enough to fright the realm of France.
Were but his picture left among you here,
It would amaze the proudest of you all.
Give me their bodies that I bear them forth,
And give them burial as becometh their worth.
Puc. I think, this upstart is old Talbot's ghost,
He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit.
For God's sake, let him have 'em; keep them here,
They would but stink, and putrefy the air.
Char. Go, take their bodies hence.
Lucy. I'll bear them hence:
But from their very ashes shall be rear'd
A phamix that shall make all France afeard.
Char. So we be rid of them, do what thou wilt.
And now to Paris, in this conquering vein:
All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain. [Exit.

ACT V.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, and Exeter.

K. Hen. Have you perus'd the letters from the pope,
The emperor, and the earl of Armagnac?
Glo. I have, my lord; and their intent is this:—
They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a godly peace concluded
Between the realms of England and of France.
K. Hen. How doth thy grace affect their motion?
Glo. Well, my good lord; and as the only means
To stop effusion of much Christian blood,
Establish quietness on every side.
K. Hen. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always thought,
It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith.
Glo. Beside, my lord, the sooner to effect,
And surer bind, this knot of animity,
The earl of Armagnac, near kin* to Charles,
A man of great authority in France,
Profers his only daughter to your grace
In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

K. Hen. Marriage, uncle? alas! my years are young,
And fitter is my study and my books,
Than wanton dalliance with a paramour.
Yet, call the ambassadors; and, as you please,
So let them have their answers every one:
I shall be well content with any choice.

Tends to God's glory and my country's weal.

Enter a Legate, and two Ambassadors, with Winchester, as a Cardinal.

Err. What! is my lord of Winchester install'd,
And call'd into a Cardinal's degree?
Then, I perceive that will be verified,
Henry the fifth did sometime prophesy—
"If once he come to be a cardinal,
He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown."—
K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several suits
Have been consider'd and debated on.
Your purpose is both good and reasonable;
And, therefore, are we certainly resolvd,
To draw conditions of a friendly peace;
Which, by my lord of Winchester, we mean
Shall be transported presently to France.

Glo. And for the proffer of my lord, your master,
I have inform'd his highness so at large,
As—liking of the lady's virtuous gifts,
Her beauty, and the value of her dower,—
He doth intend she shall be England's queen.
K. Hen. In argument and proof of which contract,
Bear her this jewel, pledge of my affection.—[Gives it.]
And so, my lord protector, see them guarded,
And safely brought to Dover; where inshipp'd,
Commit them to the fortune of the sea.

[Exeunt King Henry and Train; Gloster,
Exeter, and Ambassadors.

Win. Stay, my lord legate: you shall first receive

1 most bloody: in f. e. 2 hath obtained: in f. e. 3 These two words are not in f. e. 4 The old name of Wexford. 5 that I may bear them hence: in f. e. 6 our: in f. e. 7 knit: in f. e. 8 Not in f. e. 9
The sum of money, which I promised,
Should be deliver'd to his holiness.
For clothing me in these grave ornaments.
Leg. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure. [Exit]
Win. Now, Winchester will not submit, [Now,
Or be inferior to the proudest peer.
Humphrey, of Glover, thou shalt well perceive,
That, neither in birth, nor in authority,
The hag shall not overborne by thee.
I'll either make thee stoop, and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. - France. Plains in Anjou.

Enter CHARLES, BURGUNDY, ALBONPON, LA PUCELLE,
And Force, marching.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits.
'Tis said the stout Parisians do revolt,
And turn again unto the warlike French.
Aren. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of France,
And keep not back your powers in dalliance.

Puc. Peace be among them if they turn to us;
Else ruin combat with their palaces!

Enter a Scout.
Scout. Success unto our valiant general,
And happiness to his accomplishments!
Char. What tidings send our scouts? I pray thee, speak.

Scout. The English army, that divided was Into two parties, is now conjoid in one,
And means to give you battle presently.

Char. Somewhat too sudden, sirs, the warning is;
But we will presently provide for them.

Bur. I trust, the ghost of Talbot is not there:
Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

Puc. Of all base passions fear me as accurs'd.
Command the conquest, Charles, shall it be thine;
Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.
Char. Then on, my lords; and France be fortunate!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. - The Same. Before Angiers.

Enter Charles. Excursions. Enter La Pucelle.

Puc. The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly. -
Now help, ye charming spells, and periaps; And ye, choice spirits, that admonish me, And give me signs of future accidents: You speedy helpers, that are substitutes Under the lordly monarch of the north; Appear, and aid me in this enterprise!

Enter Friends.

This speedy and quick appearance argues proof Of your accustom'd diligence to me,
Now, ye familiar spirits, that are call'd Out of the powerful regions under us,
Help me this once, that France may get the field.

[They walk, and speak not.

O! hold me not with silence over-long.
Where I was wont to feed you with my blood,
I'll lop a member off, and give it you,
In earnest of a farther benefit,
So you do descend to help me now.

[They hang their heads.

No hope to have redress? - My body shall Pay recompence, if you will grant my suit.

[They shake their heads.

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice, Entreat you to your wonted furtherance?
Then take my soul; my body, soul, and all,
Before that England give the French the foil.

[They depart.

See! they forsake me. Now the time is come,
That France must vail her lofty-plumed crest,
And let her head fall into England's lap.
My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong for me to buckle with.
Now, France, thy glory droppeth to the dust. [Exit.

[Alarums. Enter English and French, fighting; La Pucelle and York fight hand to hand. La Pucelle is taken. The French fly.

York. Damsel of France, I think I have you fast: Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your liberty. —
A goodly prize, fit for the devil's grace!
See, how the ugly witch doth bend her brows,
As if, with Cresse, she would change my shape.

Puc. Chang'd to a worse shape thou canst not be.
York. O! Charles the Dauphin is a proper man:
No shape but his can please my empty eye.

Puc. A plaguing mischief light on Charles, and thee! And may ye both be suddenly surpris'd.
By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds!

York. Fell, banning Hag! enchantresses, hold thy tongue.

Puc. I pray thee, give me leave to curse a while.

York. Curse, miscreant, when thou comest to the stake.

[Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter Suffolk, leading in Lady Margaret.
Suf. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner.

[Gazes on her.

O, fairest beauty! do not fear, nor fly,
For I will touch thee but with reverent hands:
I kiss thee, and kiss thee [Kissing her hand] for eternal peace,
And lay them gently on thy tender side.
Who art thou? say, that I may honour thee.

Mar. Margaret my name, and daughter to a king,
The king of Naples, whose' er thou art.

Suf. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd.
Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me:
So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings.
Yet, if this servile usage once offend,
Go, and be free again, as Suffolk's friend.

[She turns away as going.

O, stay! — I have no power to let her go;
My hand would free her, but my heart says—no.
As plays the sun upon the glassy stream,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes.
Fain would I woo her, yet I dare not speak:
I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind.
Fie, De la Poole! disable not thyself;
Hast not a tongue? is she not here thy prisoner?
Wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight?
Aye; beauty's princely majesty is such,
Confounds the tongue, and mocks the sense of touch.

Mar. Say, earl of Suffolk, if thy name be so,
What ransom must I pay before I pass?

Suf. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suit,
Before thou make a trial of her love? [Aside.

Mar. Why speak'st thou not? what ransom must I pay?
Suf. She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore to be won.

[Aside.
Mar. Will thou accept of ransom, yes, or no?

[Aside.
Suf. Yes, man! remember that thou hast a wife;
Then, how can Margaret be thy paramour?

[Aside.
Mar. I were best to leave him, for he will not hear.
Suf. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling card.
Mar. He talks at random: sure, the man is mad.
Suf. And yet a dispensation may be had.
Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me.
Suf. I'll win this lady Margaret. For whom?
Why, for my king: tush! that's a wooden thing.
Mar. He talks of wood: it is some carpenter.
Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied,
And peace established between these realms.
But there remains a scruple in that, too;
For though her father be the king of Naples,
Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet is he poor,
And our nobility will scorn the match.
Mar. Hear ye, captain? Are you not at leisure?
Suf. It shall be so, disdain they ne'er so much:
[ Aside.
Henry is youthful, and will quickly yield.
Maddan, I have a secret to reveal.
Mar. What though I be enthralld? he seems a knight,
And will not any way dishonour me.

[Aside.
Suf. Lady, vouesafie to listen what I say.
Mar. Perhaps, I shall be rescued by the French,
And then I need not crave his courtesy.
Suf. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause—
Mar. Tush! women have been captivate ere now.

[Aside.
Suf. Lady, pray tell me, wherefore talk you so?
Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but quid for quo.
Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not then ween
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?
Mar. A queen in bondage is more vile to me
Than is a slave in base servility,
For princes should be free.
Suf. And so shall you,
If happy England's royal king be true.
Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me?
Suf. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's queen;
To put a golden sceptre in thy hand,
And set a precious crown upon thy head,
If they will condescend to me—
Mar. What?
Suf. His love.
Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.
Suf. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am
To woo so fair a dame to be his wife,
And have no portion in the choice myself.
How say you, madam; are you so content?
Mar. An if my father please, I give consent.
Suf. Then, call our captains, and our colours forth!
And, madam, at your father's castle walls
We'll crave a parley, to confer with him.

[Troops come forward.
Suf. See, Reignier, see thy daughter prisoner.
Reign. To whom?
Suf. To me.
Reign. Suffolk, what remedy?
I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.
Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord:
Consent, and for thy honour give consent,
Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king,
Whom I with pain have woo'd and won thereto,
And this her easy-held imprisonment
Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty.
Reign. Speaks Suffolk as he thinks?
Suf. That Suffolk doth not flatter, face, or reign.
Reign. Upon thy princely warrant I descend
To give thee answer of thy just demand.

[Exit, from the Walls.
Suf. And here I will expect thy coming down.
Trumpets sounded. Enter Reignier, below.
Reign. Welcome, brave earl, into our territories:
Command in Anjou what your honour pleases.
Suf. Thanks, Reignier, happy for so sweet a child,
Fit to be made companion with a king:
What answer makes your grace unto my suit?
Reign. Since thou dost deign to woo her little worth,
To be the princely bride of such a lord,
Upon condition I may quietly
Enjoy mine own, the county Maine, and Anjou,
Free from oppression or the stroke of war,
My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please.
Suf. That is her ransom, I deliver her;
And those two counties, I will undertake,
Your grace shall well and quietly enjoy.
Reign. And I again, in Henry's royal name,
As deputy unto that gracious king,
Give thee her hand, for sign of plighted faith.
Suf. Reignier of France, I give thee kindly thanks,
Because this is in traffic of a king:
And yet, methinks I could be well content
To be mine own attorney in this cause;
I'll go over, then, to England with this news,
And make this marriage to be solemniz'd.
So, farewell, Reignier. Set this diamond safe
In golden palaces, as it becomes.
Reign. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
The Christian prince, king Henry, were he here.
Mar. Farewell, my lord. Good wishes, praise, and prayers,
Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret.
[Going.
Suf. Farewell, sweet madam! But hark you, Margaret;
No princely commendations to my king.
Mar. Such commendations as become a maid,
A virgin, and his servant, say to them.
Suf. Words, sweetly pled, and modestly directed.
But, madam, I must trouble you again,—
No loving token to his Majesty?
Mar. Yes, my good lord; a pure unsotted heart,
Never yet taint with love, I send the king.
Suf. And this withal.
[ Kisses her.
Mar. That for thyself: I will not so presume,
To send such peevish tokens to a king.

[Exeunt Reignier and Margaret.
Suf. O, wert thou for myself!—But, Suffolk, stay;
Thou mayst not wander in that labyrinth:
There Minotaurs, and ugly treasons, lurk.
Solicit Henry with her wond'rous praise:
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,
Mid natural graces that extinguish art;
Repeat their semblance often on the seas,
That when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet,
Thou may'st bereave him of his wits with wonder.

[Exit.

Enter York, Warwick, and others.
York. Bring forth that soreness, condemn'd to burn.
Enter La Pucelle, guarded; and a Shepherd.

Shep. Ah, Joan! this kills thy father’s heart out-right.

Have I sought every country far and near,
And, now it is my chance to find thee out,
Must I behold thy senseless cruel death?

Ah, Joan! sweet daughter Joan, I’ll die with thee.

Puc. Decrepit mis’r! base ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentle blood:
Thou art no father, nor no friend, of mine.

Shep. Out, out!—My lords, an please you, ’tis not so;
I did beget her, all the parish knows:
Her mother liveth yet, can testify,
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.

War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage?
York. This argues what her kind of life hath been;
Wicked and vile, and so her death concludes.

Shep. Fie, Joan! that thou wilt be so obstinate!
God knows, thou art a collop of my flesh,
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:
Deny me not, I pray thee, gentle Joan.

Puc. Peasant, avanta!—You have suborn’d this man,
Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shep. ’Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest,
The morn that I was wedded to her mother—
Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl.—
Wilt thou not stoop? Now cursed be the time
Of thy nativity! I would, the milk
Thy mother gave thee when thou suck’st her breast,
Had been a little ratsbane for thy sake;
Or else, when thou didst keep my lamps a-field,
I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee.
Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab?
O! burn her, burn her: hanging is too good.
[Exit.]

York. Take her away; for she hath lived too long,
To fill the world with vicious qualities.

Puc. First, let me tell you whom you have condemn’d;
Not me begotten of a shepherd swain,
But issu’d from the progeny of kings:
Virtuous, and holy; chosen from above,
By inspiration of celestial grace,
To work exceeding miracles on earth.

I never had to do with wicked spirits:
But justice, that are polluted with your lusts,
Stain’d with the guiltless blood of innocents,
Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices.
Because you want the grace that others have,
You judge it straight a thing impossible
To compass wonders, but by help of devils.
No; misconceived Joan of Arc hath been
A virgin from her tender infancy,
Chaste and immaculate in very thought;
Whose maidens blood, thus rigorously effus’d,
Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven.

York. Ay, ay.—Away with her to execution!
War. And hark ye, sirs; because she is a maid,
Spare for no fagots, let there be snow:
Place barrels of pitch upon the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortened.

Puc. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?
Then, Joan, discover thine iniquity,
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege.—
I am with child, ye bloody homicides;
Murder not, then, the fruit within my womb,
Although ye hate me to a violent death.

York. Now, heaven forebode! the holy maid with child?

War. The greatest miracle that e’er ye wrought!
Is all your strict precision come to this?
York. She and the Dauphin have been juggling;
I did imagine what would be her refuge.
War. Well, go to; we will have no bastards live;
Especially, since Charles must father it.

Puc. You are deceiv’d; my child is none of his;
It was Alençon, that enjoy’d my love.
York. Alençon, that notorious Machiavel!
It dies, an if it had a thousand lives.

Puc. O! give me leave; I have defied you,
’Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke I nam’d,
But Reignier, king of Naples, that prevail’d.

War. A married man: that’s most intolerable.
York. Why, here ’s a girl! I think she knows not well,
There were so many, whom she may accuse,
War. It’s sign she hath been liberal and free.

York. And yet, forsooth, she is a virgin pure.—
Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat, and thee:
Use no entreaty, for it is in vain.

Puc. Then lead me hence:—with whom I leave my curse.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make exode;
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, till mischief, and despair
Drive you to break your necks, or hang yourselves!

York. Break thou in pieces; and consume to ashes,
Thou foul accursed minister of hell!
[Exit Cardinal Beaufort, attended.]

Car. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence
With letters of commission from the king.
For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,
Mov’d with remorse of these outrageous broils,
Have earnestly implor’d a general peace
Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;
And here at hand the Dauphin, and his train,
Approacheth to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travail turn’d to this effect?
After the slaughter of so many peers,
So many captains, gentlemen, and soldiers,
That in this quarrel have been overthrown,
And sold their bodies for their country’s benefit,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Have we not lost more part of all the towns,
By true war, falsehood, and by treachery?
Our great progenitors had conquer’d?

O, Warwick, Warwick! I foresee with grief
The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York! if we conclude a peace,
It shall be with such strict and severe covenants,
As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter CHARLES, attended; ALENÇON, BASTARD,
REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peaceful truce shall be proclaimed in France,
We come to be informed by yourselves
What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling cholers choke
The truth; our passage of my private voice,
By sight of these, our baleful enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:—
That, in regard King Henry gives consent,
Of mere compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your country of distressful war,
And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,
You shall become true liegeman to his crown.

1 Miserable person. 2 Often put in the mouths of uneducated persons, for ostinate, by writers of the time. 3 poison’d: in f. o.
And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear
To pay him tribute, and submit thyself,
Thou shalt be plac'd as viceroy under him,
And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alen. Must he be then as shadow of himself?
Adorn his temples with a coronet,
And yet, in substance and authority,
Retain but privilege of a private man?
This proffer is absurd, and reasonless.

Char. 'Tis known, already that I am possess'd
With more than half the Gallian territories,
And therein reversion'd for their lawful king:
Shall I, for lucer of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole?
No, lord ambassador; I'll rather keep
That which I have, than, coveting for more,
Be cast from possibility of all.

York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret means
Used intercession to obtain a league,
And now the matter grows to compounding,
Stain'd but ill with proceedings upon comparisons?
Either accept the title thou marv'st,
Of benefit proceeding from our king,
And not of any challenge of desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reig. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one,
We shall not find like opportunity.

Alen. To say the truth, it is your policy
[Aside to Charles.]
To save your subjects from such massacre,
And ruthless slaughters as are daily seen
By our proceeding in hostility;
And, therefore take this compact of a truce,
Although you break it when your pleasure serves.

War. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our condition stand?

Char. It shall; only reserve'd, you claim no interest
In any of our towns of garrison.

York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty;
As thou art knight, never to disobey,
Nor be rebellious to the crown of England,
Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England.—
[Charles, and his Nobles, give tokens of fealty.]
So; now dismiss your army when ye please:
Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still,
For here we interchange 1 a solemn peace. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, in conference with Suffolk;
Gloster and Exeter following.

K. Hen. Thy wondrous rare description, noble earl,
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her virtues, graced with external gifts,
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart;
And like as rigour of tempestuous gusts
Provokes the mightiest hull against the tide,
So am I driven by breath of her renown,
Either to suffer shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Suf. Thus! my good lord, this supernal tale
Is but a medium of thy worthy praise:
The chief perfections of that lovely dame,
(Had I sufficient skill to utter them)
Would make a volume of enticing lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit.
And, which is more, she is not so divine,

1 entertain: in f.s.
As I am sick with working of my thoughts.
Take, therefore, shipping; post, my lord, to France;
Agree to any covenants, and procure
That lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
To cross the seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henry's faithful and anointed queen.
For your expenses and sufficient charge,
Among the people gather up a tenth.
Be gone, I say; for till you do return,
I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.
And you, good uncle, banish all offence:
If you do censure me by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
This sudden execution of my will.
And so conduct me, where from company
I may revolve and ruminate my grief.

Glo. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last.
[Exit Gloster and Exeter.
Suf. Thus Suffolk hath prevail'd; and thus he goes,
As did the youthful Paris once to Greece,
With hope to find the like event in love,
But prosperous better than the Trojan did.
Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king;
But I will rule both her, the king, and realm. [Exit.
SCENE I.—London. A Room of State in the Palace.

Flourish of Trumpets: then Hauyboys. Enter, on one side, King Henry, Duke of Gloster, Salisbury, Warwick, and Cardinal Beaufort; on the other, Queen Margaret, led in by Suffolk; York, Somerset, Buckingham, and others following.

Suf. As by your high imperial majesty I had in charge at my depart for France, as procurator to your excellence, to marry princess Margaret for your grace; so, in the famous ancient city Tours, in presence of the kings of France and Sicil, the dukes of Orleans, Calaber, Bretaigne, and Alenpou, seven earls, twelve barons, and twenty reverend bishops, I have perform'd my task, and was espous'd: and humbly now upon my bended knee, in sight of England and her lordly peers, deliver up my title in the queen to your most gracious hands, that are the substance of that great shadow I did represent; the happiest gift that ever marquess gave, the fairest queen that ever king receive'd.

K. Hen. Suffolk arise.—Welcome, queen Margaret! I can express no kinder sign of love, than this kind kiss.—O Lord! that lends me life, lend me a heart replete with thankfulness; for thou hast given me, in this beauteous face, a world of earthly blessings to my soul, if sympathy of love unite our thoughts.

OF
KING HENRY VI.

DRA\MATIS PERSONÆ.

Lords, Ladies, and Attendants; Herald; Petitioners, Aldermen, a Beadle, Sheriff, and Officers; Citizens, Prentices, Falconers, Guards, Soldiers, Messengers, &c.

SCENE, in various Parts of England.

ACT I.

Q. Mar. Great king of England, and my gracious lord, the mutual conference that my mind hath had By day, by night, waking, and in my dreams, in courtly company, or at my beads, With you mine alderlievest sovereign, Makes me the bolder to salute my king With ruder terms, such as my wit affords, And over-joy of heart doth minister. K. Hen. Her sight did ravish, but her grace in speech, Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty, Makes me from wondering fall to weeping joys: Such is the fulness of my heart's content. Lords, with one cheerful voice welcome my love. All. Long live queen Margaret, England's happiness! Q. Mar. We thank you all. [Flourish. Suf. My lord protector, so it please your grace, Here are the articles of contracted peace, Between our sovereign, and the French king Charles For eighteen months, concluded by consent. Glo. [Reads.] "Imprimis: It is agreed between the French king, Charles, and William de la Poole, marquis of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry, king of England,—that the said Henry shall espouse the lady Margaret, daughter unto Reignier king of Naples, Sicilia, and Jerusalem, and crown her queen of England ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing.—Item,—That the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine, shall be released and delivered to the king her father."—[Pausing.]

1 A compound Saxon word, found in Chaucer, my all dearest. 2 Not in i. e.
K. Hen. Uncle, how now?
Glo. Pardon me, gracious lord:
Some sudden qualm hath struck me at the heart,
And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no farther.
K. Hen. Uncle of Winchester, I pray, read on.
Car. [Reads.]
Item: It is farther agreed between them,—that the duchies of Anjou and Maine shall be released and delivered over to the king her father; and she sent over of the king of England's own proper cost and charges, without having any dowry.
K. Ken. They please us well.—Lord marques, kneel thee down:
We here create thee the first duke of Suffolk,
And girt thee with the sword.—Cousin of York,
We here discharge your grace from being regent
Of the parts of France, till term of eighteen months
Be full expir'd.—Thanks, uncle Winchester,
Gloster, York, Buckingham, Somerset, Salisbury, and Warwick;
We thank you all for this great favour done,
In entertainment to my princely queen.
Come, let us in; and with all speed provide
To see her coronation be perform'd.

[Exeunt King, Queen, and Suffolk.]

Glo. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state,
To you duke Humphrey must unload his grief,
Your grief, the common grief of all the land.
What! did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valour, coin, and people, in the wars?
Did he so often lodge in open field,
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toil his wits,
To keep by policy what Henry got?
Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham,
Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick,
Received'd deep scars in France and Normandy?
Or hath mine uncle Beaufort, and myself,
With all the learned council of the realm
Studied so long, sat in the council-house
Early and late, debating and to and fro
How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe?
And hath his highness in his infancy
Been crown'd in Paris, in despite of foes?
And shall these labours, and these honours die?
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your despair, all your counsellors, die?
O peers of England! shamefull is this league:
Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame,
Blotting your names from books of memory,
Razing the characters of your renown,
Defacing monuments of conquer'd France,
Undoing all, as all had never been.
Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse?
This peroration with such circumstance?
For France, 'tis ours; and we will keep it still.
Glo. Ay, uncle, we will keep it, if we can;
But now it is impossible we should.
Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roast,
Hath given the duchies of Anjou, and Maine,
Unto the poor king Reignier, whose large style
Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.
Sali. Now, by the death of him that died for all,
These counties were the keys of Normandy.—
But wherefore weeps Warwick, my valiant son?
War. For grief, that they are past recovery;
For, were there hope to conquer them again,
My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no tears.
Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both;

Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer:
And are the cities that I got with wounds,
Deliver'd up again with peaceful words?
Mort Dieu!
York. For Suffolk's duke, may he be suffocated
That dims the honour of this warlike isle!
France should have torn and rent my very heart,
Before I would have yielded to this league.
I never read but England's kings have had Large sums of gold, and dowries, with their wives;
And our king Henry gives away his own,
To match with her that brings no vantages.
Glo. A proper jest, and never heard before,
That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth,
For costs and charges in transporting her!
She should have stay'd in France, and starv'd in France,
Before.
Car. My lord of Gloucester, now you grow too hot.
It was the pleasure of my lord the king.
Glo. My lord of Winchester, I know your mind:
'T is not my speeches that you do mislike,
But 't is my presence that doth trouble you.
Rancour will out: proud prelate, in thy face
I see thy fury. If I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings.—
Lordings, farewell; and say, when I am gone,
I prophesied, France will be lost ere long.

[Exit.]

Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage.
'T is known to you he is mine enemy;
Nay, more, an enemy unto you all,
And no great friend, I fear me, to the king.
Consider, lords, ho is the next of blood,
And heir apparent to the English crown:
Had Henry got an empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west,
There's reason he should be displeas'd at it.
Look to it, lords: let not his smoothing words
Bewitch your hearts; be wise, and circumspect.
What though the common people favour him,
Calling him "Humphrey the good Duke of Gloucester,"?
Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice—
"Jesus maintain your royal excellence!"
With—"God preserve the good duke Humphrey!"
I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss,
He will be found a dangerous protector.
Buck. Why should he, then, protect our sovereign,
He being our uncle, and he of age to govern him?—
Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And all together, with the duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoise duke Humphrey from his seat.
Car. This weighty business will not brook delay;
I'll to the duke of Suffolk presently.

[Exit.]

Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphry's pride,
And greatness of his place be grief to us,
Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal.
His insolence is more intolerable
Than all the princes in the land beside:
If Gloster be displac'd, he'll be protector.
Buck. Or thou, or I, Somerset, will be protector,
Despite duke Humphrey, or the cardinal.

Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows him,
While these do labour for their own pretentions,
Behoves it us to labour for the realm.
I never saw but Humphrey, duke of Gloster,
Did bear him like a noble gentleman.
Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal,
More like a soldier, than a man of the church,
As stout, and proud, as he were lord of all,
Swear like a ruffian, and demean himself
Unlike the ruler of a common-wealth.—
Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age,
Thy deeds, thy plainness, and thy house-keeping,
Have won the greatest favour of the commons,
Excepting none but good duke Humphrey:—
And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to civil discipline;
Thy late exploits, done in the heart of France,
When thou wert regent for our sovereign,
Have made them fear'd, and honour'd of the people.
Join we together, for the public good,
In what we can to bridle and suppress
The pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal,
With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition;
And, as we may, cherish duke Humphrey's deeds,
While they do tend to profit of the land.

War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land,
And common profit of his country.
York. And so say York, for he hath greatest cause.
Sal. Then let's make haste away, and look unto the main.

War. Unto the main? O father! Maine is lost;
That Maine, which by main force did Warwick win,
And would have kept him long as breath did last.
Main chance, father, you mean; but I meant Maine,
Which I will win from France, or else be slain.

[Exit Warwick and Salisbury.
York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French;
Paris is lost; the state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point now they are gone.
Suffolk concluded on the articles,
The peers agreed, and Henry was well pleas'd,
To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter.
I cannot blame them all: what is 't to them?
'T is thine they give away, and not their own.
Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage,
And purchase friends, and give to courtiers,
Still revelling, like lords, till all be gone;
While as the silly owner of the goods
Weeps over them, and wrings his helpless' hands,
And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof,
While all is sherd, and all is borne away,
Ready to starve, and dare not touch his own:
So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
While his own lands are bargain'd for, and sold.
Methinks, the realms of England, France, and Ireland,
Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood,
As did the fatal brand Athela burn'd
Unto the prince's heart of Calydon.1
Anjou and Maine, both given unto the French!
Cold news for me, for I had hope of France,
Even as I have of fertile England's soil.
A day will come when York shall claim his own;
And therefore I will take the Nevill's part,
And make a show of love to proud duke Humphrey,
And when I spy advantage, claim the crown;
For that's the golden mark I seek to hit.
Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist,
Nor wear the diadem upon his head,
Whose church-like humours fit not for a crown.
Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve;
Watch thou, and wake, when others be asleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state,
Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love,
With his new bride, and England's dear-bought queen,
And Humphrey with the peers be fall'n at jars:
Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd,
And in my standard bear the arms of York,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster;
And, force perfors, I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pul'd fair England down.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke of Gloster's House.

Enter Gloster and the Duchess.

Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-riven'd corn,
Hanging the head at Ceres' plenteous load?
Why doth the great duke Humphrey knit his brows,
As frowning at the favours of the world?
Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,
Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight?
What seest thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Enchas'd with all the honours of the world?
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same.
Put forth thy hand; reach to the glorious gold.—
What, is 't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine;
And having both together heavy'd it up,
We'll both together lift our heads to heaven,
And never more abase our sight so low,
As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.

Glo. O Nell! sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy lord,
Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts;
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry,
Be my last breathing in this mortal world.
My troubous dream this night doth make me sad.
Duch. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it
With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.

Glo. Methought, this staff, mine office-badge in court,
Was broke in twain: by whom, I have forgot,
But, as I think, 'twas by the cardinal;
And on the pieces of the broken wand
Were plac'd the heads of Edmond duke of Somerset,
And William de la Poole, first duke of Suffolk.
This was my dream: what it doth bode God knows.

Duch. Tut! this was nothing but an argument,
That he that breaks a stick of Gloster's grove
Shall lose his head for his presumption.
But list to me, my Humphrey! my sweet duke:
Methought, I sat in seat of majesty,
In the cathedral church of Westminster,
And in that chair where kings and queens were crown'd;
Where Henry, and dame Margaret, kneel'd to me,
And on my head did set the diadem.

Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide outright.
Presumptuous dame! ill-married, Eleanor!
Art thou not second woman in the realm,
And the protector's wife, belov'd of him?
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
Above the reach or compass of thy thought?
And wilt thou still be hammering treachery;
To tumble down thy husband, and thyself,
From top of honour to disgrace's feet?
Away from me, and let me hear no more.

Duch. What, what, my lord! are you so choleric
With Eleanor, for telling but her dream?
Next time I'll keep my dreams unto myself
And not be check'd.

Glo. Nøy, be not angry; I am pleas'd again.

1 hapless: in f. 6. 2 Meleager, prince of Calydon, died in great torments, when his mother, Althea, threw into the flames the firebrand upon the preservation of which his life depended.—Knight.
Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord protector, 'tis his highness' pleasure, You do prepare to ride unto St. Albans, Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawke. Glo. I go.—Come, Nell, thou wilt ride with us?
Duck. Yet, my good lord, I'll follow presently.
[Exeunt Gloster and Messenger.

Follow I must; I cannot go before, While Gloster bears this base and humble mind. Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood, I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks, And smooth my way upon their headless necks; And, being a woman, I will not be slack To play my part in fortune's pageant.— Where are you there? Sir John 1 may, fear not, man, We are alone; here's none but thou, and I.

Enter Hume.

Hume. Jesus preserve your royal majesty!
Duck. What say'st thou? majesty! I am but grace.
Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's advice, Your grace's title shall be multiplied.
Duck. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet confer'd With Margery Jourdain, the cunning witch And Roger Bolingbroke, the conjurer, And will they undertake to do me good?
Hume. This they have promised,—to show your grace A spirit rais'd from depth of under ground, [highness That shall make answer to such questions, As by your grace shall be propounded him.
Duck. It is enough: I'll think upon the questions. When from St. Albans we do make return, We'll see these things effected to the full. Here, Hume, take this bond: make merry, man, With thy confederates in this weighty cause.

[Exit Duchess.

Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold, Marry, and shall. But how now, Sir John Hume! Seal up your lips, and give no words but mum: The business asketh silent secrecy. Dame Eleanor gives gold to bring the witch: Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil. Yet have I gold flies from another coast: I dare not say, from the rich cardinal, And from the great and new made duke of Suffolk; Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain, They, knowing dame Eleanor's aspiring humour, Have hired me to undermine the duchess, And buzz these conjurations in her brain. They say, a crafty knave does need no broker; Yet am I Suffolk's, and the cardinal's broker. Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near To call them both a pair of crafty knaves. Well, so it stands; and thus, I fear, at last, Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck, And her attainit will be Humphrey's fall. So that how it will, I shall have gold for all.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Peter, and others, with Petitions.

1 Pet. My masters, let's stand close: my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in sequel.
2 Pet. Marry, the lord protector, for he's a good man. Jesu bless him!

Enter Suffolk and Queen Margaret.

1 Pet. Here 'a comes, methinks, and the queen with him. I'll be the first, sure.

2 Pet. Come back, fool! this is the duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.

Suf. How now, fellow! wouldst any thing with me?
1 Pet. I pray my lord, pardon me: I took ye for my lord protector.

Q. Mar. "To my lord protector?" are you supplications to his lordship? Let me see them. What is thine?

1 Pet. Mine is, an 't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife, and all, from me.

Suf. Thy wife too! that is some wrong indeed.— What's yours?— [Reads.] "Against the duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Mellford."
—How now, sir knave?

2 Pet. Alas! sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Peter. [Presenting his petition.] Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying, that the duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

Q. Mar. What say'st thou? Did the duke of York say, he was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my master was? No, forsooth; my master said, that he was; and that the king was an usurper.

Suf. Who is there? [Enter Servants.]—Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently.—We'll hear more of your matter before the king.

[Exeunt Servants with Peter.

Q. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected Under the wings of our protector's grace, Begin your suits anew, and sue to him. [Tear the Petition. Away, base culsions!—Suffolk, let them go.

All. Come, let's be gone.

[Exeunt Petitioners.

Q. Mar. My lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise, Is this the fashion in the court of England? Is this the government of Britain's isle, And this the royalty of Albion's king? What! shall king Henry be a pupil still, Under the surly Gloster's governance? Am I a queen in title and in style, And must be made a subject to a duke? I tell thee, Poole, when in the city Tours Thou ran'st a tilt in honour of my love, And stol'st away the ladies' hearts of France, I thought king Henry had resembled thee, In courage, courtship, and proportion; But all his mind is bent to holiness, To number Ave Maris on his beads: His champions are the prophets and apostles; His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ; His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves Are brazen images of canoniz'd saints. I would, the college of the cardinals Would choose him pope, and carry him to Rome, And set the triple crown upon his head: That were a state fit for his holiness.

Suf. Madam, be patient: as I was cause Your highness came to England, so will I In England work your grace's full content.

Q. Mar. Beside the haughty protector, have we Beaumont, The imperious churchman; Somerset, Buckingham, And grumblmg York: and not the least of these, But can do more in England than the king.

Suf. And he of these that can do most of all, Cannot do more in England than the Nevils: Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers.

Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much,
As that proud dame, the lord protector’s wife:
She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,
More like an empress than duke Humphrey’s wife.
Strangers in court do take her for the queen:
She bears a duke’s revenues on her back,
And in her heart she scorns our poverty.
Shall I not live to be aveng’d on her?
Contemptuous base-born calls her as she is,
She vaunted ‘mongst her minions ’other day,
The vail of her eaves, her wearing gown
Was better worth than all my lands and lands,
Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter.

Suf. Madam, myself have lim’d a bush for her;
And plac’d a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays,
And never mount to trouble you again.
So, let her rest; and, madam, list to me,
For I am bold to counsel you in this.
Although we fancy not the cardinal,
Yet must we join with him, and with the lords,
Till we have brought duke Humphrey in disgrace.
As for the duke of York, this late complaint
Will make but little for his benefit:
So, get by early who will watch the realm; ¹
And you, madam, show your cheer the happyhelm.

Enter King Henry, York, and Somerset; Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, Cardinal Beaufort, Buckingham, Salisbury, and Warwick.

K. Hen. For my part, noble lords, I care not which;
Or Somerset, or York, all’s one to me.
York. If York have ill demean’d himself in France,
Then let him be deny’d the regentship.
Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place,
Let York be regent: I will yield to him.
War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea, or no,
Dispute not that York is the worthier.
Car. Ambitious Warwick, let thy better speak.
War. A cardinal’s not my better in the field.
Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwick.
War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.
Sal. Peace, son!—and show some reason, Buckingham,
Why Somerset should be prefer’d in this.
Q. Mar. Because the king, forsooth, will have it so.
Glo. Madam, the king is old enough himself
To give his censure. These are no women’s matters.
Q. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs your grace
To be protector of his excellence?
Glo. Madam, I am protector of the realm,
And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.
Suf. Resign it, then, and leave thine insolence.
Since thou wert king, (as who is king but thou?)
The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck,
The Dauphin hath prevail’d beyond the seas,
And all the peers and nobles of the realm
Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.
Car. The commons hast thou rack’d; the clergy’s bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions.
Som. Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife’s attire,
Have cost a mass of public treasury.
Buck. Thy cruelty, in execution
Upon offenders hath exceed’d law,
And left them to the mercy of the law.
Q. Mar. Thy sale of offices, and towns in France;
If they were known, as the suspect is great,
Would make thee quickly hop without thy head.

[Exit Gloster. The Queen drops her Fan.
Give me my fan: what, minion! can you not?
[Giving the Duchess a box on the ear.

I cry you mercy, madam: was it you?
Duch. Was ’t I? yea, I was, proud French-woman:
Could I come near your beauty with my nails,
I’d set my ten commandments in your face.
K. Hen. Sweet aunt, be quiet: ’t was against her will.
Duch. Against her will. Good king, look to’t in time;
She’ll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby.
Though in this place most murther wear no breeches,
She shall not strike dame Eleanor unreveng’d.

[Aside. You see, good king; I have done my part.

Buck. Lord Cardinal, I will follow Eleanor;
And listen after Humphrey, how he proceeds:
She’s tickled now; her fume can need no spurrs,
She’ll gallop fast ² enough to her destruction.

[Exit Buckingham.

Re-enter Gloster.

Glo. Now, lords, my choler being over-blown
With walking once about the quadrangle,
I come to talk of commonwealth affairs.
As for your spiteful false objections,
Prove them, and I lie open to the law;
But God in mercy so deal with my soul,
As I in duty love my kind and country.
But to the matter that now haps to hand—
I say, if you resign, York is meetest man
To be your regent in the realm of France.
Suf. Before we make election, give me leave
To show some reason, of no little force,
That York is most unmeet of any man.
York. I’ll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am unmeet.
First, for I cannot flatter thee in pride:
Next, if I be appointed for the place,
My lord of Somerset will keep me there,
Without discharge, money, or furniture,
Till France be won into the Dauphin’s hands.
Last time I danc’d attendance on his will,
Till Paris was besieg’d, famish’d, and lost.
War. That can I witness: and a fouler fact
Did never traitor in the land commit.
Suf. Peace, headstrong Warwick!
War. Image of pride, why should I hold my peace?
Enter Servants of Suffolk, bringing in Horner and Peter.

Suf. Because here is a man accus’d of treason:
Pray God, the duke of York excuse himself!
York. Dost any one accuse York for a traitor?
K. Hen. What mean’st thou, Suffolk? tell me, what are these?
Suf. Please it your majesty, this is the man
That doth accuse his master of high treason.
His words were these—that Richard, duke of York,
Was rightful heir unto the English crown,
And that your majesty was an usurper.
K. Hen. Say, man, were these thy words?
Hor. An’t shall please your majesty, I never said nor thought any such matter. God is my witness, I am falsely accused by the villain.
Pet. By these ten bones, my lords, [Holding up his hands.] he did speak them to me in the garret one night, as we were scouring my lord of York’s armur.
York. Base dung-hill villain, and mechanical,
I’ll have thy head for this thy traitor’s speech—
I do beseech your royal majesty,
Let him have all the rigour of the law.
Hor. Alas! my lord, hang me, if ever I spake the words. My accuser is my prentice; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me. I have good witness of this: therefore, I beseech your majesty,

¹ common abusive epithet applied to women. ² we’ll weed them all at last: in f. c. ³ Denier. ⁴ sat: in f. c. Pope also reads fast.
do not cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.

K. Hen. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?

Gló. This doom, my gracious lord, if I may judge.

Let Somerset be regent o'er the French,

Because in York this breed suspects;

And let these have a day appointed them
For single combat in convenient place,

For he hath witness of his servant's malice.

This is the law, and this duke Humphrey's doom.

Som. I humbly thank your royal majesty.

Hor. And I accept the combat willingly.

Pet. Alas! my lord, I cannot fight: for God's sake, pity my case! the spite of this man prevails against me. O, Lord have mercy upon me! I shall never be able to fight a blow. O Lord, my heart!

Glo. Sirrah, or you must fight or else be hang'd.

K. Hen. Away with them to prison; and the day
Of combat shall be the last of the next month.—
Come, Somerset, we shall see them sent away. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. The Duke of Gloster's Garden.

Enter Margaret Jourdain, Hume, Southwell, and Bolingbroke.

Hume. Come, my masters: the duchess, I tell you, expects performance of your promises.

Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided.

Will her ladyship behold and hear our exercises?

Hume. Ay; what else? fear you not her courage.

Boling. I have heard her reported to be a woman of an invincible spirit: but it shall be convenient, master Hume, that you be by her aloof, while we be busy below; and so, I pray you, go in God's name, and leave us. [Exit Hume.] Mother Jourdain, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth—John Southwell, read you, and let us to our work.

—[Exit Duchess above.

Duch. Well said, my masters, and welcome all. To this geer: the sooner the better.

Boling. Patience, good lady; wizards know their times, and the highland night and silence of the night.

The time of night when Troy was set on fire;

The time when screech-owls cry, and ban-dogs howl;
And spirits walk, and ghosts break ope' their graves,
That time best fits the work we have in hand.

Madam, sit you, and fear not: whom we raise,
We will make fast within a hollow'd verge.

[Here they perform the Ceremonies belonging, and make the Circle: Bolingbroke, reads, Conjuro, te, &c. It thunders and lightens terribly; then the Spirit riseth.

Spir. Adsum.

M. Jourd. Amenath!

By the eternal God, whose name and power
Thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask:
For till thou speak thou shalt not pass from hence.

Spir. Ask what thou wilt.—That I had said and done!

Boling. First of the King: what shall of him become?

Spir. The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose,
But him outlive, and die a violent death.

As the Spirit speaks, Southwell writes the answer.

Boling. What fates await the duke of Suffolk?

Spir. By water shall he die, and take his end.

Boling. What shall befall the duke of Somerset?

Spir. Let him shun castles:

Safer shall he be on the sandy plains
Than where castles mounted stand.

Have done, for more I hardly can endure.

Boling. Descend to darkness, and the burning lake:

Foul fiend, avoid!

[Thunder and lightning. Spirit descends. Enter York and Buckingham, hastily, with their Guards.

York. Let's see your trinkets here are all forth-coming;

All.—Away! [Exit Guards, with Southwell, Bolingbroke, &c.

York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch'd her
A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon! [well: Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.

What have we here?

[Reads.

"The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose;
But him outlive, and die a violent death."

Why, this is just.

Aio te, Ecclesia, Romanos vincere posse.

Well, to the rest:

"Tell me, what fate awaits the duke of Suffolk?—
By water shall he die, and take his end.—"

What shall betide the duke of Somerset?—

Let him shun castles:

Safer shall he be on the sandy plains,
Than where castles mounted stand."

Come, come, my lords;
These oracles are hardly attain'd,
And hardly understood.

The king is now in progress towards Saint Albans;
With him the husband of this lovely lady:

Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry them;
A sorry breakfast for my lord protector.

Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my lord of York,
To be the post in hope of his reward.

York. At your pleasure, my good lord.—Who's within there? —Enter a Servant.

Invite my lords of Salisbury, and Warwick,
To sup with me to-morrow night.—Away! [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Saint Albans.

Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Gloster, Cardinal, and Suffolk, with Falconers, hollering.

Q. Mar. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook:

I saw not better sport these seven years' day;
Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high,
And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out.

K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made,
And what a pitch she flew above the rest.

Q. Mar.
To see how God in all his creatures works!

Yea, man and birds are fain of climbing high.

'Sef. No marvel, an it like your majesty,

My lord protector’s hawks do tower so well:

They know their master loves to be aloft,

And bears them in his glove at his falcon’s pitch.

Glo. My lord, 'tis but a beast of base and servile mind,

That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

Car. I thought as much: he’d be above the clouds.

Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal; how think you by that?

Were it not good your grace could fly to heaven?

K. Hen. The treasury of everlasting joy!

Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and thoughts

Beat on a crown, the treasure of thy heart:

Pernicious protector, dangerous peer,

That smooths’t it so with kingdom and commonweal?

—Glo. What, cardinal, is your priesthood grown so peremptory?

Tantum animis est? —

Churchmen so hot? good uncle, hide such malice;

And with such holiness you well can do it. ¹

Suf. No malice, sir; no more than well becomes

So good a quarrel, and so bad a peer.

—Suf. Why, as you, my lord?

An’t like your lordly lord-protectorship.

Q. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloster.

K. Hen. ¹ I pray thee, peace,

Good queen; and what not on these furious peers,

For blessed are the peacemakers on earth.

—Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make

Against this proud protector with my sword.

Glo. ’Faith, holy uncle, would ’t were come to that!

[Aside to the Cardinal.

Car. Marry, when thou dar’st.

[Aside.

Glo. Make up no factious numbers for the matter;

In thine own person answer thy abuse.

[Aside.

Car. Ay, where thou dar’st not peep: an if thou dar’st,

This evening on the east side of the grove.

[Aside.

K. Hen. How now, my lords!

Car. Believe me, cousin Gloster,

Had not your man put up the fowl so suddenly,

We had had more sport.—Come with thy two-hand sword.

[Aside to Glo.

Glo. True, uncle.

Car. Are you advis’d, the east side of the grove.

Glo. Cardinal, I am with you.²

[Aside.

K. Hen. Why, how now, uncle Gloster!

Glo. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my lord.

Now, by God’s mother, priest, I’ll shrow your crown

For this, or all my fence shall fail.

[Aside.

Car. Medice teipsum:

Protector, see to’t well, protect yourself.

[Aside.

K. Hen. The winds grow high; so do your stomachs, lords.

How irksome is this music to my heart!

When such strings jar, what hope of harmony?

I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

—Enter one, crying, “A Miracle!”

Glo. What means this noise?

Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?

One. A miracle! a miracle!

Suf. Come to the king: tell him what miracle.

One. Forsooth, a blind man at Saint Albans’s shrine,

Within this half hour hath receiv’d his sight;

A man that ne’er saw in his life before.

K. Hen. Now, God be praise’d, that believing souls

1 With such holiness can you do it: in f. e. ² In the folio, this and the two preceding speeches are given to Gloster. Theobald made the correction. ³ Not in f. e.
KING HENRY VI.

Enter YORK, SALISBURY, and WARWICK.

York. Now, my good lords of Salisbury and Warwick, our simple supper ended, give me leave,
To-day, in this close walk, to satisfy myself,
In craving your opinion of my title,
Which is inaffable, to England's crown.
Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at the full.
War. Sweet York, begin; and if thy claim be good,
The Nevils are thy subjects to command.
York. Then thus:—
Edward the third, my lords, had seven sons;
The first, Edward the Black Prince, prince of Wales;
The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,
Lionel, duke of Clarence; next to whom,
Was John of Gaunt, the duke of Lancaster;
The fifth was Edmund Langley, duke of York;
The sixth was Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloster;
William of Windsor was the seventh, and last.
Edward, the Black Prince, died before his father,
And left behind him Richard, his only son;
Who, after Edward the third's death, reign'd as king,
Till Henry Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster,
The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,
Crown'd by the name of Henry the fourth,
Seized on the realm; depos'd the rightful king;
Sent his poor queen to France, from whence she came,
And him to Pomfret; where, as all you know,
Harmless Richard was murder'd traitorously.
War. Father, the duke hath told the very truth:
Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.
[Right; YORK. Which now they hold by force, and not by
For Richard, the first son's heir being dead,
The issue of the next son should have reign'd.
Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an heir.
York. The third son, duke of Clarence, from whose line
I claim the crown, had issue—Philippe, a daughter,
Who married Edmund Mortimer, earl of March;
Edmund had issue—Roger, earl of March:
Roger had issue—Edmond, Anne, and Eleanor.
Sal. This Edmond, in the reign of Bolingbroke,
As I have read, laid claim unto the crown;
And but for Owen Glendower, had been king,
Who kept him in captivity, till he died.
But to the rest.
York. His eldest sister, Anne,
My mother, being heir unto the crown,

Hearing confusion on their own heads thereby,
Q. Mar. Gloster, see here the tainture of thy nest;
And look thyself be faultless, thou best.
Glo. Madam, for myself, to heaven I do appeal,
How I have lov'd my king, and commonweal;
And, for my wife, I know not how it stands.
Sorry I am to hear what I have heard;
Noble she is, but if she have forgot
Honour, and virtue, and convers'd with such
As, like to pitch, defile nobility,
I banish her, my bed, and company,
And give her, as a prey to law, and shame,
That hath dishonour'd Gloster's honest name.
K. Hen. Well, for this night, we will repose us here:
To-morrow, toward London, back again,
To look into this business thoroughly,
And call these foul offenders to their answers;
And poise the cause in justice equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

Married Richard, earl of Cambridge; who was
To Edmond Langley, Edward the third's fifth son, son.
By her I claim the kingdom: she was heir
To Roger, earl of March; who was the son
Of Edmond Mortimer; who married Philippa,
Sole daughter unto Lionel, duke of Clarence:
So, if the issue of the elder son
Succeed before the younger, I am king.

War. What plain proceeding is more plain than this?
Henry doth claim the crown from John of Gaunt,
The fourth son; York claims it from the third.
Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign:
It fails not yet, but flourishes in thee.
And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock.—
Then, father Salisbury, kneel we together;
And, in this private plot, be we the first,
That shall salute our rightful sovereign.
With honour of his birthright to the crown.

Both. Long live our sovereign Richard, England's king!
York. We thank you, lords. But I am not your king,
Till I be crown'd, and that my sword be stain'd
With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster;
And that's not suddenly to be perform'd;
But with advice, and silent secrecy.
Do you, as I do, in these dangerous days,
Wink at the duke of Suffolk's insolence.
At Beaumont's pride, at Somerset's ambition,
At Buckingham, and all the crew of them,
Till they have drank the shepherd of the flock;
That virtuous prince, the good duke Humphrey.
'T is that they seek; and they, in seeking that,
Shall find their deaths, if York can prophecy.

Sal. My lord, break we off; we know your mind at full.

War. My heart assures me, that the earl of Warwick
One day shall make the duke of York a king.

York. And, Nevil, this I do assure myself,
Richard shall live to make the earl of Warwick
The greatest man in England, but the king. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Hall of Justice.

Trumpets sounded. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Gloster, York, Suffolk, and Salisbury; the Duchess of Gloster, Margery Jourdain, Southwell, Hume, and Bolingbroke, under guard.

K. Hen. Stand forth, dame Eleanor Cobham, Gloster's wife.

In sight of God and us, your guilt is great:
Receive the sentence of the law, for sin
Such as by God's book is adjudg'd to death.—
You four, from hence to prison back again;

[To Jourd, &c.
From thence, unto the place of execution:
The witch in Smithfield shall be burn'd to ashes,
And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.—
You, madam, for you are more nobly born,
Despoiled of your honour in your life,
Shall, after three days' open penance done,
Live in your country here, in banishment,
With Sir John Stanley in the Isle of Man.

Duch. Welcome is banishment; welcome were my death.

Glo. Eleanor, the law, thou seest, hath judged thee:
I cannot justify whom the law condemns—
[Exeunt the Duchess, and the other Prisoners, guarded.

Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
Ah, Humphrey! this dishonour in thine age
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground.—
I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and mine age would ease.

K. Hen. Stay, Humphrey, duke of Gloster. Ere thou
Give up thy staff; Henry will to himself
[go,
Protector be; and God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, and lantern to my feet.
And go in peace, Humphrey; no less belov'd,
Than when thou wert protector to thy king.

Q. Mar. I see no reason why a king of years
Should be protected like a child by peers?
God and king Henry govern England's helm;
Give up thy staff, sit, and the king his realm.

Glo. My lord, I have here, noble Henry, is my staff;
To think I faint would keep it makes me laugh.
As willingly do I the same resign,
As e'er thy father Henry made it mine:
And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it,
As others would ambitiously receive it,
Farewell, good king: when I am dead and gone,
May honourable peace attend thy throne. [Exit.

Q. Mar. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen;
And Humphrey, duke of Gloster, scarce himself,
That bears so shrewd a maim: two pulls at once,—
His lady banish'd, and a limp lop'd off;
This staff of honour rauted where let it stand,
Where it best fits to be, in Henry's hand.

Suf. Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her proudest days.

York. Lords, let him go.—Please it your majesty,
This is the day appointed for the combat;
And ready are the appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man to enter lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight.

Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord; for purposely, therefore Left I the court to see this quarrel tried.

K. Hen. O' God's name, see the lists and all things
Here let them end it, and God defend the right! [fit:
York. I never saw a fellow worse bestead,
Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant,
The servitor of this armourer, my lords.

Ester, on one side, Hornen, and his Neighbours, drinking to him so much that he is drunk; and he enters bearing his staff with a sand-bag fastened to it; a drum before him: at the other side, Peter, with a drum and a similar staff; accompanied by Prentices drinking to him.

1 Neigh. Here, neighbour Horner, I drink to you in a cup of sack. And fear not, neighbour, you shall do down well enough.

2 Neigh. And here, neighbour, here's a cup of 3 Neigh. And here's a pot of good double beer, neighbour: drink, and fear not your man.

Hor. Let it come, i' faith, and I'll pledge you all,
and a fig for Peter!

1 Pren. Here, Peter, I drink to thee; and be not afraid.

2 Pren. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master:
fight for credit of the prentices.

Peter. I thank you all: drink, and pray for me, I pray you, for, I think, I have taken my last draught in this world.—Here, Robin, an if I die, I give thee my apron; and, Will, thou shalt have my hammer—and here, Tom, take all the money that I have.—O Lord, bless me! I pray God, for I am not able to deal with my master, he hath learnt so much hence already.

1 Spot. The words "by peers," are not in f. e. 2 realm: in folio; Johnson made the change. 3 This line is not in f. e. 4 Taken away. 5 youngest: in f. e. 6 A wine made at a place of that name near Lisbon.
Sal. Come, leave your drinking both, and fall to blows.—
Sirrah, what's thy name?
Peter. Peter, tossooth.
Sal. Peter! what more?
Peter. Thump.
Sal. Thump! then see thou thump thy master well.
Hor. Masters, I am come hither, as it were, upon my master's instigation, to prove him a knave and myself an honest man: and touching the duke of York, I will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen. And therefore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow.'
York. Despatch: this knave's tongue begins to double.
Sound, trumpets, alarum to the combatants.
[Alarum. They fight, and PETER strikes down his Master.
Hor. Hold, Peter, hold, I confess, I confess treason.
[Dies.
York. Take away his weapon.—Fellow, thank God, and the good wine in thy master's way.
Peter. O God! have I overcome mine enemies in this presence? O Peter! thou hast prevailed in right.
K. Hen. Go, and take hence that traitor from our sight;
For by his death we do perceive his guilt:
And God in justice hath reveal'd to us
The truth and innocence of this poor fellow,
Whom he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully.—
Come, fellow; follow us for thy reward.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. A Street.

Enter Gloster and Servants, in mourning Cloaks.
Glo. Thus, sometimes hath the brightest day a cloud;
And after summer evermore succeeds
Barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold:
So, cares and joys abound, as seasons fleet.—
Sirs, what's o'clock?
Serv. Ten, my lord.
Glo. Ten is the hour that was appointed me
To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess:
Unearth she may ensnare the stints secrets,
To tread them with her tender-feeling feet.
Sweet Nell, all can the stately mind abroach
The abject people, gazing on thy face.
With envious looks, laughing at thy shame,
That erst did follow thy proud chariot wheels,
When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.
But, soft! I think, she comes; and I'll prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to see her misery.
Enter the Duchess of Gloster, in a white sheet, with verses written upon her back, her feet bare, and a taper burning in her hand: Sir John Stanley, a Sheriff, and Officers.
Serv. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff.
Glo. No, sir, not for your lives: let her pass by.
Duch. Come you, my lord, to see my open shame?
Now thou dost penance too. Look, how they gaze:
Sce, how the giddy multitude do point,
And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee.
Ah, Gloster! hide thee from their hateful looks;
And in thy closet pent up rue my shame,
And ban thine enemies, both mine and thine.
Glo. Be patient, gentle Nell: forget this grief.
Duch. Ah, Gloster! teach me to forget myself;
For, whilst I think I am thy married wife,
And thou a prince, protector of this land,
Methinks, I should not thus be led along,
Mai'd up in shame, with papers on my back,
And follow'd with a rabble, that rejoices
To see my tears, and hear my deep-felt groans.
The ruthless fiend doth cut my tender feet;
And when I start the envious people laugh,
And bid me be advised how I tread.
Ah, Humphrey! can I hear this shameful yoke?
'Twasst thou, that e'er I'll look upon the world,
Or count them happy that enjoy the sun?
No; dark shall be my light, and night my day:
To think upon my pomp, shall be my hell.
Sometime I'll say I am duke Humphrey's wife,
And he a prince, and ruler of the land;
Yet so he ruled, and such a prince he was,
As he stood by, whilst I, his forlorn duchess,
Was made a wonder, and a pointing-stock,
To every idle rascal follower.
But be thou mild, and blush not at my shame:
Nor stir at nothing, till the axe of death
Hang over thee, as, sure, it shortly will;
For Suffolk,—he that can do all in all
With her, that hateth thee, and hates us all,—
And York, and impious Beauffort, that false priest,
Have all lim'd bushes to betray thy wings;
And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee.
But fear not thou, until thy foot be snar'd,
Nor never seek prevention of thy foes.
Glo. Ah, Nell! forbear a few more tears all awry:
I must offend before I be attainted;
And had I twenty times so many foes,
And each of them had twenty times their power,
All these could not procure me any seath,
So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless.
Wouldst have me rescue thee from this reproach?
Why, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away,
But I in danger for the breach of law.
Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell;
I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience:
These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.
Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parlia-mament, holden at Bury the first of this next month.
Glo. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein before?
This is close dealing.—Well, I will be there.

[Exit Herald.
My Nell, I take my leave:—and, master sheriff,
Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.
Sker. An't please your grace, here my commission
And Sir John Stanley is appointed now [stays;
To take her with him to the Isle of Man.
Glo. Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?
Skrn. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace.
Glo. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You use her well. The world may laugh again;
And I may live to do you kindness, if
You do it here: and so, sir John, farewell.
Duch. What! gone, my lord, and bid me not farewell?
Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.

[Exeunt Gloster and Servants.

Duch. Art thou gone so? All comfort go with thee,
For none abides with me: my joy is death;
Death, at whose name I oft have been afeard,
Because I wish'd this world's eternity.—
Stanley, I pray thee, go, and take me hence;
I care not whither, for I beg no favour,
Only convey me where thou art commanded.

1 Some mod. eds. add: "as Beris, of Southampton, fell upon Armagh," from the old play of the "First Part of the Contention," on which the present drama was founded. 2 Scarcely, not easily. 3 Malignous.
SCENE I.—The Abbey at Bury.

A Senet. 1 Enter to the Parliament, King Henry,
Queen Margaret, Cardinal Beaufort, Suffolk,
York, Buckingham, and others.

K. Hen. I muse, my lord of Gloucester is not come:
T is not his wont to be the hindmost man,
Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.
Q. Mar. Can you not see, or will you not observe
The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?
With what a majesty he bears himself;
How insolent of late he is become,
How proud, how peremptory, and unlike himself?
We know the time since he was mild and affable;
And if we did but glance a far-off look,
Immediately he was upon his knee,
That all the court admir'd him for submission:
But meet him now, and, be it in the morn,
When every one will give the time of day,
He knits his brow, and shows an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff unbow'd knee,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs.
Small curs are not regarded when they grin,
But great men tremble when the lion roars;
And Humphrey is no little man in England.
First note, that he is near you in descent,
And should you fall, he is the next will mount.
Me seemeth, thou, it is no policy,
Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears,
And his advantage following your decease,
That he should come about your royal person,
Or be admitted to your highness' counsel.
By flattery hath he won the commons' hearts,
And, when he please to make commotion,
'T is to be fear'd, they all will follow him.
Now 't is the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted;
Suffer them now, and 'll o'ergrow the garden,
And choke the herbs for want of husbandry.
The reverend care I bear unto my lord
Made me collect these dangers in the duke.
If it be fond, 2 call it a woman's fear;
Which fear if better reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe and say, I wrong'd the duke.
My lords of Suffolk, Buckingham, and York,
Reprove my allegations if you can,
Or else conclude my words effectual.
Suf. Well hath your highness seen into this duke;
And had I first been put to speak my mind,
I think, I should have told your grace's tale.
The duchess by her subornation,
Upon my life, began her devilish practices;
Or if he were not privy to those faults,
Yet, by repute of his high descent,
As next the king he was successive heir,

Duch. Ay, ay, farewell: thy office is discharg'd.
Come, Stanley, shall we go?

Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off this sheet,
And go we to attire you for our journey.

Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet:
No, it will hang upon my richest robes,
And show itself, attire me how I can.
Go, lead the way: I long to see my prison.

[Exeunt.

III.

And such high vaunts of his nobility,
Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick duchess,
By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall.
Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep,
And in his simple show he harbours treason.
The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb:
No, no, my sovereign; Glower is a man
Unsounded yet, and full of deep deceit.

Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law,
Devise strange deaths for small offences done?
York. And did he not, in his protectorate,
Levy great sums of money through the realm
For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it?
By means whereasof the towns each day revealed.

Buck. Tuts! these are petty faults to faults unknown,
Which time will bring to light in smooth duchy Humphrey.

K. Hen. My lords, at once: the care you have of us,
To mow down thorns that would annoy our foot,
Is worthy praise; but shall I speak my conscience?
Our kinsman Glower is as innocent
From meaning treason to our royal person,
As is the sucking lamb, or harmless dove.
The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given,
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.

Q. Mar. Ah! what's more dangerous than this fond alliance?
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,
For he's disposed as the hateful raven.
Is he a lamb? his skin is surely bent him,
For he's inclin'd as is the ravenous wolf; 2
Who cannot steal a shape, that means deceit?
Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraughtful man.

Enter Somerset.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!
K. Hen. Welcome, lord Somerset. What's the news from France?

Som. That all your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you: all is lost.
K. Hen. Cold news, lord Somerset; but God's will be done.
York. Cold news for me; for I had hope of France.

[Aside.

As firmly as I hope for fertile England,
Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud,
And caterpillars eat my leaves away;
But I will remedy this gear 4 ere long,
Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. All happiness unto my lord the king!
Pardon, my liege, that I have stay'd so long.

Suf. Nay, Gloster, know, that thou art come too soon,
Unless thou wert more loyal than thou art.

1 Sounding of trumpets. 2 Foolish. 3 Folio: are—wolves. 4 A fair.
KING HENRY VI.

SCENE I.

I do arrest thee of high treason here.

Glo. Well, Suffolk, yet 'tis thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my countenance for this arrest:
A heart unsotted is not easily daunted.
The purest spring is not so free from mud,
As I am clear from treason to my sovereign.
Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?

York. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France,
And, being protector, stay'd the soldier's pay;
By means whereof his highness hath lost France.

Glo. Is it but thought so? What are they that think it?
I never robb'd the soldiers of their pay,
Nor ever had, one penny bribe from France.
So help me God, as I have watch'd the night,
Ay, night by night, in studying good for England.
That doth that e'er I wrested from the king,
Or any great I hoarded to my use,
Be brought against me at my trial day.
No: many a pound of mine own proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I disbursed to the garrisons,
And need not be accused for restitution.

Car. It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.

Glo. I say no more than truth, so help me God!

York. In your protectorship you did devise Strange tortures for offenders, never heard of,
That England was defam'd by tyranny.

Glo. Why, 'tis well known that, whiles I was protector,
Pity was all, the fault that was in me;
For I should melt at an offender's tears,
And lowly words were ransom for their fault:
Unless it were a bloody murderer,
Or foul felonious thief that fleec'd poor passengers,
I never gave them condign punishment.
Murder, indeed, that bloody sin, I torture'd
Above the felon, or what trespass else.

Suf. My lord, these faults are easily, quickly answer'd;
But mightier crimes are laid unto your charge,
Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.
I do arrest you in your highness' name;
And here commit you to my lord cardinal
To keep, until your farther time of trial.

K. Hen. My lord of Gloster, 'tis my special hope,
That you will clear yourself from all suspect:
My conscience tells me you are innocent.

Glo. Ah, gracious lord! these days are dangerous:
Virtue is chok'd with foul ambition,
And charity chok'd hence by rancour's hand;
Foul subtlety is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land.—
I know, their complot is to have my life;
And if my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play,
For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.

Beaufort's red sparkling eyes blab his heart's malice,
And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy hate;
Sharp Buckingham unburies with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart;
And dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
Whose outstretched arm I have plac'd back,
By false assurance doth lie at my life.—
And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest,

Causes have laid disgraces on my head,
And with your best endeavour have stir'd up
My liegest lie to be mine enemy.—
Ay, all of you have laid your heads together:
Myself had notice of your conventicles,
And all to make away my guiltless life.
I shall not want false witness to condemn me,
Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt;
The ancient proverb will be well effected,
A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.

Car. My liege, his railing is intolerable,
If those that care to keep your royal person
From treason's secret knife, and traitor's rage,
Be thus upbraided, child, and rated at,
And the offender granted scope of speech,
'Twill make them cool in zeal unto your grace.

Suf. Hath he not twit our sovereign lady, here,
With ignominious words, though clerdy couch'd,
As if she had suborned some to swear
False allegations to o'erthrow his state?

Q. Mar. But I can give the loser leave to chide.

Glo. Far truer spoken, than meant: I lose, indeed.
Beshrew the winners, for they played me false;
And well such losers may have leave to speak.

Buck. He'll wrest the sense, and hold us here all day.—

Lord Cardinal, he is your prisoner.

Car. Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him sure.

Glo. Ah! thus king Henry throws away his crutch,
Before his legs be firm to bear his body:
Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first.
Ah, that my fear were false! ah, that it were!
For, good king Henry, thy decay I fear.

[Exeunt Attendants with Gloster.

K. Hen. My lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth best,
Do, or undo, as if 'ourselves were here.

[Rising.]

Q. Mar. What! will your highness leave the parliment?

K. Hen. Ay; Margaret, my heart is drown'd with grief,
Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes;
My body round engirt with misery,
For what's more miserable than discontent?
Ah, uncle Humphrey! in thy face I see
The map of honour, truth, and loyalty;
And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come,
That e'er I prov'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.
What lowering star now envies thy estate,
That these great lords, and Margaret our queen,
Do seek subversion of thy harmless life?
Thou never didst them wrong, nor no man wrong;
And as the butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strays,
Bearing it to the bloody slaughter-house;
Even so, remorseless, have they borne him hence:
And as the dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling's loss;
Even so myself bewails good Gloster's case,
With sad unhelpful tears; and with dimm'd eyes
Look after him, and cannot do him good,
So mighty are his vowed enemies.
His fortunes I will weep; and 'twixt each groan,
Say—'Who's a traitor? Gloster he is none.' [Exit.

Q. Mar. Fair lords, cold snow melts with the sun's hot beams.

Henry my lord is cold in great affairs,
'Too full of foolish pity; and Gloster's show

---

1 From the second folio. 2 suspense: in f. e. 3 Dearest. 4 Not in f. e.
Beguil'd him, as the mournful crocodile
With sorrow snares relenting passengers;
Or as the make, roll'd in a flowering bank,
With shining chequer'd slough, both sinner and that,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent.
Believe me, lords, were none more wise than I,
(And yet herein I judge mine own wit good)
This Gloster should be quickly rid the world,
To rid us from the fear we have of him.
Car. Th' should we employ more wisely, policy,
But yet we want a colour for his death:
'T is meet he be condemn'd by course of law.
Suf. But, in my mind that were no policy,
The king will labour still to save his life;
The commons haply rise to save his life:
As yet we have but trivial argument,
More than mistrust, that shows him worthy death.
York. So that, by this, you would not have him die.
Suf. Ah! York, no man alive so fain as I.
York. 'T is York that hath most reason for his death.—
But, my lord cardinal, and you, lord Suffolk,
Say, as you think, and speak it from your souls,
Wert't not all one, freely and readily set
To guard the chicken from a hungry kite,
As place duke Humphrey for the king's protector?
Q. Mar. So the poor chicken should be sure of death.
Suf. Madam, 't is true: and wer 't not madness, then,
To make the fox surveyor of the fold?
Who, being accus'd a crafty murderer,
His guilt should be but idly post'd over,
Because his purpose is not executed?
No; let him die, in that he is a fox,
By nature prov'd an enemy to the flock,
Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood,
As Humphrey's prov'd by reasons to my liege.
And do not stand on quillets how to slay him:
Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty
Sleeping, or wak't, 't is no matter how,
So he be dead: for that is good deceit
Which matches him first, that first intends deceit.
Q. Mar. Thrice noble Suffolk, resolutely spoke.
Suf. Not resolute, except so much were done,
For things are often spoke, and seldom meant; But, that my heart accordeth with my tongue,—
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my sovereign from his foes,—
Say but the word, and I will be his priest.
Car. But I would have him dead, my lord of Suffolk,
Ere you can take due order for a priest.
Say, you consent, and ensure well the deed,
And I'll provide his executioner;
I tender so the safety of my liege.
Suf. Here is my hand; the deed is worthy doing.
Q. Mar. And so say I.
York. And I: and now we three have spoke it,
It skills not greatly who impugns our doom.
  Enter a Messenger.
Mess. Great lords, from Ireland am I come again,
To signify that rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword.
Send succour, lords, and stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable.
For, being green, there is great hope of help.
Car. A breach that craves a quick expedient stop.
What counsel give you in this weighty cause?
York. That Somerset be sent as regent thither.
'T is meet that lucky ruler be employ'd;

Witness the fortune he hath had in France.
Som. If York, with all his far-fet policy,
Had been the regent there instead of me,
He never would have stay'd in France so long.
York. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done.
I rather would have lost my life betimes,
Than bring a burden of dishonour home,
By staying there so long, till all were lost.
Show me one scar character'd on thy skin:
Men's deeds look'd so white that do seldom win.
Q. Mar. Nay then, this flash will prove a raging fire,
If wind and fuel be brought to feed with it.
No more, good York;—sweet Somerset, be still:
Thy fortune, York, hast thou been regent there,
Might happily have prov'd far worse than his.
York. What, worse than nought? nay, then a shame take all.
Som. And, in the number, thee, that wishest shame.
Car. My lord of York, try what your fortune is.
The uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
Collected generally, from several counties,
And try your hap against the Irishmen?
York. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.
Suf. Why our authority is his consent,
And what we do establish, he confirms:
Then, noble York, take thou this task in hand.
York. I am content. Provide me soldiers, lords,
Whiles I take order for mine own affairs.
Suf. A charge, lord York, that I will see perform'd.
But now return we to the false duke Humphrey.
Car. No more of him; for I will deal with him,
That henceforth, he shall trouble us no more:
And so break off; the day is almost spent.
Lord Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.
York. My lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days,
At Bristol I expect my soldiers,
For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.
Suf. I'll see it truly done, my lord of York.
[Exeunt all but York.
York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful thoughts,
And change misdoubt to resolution.
Be that thou hop'st to be, or what thou art
Resign to death; it is not worth the enjoying.
Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart.
Faster than spring-time showers comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity.
My brain, more busy than the labouring spider,
Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
Well, nobles, well; 't is politicly done,
To send me packing with an host of men:
I fear me you but warm the starved snake,
Who, cherish'd in your breasts, will sting your hearts.
'T was men I lack'd, and you will give them me:
I take it kindly; yet, be well assured,
You put sharp weapons in a madman's hands.
Whiles I in Ireland march'd a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm,
Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven, or hell;
And this foul tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the whole bird seiz'd on my head.
Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams,
Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw.
And, for a minister of my intent,
I have sequ'd a headstrong Kentishman,
John Cade of Ashford,
To make commotion, as full well he can,
Under the title of John Mortimer.
In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
Oppose himself against a troop of kernés;
And fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine:
And, in the end being res't, I have seen
Him caper upright, like a wild Morriso',
Shaking the bloody darts, as he his bells.
Full often, like a tag-hair'd crafty kerne,
Hath he conversed with the enemy,
And undiscover'd come to me again,
And given me notice of their villainies.
This devil here shall be my substitute;
For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,
In face, in gait, in speech, he doth resemble:
By this I shall perceive the commonds' mind,
How they affect the house and claim of York.
Say, he be taken, rack'd, and tortured,
I know, no pain that can inflict upon him.
Will make him say I mov'd him to these arms.
Say, that he thrive, as 't is great like he will,
Why, then from Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd;
For, Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
And Henry put apart, then next for me.

SCENE II.—Bury. A Room in the Palace.

Enter certain Murderers, running over the Stage.

1 Mur. Run to my lord of Suffolk; let him know,
We have dispatch'd the duke, as he commanded.
2 Mur. O, that it were to do!—What have we done?

Didst ever hear a man so penitent?

1 Mur. Here comes my lord.

[Enter Suffolk.

Suf. Now, sirs, have you dispatch'd this thing?
1 Mur. Ay, my good lord, he's dead.

Suf. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my house;
I will reward you for this venturous deed.
The king and all the peers are here at hand.
Have you laid fair the bed? are all things well,
According as I gave directions?

1 Mur. 'Tis, my good lord.

Suf. Away! be gone.

[Exeunt Murderers.

Sound Trumpets. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Cardinal Beaufort, Somerset, Lords and others.

K. Hen. Go, call our uncle to our presence straight:
Say, we intend to try his grace to-day;
If he be guilty, as it is published.

Suf. I'll call him presently, my noble lord.

[Exit.

K. Hen. Lords, take your places; and, I pray you all,
Proceed no strainer 'gainst our uncle Gloucester,
Than from true evidence, of good esteem,
He be approv'd in practice culpable.

Q. Mar. God forbid any malice should prevail,
That faultless may condemn a noble man!
Pray God he may acquit him of suspicion!

K. Hen. I thank thee, Meg; these words content me much.—

Re-enter Suffolk.

How now! why lookst thou pale? why tremblest thou?
Where is our uncle? what's the matter, Suffolk?

Suf. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloucester is dead.

Q. Mar. Marry, God forefend!

Car. God's secret judgment!—I did dream to-night,
The duke was dumb, and could not speak a word.

[The King swoons.

Q. Mar. How fares my lord?—Help, lords! the king is dead.

Som. Rear up his body: wring him by the nose.

Q. Mar. Run, go; help, help!—O, Henry, ope thine eyes.

Suf. He doth revive again.—Madam, be patient.

K. Hen. O heavenly God!

Q. Mar. How fares my gracious lord?

Suf. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious Henry, comfort!

K. Hen. What! doth my lord of Suffolk comfort me?
Came he right now to sing a raven's note,
Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers,
And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first-conceived sound?
Hide not thy poison with such sugar'd words,
Lay not thy hands on me; forbear, I say:
Their touch affrights me as a serpent's sting.
Thou baleful messenger, out of my sight!
Upon thine eye-balls murderous tyranny
Sits in grim majesty to fright the world.
Look not upon me, for thine eyes are wounding.—
Yet do not go away:—come, basilisk,
And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight;
For in the shade of death I shall find joy,
In life, but double death, now Gloucester's dead.

Q. Mar. Why do you rate my lord of Suffolk thus?
Although the duke was enemy to him,
Yet he, most Christian-like, laments his death:
And for myself, foe as he was to me,
Might liquid tears, or heart-offending groans,
Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,
I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,
Look pale as primrose with blood-drinking sighs,
And all to have the noble duke alive.
What know I how the world may deem of me?
For it is known, we were but hollow friends;
It may be judg'd, I made the duke away:
So shall my name with slander's tongue be wounded,
And princes' courts be fill'd with my reproach.
This get I by his death. Ah me, unhappy,
To be a queen, and crown'd with infancy!

K. Hen. Ah, woe is me for Gloucester, wretched man!

Q. Mar. Be woe for me, more wretched than he is.
What! dost thou turn away, and hide thy face?
I am no loathsome leper! look on me.
What, art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf?
Be poisons too, and kill thy forlorn queen.
Is all thy comfort shut in Gloucester's tomb?
Why, then dame Margaret was ne'er thy joy;
Erect his statue, then, and worship it,
And make my image but an alehouse sign.
Was I for this nigh wreck'd upon the sea,
And twice by awkward wind from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native clime?
What boded this, but well-forwarding wind
Did seem to say,—Seek not a scorpion's nest,
Nor set no footing on this unkind shore.
What did I then, but curs'd th' ungentle* gus'ts,
And he that lease'd them from their brazen caves;
And bade them blow towards England's blessed shore,
Or turn our stern upon a dreadful rock.
Yet 'Elius would not be a murderer,
But left that hateful office unto thee.
The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou wouldst have me drown'd on shore,
With tears as salt as sea through thy unkindness:
The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking sands,
SECOND PART OF

And would not dash me with their ragged sides,
Because thy flitty heart, more hard than they;
Might in thy palace perish Margaret.
As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs,
When from the shore the tempest beat us back,
I stood upon the hatches in the storm;
And when the dusky sky began to rob
My earnest-gaping sight of thy land’s view,
I took a costly jewel from my neck,—
A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,—
And threw it towards thy land. The sea receiv’d it,
And so I wish’d thy body might my heart:
And even with this I lost fair England’s view,
And hate mine eyes be packing with my heart,
And call’d them blind and dusky spectacles,
For losing ken of Albion’s wished court.
How often have I tempted Suffolk’s tongue
(The agent of the foul incostancy)
To sit and witch‘ me, as Ascanius did,
When he to madding Dido would unfold.
His father’s acts, commene’d in burning Troy?
Am I not witch’d like her, or thou not false like him?
Ah me! I can no more.  —Die, Margaret,
For Henry weeps that thou dost live so long.

Noise within. Enter Warwick and Salisbury.
The Commons press to the door.

War. It is reported, mighty sovereign,
That good duke Humphrey traitorously is murder’d
By Suffolk and the cardinal Beaufort’s means.
The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down,
And care not who they sting in his revenge.
Myself have cal’d their spleenful mutiny,
Until they hear the order of his death.

K. Hen. That he is dead, good Warwick, ’t is too true;
But how he died, God knows, not Henry,
Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse,
And comment then upon his sudden death.

War. That I shall do, my liege.—Stay, Salisbury,
With the rude multitude, till I return.

[Warwick goes into an inner Room, and Salisbury retires.

K. Hen. O thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts!
My thoughts that labour to persuade my soul,
Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey’s life.
If my suspect be false, forgive me, God,
For judgment only doth belong to thee.
Rain would I go to chase his paltry lips
With twenty thousand kisses, and to rain:
Upon his face an ocean of salt tears,
To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk,
And with my fingers feel his hand unsleeping;
But all in vain are these mean obsequies,
And to survey his dead and earthy image,
What mit not but to make my sorrow greater?

The Doors of an inner Room are thrown open, and Gloster is discovered dead in his Bed; Warwick and others standing by it.

War. Come luther, gracious sovereign; view this body.

K. Hen. That is to see how deep my grave is made;
For with his soul fled all my worldly solace,
And, seeing him, I see my life in death.

War. As surely as my soul intends to live
With that dread King, that took our state upon him
To free us from his Father’s wrathful curse,
I do believe that violent hands were laid
Upon the life of this thrice-famed duke.
And say, it was thy mother that thou meantst;
That thou thyselfe wasst born in bastardye:
And, after all this fearless homage done,
Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to hell,
Pernicious bloodsucker of sleeping men.

Suf. Thou shalt be waking while I shed thy blood,
If from this presence thou dar'st go with me.

War. A way even now, or I will drag thee hence.
Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee,
And do some service to humprey's ghost.

[Exeunt Suffolk and Warwick.

K. Hen. What stronger breast-plate than a heart untainted?
Thrice in my land, that hath his quarrel just;
And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel, with Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted. [A noise
Q. Mar. What noise is this?
Re-enter Suffolk and Warwick, with their Weapons drawn.

K. Hen. Why, now, lords! your wrathful weapons drawn
Here in our presence! dare you be so bold?—
Why, what tumultuous clamour have we here?
Suf. The traitorful Warwick, with the men of Bury,
Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

Noise of a Crowd within. Re-enter Salisbury.

Suf. Sirs, stand apart; [Speaking to those within.
'Tis strange that a king shall know your mind.
Dread lord, your commands send you from me,
Unless lord Suffolk straight be done to death,
Or banished fair England's territories,
They will by violence tear him from your palace,
And torture him with grievous lingering death.
They say, by him the good duke Humphrey died;
They say, in him they fear your highness' death;
And more instinct of love, and loyalty,
Free from a stubborn opposite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,
Makes them thus forward in his banishment.
They say, in care of your most royal person,
That, if your highness should intend to sleep,
And charge, that no man should disturb your rest;
In pain of your disability, or end your death,
Yet notwithstanding such a strait edict,
Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue,
That slyly glided towards your majesty,
It were but necessary you were wake'd;
Lest, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber,
The mortal worm might make the sleep eternal:
And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, whe're you will or no,
From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is;
With whose envenomed and fatal sting,
Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth,
They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, my lord of Salisbury!

Suf. 'Tis like the commons, rude unpolish'd minds,
Could send such message to their sovereign;
But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,
To show how quaint an orator you are:
But all the honour Salisbury hath won,
Is, that he was the lord ambassador,
Sent from a sort of tinkers to the king.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, or we will all break in!

K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,
I thank them for their tender loving care,
And had I not been 'cited so by them,
Yet did I purpose as they do entreat;
For sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy
Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's means:
And therefore, by his majesty I swear,
Whose faire unworthy deputy I am,
He shall not breathe infection in this air
But three days longer, on the pain of death. [Exit Sal.

Q. Mar. O Henry! let me pleade for gentle Suffolk.
K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle Suffolk.
No more, I say: if thou dost pleade for him,
Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.
Had I but said, I would have kept my word,
But, when I swear, it is irrevocable.—
If after three days' space thou here be'st found
On any ground that I am ruler of,
The world shall not be ransom for thy life.—
Come, Warwick, come; good Warwick, go with me,
I have great matters to impart to thee.

[Exeunt K. Henry, Warwick, Lords, &c.

Q. Mar. Mischance, and sorrow, go along with you!
Heart's discontent, and sour affliction,
Bo playfellow to keep you company.
There's two of you; the devil make a third,
And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!
Suf. Can but gentle grace these excorations,
And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.

Q. Mar. Fie, coward woman, and soft-hearted wretch!
Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemy?

Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse them?
Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,²
I would invent as bitter-searching terms,
As curt, as harsh, and horrible to hear,
Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd Envy in her loathsome cave.
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words;
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;
My hair in a wild quiver should stand erect:
Not any joint should seem to curse and ban:
And even now my burden'd heart would break,
Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste!
Their sweetest shade, a grove of cypress trees!
Their chiefest prospect, murdering basilisks!
Their softest touch, as sharp² as lizard's stings!
Their music, frightful as the serpent's hiss,
And boding serceow-owls make the concert full!
All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell——

Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk: thou torment'st thyself;
And these dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an over-played gunt, recoil,
And turn the force of them upon thyself.

Suf. You bade me ban, and will you bid me leave?
Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Welfare could I curse away a winter's night,
Though standing naked on a mountain top,
Where biting cold would never let grass grow,
And think it but a minute spent in sport.

Q. Mar. O! let me entreat thee, cease. Give me
thy hand,

¹ Company. ² "They do affy me that this herbe cometh of the seed of some convicted dead men, and also without the death of some living things, it cannot be drawn out of the earth to man's use. Therefore, they did yse some dogge of other living beasts unto the roote thereof with a cord, and digged the earth in compass round about, and in the meatayme stopped their own ears for feare of the terrifible shriek and cry of this Mandrake. In which cry it doth not only die itselfe, but the feares thereof killeth the dogge or beast which pulleth it out of the earth."—Bullen's "Bulwarke of Defence against Sickness": folio, 1579; quoted by Reed. ² smart : in f. o.
That I may dew it with my mournful tears;
Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place,
To wash away my woeful monuments.
O! could this kiss be painted in thy hand,
That thou might'st think upon these by the seal;
Through whom a thousand sighs are breath'd for thee.
So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;
'Tis but surmis'd whilst thou art standing by,
As one that surfeits, thinking on a want.
I will repeal thee, or, be well assured,
Adventure to be banished myself;
And banished I am, if 'but from thee.
Go; speak not to me: even now be gone.—
O! go not yet.—Even thus two friends condemn'd
Embrace, and kiss, and take ten thousand leaves,
Loather a hundred times to part than die.
Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee.
Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banished,
Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee.
'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou thence:
A wildness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heavenly company;
For where thou art, there is the world itself,
With every several pleasure in the world,
And where thou art not, desolation.
I can no more.—Live thou to joy thy life;
Myself to joy in nought, but that thou liv'st.

Enter Vaux.

Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news, I pray thee?

Vaux. To signify unto his majesty,
That cardinal Beaufort is at point of death;
For suddenly a grievous sickness took him,
That makes him gasp, and stare, and catch the air,
Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.
Sometime he talks as if duke Humphrey's ghost
Were by his side; sometime he calls the king,
And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
The secrets of his overcharged soul:
And I am sent to tell his majesty,
That even now he cries aloud for him.

Q. Mar. Go, toll this heavy message to the king.
[Exit Vaux.

Ah me! what is this world? what news are these?
But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss,
Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure?
Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee,
And with the southern clouds contend in tears?
There's for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows.
Now, get thee hence: the king, thou know'st, is coming:
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.

Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot live;
And in thy sight to die, what were it else,
But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?
Here could I breathe my soul into the air,
As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,
Dying with mother's dag between its lips;
Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,
To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth:
So shouldst thou either turn my flying soul,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.
To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
From thee to die, were torture more than death.
O! let me stay, becalm what may becalm,

Q. Mar. Away! though parting be a fretful corrosive,
It is applied to a deathful wound.
To France, sweet Suffolk: let me hear from thee;
For whereas'thou art in this world's globe,
I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.

Suf. I go.

Q. Mar. And take my heart with thee.

Suf. A jewel, lock'd into the woeful'st casket
That ever did contain a thing of worth.
Even as a splitted bark, so sunder we:
This way fall I to death.

Q. Mar. This way for me.
[Exeunt, severally.

Enter King Henry, Salisbury, Warwick, and others.
The Cardinal in bed; Attendants with him.

Car. If thou be'st death, I'll give thee England's treasure,
Enough to purchase such another island,
So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain.

K. Hen. Ah, what a sign is it of evil life,
Where death's approach is seen so terrible!

War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.

Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will.

Died he not in his bed? where should he die?
Can I make men live, whe'r they will or no?—
O! torture me no more, I will confess.—

Alive again? then show me where he is:
I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him.—
He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.—
Comb down his hair: look! look! it stands upright,
Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul.—

Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary
Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.

K. Hen. O, thou eternal mover of the heavens,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!

O! beat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair.

War. See, how the pangs of death do make him grin.

Sal. Disturb him not; let him pass peaceably.

K. Hen. Peace to his soul, if 'tis God's good pleasure be.

Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,
Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.—

Car. dies?

He dies, and makes no sign.—O God, forgive him!

War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life.

K. Hen. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all—

Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close,
And let us all to meditation.
ACT IV.

Bare-headed plodding by my foot-cloth mule,
And thought thee happy when I shook my head?
How often hast thou waited at my cup,
Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
When I have feasted with queen Margaret?
Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride.
How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,
And duly waited for my coming forth.
This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf,
And therefore shall it charm thy riotous tongue.
What? Speak, captain, shall I stab the foul-long'd slave? 34

Cap. First let my words stab him, as he hath me.
Suf. Base slave, thy words are blunt, and so art thou.
Cap. Convey him hence, and on our long boat's side
Strike off his head.
Suf. Thou dar'st not for thy own.
Cap. Yes, Poole. 6

Cap. Poole, Sir Poole, lord?
Ay, kennel, puddle, sink; whose filth and dirt
Troubles the silver spring where England drinks.
Now, will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
For swallowing the treasure of the realm:
This lip, that kiss'd the queen, shall sweep the ground;
And thou, that smil'st at good duke Humphrey's death,
Against the senseless winds shall drift in vain,
Who in contempt shall kiss at thee again:
And wedded be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affy a mighty lord
Unto the daughter of a worthless king,
Having neither subject, wealth, nor diadem.
By devilish policy art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd
With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart.
By thee Anjou and Maine were sold to France:
The false revolting Normans thorough thee
Disdain to call us lord; and Picardy
Hath slain their governors, surprise'd our forts,
And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home
The princely Warwick, and the Nevils all,
Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain,
As hating thee, are rising up in arms:
And now the house of York—thrust from the crown,
By shameful murder of a guiltless king,
And lofty, proud, encroaching tyranny,—
Burns with revenging fire; whose hopeful colours
Advance our half-fac'd sun, striving to shine, 6
Under which the writ—Invitus nubibus
The commons, here in Kent, are up in arms;
And to conclude, reproach, andbeggary,
Are crept into the palace of our king,
And all by thee.—Away!—Convey him hence.
Suf. O, that I were a god, to shoot forth thunder
Upon these paltry, servile, abject drudges!
Small things make base men proud: this villain, here,
Being captain of a pinace, threatens more
Than Bargulus the strong Illyrian pirate,
Drones suck not eagles' blood, but rob bee-hives.
It is impossible, that I should die
By such a lowly vassal as thyself.
Thy words move rage, and not remorse, in me:

1 Embrose. 2 The: in f. e. 3 This line, not in the folio, is from the old play of the "Contestation." 4 These words and the following Poole, are from the "Contentation." 5 The device of Edward III., the rays of the sun dispensing themselves out of a cloud.—Camden. 6 Bargulus, Illyricus latro.—Cicero...
I go of message from the queen to France;
I charge thee, waft me safely cross the channel.

Cap. Walter!—

Whit. Come, Suffolk, I must waft thee to thy death.

Suf. Fene gellidus timor occupat artus:—it is thee I fear.

Whit. Thou shalt have cause to fear before I leave What! are ye daunted now? now will ye stop?

1 Gent. My gracious lord, entreat him; speak him fair.

Suf. Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,
Us'd to command, untaught to plead for favour.
Far be it we should honour such as these
With humble suit: no, rather let my head
Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heaven, and to my king;
And sooner dance upon a bloody pole,
Than stand uncovered to the vulgar grooms.
True nobility is exempt from fear:
More can I bear, than you dare execute.

Cap. Hale him away, and let him talk no more.

Suf. Come, soldiers, show what cruelty ye can,
That this my death may never be forgot.—
Great men oft die by vile beconians:—
A Roman swordsman and banditoe slave
Murder'd sweet Tully; Brutus', bastard hand
Stabb'd Julius Caesar; savage islanders
Pompey the great, and Suffolk dies by pirates.

[Exit Suff., with Whit. and others.

Cap. And as for these whose ransom we have set,
It is our pleasure one of them depart:
Therefore, come you with us, and let him go.

[Exit all but the first Gentleman.

Re-enter Whittmore, with Suffolk's body.

Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie,
Until the queen, his mistress, bury it.

1 Gent. O, barbarous and bloody spectacle!
His body will I bear unto the king;
If he revenge it not, yet will his friends;
So will the queen, that living held him dear.

[Exit, with the Body.

SCENE II.—Blackheath.

Enter George Bevis and John Holland.

Geo. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a latin: they have been up these two days.

John. They have the more need to sleep now then.

Geo. I tell thee, Jack Cade, the clothier, means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new nap upon it.

John. So he had need, for 'tis threadbare. Well, I say, it was never merry world in England, since gentlemen came up.

Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handicrafts-men.

John. The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons.

Geo. Nay more; the king's council are no good workmen.

John. True; and yet it is said,—labour in thy voca- tion: which is as much as to say,—let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magis- trates.

Geo. Thou hast hit it; for there's no better sign of a brave mind, than a hard hand.

John. I see them! I see them! There's Best's son, the tanner of Wingham.

Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies to make dog's leather of.

John. And Dick, the butcher.

Geo. Then is sin struck down like an ox, and iniquity's throat cut like a calf.

John. And Smith, the weaver.

Geo. Argo, their thread of life is spun.

John. Come, come; let's fall in with them.

Drum. Enter Cade, Dick the Butcher, Smith the Weaver, and others in great numbers.

Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father,—

Dick. Or rather, of stealing a cade's of herrings.

Cade. — For our enemies shall fall before us; inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes.

—Command silence.

Dick. Silence!

Cade. My father was a Mortimer,—

Dick. He was an honest man and a good bricklayer.

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet,—

Dick. I knew her well; she was a midwife. [Aside.]

Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies.—

Dick. She was, indeed, a pedlar's daughter, and sold many laces.

Cade. Smith. But, now of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home. [Aside.]

Cade. Therefore am I of an honourable house.

Dick. Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable, and there was he born under a hedge; for his father had never a house, but the cage. [Aside.

Cade. Valiant I am.

Smith. 'A must needs, for beggary is valiant. [Aside.]

Cade. I am able to endure much.

Dick. No question of that, for I have seen him whipped three market days together. [Aside.

Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.

Smith. He need not fear the sword, for his coat is of proof.

Dick. But, methinks, he should stand in fear of fire, being burn'd the hand for stealing of sheep. [Aside.

Cade. Be brave the while; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be in England seven half-penny loaves sold for a penny: the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it felony, to drink small beer. All the realm shall be in common, and in Cheapside shall my palfrey go to grass. And, when I am king, (as king I will be)—

All. God save your majesty!

Cade. I thank you, good people:—there shall be no money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers, and worship me their lord.

Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Some say, the bee stings; but I say, it is the bee's wax, for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since. How now! who's there?

Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham.

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read, and can accompt.

Cade. O monstrous!

Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies.

Cade. Here's a villain!

Smith. H's as a book in his pocket, with red letters in 't.

Cade. Nay then, he is a conjurer.

Dick. Nay, he can make obligations, and write court-hand.

1 A term of contempt. 2 with infeinite numbers: in folio. 3 Latin, cadus, a cask. * Not in f. e.
Scene IV.

KING HENRY VI.

Cade. I am sorry for 't: the man is a proper man, of mine honour; unless I find him guilty, he shall not die.—Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee: what is thy name?

Clerk. Emmanuell.

Dick. They use to write it on the top of letters. — 'T will go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone. —Dost thou use to write thy name, or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

Clerk. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up that I can write my name.

All. He hath confessed: away with him! he's a villain, and a traitor.

Cade. Away with him, I say! hang him with his pen and ink-horn about his neck.

[Execut some with the Clerk.]

Enter Michael.

Mich. Where 's our general?

Cade. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly! sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother Richard hath the king's forces.

Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down.

*He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself: he is but a knight, is 'a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently. [Kneels.] — Rise up sir John Mortimer. [Rises.] Now have at him.

Enter Sir Humphrey Stafford, and William his Brother, with Drum and Forces.

Staf. Rebellious hinds, the scut and scum of Kent, Mark'd for the gallowes, lay your weapons down:

Home to your cottages, forsake this gromn.

The king is merciful, if you return.

W. Staff. But angry, wrathful, and inclin'd to blood.

Staff. If you go forward: therefore yield, or die.

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not; it is to you, good people, that I speak; O'yer whom in time to come I hope to reign;

For I am rightful heir unto the crown.

Staff. Villain! thy father was a plasterer; and thou thyself a shearmann, art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a gardener.

W. Staff. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this; — Edmund Mortimer, earl of March,

Married the duke of Clarence's daughter, did he not?

Staff. Ay, sir.

Cade. By her he had two children at one birth.

W. Staff. That 's false.

Cade. Ay, there's the question; but, I say, 't is true.

The elder of them, being put to nurse, Was by a beggar-woman stol'n away;

And, ignorant of his birth and parentage, Became a bricklayer when he came to age.

*His son am I: deny it, if you can.

Dick. Nay, 't is too true; therefore, he shall be king.

Smith. Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it: therefore, deny it not.

Staff. And will you credit this base drudge's words, That spake he knows not what?

All. Ay, marry, will we; therefore, get ye gone.

W. Staff. Jack Cade, the duke of York hath taught you this.

Cade. He lies, for I invented it myself. [Aside.] — Go to, sirrah: tell the king from me, that for his father's sake, Henry the fifth, in whose time boys went to span-counter for French crowns, I am content he shall reign: but I'll be protector over him.

Dick. And, furthermore, we'll have the lord Say's head, for selling the dukedom of Maine.

Cade. And good reason; for thereby is England maimed, and fail to go with a staff, but that my puissance holds it up. Fellow kings, I tell you that that lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an enunuch; and more than that, he can speak French, and therefore he is a traitor.

Staff. O, gross and miserable ignorance!

Cade. Nay, answer, if you can: the Frenchmen are our enemies: go to, then, I ask but this; can he that speaks with the tongue of an enemy be a good counsellor, or no?

All. No, no; and therefore we'll have his head.

W. Staff. Well, seeing gentle words will not prevail, Assault them with the army of the king.

Staff. Herald, away; and, throughout every town, Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade;

That those which fly before the battle ends, May, even in their wives' and children's sight, Be hang'd up for example at their doors.—

All you, that be the king's friends, follow me.

[Execut the two Staffords and Forces.]

Cade. And you, that love the commons, follow me.

Now show yourselves men; 't is for liberty.

We will not leave one lord, one gentleman:

Spare none but such as go in clouted shoon,

For they are thrifty honest men, and such

As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.

Dick. They are all in order, and march toward us.

Cade. But then are we in order, when we are most out of order. Come: march! forward! [Execut.]

Scene III.—Another Part of Blackheath.

Enter Two Parties, and fight; and both the Staffords are slain.

Cade. Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford?

Dick. Here, sir.

Cade. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen, and thou behavest thyself as if thou hast been in thy own slaughter-house: therefore, thus will I reward thee.—The Lenet shall be as long again as it is; and thou shalt have a license to kill for a hundred years, lacking one.

Dick. I desire no more.

Cade. And, to speak the truth, thou deservest no less. This monument of the victory will I bear; [Putting on Stafford's armour,] and the bodies shall be dragg'd at my horses' heels, till I do come to London, where we will have the mayor's sword borne before us.

Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the jails, and let out the prisoners.

Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee. Come; let's march towards London. [Execut.

Scene IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, reading a Supplication; the Duke of Buckingham, and Lord Say with him: at a distance, Queen Margaret mourning over Suffolk's Head.

Q. Mar. Oft have I heard that grief softens the mind,

[Aside.]

And makes it fearful and degenerate;

Think, therefore, on revenge, and cease to weep.

But who can cease to weep, and look on this?

Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast;

But where 's the body that I should embrace?
Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' supplication?
K. Hen. I'll send some holy bishop to entreat;
For God forbid, so many simple souls
Should perish by the sword! And I myself,
Rather than bloody war shall cut them short,
Will parley with Jack Cade and general. —
But stay, I'll read it over once again.
Q. Mar. Ah, barbarous villains! hath this lovely face
Rul'd like a wandering planet over me,
And could it not enforce them to relent,
That were unworthy to behold the same?
K. Hen. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to have thy head.
Say, Ay, but I hope, your highness shall have his.
K. Hen. How now, madam! Lamenting still, and mourning Suffolk's death?
I fear me, love, if that I had been dead,
Thou wouldest not have mourn'd so much for me.
Q. Mar. No, my love; I should not mourn, but die
For thee.

Enter a Messenger.
in such haste?
Mess. The rebels are in Southwark: fly, my lord!
Jack Cade proclaims himself lord Mortimer,
Descended from the duke of Clarence's house,
And calls your grace usurper openly,
And vows to crown himself in Westminster.
His army is a ragged multitude
Of kings and peasants, rude and merciless:
Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's death
Hath given the rebels courage to proceed.
All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen,
They call false caterpillars, and intend their death.
K. Hen. O graceless men! they know not what they do.
Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Kenilworth,
Until a power be rais'd to put them down.
Q. Mar. Ah! were the duke of Suffolk now alive,
These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd.
K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee,
Therefore away with us to Kenilworth.
Say. So might your grace's person be in danger.
The sight of me is odious in their eyes;
And therefore in this city will I stay,
And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.
2 Mess. Jack Cade hath gotten London-bride: the Fly and forsake their houses. [citizens
The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor; and they jointly swear,
To spoil the city, and your royal court.
Buck. Then linger not, my lord: away, take horse.
K. Hen. Come, Margaret: God, our hope, will succour us.
Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is deceas'd.
K. Hen. Farewell, my lord [To Lord Say]: trust not the Kentish rebels.
Buck. Trust no body, for fear you be betray'd.
Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence,
And therefore am I bold and resolute. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. The Tower.
Enter Lord Scales, and others, walking on the Walls.
Then enter certain Citizens, below.
Scales. How now! is Jack Cade slain?

1 Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them. The lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.
Seales. Such aid as I can spare, you shall command,
But I am troubled here with them myself:
The rebels have assay'd to win the Tower.
But get you to Smithfield, and gather head,
And hither I will send you Matthew Gough.
Fight for your king, your country, and your lives;
And so farewell: rebellion never thrives. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Same. Cannon Street.
Enter Jack Cade, and his Followers. He strikes his Staff on London-stone.
Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, setting upon London-stone, I charge and command, that, of the city's cost, the pissing-conduit run nothing but clarat wine this first year of our reign.
And now, henceforward, it shall be treason for any that calls me other than lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.
Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade!
Cade. Knock him down there. [They kill him.
Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call you Jack Cade more: I think, he hath a very fair warning.
Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.
Cade. Come, then, let's go fight with them. But, first, go and set London-bridge on fire; and, if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Same. Smithfield.

Alarum. Enter, on one side, Cade and his Company;
on the other, the Citizens, and the King's Forces, headed by Matthew Gough. They fight; the Citizens are routed, and Matthew Gough is slain.
Cade. So, sirs.—Now go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of court: down with them all.
Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship.
Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that word.
Dick. Only, that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.
John. Mass, 't will be sore law, then; for he was thrust in the mouth with a spear, and 't is not whole yet.
[Aside.
Smith. Nay, John; it will be stinking law; for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese.
[Aside.
Cade. I have thought upon it; it shall be so. Away. burn all the records of the realm: my mouth shall be the parliament of England.
John. Then we are like to have bitter statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out.
[Aside.
Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.

Enter a Messenger.
Mass. My lord, a prize, a prize! here 's the lord Say, which sold the towns in France; he that made us pay one and twenty fifteens, and one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy.

Enter George Beyis, with the Lord Say.
Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times.—
Ah, thou say, thou sarge, nay, thou buckram lord! now art thou within point-blank of our jurisdiction regal.
What canst thou answer to my majesty, for giving up

1 Not in f. e. 2 Folio: Killingworth; the old pronunciation of the name. 3 Farewell, for I must hence again: in f. e. 4 A tax of one-fifteenth.
of Normandy unto monsieur Basimecu, the dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee by these presents, even the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar-school: and whereas, before, our fore-fathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face, that thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun, and, a verb, and such abominable words as no Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer: moreover, thou hast put them in prison; and because they could not read, thou hast hanged them; when, indeed, only for that cause they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride in a foot-cloth, dost thou not? Say, What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men than thou go in their hose and doublets.

Dick. And work in their shirt too; as myself, for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You men of Kent.—

Dick. What say you of Kent?

Say. Nothing but this: 't is bona terra, mala gens.

Cade. Away with him! away with him! he speaks Latin.

Say. Hear me but speak, and bear me where you will.

Kent, in the commentaries Caesar writ, Is term'd the civil'st place of all this isle: Sweet is the country, because full of riches; The people liberal, valiant, active, worthy, Which makes me hope you are not void of pity. I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy; Yet, to recover them, would lose my life. Justico with favour have I always done; Prayers and tears have mov'd me, gifts could never. When have I sought exacted at your hands, Kent, to maintain the king, the realm, and you? Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned clerks, Because my book prefer'd me to the king; And, seeing ignorance is the curse of God, Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven, Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirits, You cannot but forbear to murder me. This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings For your behoof.—

Cade. Tut! when struck'st thou one blow in the field?

Say. Great men have reaching hands; oft have I struck Those that I never saw, and struck them dead.

Geo. O monstrous coward! what, to come behind folks?

Say. These checks are pale for watching for your good.

Cade. Give him a box o' the ear, and that will make 'em red again.

Say. Remembering, to determine poor men's causes, Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

Cade. Ye shall have a hempen caudle, then, and the help of hatchet.

Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man?

Say. The palsy, and not fear, provoketh me.

Cade. Nay, he nods at us; as who should say, I'll be even with you. I'll see if his head will stand steadier on a pole, or no. Take him away, and behead him.

Say. Tell me, wherein have I offended most? Have I affronted wealth, or honour; speak? Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold? Is my apparel sumptuous to behold? Whom have I injur'd, that ye seek my death? These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding, This breast from harbouring foul deceitful thoughts. O, let me live.

Cade. I feel remorse in myself with his words; but I'll bridle it; he shall die, an it be but for pleading so well for his life.—Away with him! he has a familiar under his tongue: he speaks not o' God's name. Go, take him away, I say, and strike off his head presently; and then break into his son-in-law's house, sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done.

Say. Ah, countrymen! if when you make your prayers, God shall be so obdurate as yourselves, How would it fare with your departed souls? And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye.

[Exeunt some with Lord Say.]

The proudest peer in the realm shall not wear a head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute: there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her maidenhead, ere they have it. Men shall hold of me in capite; and we charge and command, that their wives be as free as heart can wish, or tongue can tell.

Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside, and take up commodities upon our bills?

Cade. Marry, presently.

All. O brave!

Re-enter Rebels, with the Heads of Lord Say and his Son-in-law.

Cade. But is not this braver?—Let them kiss one another, for they loved well, when they were alive. [Jost them together.] Now part them again, lest they consult about the giving up of some more towns in France. Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night; for with these borne before us, instead of mace, will we ride through the streets; and at every corner have them kiss. Away!—[Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—Southwark.

Alarum. Enter Cade, and all his Rabblement.

Cade. Up Fish-street! down Saint Magnus' corner! kill and knock down! throw them into Thames!—[A Parley sounded, then a Retreat.] What noise is this I hear? Dare any be so bold to sound retreat or parley, when I command them kill?

Enter BUCKINGHAM, and Old CLIFFORD, with Forces.

Buck. Ay, here they be that dare, and will disturb thee;

Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the king Unto the commons whom thou hast misled; And here pronounce free pardon to them all, That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

Clif. What say ye, countrymen? will ye repent?

And yield to mercy, whilst 't is offered you, Or let a rebel lead you to your deaths?

Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon, Fling up his cap, and say—God save his majesty! Who hateth him, and honours not his father,
Henry the fifth, that made all France to quake,
Shake his weapon at us, and pass by.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Cade. What! Buckingham, and Clifford, are ye so brave?—And you, base peasants, do ye believe him? will you needs be hanged with your pardons about your necks? Hath my sword therefore broke through London Gates, that you should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark? I thought ye would never have given out these arms, till you had recovered your ancient freedom; but you are all reivengers, and dastards, and delight to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break your backs and take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces. For me,—I will make shift for one; and so—God's curse! light upon you all!

All. We'll follow Cade: we'll follow Cade.

Cliff. Is Cade the son of Henry the fifth,
That thus you do excalm, you'll go with him?
Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
And make the meanest of you earls and dukes?
Alas, he hath no home, no place to fly to;
Nor knows he how to live, but by the spoil,
Unless by robbing of your friends, and us.
Wer't not a shame, that whilst you live at jar,
The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,
Should make a sign of your ears, and vanquish you?
Methinks, already, in this civil broil,
I see them lording it in London streets,
Crying—Villagcios! unto all they meet.
Better ten thousand base-born Cades miscarry,
Than you should stoop unto a Frenchman's mercy.
To France, to France! and get what you have lost:
Spare England, for it is your native coast.
Henry hath money, you are strong and manly:
God on our side, doubt not of victory.

All. A Clifford! a Clifford! we'll follow the king, and Clifford.

Cade. Was ever feather so lightly blown to and fro, as this multitude? the name of Henry the fifth makes them to an hundred mischiefs, and makes them leave me desolate. I see them lay their heads together, to surprise me: my sword, make way for me, for here is no staying.—In despite of the devils and hell, have through the very midst of you; and heavens and honour be witness, that no want of resolution in me, but only my followers' base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake me to my heels.

[Exit.]

Buck. What! is he fled? go some, and follow him;
And he, that brings his head unto the king,
Shall have a thousand crowns for his reward.
[Exeunt some of them.]

Follow me, soldiers: we'll devise a mean
To reconcile you all unto the king.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Kenilworth Castle.

Sound trumpets. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, and Somerset, on the Terrace of the Castle.

K. Hen. Was ever king that joy'd an earthly throne,
And could command no more content than I?
No sooner was I crept out of my cradle,
But I was made a king, at nine months old:
Was never subject long'd to be a king,
As I do long and wish to be a subject.

Enter Buckingham and Clifford.

Buck. Health, and glad tidings, to your majesty!

K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor, Cade, surpris'd?

Or is he but retir'd to make him strong?
Enter, below, a number of Cade's Followers, with Halter's about their Necks.

Cliff. He's fled, my lord, and all his powers do yield,
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom, of life, or death.

K. Hen. Then, heaven, set ope thy everlasting gates,
To entertain my vows of thanks and praise!—
Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives,
And shou'd how well you love your prince and country:
Continue still in this so good a mind,
And Henry, though he be unfortunate,
Assure yourselves, will never be unkind:
And so, with thanks, and pardon to you all,
I do dismiss you to your several countries.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Please it your grace to be advertis'd,
The duke of York is newly come from Ireland,
And with a puissant, and united power
Of Gallowglasses, and stout Irish kerns,
Is marching hitherward in proud array;
And still proclameth, as he comes along,
His arms are only to remove from thee
The duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.

K. Hen. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and York distrest.
Like to a ship, that, having scap'd a tempest,
Is straightway calm'd, and boarded with a pirate.
But now is Cade driven back, his men dispers'd,
And now is York in arms to second him.—
I pray thee, Buckingham, then go and meet him,
And ask him, what's the reason of these arms?
Tell him, I'll send duke Edmund to the tower;—
And, Somerset, we will commit thee thither,
Until his army be dismiss'd from him.

Som. My lord,
I'll yield myself to prison willingly,
Or unto death to do my country good.

K. Hen. In any case, be not too rough in terms,
For he is fierce, and cannot brook hard language.

Buck. I will: my lord; and doubts not so to deal,
As all things shall redound unto your good.

K. Hen. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better:
For yet may England curse my wretched reign.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—Kent. Iden's Garden.

Enter Cade.

Cade. Fie on ambition! fie on myself: that have a sword, and yet am ready to famish! These five days have I hid me in these woods, and durst not peep out, for all the country is laid for me; but now am I so hungry, that if I might have a lease of my life for a thousand years, I could stay no longer. Wherefore, or a brick-wall have I climbed into this garden, to see if I can eat grass, or pick a sallet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather. And, I think, this word sallet was born to do me good: for, many a time, but for a sallet, my brain-pan had been cleft with a brown bill; and, many a time, when I have been dry and bravely marching, it hath served me instead of a quart-pot to drink in; and now the word sallet must serve me to feed on.

Enter Iden, with Servants.

Iden. Lord! who would live turmoiled in the court,
And may enjoy such quiet walks as these?
This small inheritance, my father left me,
Contenteth me, and 'is worth a monarchy.
I seek not to wax great by others' warning,
Or gather wealth I care not with what envy:
Sufficeth that I have maintains my state,
And sends the poor well pleased from my gate.

Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave.
A villain! thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand crowns of the king by carrying my head to him; but I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England stands,
That Alexander Iden, squire of Kent,
Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man.
Oppose thy steadfast-grazing eyes to mine;
See if thou canst outface me with thy looks.
Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
Thy leg a stick, compared with this truncheon:
My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast;
And if mine arm be heaved in the air,
Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth.
As for words, whose greatness answers words,
Let this my sword report what speech forbears.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. The Fields between Dartford and Blackheath.

The King's Camp on one side: on the other, enter York attended, with Drum and Colours; his Irish Forces at some distance.

York. From Ireland thus comes York, to claim his right,
And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head:
Ring bells, aloud; burn, bonfires, clear and bright,
To entertain great England's lawful king.

Ah, sancta majestas! who would not buy thee dear?
Let them obey, that know not how to rule;
This hand was made to handle nought but gold:
I cannot give due action to my words,
Except a sword, or sceptre, balance it.
A sceptre shall it have, have I a soul,
On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me?
The king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble.

Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well.

York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.
Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?

Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege,
To know the reason of these arms in peace;
Or why, thou—being a subject as I am,—

1 f. e.: warning; the correction was made by Pope.

Cade. By my valour, the most complete champion that ever I heard.—Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not out the burly-boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove on my knees, thou mayest be turned to hobnails. [They fight. Cade falls.] O! I am slain. Famine, and no other, hath slain me: let ten thousand devils come against me, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them all. Wither, garden; and be henceforth a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead:
Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
To emblaze the honour that thy master got.

Cade. Iden, farewell; and be proud of thy victory.
Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man,
And exhort all the world to be cowards; for I, that never feared any, am vanquished by famine, not by valour.

[Dies.

Iden. How much thou wrong'st me, heaven be my judge.

Die, damned wretch, the curse of her that bare thee!
And as I thrust thy body with my sword,
So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell.
Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave,
And there cut off thy most ungracious head;
Which I will bear in triumph to the king,
Leaving thy trunk for cows to feed upon.

[Exit, dragging out the Body.

Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn,
Should'st raise so great a power without his leave,
Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.

York. Scarcely can I speak, my choler is so great.

[Aside.

O! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint,
I am so angry at these abject terms;
And now, like Ajax Telamonius,
On sheep or oxen could I spend my fury.
I am far better born than is the king,
More like a king, more kindly in my thoughts;
But I must make fair weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.—
O Buckingham, I pr'ythee pardon me,
That I have given no answer all this while;
My mind was troubled with deep melancholy.
The cause why I have brought this army hither,
Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,
Seditious to his grace, and to the state.

Buck. That is too much presumption on thy part;
But if thy arms be to no other end,
The king hath yielded unto thy demand:
The duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

York. Upon thine honour, is he prisoner?

Buck. Upon mine honour, he is prisoner.

York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers.—
Soldiers, I thank you all; disperse yourselves:
Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field.

You shall have pay, and every thing you wish.
And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry,
Command my eldest son,—nay, all my sons,
As pledges of my fealty and love;
I'll send them all, as willing as I live:
Lands, goods, horse, arms, or any thing I have
Is his to use, so Somerset may die.

Buck. York, I command this kind submission:
We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter King Henry attended.

K. Hen. Buckingham, doth York intend no harm
To us,
That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm?
York. In all submission and humility,
York doth present himself unto your highness.
K. Hen. Then what intend these forces then dost bring?
York. To heave the traitor Somerset from hence;
And fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,
Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter Iden, with Cade's Head.

Iden. If one so rude, and of so mean condition,
May pass into the presence of a king,
Lo! I present your grace a traitor's head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.

K. Hen. The head of Cade?—Great God, how just art thou!—
O! let me view his visage being dead,
That living wrought me such exceeding trouble.
Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew him?
Iden. I was, an 't like your majesty.
K. Hen. How art thou call'd, and what is thy degree?
Iden. Alexander Iden, that 'tis my name;
A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.

Buck. So please it you, my lord, 't were not amiss,
He were created knight for his good service.

K. Hen. Iden, kneel down: [He kneels.] rise up a knight.

We give thee for reward a thousand marks;
And will, that thou henceforth attend upon us.
Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty, [Rising;]
And never live but true unto his liege.

K. Hen. See, Buckingham! Somerset comes with the queen:
Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke.

Enter Queen Margaret and Somerset.

Q. Mar. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his head
But boldly stand, and front him to his face.
York. How now! is Somerset at liberty?
Then, York, unloose thy long-imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.
Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?—
False king, why last thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardly I can brook abuse?
King did I call thee? no, thou art not king;
Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,
Which dar'st not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor.
That head of thine doth not become a crown;
Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff,
And not to grace an awful princely sceptre.
That gold must round enthrall these brows of mine;
Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles' spear,
Is able with the change to kill and cure.
Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up,
And with the same to act controlling laws.
Give place: by heaven, thou shalt rule no more
O'er him whom heaven created for thy ruler,

Som. O monstrous traitor!—I arrest thee, York,

Of capital treason 'gainst the king and crown.
Obey, audacious traitor: kneel for grace.
York. Wouldst have me kneel? first let me ask of these,
If they can brook I bow a knee to man?
Sirrah, call in my sons to be my bail;

[Exit an Attendant.

I know, ere they will have me go to ward,
They'll pawn their swords for my enfranchisement.

Q. Mar. Call hither Clifford; bid him come amain,
To say, if that the bastard boys of York
Shall be the surety for their traitor father.
York. O blood-bespotted Neapolitan,
Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourge,
The sons of York, thy better in their birth,
Shall be their father's bail; and bane to those
That for my surety will refuse the boys.

Enter Edward and Richard Plantagenet, with Forces, at one side; at the other, with Forces also, old Clifford and his Son.

See where they come: I'll warrant they'll make it good.

Q. Mar. And here comes Clifford, to deny their bail.

Cliff. Health and all happiness to my lord the king!

[Kneels.

York. I thank thee, Clifford: say, what news with thee?
Nay, do not fright us with an angry look:
We are thy sovereign, Clifford: kneel again;
For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee.

Cliff. This is my king, York: I do not mistake;
But thou mistak'st me much, to think I do.—
To bedlam with him! is the man grown mad?

K. Hen. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious humour
Makes him oppose himself against his king.

Cliff. He is a traitor: let him to the Tower,
And chop away that factious pate of his.

Q. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey;
His sons, he says, shall give their words for him.

York. Will you not, sons?

Edw. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve,
Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons shall.

Cliff. Why, what a brood of traitors have we here!
York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so;
I am thy king, and thou a false-heart traitor.—
Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
That with their mighty shaking of their chains
They may astonish these fell-looking 2 eurs:
Bid Salisbury, and Warwick, come to me.

Drems. Enter Warwick and Salisbury, with Forces.

Cliff. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
And massacre the bear-ward in their chains,
If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting-place.

Rich. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweaving cur
Run back and bite, because he was withheld;
Who, having suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,
Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs, and cry'd:
And such a piece of service will you do?
If you oppose yourselves to match lord Warwick.

Cliff. Hear, hear, hear, hear, to the word Warwick.
Old Salisbury,—shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son!—
What, wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian,
And seek for sorrow with thy spectacles?
O! where is faith? O! where is loyalty?
If it be banish’d from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?—
Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,
And shame thine honourable age with blood?
Why art thou old, and want’st experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me,
That bows unto the grave with mickle age.
Sal. My lord, I have consider’d with myself
The title of this most renowned duke;
And in my conscience do repute his grace
The rightful heir to England’s royal seat.
K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?
Sal. I have.
K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such an oath?
Sal. It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotted virgin’s chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her custom’d right,
And have no other reason for this wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?
Q. Mar. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.
K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself.
York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou hast,
I am resolv’d for death, or dignity.
Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreams prove true.
War. You were best to go to bed, and dream again,
To keep thee from the tempest of the field.
Clif. I am resolv’d to bear a greater storm,
Than any thou canst conjure up to-day;
And that I will write upon thy burgonet,
Might I but know thee by thy household badge.
War. Now, by my father’s badge, old Nevil’s crest,
The rampant bear chain’d to the ragged staff,
This day I’ll wear aloft my burgonet,
(As on a mountain-top the cedar shows,
That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm)
Even to affright thee with the view thereof.
Clif. And from this burgonet I’ll rend thy bear,
And tread it underfoot with all contempt,
Despite the bear-ward that protects the bear.
Y. Clif. And so to arms, victorious father,
To quell the rebels, and their ‘compliques
Rich. Fie! charity! for shame! speak not in spite,
For you shall sail with Jesu Christ to-night.
Y. Clif. Fool stigmatic, that’s more than thou canst tell.
Rich. If not in heaven, you’ll surely sup in hell.
[Exit severally.

SCENE II.—Saint Albans.

Alarums : Excursions. Enter Warwick.

War. Clifford of Cumberland! ’tis Warwick calls:
And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,
Now, when the angry trumpet sounds alarm,
And dead men’s cries do fill the empty air,
Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me!
Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.
[Enter York.

How now, my noble lord! what, all a-foot?

York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed;
But match to match I have encountered him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows
Even of the bonny beast he lov’d so well.
[Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come.
York. Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chace,
For I myself must hunt this deer to death.
War. Then, nobly, York; ’tis for a crown thou
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
[fight‘st.—
It grieveth my soul to leave thee unassail’d.
[Exit Warwick.

Clif. What seest thou in me, York? why dost thou pause?
York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,
But that thou art so fast mine enemy.
Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteem,
But that ‘t is shown ignobly, and in treason.
York. So let it help me now against thy sword,
As I in justice and true right express it.
Clif. My soul and body on the action both!
York. A dreadful lay!—address thee instantly.
Clif. La fin couronne les œuvres.
[They fight, and Clifford falls and dies.
York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still.
Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will!
[Exit.

Enter young Clifford.

Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout:
Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds
Where it should guard. O war! thou son of hell,
Whom angry heavens do make their minister,
Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
Hot coals of vengeance!—Let no soldier fly:
He that is truly dedicated to war,
Hath no self-love; nor he, that loves himself,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valour.—O! let the vile world end,
[Seeing his Father’s body.
And the premised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heaven together!
Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities and petty sounds
To cease!—Wast thou ordain’d, dear father,
To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve
The silver livery of advised age,
And, in thy reverence, and thy chair-days, thus
To die in ruffian battle?—Even at this sight,
My heart is turn’d to stone: and while ‘tis mine,
It shall be stony. York not our old men spare;
No more will I their babes: tears virginal
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaimes,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flux.
Henceforth I will not have to do with pity:
Meet I an infant of the house of York,
Into as many gobbets will I cut it,
As wild Medea young Absyrtus did:
In cruelty will I seek out my fame.
Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford’s house;
[Taking up the Body.
As did Aeneas old Anchises bear,
So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders;
But then, Aeneas bare a living load,
Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine.
[Exit.

Enter Richard Plantagenet and Somerset, fighting;

Somerset is slain.

Rich. So, lie thou there;—

[1] and : in folio.
For, underneath an alehouse' paltry sign,
The Castle in Saint Albans, Somerset.
Hath made the wizard famous in his death.
Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful still:
Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill. [Exit.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, and others, flying.

Q. Mar. Away, my lord! you are slow: for shame, away!

K. Hen. Can we outrun the heavens? good Margaret, stay.

Q. Mar. What are you made of? you 'll nor fight, nor fly:
Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
To give the enemy way; and to secure us
By what we can, which can no more but fly.

[Alarum afar off.

If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom
Of all our fortunes; but if we haply scape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect)
We shall to London get; where you are lov'd,
And where this breach, now in our fortunes made,
May readily be stopp'd.

Enter young Clifford.

Y. Cliff. But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly;
But fly you must: unceurable discomfit
Regins in the hearts of all our present friends.1
Away, for your relief; and we will live
To see their day, and them our fortune give.
Away, my lord, away! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Fields near Saint Albans.

Alarum: Retreat. Flourish; then enter York, Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, and Soldiers, with Drum and Colours.

York. Old Salisbury, who can report of him?

That winter lion, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions and all bruises2 of time,
And, like a gallant in the bloom3 of youth,
Repairs him with occasion? this happy day
Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,
If Salisbury be lost.

Rich. My noble father,
Three times to-day I holp him to his horse,
Three times bestridd him; thrice I led him off,
Persuaded him from any farther act:
But still, where danger was, still there I met him;
And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body,
But, noble as he is, look where he comes.

[Enter Salisbury.

Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to day;
By the mass, so did we all.—I thank you, Richard:
God knows how long it is I have to live,
And it hath pleas'd him, that three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death.—
Well, lords, we have not got that which we have:
'T is not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repairing nature.

York. I know our safety is to follow them;
For, as I hear, the king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament;
Let us pursue him, ere the writs go forth.—
What says lord Warwick? shall we after them?

War. After them? nay, before them, if we can.

Now, by my hand, lords,'t was a glorious day:
Saint Albans' battle won by famous York,
Shall be eterniz'd in all age to come.—
Sound, drums and trumpets!—and to London all;
And more such days as these to us befall!

[Exeunt.

Scene, during part of the Third Act, in France; during the rest of the Play in England.

Act I.

War. I wonder how the king escap'd our hands.
York. While we pursued the horsemen of the north, He slyly stole away, and left his men: Whereat the great lord of Northumberland, Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat, Cheer'd up the drooping army; and himself, Lord Clifford, and lord Stafford, all abreast, Charg'd our main battle's front, and, breaking in, Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.

Edw. Lord Stafford's father, duke of Buckingham, Is either slain, or wounded dangerously: I left his beaver with a downright blow; That this is true, father, behold his blood.

[Showing his bloody Sword.
Mont. And, brother, here's the earl of Wiltshire's blood. [To York, showing his.
Whom I encounter'd as the battles joined.

Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did. [Throwing down the Duke of Somerset's Head.
York. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sons.— But, is your grace dead, my lord of Somerset?

1 Dangerous: in l. 6.
THIRD PART OF

ACT I.

York. Then leave me not, my lords; be resolute, I mean to take possession of my right.

War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,

The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,

Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shake his bells.

I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares.

Resolve thee, Richard; claim the English crown.

[Warwick leads York to the Throne, who seats himself.]

[Flourish: Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Westmoreland, Exeter, and others, with red Roses in their Hats.

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits,

Even in the chair of state! belike, he means,

Back'd by the power of Warwick, that false peer,

To aspire unto the crown, and reign as king.

Earl of Northumberland; he slew thy father;

And thine, lord Clifford: you have vow'd revenge

On him, his sons, his favourites, and his friends.

North. If I be not, heavens be reveng'd on me!

Clif. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn in steel.

West. What! shall we suffer this? let's pluck him down!

My heart, for anger burns: I cannot brook it.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle earl of Westmoreland.

Clif. Patience is for poltroons, such as he:

He durst not sit there had your father liv'd.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament

Let us assail the family of York.

North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin: be it so.

K. Hen. Ah! know you not, the city favours them,

And they have troops of soldiers at their beck?

Exe. But when the duke is slain, they'll quickly fly.

K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,

To make a shambles of the parliament-house!

Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words, and threats,

Shall be the war that Henry means to use.

[They advance to the Duke.

Thou factious duke of York, descend my throne,

And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet:

I am thy sovereign.

York. I am thine.

Exe. For shame! come down: he made thee duke of York.

York. 'Twas my inheritance, as the earldom was.

Exe. Thy father was a traitor to the crown.

War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown

In following this usurping Henry,

Clif. Whom should he follow, but his natural king?

War. True, Clifford; that is Richard, duke of York.

K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my throne?

York. It must and shall be so. Content thyself.

War. Be duke of Lancaster: let him be king.

West. He is both king and duke of Lancaster;

And that the lord of Westmoreland shall maintain.

War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You forget,

That we are those which chas'd you from the field,

And slew your fathers, and with colours spread

March'd through the city to the palace gates.

York. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;

And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.

West. Plantagenet, of thee, and these thy sons,

Thy kinsmen, and thy friends, I'll have more lives

Than drops of blood were in my father's veins.

Clif. Urge it no more: least instead of words

I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger,

As shall revenge his death before I stir.

War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless threats.

York. Will you, we show our title to the crown?

If not, our swords shall plead it in the field.

K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?

Thy father was, as thou art, duke of York;

Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, earl of March.

I am the son of Henry the fifth,

Who made the Dauphin and the French to stoop,

And seiz'd upon their towns and provinces.

War. Talk not of France, sith thou hast lost it all.

K. Hen. The lord protector lost it, and not I:

When I was crown'd, I was but nine months old.

Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks, you lose.

Father, tear the crown from the usurper's head.

Educ. Sweet father, do so: set it on your head.

Mont. Good brother, [To York] as thou lov'st and honour'st arms,

Let's fight it out, and not stand cavilling thus.

[fly.

Rich. Sound drums and trumpets, and the king will York. Sons, peace!

K. Hen. Peace thou, and give king Henry leave to speak.

War. Plantagenet shall speak first: hear him, lords;

And be you silent and attentive too.

For he that interrupts him shall not live.

K. Hen. Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,

Wherein my grandsire, and my father, sat?

No: first shall war unpeople this my realm;

Ay, and their colours—often borne in France,

And now in England, to our heart's great sorrow,—

Shall be my winding sheet.—Why faint you, lords?

My title's good, and better far than his.

War. Prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king.

K. Hen. Henry the fourth by conquest got the crown.

York. 'T was by rebellion against his king.

K. Hen. I know not what to say: my title's weak.

[Aside.]

Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?

York. What then?

K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king;

For Richard, in the view of many lords,

Resign'd the crown to Henry the fourth,

Whose heir my father was, and I am his.

York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,

And made him to resign his crown perforce.

War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstrai ned,

And him, you think, set crown to his crown.

Exe. No; for he could not so resign his crown,

But that the next heir should succeed and reign.

K. Hen. Art thou against us, duke of Exeter?

Exe. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.

York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?

Exe. My conscience tells me he is lawful king.

K. Hen. All will revolt from me, and turn to him.

North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st,

Think not, that Henry shall be so depos'd.

York. Depose'd he shall be in despite of all.

North. Thou art deceived: 't is not thy southern power,

Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent,

Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,

Can set the duke up in despite of me.

Clif. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,

Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence:

---

1 An allusion to the falcon. 2 The "True Tragedy of Richard, Duke of York," the old play on which this drama was founded, has the kingdom. 3 Not in f. a.
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father!
K. Hen. O Clifford, how thy words revive my heart!
York. Henry of Lancaster, resign my crown.—
What matter you, or what conspire you, lords?
War. Do right unto this princely duke of York,
Or I will fill the house with armed men,
And, o'er the chair of state, where now he sits,
Write up his title with usurping blood.
[He stamps, and the Soldiers show themselves.
K. Hen. My lord of Warwick, hear me but one word.
Let me for this my life-time reign as king.
York. Confirm the crown to me, and to mine heirs,
And thou shalt reign in quiet while thou livest.
K. Hen. I am content:—Richard Plantagenet,
Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.
Clif. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?
War. What good is this to England, and himself?
West. Base, fearful, and despairing Henry!
Clif. How hast thou injur'd both thyself and us?
West. I cannot stay to hear these articles.
North. Nor I.
Clif. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news.
West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate king,
In whose cold blood no spark of honour bides.
North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,
And die in bands for this unmanly deed!
Clif. In dreadful war may'st thou be overcome,
Or live in peace, abandon'd and despis'd!
[Exeunt Northumberland, Clifford, and Warwick.
War. Tura this way, Henry, and regard them not.
Exe. They seek revenge, and therefore will not yield.
K. Hen. Ah, Exeter!
War. Why should you sigh, my lord?
K. Hen. Not for myself, lord Warwick, but my son,
Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit.
But be it as it may, I here entail
The crown to thee, and to thine heirs for ever; [To York.
Conditionally, that here thou take an oath
To cease this civil war, and whilst I live,
To honour me as thy king and sovereign;
And neither by treason nor hostility,
To seek to put me down and reign thyself.
York. This oath I willingly take, and will perform.
[Coming from the Throne.
War. Long live king Henry!—Plantagenet, embrace him.
K. Hen. And long live thou, and these thy forward sons!
York. New York and Lancaster are reconcile'd.
Exe. Accurs'd be he, that seeks to make them foes!
[Scene. The Lords come forward.
York. Farewell, my gracious lord: I'll to my castle.
War. And I'll keep London with my soldiers.
Norf. And I to Norfolk with my followers.
Mont. And I unto the sea, from whence I came.
[K. Hen, and his Sons; Warwick, Norfolk, Montague, Soldiers, and Attendants.
K. Hen. And I, with grief and sorrow, to the court.
Enter Queen Margaret and the Prince of Wales.
Exe. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray her anger;
I'll steal away.
Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me; I will follow thee.
K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay.
Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremities?
Ah, wretched man! would I had died a maid,
And never seen thee, never borne thee son,
Seeing thou hast prov'd so unnatural a father!
Hath he deserv'd to lose his birthright thus?
Hadst thou but lov'd him half so well as I,
Or felt that pain which I did for him once,
Or nourish'd him, as I did with my blood,
'Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart-blood there,
Rather than have made that savage duke thine heir,
And disinherited thine only son.
Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me.
If you be king, why should not I succeed?
K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret;—pardon me, sweet son.
Q. Mar. Enfow'd thee! art thou king, and wilt be fore'd?
I shalme to hear thee speak. Ah, timorous wretch!
Thou hast undone thyself, thy son, and me,
And given unto the house of York such head,
As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance.
'Te entail him and his heirs unto the crown,
What is it, but to make thy sepulchre,
And creep into it far before thy time?
Warwick is chancellor, and the lord of Calais;
Stern Faulconbridge commands the narrow seas;
The duke is made protector of the realm;
And yet shalt thou be safe? such safety finds
The trembling lamb, environed with wolves.
Had I been there, which am a silly woman,
The soldiers should have toss'd me on their pikes,
Before I would have granted to that act;
But thou prefer'st thy life before thine honour:
And seeing thou dost, I hate divorce myself,
Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed,
Until that act of parliament be repeal'd,
Whereby my son is disinherited.
The northern lords, that have forsworn thy colours,
Will follow mine, if, once they see them spread;
And spread they shall be, to thy foul disgrace,
And utter ruin of the house of York.
Thus do I leave thee.—Come, son, let's away;
Our army is ready: come, we'll after them.
K. Hen. Stay, gentle Margaret; and hear me speak.
Q. Mar. Thou hast spoke too much already: get thee gone.
K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay with me?
Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies.
Prince. When I return with victory from the field,
I'll see your grace; till then, I'll follow her.
Q. Mar. Come, son; away! we may not longer thus.
[Exeunt Queen Margaret, and the Prince.
K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me, and to her son,
Hath made her break out into terms of rage.
Revenge'd she be on that hateful duke,
Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire,
Will cost my crown, and like an empty eagle
Tire on the flesh of me, and of my son!
The loss of those three lords torments my heart:
I'll write unto them, and entreat them fair.
Come, cousin; you shall be the messenger.
Exe. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Sandal Castle, near Wakefield.

Enter Edward, Richard, and Montague.

Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.
Edw. No; I can better play the orator.
Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

Enter York.

York. Why, how now, sons, and brother! at a strife?
What is your quarrel? how began it first?

Educ. No quarrel, but a slight contention.

York. About what?

Rich. About that which concerns your grace, and us; the crown of England, father, which is yours.

York. Mine, boy; not till king Henry be dead.

Rich. Your right depends not on his life, or death.

Educ. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now:

By giving the house of Lancaster leave to breathe,
It will outrun you, father, in the end.

York. I took an oath that he should quietly reign.

Educ. But for a kingdom any oath may be broken:
I would break a thousand oaths to reign one year.

Rich. No; God forbid, your grace should be forsworn.

York. I shall be, if I claim by open war.

Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak.

Thou canst not, son: it is impossible.

Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took

Before a true and lawful magistrate.

That hath authority over him that swears:
Henry had none, but did usurp the place;
Then, seeing 't was he that made you to depose,
Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.

Therefore, to arms! And, father, do but think,
How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown,
Within whose circuit is Elysium,
And all that poets feign of bliss and joy.

Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest,
Until the white rose, that I wear, be dyed
Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's heart.

York. Richard, enough: I will be king, or die.—

Brother, thou shalt to London presently,
And what on Warwick to this enterprise.—

Thou, Richard, shalt to the duke of Norfolk,
And tell him privily of our intent.

You, Edward, shalt unto my lord Cobham,
With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise:
In them I trust; for they are soldiers,
Witty, courteous, liberal, full of spirit.—

While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more,
But that I seek occasion how to rise,
And yet the king not privy to my drift,
Nor any of the house of Lancaster?

Enter a Messenger.

But, stay,—What news? Why com'st thou in such post?
Mess. The queen, with all the northern earls and lords,
Intends here to besiege you in your castle.
She is hard by with twenty thousand men,
And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.

York. Ay, with my sword. What, think'st thou,
That we fear them?—

Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me;
My brother Montague shall post to London.
Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
Whom we have left protectors of the king,
With powerful policy strengthen themselves,
And trust not simple Henry, nor his oaths.

Mont. Brother, I go; I'll win them, fear it not:

And thus most humbly I do take my leave. [Exit.

Enter Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer.

York. Sir John, and sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles,
You are come to SANDAL in a happy hour;
The army of the queen mean to besiege us.

Sir John. She shall not need, we'll meet her in the field.

York. What, with five thousand men?

Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need.

A woman's general; what should we fear?

[A March after off.

Educ. I hear their drums: let's set our men in order,
And issue forth, and bid them battle straight.

York. Five men to twenty!—though the odds be great,
I doubt not, uncle, of our victory.

Many a battle have I won in France,
When as the enemy hath been ten to one:
Why should I not now have the like success?

[Exeunt."

SCENE III.—Plains near Sandal Castle.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter RUTLAND, and his Tutor.

Rut. Ah! whither shall I fly to 'scape their hands?
Ah, tutor! look, where bloody Clifford comes.

Enter Clifford and Soldiers.

Clif. Chaplain, away: thy priesthood saves thy life.

As for the brat of this accursed duke,
Whose father slew my father, he shall die.

Tut. And I, my lord, will bear him company.

Clif. Soldiers, away with him...

Tut. Ah, Clifford! murder not this innocent child,
Lest thou be hated both of God and man.

[Exit, forced off by Soldiers.

Clif. How now! is he dead already? Or, is it fear,
That makes him close his eyes?—I'll open them.

Rut. So looks the pent up lion o'er the wretch
That trembles under his devouring paws:
And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey,
And so he comes to rend his limbs asunder.—

Ah, gentle Clifford! kill me with thy sword,
And not with such a cruel threatening look.

Sweet Clifford! hear me speak before I die:
I am too mean, a subject for thy wrath;
Be thou reveng'd on men, and let me live.

Clif. In vain thou speakest, poor boy: my father's Blood hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should enter.

Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again:

He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him.

Clif. Had I thy brethren here, their lives, and thine,
Were not revenge sufficient for me.

No: if I dig'd up thy forefathers' graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

The sight of any of the house of York
Is as a fury to torment my soul;
And till I root out their accursed line,
And leave not one alive, I live in hell.

Therefore—

Rut. O! let me pray before I take my death.—
To thee I pray: sweet Clifford, pity me!

Clif. Such pity as my raper's point affords.

Rut. I never did thee harm: why wilt thou slay me?

Clif. Thy father hath.

Rut. But it was ere I was born.
Their chief, for his sake pity me,
Lest, in revenge thereof, sith God is just,
He be as miserably slain as I.

Ah! let me live in prison all my days,
And when I give occasion of offence,
Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.

Clif. No cause?

Thy father slew my father: therefore, die.

Rut. Dii faciant, laudis summa sit ista tua! [Dies.

Clif. Plantagenet! I come, Plantagenet! And this thy son's blood cleaving to my blade,
Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood
Congeal'd with this do make me wipe off both. [Exit.
SCENE IV.—The Same.

Alarum. Enter York.

York. The army of the queen hath got the field:
My uncle's both are slain in rescuing me;
And all my followers to the eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or lambs pursu'd by hunger-starved wolves.
My sons—God knows, what hath bechanc'd them,
But this I know,—they have demaned themselves
Like men born to renown by life or death.
Three times did Richard make a lane to me,
And thrice cried,—"Courage, father! fight it out!"*
And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With purple falchion, painted to the hilt
In blood of those that had encounter'd him:
And when the hardiest warriors did retire, Richard cried,—"Charge! and give no foot of ground!"
And cried,—"A crown, or else a glorious tomb!
A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!!
With this, we charg'd again; but, out alas!
We bodg'd again; as I have seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves.

[Shout from the Field]

Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue,
And I am faint, and cannot fly their fury;
And, were I strong, I would not shun their fury.
The sands are number'd that make up my life;
Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter Queen Margaret, Clifford, Northumberland, and Soldiers.

Come, bloody Clifford,—rough Northumberland,—
I dare your quenchless fury to more rage.
I am your butt, and I abide your shot.

North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.
Clif. Ay, to such mercy, as his ruthless arm
With downright payment show'd unto my father.
Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noon-tide prick.

York. My ashes, as the phoenix, may bring forth
A bird that will revenge upon you all;
And in that hope I throw mine eyes to heaven,
Scorning whatsoever ye can inflict on me.
Why come you not?—what! multitudes, and fear?
Clif. So coward fight when they can fly no farther;
So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons;
So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breath out invectives against the officers.

York. O, Clifford! but bethink thee once again,
And in thy thought o'er-run my former time;
And, if thou canst for blushling, view this face,
And bite thy tongue, that slander's him with cowardice,
Whose brow hath made thee faint and fly ere this.
Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word,
But buckle with thee blow, twice two for one.

Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes
I would prolong a while the traitor's life.—
Wrath makes him deaf: speak thou, Northumberland.

North. Hold, Clifford! do not honour him so much
To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart:
What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away?
It is war's prize to take all vantages,
And ten to one is no impeach of valour.

[They lay hands on York who struggles.]

Clif. Ay, ay; so strivs the woodcock with the gin,

1 Reached. 2 Not in f. e. 3 Impale, encircle.

North. So doth the coney struggle in the net.

York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty;
So true men yield, with robbers so o'er-match'd.

North. What would your grace have done unto him now?

Q. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,

Come, make him stand upon this molehill here,
That rauft* at mountains with outstretched arms,
Yet parted but the shadow with his hand.—
What! was it you, that would be England's king!
Was't you that revolv'd in our parliament,
And made a preaching of your high descent?
Where are your mess of sons to back you now,
The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?
And where's that valiant crook-back prodigy,
Dicky your boy, that, with his grumbling voice,
Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies?
Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rutland?
Look, York! I stain'd this napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford with his rapier's point
Made issue from the bosom of the boy;
And, if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy checks withal. [Throwing it,]

Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable state.
I pray thee, grieve to make me merry, York:
What, hath thy fery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?
Why art thou patient, man? thou shouldest be mad;
And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.
Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.
Thou wouldst be feed, I see, to make me sport:
York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown.—
A crown for York!—and, lords, bow low to him.
Hold you his hands, whilst I do set it on.—

[Putting a Paper Crown on his Head.]

Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king.
Ay, this is he that took king Henry's chair:
And this is he was his adopted heir.—
But how is it, that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?
As I bethink me, you should not be king,
Till our king Henry had shook hands with death.
And will you pale* your head in Henry's glory,
And rob his temples of the diadem,
Now in his life, against your holy oath?
0! 'tis a fault too, too unpardonable.—
Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his head!
And whilst we breathe take time to do him dead.

Clif. That is my office for my father's sake.

Q. Mar. Nay, stay: let's hear the orisons he makes.

York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France;
Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's tooth,
How ill-beseeming is it in thy sex;
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull,
Upon their wees whom fortune captivates?
But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee blush:
To tell thee whereon thou canst't, of whom deriv'd;
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.

Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicis, and Jerusalem,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.
Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?

Kay is taken prisoner.
It needs not, nor it boots thee not, proud queen;
Unless the adage must be verified,
That beggars mounted run their horse to death.
'T is beauty that doth oft make women proud;
But, God he knows, thy share thereof is small.
'T is virtue that doth make them most admir'd;
The contrary doth make thee wonder'd at.
'T is government that makes them seem divin';
The want thereof makes thee abominable.
Thou art as opposite to every good,
As the antipodes are unto us,
Or as the south to the septentrion.
O, tiger's heart, wrapp'd in a woman's hide!
How couldst thou drain the life-blood of the child,
To bid the father wipe his eyes withal,
And yet be seen to bear a woman's face?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.
Did'st thou me rage? why, now thou hast thy wish:
Wouldst have me weep? why, now thou hast thy will;
For raging wind blows up incessant showers,
And, when the rage allays, the rain begins.
These tears are my sweeter Rutland's obsequies,
And every drop cries vengeance for his death,
'Gainst thee, fell Clifford, and thee, false French-woman.
North. Besaw me, but his passions move me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from tears.
York. That face of his
The hungry cannibals would not have touch'd,
Would not have stain'd the rose's hues with blood:
But you are more inhuman, more inexorable,
O! ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
This cloth thus dipp'dst in blood of my sweet boy,
And I with tears do wash the blood away?
Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this;
[Throwing it back to her.
And if thou tell'st the heavy story right,
Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears;
Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
And say,—"Alas! it was a pitious deed."—
There, take the crown, and with the crown my curse;
And in thy need such comfort come to thee,
As now I reap at thy too cruel hand!
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world:
My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads!
North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my kin,
I should not, for my life, but weep with him,
To see how inly sorrow grips his soul.
Q. Mar. What! weeping-ripe, my lord Northumberland?
Think but upon the wrong he did us all,
And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.
Cliff. Here's for my oath; here's for my father's death.
[Stabbing him.
Q. Mar. And here's to right our gentle-hearted king.
[Stabbing him.
York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek out thee.
[Dies.
Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York gates:
So York may overlook the town of York.
[Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT II.

Not separated with the raking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky.
See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league inviolable:
Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun!
In this the heavens figure some event.
Edw. 'T is wondrous strange; the like yet never heard of.
I think, it cites us, brother, to the field,
That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet,
Each one already blazing by our meads,
Should, notwithstanding, join our lights together,
And over-shine the earth, as this the world.
Whate'er it bodes, henceforward will I bear
Upon my target three fair shining suns.
Rich. Nay, bear three daughters: by your leave I speak it:
You love the breeder better than the male.

Enter a Messenger in haste.

But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?
Mess. Ah! one that was a woful looker on,
When as the noble duke of York was slain,
Your princely father, and my loving lord.
Edw. O! speak no more, for I have heard too much.
Rich. Say, how he died, for I will hear it all.
Mess. Environed he was with many foes;
And stood against them, as the hope of Troy
Against the Greeks, that would have enter'd Troy.
But Hercules himself must yield to odds;
And many strokes, though with a little axe,

1 Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with: in i. e. "blowing": is the direction in the "True Tragedy."
2 True Tragedy": pride. 3 in haste: not in i. e. "Enter one.
Hew down, and fell the hardest-timber'd oak.
By many hands your father was subdued;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford, and the queen,
Who crown'd the gracious duke in high despite;
Laugh'd in his face; and, when with grief he wept,
The ruthless queen gave him, to dry his cheeks,
A napkin steeped in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slain:
And, after many scars, many foul taunts,
They took his head, and on the gates of York
They set the same; and there it doth remain,
The saddest spectacle that e'er I view'd.

Edw. Sweet duke of York! our prop to lean upon,
Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay.
O Clifford! boisterous Clifford! thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry;
And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him,
For hand to hand he would have vanquish'd thee.
Now, my soul's palace is become a prison:
Ah! would she break from hence, that this my body
Might in the ground be closed up in rest,
For never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, O! never, shall I see more joy.

Rich. I cannot weep, for all my body's moisture
Scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning heart;
Nor can my tongue unfold my heart's great burden,
For self-same wind, that I should speak wistfully,
Is kindling coals that fire all my breast,
And burn me up with flames that tears would quench.
To weep is to make less the depth of grief.
Teers, then, for babes; blows, and revenge, for me! —
Richard, I hear thy name; I'll venge thy death,
Or die renowned by attempting it.

Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with thee;
His ducedom and his chair with me are left.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,
Show thy descent by gazning 'gainst the sun:
For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom say;
Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter Warwick and Montague, with their Army.

War. How now, fair lords! What fare? what news abroad?

Rich. Great lord of Warwick, if we should recount
Our baleful news, and at each word's deliverance,
Stab poniards in our flesh till all were told,
The words would add more anguish than the wounds.
O, valiant lord! the duke of York is slain.

Edw. O, Warwick! Warwick! that Plantagenet,
Which held thee dearly as his soul's redemption,
Is by the stern lord Clifford done to death.

War. Ten days ago I drown'd these news in tears;
And now; to add more measure to your woes,
I come to tell you things sith then befallen.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield field,
Where your brave father breath'd his latest gasp,
Tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run,
Were brought me of your loss, and his depart.
1. then in London, keeper of the king,
Muster'd my soldiers, gather'd flocks of friends, 1
March'd towards Saint Albans to intercept the queen,
Bearing the king in my behalf along;
For by my scouts I was advertised,
That she was coming with a full intent to dash our last decree in parliament,
Touching king Henry's oath, and your succession.
Short tale to make,—we at Saint Albans met;
Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely fought;
But, whether 't was the coldness of the king,
Who look'd full gently on his warlike queen,
That robb'd my soldiers of their heated spleen,
or whether 't was report of her success, or more than common fear of Clifford's rigour,
Who thunders to his captives blood and death,
I cannot judge; but, to conclude with truth,
Their weapons like to lightning came and went:
Our soldiers', like the night-owl's lazy flight,
or like a lazy thrasher with a fail,
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.
I cheer'd them up with justice of our cause,
With promise of high pay, and great rewards,
But all in vain; they had no heart to fight,
And we in them no hope to win the day;
So that we fled: the king unto the queen.
Lord George your brother, Norfolk, and myself,
In haste, post-haste, are come to join with you;
For in the marches here, we heard, you were,
Making another head to fight again.

Edw. Where is the duke of Norfolk, gentle Warwick?
And when came George from Burgundy to England?
War. Some six miles off the duke is with the soldiers;
And for your brother, he was lately sent
From your kind aunt, duchess of Burgundy,
With aid of soldiers to this needful war.

Rich. 'T was odds, belike, when valiant Warwick fled:
Oft have I heard his praises in pursuit,
But ne'er, till now, his scandal of retire.

War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, dost thou hear;
For thou shalt know, this strong right hand of mine
Can pluck the diadem from faint Henry's head,
And wring the awful sceptre from his fist,
Were he as famous, and as bold in war,
As he is fam'd for mildness, peace, and prayer.

Rich. I know it well, lord Warwick; blame me not:
'T is love, I bear thy glories, makes me speak.
But in this troublous time what's to be done?
Shall we go throw away our coats of steel,
And wrap our bodies in black mourning gowns,
Numbering our Ave-Maries with our beads?
Or shall we on the helmets of our foes
Tell our devotion with revengeful arms?
If for the last, say—Ay, and to it, lords.

War. Why, therefore Warwick came to seek you out,
And therefore comes my brother Montague.
Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen,
With Clifford, and the haughty Northumberland,
And of their feather many more proud birds,
Have wrought the easy-melting king like wax.
Ho swore consent to your succession,
His oath enrolled in the parliament;
And now to London all the crew are gone,
To frustrate both his oath, and what beside
May make against the house of Lancaster:
Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong.
Now, if the help of Norfolk, and myself,
With all the friends that thou, brave earl of March,
Amongst the loving Welshmen canst procure,
Will but amount to five and twenty thousand,
Why, Fiercely to London will we march amain; 2
And once again bestride our foaming steeds,

1 Some mod. eds. insert the line:
And very well appointed, as I thought,
from the "True Tragedy." 2 From the "True Tragedy."
And once again cry—Charge! upon our foes;
But never once again turn back, and fly.

Rich. Ay, now, methinks, I hear great Warwick speak.
Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day,
That cries—Retire, if Warwick bid him stay.

Edw. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean;
And when thou fall'st, (as God forbid the hour!)
Mist Edward fall, which peril heaven forefend!

War. No longer earl of March, but duke of York:
The next degree is, England's royal throne;
For king of England shalt thou be proclaim'd
In every borough as we pass along;
And he that throws not up his cap for joy,
Shall for the fault make forfeit of his head.
King Edward,—valiant Richard,—Montague,—
Stay we no longer dreaming of renown,
But sound the trumpets, and about our task.

Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as steel,
As thou hast shown it flinty by thy deeds,
I come to pierce it, or to give thee mine.

Edw. Then strike up, drums!—God, and Saint
George, for us!

Enter a Messenger.

War. What news now: what news?

Mess. The duke of Norfolk sends you word by me,
The queen is coming with a puissant host,
And craves your company for speedy counsel.

War. Why then, it sorts: brave warriors, let's away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before York.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, the Prince of Wales, Clifford, and Northumberland, with Drums and Trumpets.

Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of York.

Yonder 's the head of that arch-enemy,
That sought to be encompass'd with your crown:
Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord?

K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their wreck:
To see this sight, it irks my very soul.—
Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault;
Not wittingly have I infringing'd my vow.

Cliff. My gracious liege, this too much lenity
And harmful pity, must be laid aside.
To whom do lions cast their gentle looks?
Not to the beast that would usurp their den.
Whose hand is that the forest bear doth lack?
Not his that spoils her young before her face.
Who 'scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting?
Not he that sets his foot upon her back.
The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on;
And doves will peck in safeguard of their brood.
Ambitious York did level at thy crown;
Thou smiling, while he knelt his angry brows;
He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue like a loving sire;
Thou, being a king, bless'd with a goodly son,
Didst yield consent to disinherit him,
Which argued thee a most unloving father.
Unreasonable creatures feed their young;
And though many be fearful to their eyes,
Yet, in protection of their tender ones
Who hath not seen them, even with those wings
Which sometime they have us'd in fearful flight,
Make war with him that climb'd upon their nest,
Offering their own lives in their young's defence?
For shame, my liege! make them your precedent.
Were it not pity, that this goodly boy
Should lose his birthright by his father's fault,
And long hereafter say unto his child,—

"What my great-grandfather and grandsire got,
My careless father fondly gave away."

Ah! what a shame were this. Look on the boy;
And let his manly face, which promises
Successful fortune, steel thy melting heart
To hold thine own, and leave thine own with him.

K. Hen. Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force.
But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear,
That things ill got had ever bad success?
And happy always was it for that son,
Whose father for his hoarding went to hell?
I'll leave my son my virtuous deeds behind,
And would my father had left me no more;
For all the rest is held at such a rate,
As brings a thousand-fold more care to keep,
Than in possession any jot of pleasure.
Ah, cousin Clifford! would thou best friends did know,
How it doth grieve me that thy head is here!

Q. Mar. My lord, cheer up your spirits: our foes are nigh,
And this soft carriage makes your followers faint.
You promis'd knighthood to our forward son:
Unsheath your sword, and draw him presently.—

Edward, kneel down.

K. Hen. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight;
And learn this lesson.—Draw thy sword in right.

Prince. My gracious father, by thy kindly leave,
I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,
And in that quarrel use it to the death.

Cliff. Why, that is spoken like a toward prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Royal commanders, be in readiness:
For, with a band of thirty thousand men,
Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York;
And, in the townis, as they do march along,
Proclaims him king, and many fly to him.

Darraign 4 your battle, for they are at hand.

Cliff. I would, your highness would depart the field:
The queen hath best success when you are absent.

Q. Mar. Ay, my good lord, and leave us to our fortune.

K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore I'll stay.

North. Be it with resolution, then, to fight.

Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble lords,
And hearten those that fight in your defence.

Unsheath your sword, good father: cry, "Saint George!"

March. Enter Edward, George, Richard, Warwick,
Norfolk, Montague, and Soldiers.

Edw. Now, perjur'd Henry, wilt thou kneel for grace,
And set thy diadem upon my head,
Or bide the mortal fortune of the field?

Q. Mar. Go, rate thy minions, proud insulting boy:

Edw. I am his king, and he should bow his knee:
I was adopted heir by his consent.
Since when, his oath is broke; for, as I hear,
You, that are king, though he do wear the crown,
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me, and put his own son in.

1 The old play: faint'st. Malone and most eds.: fall'st. 2 Foolishly. 3 courage: in L. 4 The old play: Prepare; the modern meaning of the word in the text.
KING HENRY VI.

SCENE III.

Clif. And reason too: —
Who should succeed the father, but the son?
Rich. Are you there, butcher?—O! I cannot speak.
Clif. Ay, crook-back; here I stand, to answer thee,
Or any he the proudest of thy sort.
Rich. 'T was you that kill'd young Rutland, was it not?
Clif. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfied.
Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight.
War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt thou yield the crown?
Q. Mar. Why, how now, long-tongu'd Warwick! dare you speak?
When you and I met at Saint Albans last,
Your legs did better service than your hands.
War. Then 'twas my turn to fly, and now 'tis thine.
Clif. You said so much before, and yet you fled.
War. 'T was not your valour, Clifford, drove me thence.
North. No, nor your manhood that durst make you stay.
Break off the parsley; for scarce I can refrain
The execution of my big-swoln heart
Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.
Clif. I slew thy father: call'st thou him a child? —
Rich. Ay, like a dastard, and a treacherous coward,
As thou didst kill our tender brother Rutland;
But ere sun-set I'll make thee curse the deed.
K. Hen. Have done with words, my lords, and hear me speak.
Q. Mar. Defy them then, or else hold close thy lips.
K. Hen. I pray thee, give no limits to my tongue:
I am a king, and prig--led'st to speak.
Clif. My liege, the wound, that bred this meeting here,
Cannot be cur'd by words; therefore be still.
Rich. Then, executioner, unseath thy sword.
By him that made us all, I am resolv'd,
That Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue.
Edw. Say, Henry, shall I have my right, or no?
A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day,
That ne'er shall dine, unless thou yield the crown.
War. If thou deny, their blood upon thy head;
For York in justice puts his armour on.
Prince. If that be right, which Warwick says is right,
There is no wrong, but every thing is right.
Rich. Whoever got thee, there thy mother stands;
For, well I wot, thou hast thy mother's tongue.
Q. Mar. But thou art neither like thy sire, nor dam;
But like a foul mis-shapen stigmatic,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,
As venom toads, or lizards' dreadful stings.
Rich. Iron of Naples, hid with English gilt,
Whose father bears the title of a king,
(As if a channel) should be call'd the sea)
Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art artought,
To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart?
Edw. A wisp of straw were worth a thousand crowns,
To make this shameless callat know herself.—
Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou,
Although thy husband may be Melencius;
And ne'er was Agamemnon's brother wroth
By that false woman, as this king by thee.
His father revell'd in the heart of France,
And tam'd the king, and made the Dauphin stoop;
And, had he match'd according to his state,
He might have kept that glory to this day;
But, when he took a beggar to his bed,
And grace'd thy poor sire with his bridal day,
Even then that sunshine brev'd a shower for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd sedition on his crown at home.
For what hath broach'd this tumult, but thy pride?
Hast thou been meek, our title still had slept,
And we, in pity of the gentle king,
Had slipp'd our claim until another age.
Geo. But when we saw our sunshine made thy spring,
And that thy summer bred us no increase,
We set the axe to thy usurping root:
And though the edge hath something hit ourselves,
Yet, know thou, since we have begun to strike,
We'll never leave, till we have wewn thee down,
Or hush'd thy growing with our heated bloods.
Edw. And in this resolution I defy thee;
Not willing any longer conference,
Since thou deniest the gentle king to speak —
Sound trumpets!—let our bloody colours wave,
And either victory, or a welcome grave.
Edw. No, wrangling woman; we'll no longer stay:
These words will cost ten thousand lives to-day.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Field of Battle near Towton.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Warwick.
War. Forspent with toil, as runners win a race,
I lay me down a little while to breathe;
For strokes receiv'd, and many blows repair'd,
Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,
And, spite of spite, needs must I rest awhile.

Enter Edward, running.
Edw. Smile, gentle heaven, or strike, ungentle death;
For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.
War. How now, my lord! what hap? what hope of good?

Enter George.
Geo. Our hap is loss, our hope but sad despair:
Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us.
What counsel give you? whither shall we fly?
Edw. Bootless is flight; they follow us with wings,
And we weak are, and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter Richard.
Rich. Ah, Warwick! why hast thou withdrawn thyself?
Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance;
And, in the very pangs of death he cried,
Like to a dismal clanger heard from far,
"Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!"
So, underneath the bellies of their steeds,
That stain'd their fetlocks in his smoking blood,
The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.
War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:
I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.
Why stand we like soft-hearted women here,
Wailing our losses, whilsts the foe doth rage,
And look upon, as if the tragedy
Were play'd in jest by counterfeiting actors?
Here on my knee I vow to God above.
[Kneeling.
"I'll never pause again, never stand still,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge.
Edw. O Warwick! I do bend my knee with thine;
And in this vow do chain my soul to thine.
And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face, I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee; Thou setter up and plucker down of kings; Beseeching thee,—if with thy will it stands, That to my face this body must be prey,— Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope. And give sweet passage to my sinful soul.— Rising! Now, lords, take leave until we meet again, Where'er it be, in heaven, or in earth.

Rich. Brother, give me thy hand:—and, gentle Warwick,
Let me embrace thee in my weary arms.
I, that did never weep, now melt with woe, The spring-time should cut off our spring-time so.
War. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords, farewell.

Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops, And give them leave to fly that will not stay, And call them pillars that will stand to us; And if we thrive promise them such rewards As victors wore at the Olympic games. This may plant courage in their quailing breasts; For yet is hope of life, and victory.— Foreslow* no longer; make we hence again. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Another Part of the Field.

Excursions. Enter Richard and Clifford.

Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone, Suppose, this arm is for the duke of York, And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge, Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.

Cliff. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone. This is the hand that stabb'd thy father York, And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland; And here's the heart that triumphs in their death, And cheers these hands, that slew thy sire and brother, To execute the life upon thyself: And so, have at thee.

[They fight. Warwick enters; Clifford flies.

Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase; For I myself will hunt this wolf to death. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter King Henry.

K. Hen. This battle fares like to the morning's war, When dying clouds contend with growing light; What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails, Can neither call it perfect day nor night. Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea Forced by the tide to combat with the wind: Now sways it that way, like the self-same sea Forced to retire by fury of the wind: Sometimes, the flood prevails; and then, the wind; Now, one the better; then, another best; Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast; Yet neither conqueror, nor conquer'd: So is the equal noise of this fell war. Here, on this molehill, will I sit me down; To whom God will, there be the victory; For Margaret my queen, and Clifford too, Have chid me from the battle, swearing both, They prosper best of all when I am thence. Would I were dead! if God's good will were so; For what is in this world but grief and woe? O God! methinks, it was a happy life, To be no better than a homely swain; To sit upon a hill, as I do now, To carve out dials quaintly, point by point, Thereby to see the minutes how they run:

How many make the hour full complete; How many hours bring about the day; How many days will finish up the year, How many years a mortal man may live, When this is known, then to divide the times: So many hours must I tend my flock; So many hours must I take my rest; So many hours must I contemplate; So many hours must I sport myself; So many days my eyes have been with young; So many weeks ere the poor fools will yean; So many months ere I shall shear the fleece; So minutes, hours, days, months and years, Pass'd over and the dead the dead were fed, Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.

Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely! Gives not the hawthorn bush a sweeter shade To shepherds looking on their silly sheep, Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy To kings that fear their subjects' treachery? O! yes it doth; a thousand fold it doth. And to conclude,—the shepherd's homely curds, His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle, His wond'ring sleep under a fresh tree's shade, All which secure and sweetly he enjoys, Is far beyond a prince's delicates, His viands sparkling in a golden cup, His body clad in a crape of beauty. When care, mistrust, and treason wait on him.

Alarum. Enter a Son that hath killed his Father, with the dead Body.

Son. Ill blows the wind that profits no body, This man whom hand to hand I slew in sight, May be possessed with some store of crowns; And, I that happily take them from him now, May yet ere night yield both my life and them To some man else, as this dead man to me.— Who's this?—O God! it is my father's face, Whom in this conflict I unwares have kill'd. O heavy times, begetting such events! From London by the king was I press'd forth; My father, being the earl of Warwick's man, Came on the part of York, press'd by his master; And, I who at his hands receiv'd my life, Have by my hands of life bereaved him,— Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did;— And pardon, father, for I knew not thee. My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks, And no more words, till they have flow'd their fill.

K. Hen. O piteous spectacle! O bloody times! Whiles lions war and battle for their dens, Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity. Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee, fear for fear; And let our hearts, and eyes, like civil war, Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharg'd with grief. Enter a Father, who has killed his Son, bearing the Body.

Foth. Thou that so stoutly hast resisted me, Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold, For I have bought it with an hundred blows. But let me see:—is this a feeman's face? Ah, no, no, no! it is mine only son!— Ah, boy! if any life be left in thee, Throw up thine eye: see, see, what showers arise, Blown with the windy tempest of my heart Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and heart!— O, pity, God, this miserable age!— What stratagem, how tell, how butchery; Erroneous, mutinous, and unnatural, 1 Not in f. e. 2 Delay. 3 Two similar lines are found in the Second part of Henry VI, Act iv, Sc. ii.
This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!—
O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hast bereft thee of thy life too late.

K. Hen. Woe above woe! grief more than common
Grief, that my death would stay these ruthless deeds!—
O, pity, pity! gentle heaven, pity!—
The red rose and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our strivings houses:
The one his purple blood right well resembles,
The other his pale cheeks, methinks, presenteth;
Wither one rose, and let the other flourish!
If you contend, a thousand lives must wither.
Son. How will my mother, for a father’s death,
Take on with me, and ne’er be satisfied?

Fath. How will my wife, for slaughter of my son,
Shed seas of tears, and ne’er be satisfied?

K. Hen. How will the country, for these woful chances,
Misthink the king, and not be satisfied?
Son. Was ever son so rul’d a father’s death?
Fath. Was ever father so bejoum’d a son?
K. Hen. Was ever king so griev’d for subjects’ woe?

Much is your sorrow; mine, ten times so much.
Son. I’ll bear thee hence, where I may weep my fill.

[Exit with the Body.

Fath. These arms of mine shall be thy windingsheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre,
From for my heart thine image ne’er shall go.
My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;
And so obsequious will thy father be,
E’er for the loss of thee, having no more,
As Priam was for all his valiant sons.
I’ll bear thee hence; and let them fight that will.
For I have murder’d where I should not kill.

[Exit with the Body.

K. Hen. Sad-hearted men, much overgone with care,
Here sits a king more woful than you are.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Queen MARGARET, Prince of WALES, and EXETER.

Prince. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are fled,
And Warwick rages like a chafed bull.
Away! for death doth hold us in pursuit.

Edward and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds,
Having the fearful flying hare in sight,
With fiery eyes, sparkling for very wrath,
And bloody steel grasp’d in their treaful hands,
Are at our backs; and therefore hence amain.

Exe. Away! for vengeance comes along with them.
Nay, stay not to expostulate; make speed,
Or else come after: I’ll come before.

K. Hen. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Exeter:
Not that I fear to stay, but love to go
Whither the queen intends. Forward! away!

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Same.

A loud Alarum. Enter Clifford, wounded.

Clif. Here burns my candle out; ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light.
O, Lancaster! I fear thy overthrow,
More than my body’s parting with my soul.
My love, and fear, glued many friends to thee;
And now I fall thy tough conni mishixts melt,
Impairing Henry, strengthening mis-proud York.

The common people swarm like summer-flies:
And whither fly the gnats, but to the sun?
And who shives now but Henry’s enemies?
O Phoebus! hadst thou never given consent
That Phaeton should check thy fiery steeds,
Thy burning car never had searching’d the earth;
And, Henry, hast thou swayed’d as kings should do,
Or as thy father, and his father, did.
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never, then, had sprung like summer flies;
I, and ten thousand in this luckless realm,
Had left no mourning widows for our death,
And thou this day hadst kept thy chair in peace.
For what doth cherish weeds but gentle air?
And what makes robbers bold but too much leynity?
Booless are plaints, and careless are my wounds.
No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight:
The foe is merciless, and will not pity.
For at their hands I have deserve’d no pity.
The air hath get into my deadly wounds,
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint.
—Come, York, and Richard, Warwick, and the rest;
I stabb’d your fathers’ bosoms, split my breast.

[He faints.

Edw. Now breathe we, lords: good fortune bides us pause,
And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful looks.—
Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen,
That led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill’d with a fretting gust,
Command an argosy to stem the waves.
But think you, lords, that Clifford fled with them?
War. No, ’tis impossible he should escape;
For, though before his face I speak the words,
Your brother Richard mark’d him for the grave,
And whereas ever he is, he’s surely dead.

[Clifford groans.

Rich. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave?
A deadly groan, like life and death’s departing:
See who it is.

Edw. And, now the battle’s ended,
If friend or foe, let him be gently used.

[Clifford dies.

Rich. Revoke that doom of mercy; for ’tis Clifford;
Who not contented that he topp’d the branch
In hewing Rutland when his leaves put forth,
But set his murdering knife unto the root
From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring;
I mean, our princely father, duke of York.
War. From off the gates of York fetch down the head,
Your father’s head, which Clifford placed there;
Instead whereof, let this supply the room;
Measure for measure must be answered.

Edw. Bring forth that fatal screech-owl to our house,
That nothing sung but death to us and ours:
Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,
And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.

[Soldiers bring the Body forward.

War. I think his understanding is bereft—
Speak, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to thee?
Dark cloudy death overshades his beams of life,
And he nor sees, nor hears us, what we say.
Rich. O, would he did! and so, perhaps, he doth:
’Tis but his policy to counterfeit.
Because he would avoid such bitter taunts
Which in the time of death he gave our father.
Geo. If so thou think'st, vex him with eager words.
Rich. Clifford! ask mercy, and obtain no grace.
[They pull him to and fro.]
Edw. Clifford! repent in bootless penitence.
War. Clifford! devise excuses for thy faults.
Geo. While we devise fell tortures for thy faults.
Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to York.
Edw. Thou pitiedst Rutland; I will pity thee.
Geo. Where's a captain Margaret to fence you now?
War. They mock thee, Clifford: swear as thou wast wont.
Rich. What! not an oath? may then, the world goes hard,
When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath.—
I know by that, he's dead; and, by my soul,
If this right hand would buy two hours' life,
That I in all despite might reign at him, [blood
This hand should chop it off; and with the issuing Stile the villain, whose unstaunched thirst
York and young Rutland could not satisfy.
War. Ay, but he's dead. Off with the traitor's head,
And rear it in the place your father's stands.—

And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned England's royal king:
From whence shall Warwick cut the sea to France,
And ask the lady Bona for thy queen.
So shalt thou sinew both these lands together;
And, having France thy friend, thou shalt not dread
The scatter'd foe that hopes to rise again;
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
Yet look to have them buzz, and offend thine ears.
But, will I see the coronation,
And then to Brittany I'll cross the sea,
To effect this marriage, so it please my lord.
Edw. Even as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be;
For in thy shoulder do I build my seat,
And never will I undertake the thing,
Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting.—
Richard, I will create thee duke of Glositer;
And George, of Clarence:—Warwick, as ourself,
Shall do, and undo, as he pleaseth best.
Rich. Let me be duke of Clarence, George of Glositer,
For Glositer's dukedom is too ominous.
War. Tut! that's a foolish observation:
Richard, be duke of Glositer. Now to London,
To see these honours in possession.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

Enter two Keepers, with Cross-bows in their Hands.

1 Keep. Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves;
For through this lawn anon the deer will come,
And in this covert will we make our stand,
Culling the principal of all the deer.

2 Keep. I'll stay above the hill, so both may shoot.

1 Keep. That cannot be; the noise of thy cross-bow
Will scare the herd, and so my shot is lost.
Here stand we both, and aim we at the best:
And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what befel me on a day,
In this self-place, where now we mean to stand.

2 Keep. Here comes a man; let's stay till he be past.

Enter King Henry, disguised as a churchman;* with a Prayer-book.

K. Hen. From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love,
To get mine own land with my wishful sight.
No, Harry, Harry, 'tis no land of thine;
Thy place is fill'd, thy sceptre wrung from thee,
Thy balmy wash'd off wherewith thou wast anointed:
No bending knee will call thee Caesar now,
No humble suitors press to speak for right,
Nor, not a man comes for redress of thee,
For how can I help them, and not myself?

1 Keep. Ay, here's a deer whose skin's a keeper's fee.
This is the quondam king: let's seize upon him.
K. Hen. Let me embrace these sour adversities;* for Wise men say, this is the wisest course.

2 Keep. Why linger we? let us lay hands upon him.
1 Keep. Forbear a while; we'll hear a little more.
K. Hen. My queen and son are gone to Genera for aid;
And, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick
Is thither gone, to crave the English king's sister
To wife for Edward. If this news be true,
Poor queen and son, your labour is but lost;
For Warwick is a subtle orator,

And Lewis a prince soon won with moving words.
By this account, then, Margaret may win him,
For she's a woman to be pitied much:
Her sighs will make a battery in his breast,
Her tears will pierce into a marble heart;
The tiger will be mild whiles she doth morn,
And Nero will be tainted with remorse,
To hear, and see, her plaints, her brinish tears.
Ay, but she's come to beg; Warwick, to give:
She on his left side craving aid for Henry,
He on his right asking a wife for Edward.
She weeps, and says—her Henry is deposed;
He smiles, and says—his Edward is installed;
That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more,
Whiles Warwick tells his title, smooths the wrong,
Inferreth arguments of mighty strength;
And, in conclusion, wins the king from her,
With promise of his sister, and aught else,
To strengthen and support king Edward's place.
O Margaret! thus 't will be; and thou, poor soul,
Art then forsaken, as thou wentest forlorn.

2 Keep. Say, what art thou talkest of kings and queens?  [Coming forward.]
K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I was born to:
A man at least, for less I should not be;
And men may talk of kings, and why not I?

2 Keep. Ay, but thou talk'st as if thou wert a king.
K. Hen. Why, so I am, in mind; and that's enough.

2 Keep. But, if thou be a king, where is thy crown?
K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not on my head;
Not deck'd with diamonds, and Indian stones,
Nor to be seen: my crown is call'd content;
A crown it is that seldom kings enjoy.

2 Keep. Well, if you be a king crown'd with content,
Your crown, content, and you, must be contented
To go along with us; for, as we think,
You are the king, king Edward hath deposed;
And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,

SCENE II. —London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Edward, in state, crowned; Gloster, Clarence, and Lady Grey.

K. Edw. Brother of Gloster, at Saint Albans' field
This lady's husband, sir John Grey, was slain,
His land then seiz’d on by the conqueror:
Her suit is now to repose those lands,
Which we in justice cannot well deny,
Because in quarrel of the house of York
The worthy gentleman did lose his life.

Glo. Your highness shall do well, to grant her suit;
It were dishonour to deny it her.

K. Edw. It were no less; but yet I'll make a pause.

Glo. Yes; is it so?

K. Edw. Silence!

K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know your mind.
L. Grey. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay:
May it please your highness to resolve me now,
And what your pleasure is shall satisfy me.

Glo. Ay, widow? then I'll warrant you all your lands,
An if what pleases him shall pleasure you,
Fight closer, or, good faith, you'll catch a blow.

Clar. I think, he means to beg a child of her. [Aside.

K. Edw. And you shall have four, if you'll be ruled by him.

L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.

Glo. You shall have four, if you'll be ruled by him.

K. Edw. 'T were pity, they should lose their father's lands.

L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it then.

K. Edw. Lords, give us leave: I'll try this widow's wit.

Glo. Ay, good leave have you; for you will have leave
Till youth take leave, and leave you to the crutch.

K. Edw. Now tell me, madam, do you love your children?

L. Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.

K. Edw. And would you not do much, to do them good?

L. Grey. To do them good I would sustain some harm.

K. Edw. Then, get your husband's lands to do them good.

L. Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.

K. Edw. I'll tell you how these lands are to be got.

L. Grey. So shall you bind me to your highness' service.

K. Edw. What service wilt thou do me, if I give them thee?

L. Grey. What you command, that rests in me to do.

K. Edw. But you will take exceptions to my boon.

L. Grey. No, gracious lord, except I cannot do it.

K. Edw. Ay, but thou canst do what I mean to ask.

L. Grey. Why then, I will do what your grace commands.

Glo. He plies her hard; and much rain wears the marble.

[Aside. Clar. As red as fire! nay then, her wax must melt.

L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?

K. Edw. An easy task: 'tis but to love a king.

L. Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a subject.

K. Edw. Why then, thy husband's lands I freely give thee.

L. Grey. I take my leave with many thousand thanks.

Glo. The match is made: she seals it with a curtsy.

K. Edw. But stay thee; 'tis the fruits of love I mean.

L. Grey. The fruits of love I mean, my loving liege.

K. Edw. Ay, but I fear me, in another sense.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?

L. Grey. My love till death; my humble thanks, my prayers:

That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants.

K. Edw. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love.

L. Grey. Why then, you mean not as I thought you did.

K. Edw. But now you partly may perceive my mind.

L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I perceive
Your highness aims at, if I am a wit.

K. Edw. To tell thee plain, I aim to lie with thee.

L. Grey. To tell thee plain, I had rather lie in prison.

K. Edw. Why then, thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

L. Grey. Why then, mine honesty shall be my dowry.

For by that loss I will not purchase them.

K. Edw. Therein thou wrong'st thy children mightily.

* The words, in state, crowned: not in text.
L. Grey. Herein your highness wrongs both them and me.
But, mighty lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the sadness\(^1\) of my suit;
Please you dismiss me, either with ay, or no.
K. Edw. Ay, if thou wilt say ay, to my request;
No, if thou dost say no, to my demand.
L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end.
Glo. The widow likes him not, she knits her brows.

[Aside.]

Clar. He is the bluest weaver in Christendom.

[Aside.]
K. Edw. Her looks do argue her replete with modesty;
Her words do show her wit incomparable;
All her perfections challenge sovereignty:
One way, or other, she is for a king.
And she shall be my love, or else my queen.—
Say, that king Edward take thee for his queen?
L. Grey. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious lord:
I am a subject fit to jost whileth,
But far unfit to be a sovereign.
K. Edw. Sweet widow, by my state I swear to thee,
I speak no more than what my soul intends;
And that, to enjoy thee for my love.
L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto.
I know, I am too mean to be your queen,
And yet too good to be your concubine.
K. Edw. You cavil, widow; I did mean, my queen.
L. Grey. 'Twill grieve your grace, my sons should call you father.
K. Edw. No more, than when my daughters call thou art a widow, and thou hast some children;
And, by God's mother, I, being but a bachelor,
Have other some: why, 'tis a happy thing
To be the father unto many sons.
Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen.
Glo. The ghostly father now hath done his shift.

[Aside.]

Clar. When he was made a shriver, 'twas for shift.

[Aside.]
K. Edw. Brothers, you muse what we two have had.
[GLOSTER and CLARENCE come forward.]
Glo. The widow likes it not, for she looks very sad.
K. Edw. You'd think it strange if I should marry her.
Clar. To whom, my lord? K. Edw. Why, Clarence, to myself? Glo. That would be ten days\(^2\) wonder, at the least.
Clar. That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.
Glo. By so much is the wonder in extremes.
K. Edw. Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you both, her suit is granted for her husband's lands.

Enter a Nobleman.

Nob. My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken,
And brought your prisoner to your palace gate.
K. Edw. See, that he be convey'd unto the Tower:
—And go we, brothers, to the man that took him,
To question of his apprehension.—
Widow, go you along.—Lords, use her honourably.
[Exeunt King Edward, Lady Grey, Claren-
c and Lord.]

Glo. Ay, Edward will use women honourably.
'Would he were wasted, narrow, bones, and all,
That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring,
To cross me from the golden time I look for!
And yet, between my soul's desire, and me,

The lustful Edward's title buried,
Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward,
And all the unlock'd-for issue of their bodies,
To take their rooms, can I can place myself:
A cold premeditation for my prince,
Why then, I do but dream on sovereignty;
Like one that stands upon a promontory,
And spies a far-off shore where he would tread,
Wishing his foot were equal with his eye;
And chides the sea that Sunder's him from thence,
Saying—he'll lade it dry to have his way:
So do I wish the crown, being so far off,
And so I chide the means that keep me from it;
And so I say 'I'll cut the causes off,
Flattering me with impossibilities.—
My eye's too quick, my heart o'erweaves too much,
Unless my hand and strength could equal them.
Well, say there is no kingdom, then, for Richard,
What other pleasure can the world afford?
I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,
And deck my body in gay ornaments,
And with sweet ladies with my words and looks.
O miserable thought! and more unlikely,
Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns,
Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb;
And, for I should not deal in her soft laws,
She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe
To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub;
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sits deformity to mock my body;
To shape my legs of an unequal size;
To disproportion me in every place,
Like to a chaos, or an unlik'd bear-whelp,
That carries no impression like the dam.
And am I, then, a man to be lovd?\(^3\)
O, monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought!
Then, since this earth affords no joy to me,
But to command, to check, to o'erbear such
As are of better person than myself,
I'll make my heaven to dream upon the crown;
And, whiles I live, t' account this world but hell,
Until my mis-shap'd trunk that bears this head,
Be round impaled with a glorious crown.
And yet I know not how to get the crown,
For many lives stand between me and home:
And I, like one lost in a thorny wood,
That reads the thorns, and is rent with the thorns,
Seeking a way, and straying from the way,
Not knowing how to find the open air,
But toiling desperately to find it out,
Torment myself to catch the English crown:
And from that torment I will free myself,
Or hew my way out with a bloody axe.
Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile,
And cry, content, to that which grieves my heart,
And wet my cheeks with artificial tears.
And frame my face to all occasions.
I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall,
I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;
I'll play the orator as well as Nestor,
Deceive more slyly than Ulysses could,
And like a Simon take another Troy.
I can add colours to the camelon,
Change shapes, with Proteus, for advantages,
And send the murderous Machiavel to school.
Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?
Tut! I were it further off, I'd pluck it down.

[Exit.]
SCENE III.—France. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter Lewis the French King, and Lady Bona, attended; the King takes his State. Then, enter Queen MARGARET, Prince Edward, and the Earl of Oxford.

K. Lev. Fair queen of England, worthy Margaret,
Sit down with us: it ill befits thy state,
And birth, that thou shouldst stand, while Lewis doth sit.

Q. Mar. No, mighty king of France; now Margaret Must strike her sail, and learn a while to serve,
Where kings command. I was, I must confess,
Great Albion’s queen in former golden days;
But now mishance hath trowed my title down,
And with dishonour laid me on the ground,
Where I must take like seat unto my fortune,
And to my humble seat conform myself.

K. Lev. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?

Q. Mar. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears,
And stops my tongue, while heart is drown’d in cares.
K. Lev. What’er it be, be thou still like thyself,
And sit thee by our side: yield not thy neck

[Seats her by him.]

To fortune’s yoke, but let thy dauntless mind
Still ride in triumph over all mischance.
Be peace to Bona, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eas’d, if France can yield relief.

Q. Mar. Those gracious words revive my drooping thoughts,
And give my tongue-tied sorrows leave to speak.
Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis, That Henry, sole possessor of my love,
Is of a king become a banish’d man,
And forc’d to live in Scotland all forlorn;
While proud ambitious Edward, duke of York,
Usurps the regal title, and the seat
Of England’s true-anointed lawful king.

This is the cause, that I, poor Margaret,
With this my son, prince Edward, Henry’s heir,
Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
And if thou fail us all our hope is done.
Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
Our people and our peers are both misled,
Our treasure seiz’d, our soldiers put to flight,
And, as thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight.

K. Lev. Renowned queen, with patience calm the storm,
While we bethink a means to break it off.

Q. Mar. The more we stay, the stronger grows our foe.

K. Lev. The more I stay, the more I’ll succour thee.

Q. Mar. O! but impatience waiteth on true sorrow:
And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter Warwick, attended.

K. Lev. What’s he, approacheth boldly to our presence?

Q. Mar. The earl of Warwick, Edward’s greatest friend.

K. Lev. Welcome, brave Warwick. What brings thee to France?

[He descends. Queen MARGARET rises.}

Q. Mar. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;
For this is he that moves both wind and tide.
War. From worthy Edward, king of Albion;
My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend,
I come in kindness, and unfeigned love,

First, to do greetings to thy royal person,
And, then, to crave a league of amity;
And, lastly, to confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That virtuous lady Bona, thy fair sister,
To England’s king in lawful marriage.

Q. Mar. If that go forward, Henry’s hope is done.

War. And, gracious madam, [To Bona.] In our king’s behalf,
I am commanded, with your leave and favour,
Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue
To tell the passion of my sovereign’s heart;
Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears,
Hath plac’d thy beauty’s image, and thy virtue.

Q. Mar. King Lewis, and lady Bona, hear me speak,
Before you answer Warwick. His demand
Springs not from Edward’s well-meant honest love,
But from deceit, bred by necessity;
For how can tyrants safely govern home,
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance?
To prove him tyrant this reason may suffice,—
That Henry liveth still: but were he dead,
Yet here prince Edward stands, king Henry’s son.
Look therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage
Thou draw not on thee danger and dishonour;
For though usurpers away the rule awhile,
Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth wrongs.

War. Injurious Margaret!

Prince. And why not queen?

War. Because thy father Henry did usurp,
And thou no more art prince than she is queen.

Oxf. Then, Warwick disannuls great John of Gaunt,
Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain;
And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the fourth,
Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest;
And after that wise prince, Henry the fifth,
Who by his prowess conquered all France;
From these our Henry lineally descends.

War. Oxford, how haps it, in this smooth discourse,
You told not, how Henry the sixth hath lost
All that which Henry the fifth had gotten?
Methinks, these peers of France should smile at that.
But for the rest,—you tell a pedigree
Of three score and two years; a silly time
To make prescription for a kingdom’s worth.

Oxf. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy liege,
Whom thou obeyest thirty and six years,
And not bewray thy treason with a blush?

War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree?
For shame! leave Henry, and call Edward king.

Oxf. Call him my king: by whose injurious doom
My elder brother, the lord Aubrey Vere,
Was done to death? and more than so, my father,
Even in the downfall of his mellow’d years,
When nature brought him to the door of death?
No, Warwick; no; while life uplifts this arm,
This arm uplifts the house of Lancaster.

War. And I the house of York.

K. Lev. Queen Margaret, prince Edward, and Oxford,
Vouchsafe at our request to stand aside,
While I use farther conference with Warwick.

Q. Mar Heaven grant, that Warwick’s words bewitch him not!

[They stand apart.]

K. Lev. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,

Is Edward your true king? for I were loath,
To link with him that were not lawful chosen.

War. Thereon I pawn my credit, and mine honour.

K. Lew. But is it gracious in the people's eye?

War. The more, that Henry was unfortunate.

K. Lew. Then farther, all dissembling set aside,
Tell me for truth the measure of his love
Unto our sister Bona.

War. Such it seems,
As may beseeem a monarch like himself.
Myself have often heard him say, and swear,
That this his love was an eternal plant;
Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground,
The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun,
Exempt from envy, but not from disdain,
Unless the lady Bona quit his pain.

K. Lew. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve.

Bona. Your grant, or your denial, shall be mine.—
Yet I confess, [To War.] that often ere this day,
When I have heard your king's desert recounted,
Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.

K. Lew. Then, Warwick, thus:—our sister shall be Edward's;
And now forthwith shall articles be drawn
Touching the jointure that your king must make,
Which with her dowry shall counterpoise'd.

— Draw near, queen Margaret, and be a witness,
That Bona shall be wife to the English king.

Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king.

Q. Mar. Deceitful Warwick! it was thy device
By this alliance to make void my suit:
Before thy coming, Lewis was Henry's friend.

K. Lew. And still is friend to him and Margaret:
But if your title to the crown be weak,
As may appear by Edward's good success,
Then 'tis but reason, that I be releas'd
From giving aid which late I promised.
Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand;
That your estate requires, and mine can yield.

War. Henry now lives in Scotland, at his ease,
Where having nothing, nothing can he lose.
And as for you, our quondam queen,
You have a father able to maintain you,
And better 't were you troubled him than France.

Q. Mar. Peace, impudent and shameless Warwick!
Proud setter-up and puller-down of kings,
I will not hence, till with my talk and tears,
Both full of truth, I make king Lewis behold
Thy sly conveyance, and thy lord's false love;
For both of you are birds of self-same feather.

[A horn sounded within.]

K. Lew. Warwick, this is some post to us, or thee.

Enter the Post.

Post. My lord ambassador, these letters are for you,
Sent from your brother, marquess Montague.—
These from our king unto your majesty.—
And, madam, these for you, from whom I know not.

[They all read their letters.]

Ozf. I like it well, that our fair queen and mistress
Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at his.

Prince. Nay, mark how Lewis stamps as he were nettled:
I hope all 's for the best.

K. Lew. Warwick, what are thy news? and yours, fair queen?—

Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unhoped joy.
War. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent.

K. Lew. What! has your king married the lady Grey,
And now, to soothe your forgery and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience?

Is this the alliance that he seeks with France?
Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner?

Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much before:
This proveth Edward's love, and Warwick's honesty.

War. King Lewis, I here protest, in sight of heaven,
And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss,
That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's;
No more my king, for he dishonours me,
But most himself, if he could see his shame.
Did I forget, that by the house of York
My father came untimely to his death?
Did I let pass th's abuse done to my niece?
Did I impale him with the royal crown?
Did I put Henry from his native right,
And am I guerdon'd at the last with shame?
Shame on himself, for my desert is honour;
And to repair my honour lost for him,
I here renounce him, and return to Henry.
My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
And henceforth I am thy true servant.
I will revenge his wrong to lady Bona,
And replant Henry in his former state.

Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turn'd my fate
To love;
And I forgive and quite forget old faults,
And joy that thou becom'st king Henry's friend.

War. So much my friend, as his unwieldy friend,
That if king Lewis vouchsafes to furnish us
With some few bands of chosen soldiers,
I 'll undertake to land them on our coast,
And force the tyrant from his seat by war.
'Tis not his new-made bride shall succour him:
And as for Clarence, as my letters tell me,
He's very likely now to fall from him,
For matching more for wanton lust than honour,
Or than for strength and safety of our country.

Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be reyciy'd,
But by thy help to this distressed queen?

Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry live,
Unless thou rescue him from foul despair?

Bona. My quarrel and this English queen's are one.

War. And mine, for lady Bona joins with yours.

K. Lew. And mine, with hers, and thine, and Margaret's.
Therefore, at last I firmly am resolv'd
You shall have aid.

Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once.

K. Lew. Then, England's messenger, return in pest;
And tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To revel it with him and his new bride:
Thou seest what's past: go, fear thy king withal.

Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I 'll wear the willow garland for his sake.

Q. Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are laid aside,
And from ready to put armour on.

War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore I 'll uncrown him ere it be long.

There's thy reward: be gone.

[Exit Post.

K. Lew. But, Warwick, thou
And Oxford, with five thousand warlike men,
Shall cross the seas; and bid false Edward battle:
And, as occasion serves, this noble queen
And prince shall follow with a fresh supply,
Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt:
What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?

War. This shall assure my constant loyalty:
That if our queen and this young prince agree,
I 'll join mine eldest daughter; and my joy,
SCENE I. KING HENRY VI. 499

To him forthwith in holy wedlock bands.
Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your motion—
Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous,
Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick;
And with thy hand thy faith irrevocable,
That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine.
Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it;
And here, to pledge my vow, I give my hand.
[He gives his hand to Warwick,]

K. Lew. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be levied.
And thou, lord Bourbon, our high admiral,
Shall waft them over with our royal face.

I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance, For mocking marriage with a dame of France.

[Exit all but WARWICK.

War. I came from Edward as ambassador, But I return his sworn and mortal foe:
Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me,
But dreadful war shall answer his demand.
Had he none else to make a stake1 but me? Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow.
I was the chief that raised him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again;
Not that I pity Henry's misery,
But seek revenge on Edward's mockery.

[Exit.

Enter GLOSTER, CLARENCE, SOMERSET, MONTAGUE.

Glo. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think you Of this new marriage with the lady Grey? Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?
Clar. Alas! you know, 'tis far from hence to France.
How could he stay till Warwick made return?
Som. My lords, forbear this talk: here comes the king.

Flourish. Enter King Edward, attended; Lady GREY, as Queen; PEMBROKE, STAFFORD, and HASTINGS; Glo. And his well-chosen bride.
Clar. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.
K. Edw. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you our choice,
That you stand passive, as half melancholy?
Clar. As well as Lewis of France, or the earl of Warwick;
Which are so weak of courage, and in judgment,
That they'll take no offence at our abuse.
K. Edw. Suppose they take offence without a cause,
They are but Lewis and Warwick: I am Edward,
Your king and Warwick's, and must have my will.
Glo. And you shall have your will, because our king;
Yet hasty marriage seldom proveth well.
K. Edw. Yea, brother Richard, are you offended too?
Glo. Not I.
No; God forbid, that I should wish them sever'd
Whom God hath join'd together: ay, and 'twere pity,
To sunder them that yoke so well together.
K. Edw. Setting your scorns and your dislike aside,
Tell me some reason why the lady Grey
Should not become my wife, and England's queen—
And you too, Somerset, and Montague,
Speak freely what you think.
Clar. Then this is mine opinion—that king Lewis
Becomes your enemy, for mocking him
About the marriage of the lady Bona.
Glo. And Warwick, doing what you gave in charge,
Is now dishonoured by this new marriage.
K. Edw. What, if both Lewis and Warwick be appeas'd
By such invention as I can devise?
Mont. Yet to have join'd with France in such alliance,
Would more have strengthen'd this our commonwealth;
Glo. Most foreign storms than any home-bred marriage.
Hast. Why, knows not Montague, that of itself
England is safe, if true within itself?
Mont. But the safer, when 'tis back'd with France.

Host. 'Tis better using France, than trusting France.
Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas,
Which he hath given for fence impregnable,
And with their helps only defend ourselves;
In them and in ourselves our safety lies.
Clar. For this one speech lord Hastings well deserves
To have the heir of the lord Hungerford.
K. Edw. Ay, what of that? it was my will, and grant;
And for this once my will shall stand for law.
Glo. And yet, methinks, your grace hath not done well.
To give the heir and daughter of lord Scales
Unto the brother of your loving bride;
She better would have fitted me, or Clarence;
But in your bride you bury brotherhood.
Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the heir
Of the lord Bonville on your new wife's son,
And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere.
K. Edw. Alas, poor Clarence! is it for a wife,
That thou art melancholy? I will provide thee.
Clar. In choosing for yourself you show'd your judgment;
Which being shallow, you shall give me leave
To play the broker in mine own behalf;
And to that end I shortly mind to leave you.
K. Edw. Leave me, or marry, Edward will be king,
And not be tied unto his brother's will.
Q. Eliz. My lords, before it please'd his majesty
To raise my state to title of a queen,
Do me but right; and you must all confess
That I was not ignoble of descent;
And meaner than myself have had like fortune.
But as this title honours me and mine,
So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,
Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.
K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns.
What danger, or what sorrow can befal thee,
So long as Edward is thy constant friend,
And their true sovereign whom they must obey?
Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,
Unless they seek for hatred at my hands;
Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe,
And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath.
Glo. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more.

[Aside.

Enter a Messenger.

K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters, or what news, From France?

1 Stalking-horse. 2 Added by Rowe.
Mess. My sovereign liege, no letters, and few words; But such as I, without your special pardon, Dare not relate.

K. Edu. Go to, we pardon thee; therefore, in brief, Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess them. What answer makes king Lewis unto our letters?

Mess. At my depart these were his very words:— "Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king, That Lewis of France is sending over maskers, To reveil it with him and his new bride."

K. Edu. Is Lewis so brave? belike, he thinks me

Henry,

But what said lady Bona to my marriage?

Mess. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain:

"Tell him, in hope he 'll prove a widower shortly, I 'll wear the willow garland for his sake."

K. Edu. I blame not her, she could say little less; She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen? For I have heard, that she was there in place.

Mess. "Tell him," quoth she, "my mourning weeds are done, And I am ready to put armour on."

K. Edu. Belike, she minds to play the Amazon. But what said Warwick to these injuries?

Mess. He, more incensed 'gainst your majesty Than all the rest, discharg'd me with these words:— "Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong; And therefore I 'll uncrown him ere 't be long."

K. Edu. Ha! durst the traitor breathe out so proud words?

Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd: They shall have wars, and pay for their presumption. But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret?

Mess. Ay, gracious sovereign: they are so link'd in friendship,

That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

Clar. Belike, the elder; Clarence will have the younger. [Aside.]

Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast, For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter; That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage I may not prove inferior to yourself. You, that love me and Warwick, follow me. [Exit Clarence, and Somerset follow.]

[Aside.]

Glo. Not I. My thoughts aim at a farther matter: I Stay not for the love of Edward, but the crown. K. Edu. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick! Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen, And haste is needful in this desperate case.— Pembroke and Stafford, you in our behalf Go levy men, and make prepare for war; They are already, or quick'll be landed: Myself in person will straight follow you. [Exeunt Pembroke and Stafford.]

But, ere I go, Hastings, and Montague, Resolve my doubt: you twain, of all the rest, Are near to Warwick by blood, and by alliance: Tell me if you love Warwick more than me? If it be so, then both depart to him: I rather wish you foes, than hollow friends; But, if you mind to hold your true obedience, Give me assurance with some friendly vow, That I may never have you in suspect. Mont. So God help Montague as he proves true! Hast. And Hastings as he favours Edward's cause! K. Edu. Now, brother Richard, will you stand by us?

SCENE II.—A Plain in Warwickshire.

Enter Warwick and Oxford with French and English Forces.

War. Trust me, my lord, all this hithergoes well: The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter Clarence and Somerset.

But, see, where Somerset and Clarence come! Speak suddenly, my lords; are we all friends? Clar. Fear not that, my lord.

War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto Warwick: And welcome, Somerset,—I hold it cowardice, To rest mistrustful where a noble heart Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love; Else might I think, that Clarence, Edward's brother, Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings:

But welcome, sweet Clarence; my daugther shall be thine.

And now what rests, but in night's coverture, Thy brother being carelessly encamp'd, His soldiers lurking in the towns about, And but attended by a simple guard, We may surprise and take him at our pleasure? Our scouts have found the adventure very easy:

That as Ulysses, and stout Diomede, With sleight and manhood stole to Rhesus' tents, And brought from thence the Thracian fatal steeds; So we, well cover'd with the night's black mantle, At unawares may beat down Edward's guard, And seize himself; I say not slaughter him, For I intend but only to surprise him.— You, that will follow me to this attempt, Applaud the name of Henry with your leader. [They all cry, HENRY!]

Why, then, let's on our way in silent sort:

For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint George! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Edward's Camp near Warwick.

Enter certain Watchmen, to guard the King's tent.

1 Watch. Come on, my masters, each man take his stand:

The king by this is set him down to sleep.

2 Watch. What, will he not to bed?

1 Watch. Why, no; for he hath made a solemn vow Never to lie and take his natural rest, Till Warwick or himself be quite suppress'd.

2 Watch. To-morrow then, belike, shall be the day, If Warwick be so near as men report.

3 Watch. But say, I pray, what nobleman is that, That with the king here resteth in his tent? 1 Watch. 'Tis the lord Hastings, the king's chiefest friend.

3 Watch. O! is it so? But why commands the king, That his chief followers lodge in towns about him, While he himself keeps in the cold field?

2 Watch. 'T is the more honour, because more dangerous.

3 Watch. Ay, but give me worship and quietness; I like it better than a dangerous honour. If Warwick knew in what estate he stands, 'T is to be doubted, he would waken him.

1 Watch. Unless our halberds did shut up his passage.
2 Watch. Ay; wherefore else guard we his royal tent, but to defend his person from night-foes?

Enter Warwick, Clarence, Oxford, Somerset, and Forces.

War. This is his tent; and see, where stand his guards.

Courage, my masters! honour now, or never! But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

1 Watch. Who goes there?

2 Watch. Stay, or thou diest.

[Warwick, and the rest, cry all—Warwick! Warwick! and set upon the Guard; who fly, crying—Arm! Arm! Warwick, and the rest, following them. Shouts and confusion.

Drums beating, and Trumpets sounding, re-enter Warwick, and the rest, bringing the King out in his Gown sitting in a Chair: Gloster and Hastings fly over the stage.

Som. What are they that fly there?

War. Richard, and Hastings: let them go; here’s the duke.

K. Edw. The duke! why, Warwick, when we parted last,

Thou call’dst me king?

War. Ay, but the case is alter’d:

When you disgraced me in my embassade,
Then I degraded you from being king,
And come now to create you duke of York.
Alas! how should you govern any kingdom,
That know not how to use ambassadors,
Nor how to be contented with one wife,
Nor how to use your brothers brotherly,
Nor how to study for the people’s welfare,
Nor how to shroud yourself from enemies?

K. Edw. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here too?

Nay then, I see that Edward needs must drown.—
Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mishance,
Of thee thyself, and all thy complies,
Edward will always bear himself as king:
Though fortune’s malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

War. Then, for his mind be Edward England’s king:

[Takes off his Crown.

But Henry now shall wear the English crown,
And be true king indeed; thou but the shadow.—
My lord of Somerset, at my request,
See that forthwith duke Edward be convey’d
Unto my brother, Archbishop of York.
When I have fought with Pembroke and his fellows,
I’ll follow you, and tell what answer
Lewis, and the lady Bona, send to him:—
Now, for a while farewell, good duke of York.

K. Edw. What fates impose, that men must needs abide:

It boots not to resist both wind and tide.

[Exit King Edward, led out forcibly; Somerset with him.

Oxf. What now remains, my lords, for us to do,
But march to London with our soldiers?

War. Ay, that’s the first thing that we have to do;
To free King Henry from imprisonment,
And see him seated in the regal throne.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen Elizabeth and Rivers.

Riv. Madam, what makes in you this sudden change?

Q. Eliz. Why, brother Rivers, are you yet to learn, What late misfortune is befallen King Edward?

Riv. What! loss of some pitch’d battle against Warwick?

Q. Eliz. No, but the loss of his own royal person.

Riv. Then, is my sovereign slain?

Q. Eliz. Ay, almost slain, for he is taken prisoner;
Either betray’d by falsehood of his guard,
Or by his foe surpris’d at unawares.
And, as I farther have to understand,
Is new committed to the bishop of York,
Fell Warwick’s brother, and by that our foe.

Riv. These news, I must confess, are full of grief;
Yet, gracious madam, bear it as you may:
Warwick may lose, that now hath won the day.

Q. Eliz. Till then, fair hope must hinder life’s decay;
And I the rather wean me from despair,
For love of Edward’s offspring in my womb:
This is it that makes me bide passion,
And bear with mildness my misfortune’s cross:
Ay, ay, for this I draw in many a tear,
And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs,
But with my eyes or tears I blast or drown
King Edward’s fruit, true heir to th’ English crown.

Riv. But, madam, where is Warwick then become?

Q. Eliz. I am informed that he comes towards London,
To set the crown once more on Henry’s head.

Guess thou the rest; king Edward’s friends must down:
But to prevent the tyrant’s violence,
(For trust not him that hath once broken faith)
I’ll henceforth unto the sanctuary,
To save at least the heir of Edward’s right:
There shall I rest secure from force and fraud.
Come therefore; let us fly while we may fly:
If Warwick take us we are sure to die.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Park near Middleham Castle in Yorkshire.

Enter Gloster, Hastings, Sir William Stanley, and others.

Glo. Now, my lord Hastings, and sir William Stanley,
Leave off to wonder why I drew you hither,
Into this chiefest thicket of the park.
Thus stands the case. You know, our king, my brother,
Is prisoner to the bishop here, at whose hands
He hath good usage and great liberty,
And often, but attended with weak guard,
Comes hunting this way to disport himself.
I have advertised him by secret means,
That if about this hour he make this way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends, with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity.

Enter King Edward, and a Huntsman.

Hunt. This way, my lord, for this way lies the game.

K. Edw. Nay, this way, man: see, where the huntsmen stand.—

Now, brother of Gloster, Hastings, and the rest,
Stand you thus close to steal the bishop’s deer?

Glo. Brother, the time and case requireth haste:
Your horse stands ready at the park corner.

K. Edw. But whither shall we then?

Hast. To Lynn, my lord; and ship from thence to Flanders.

Glo. Well guess’d, believe me; for that was my meaning.

K. Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness.

Glo. But therefore stay we? ’tis no time to talk.

K. Edw. Huntsman, what say’st thou? wilt thou go along?

1 The rest of this direction is not in f. e.
Hunt. Better do so, than tarry and be hang'd.
Glo. Come then; away! let's have no more ado.
K. Edw. Bishop, farewell: shield thee from Warwick's frown,
And pray that I may repossess the crown. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A Room in the Tower.

Enter King Henry, Clarence, Warwick, Somerset, young Henry of Richmond, Oxford, Montague, Lieutenant of the Tower, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Master lieutenant, now that God and friends
Have shaken Edward from the regal seat,
And turn'd my captivis state to liberty,
My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?
Lieu. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sovereigns;
But if an humble prayer may prevail,
I then crave pardon of your majesty.
K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me?
Nay, be thou sure, I'll well requite thy kindness,
For that I made my imprisonment a pleasure:
Ay, such a pleasure as meaged birds
Conceive, when, after many moody thoughts,
At last by notes of household harmony
They quite forget their loss of liberty.—
But, Warwick, after God, thou set'st me free,
And chiefly therefore I thank God, and thee;
He was the author, thou the instrument.
Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite,
By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me,
And that the people of this blessed land
May not be punish'd with my thwarting stars,
Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,
I here resign my government to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.
War. Your grace hath still been fam'd for virtuous,
And now may seem as wise as virtuous,
By spring, and avoiding, fortune's malice;
For few men rightly temper with the stars:
Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace,
For choosing me when Clarence is in place.
Clar. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the heavens in thy nativity
Adjudg'd an olive branch, and laurel crown,
As likely to be blest in peace, and war;
And, therefore, I yield thee my free consent.
War. And I choose Clarence only for protector.
K. Hen. Warwick, and Clarence, give me both your hands.
Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts,
That no dissension hinder government;
I make you both protectors of this land,
While I myself will lead a private life,
And in devotion spend my latter days,
To sin's rebuke, and my Creator's praise.
War. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's will?
Clar. That he consents, if Warwick yield consent;
For on thy fortune I repose myself.
War. Why then, though loath, yet must I be content.
We'll yoke together, like a double shadow
To Henry's body, and singly his place;
I mean, in bearing weight of government,
While he enjoys the honour, and his case.
And, Clarence, now then, it is more than needful,
Forthwith that Edward be pronounced a traitor,
And all his lands and goods confiscated.¹

Clar. What else? and that succession be determin'd.
War. Ay, therein Clarence shall not want his part.
K. Hen. But, with the first of all your chief affairs,
Let me entreat, (for I command no more)
That Margaret your queen, and my son Edward,
Be sent for to return from France with speed;
For, till I see them here, by doubtful fear
My joy of liberty is half eclips'd.
Clar. It shall be done, my sovereign, with all speed.
K. Hen. My lord of Somerset, what youth is that,
Of whom you seem to have so tender care?
Som. My liege, it is young Henry, earl of Richmond.
K. Hen. Come hither, England's hope: if secret powers [Leys his Hand on his Head.
Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,
This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss.
His looks are full of peaceful majesty;
His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
His hand to wield a sceptre; and himself
Likely in time to bless a regal throne.
Make much of him, my lords; for this is he Must help you more than you are hurt by me.
Enter a Messenger.
War. What news, my friend?
Mess. That Edward is escaped from your brother,
And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.
War. Unsavoury news! but how made he escape?
Mess. He was convey'd by Richard duke of Gloucester,
And the lord Hastings, who attended him
In secret ambush on the forest side,
And from the bishop's huntsmen rescued him,
For hunting was his daily exercise.
War. My brother was too careless of his charge.—
But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide
A salve for any sore that may betide.
[Exit King Henry, Warwick, Clarence, Lieutenant, and Attendants.

Som. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's,
For, doubtless, Burgundy will yield him help,
And we shall have more wars, before't be long.
As Henry's late presaging prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richard,
So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts
What maybefal him, to his harm and ours:
Therefore, lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,
Forthwith we'll send him hence to Brittany,
Till storms be past of civil c乃至.
Oxf. Ay; for if Edward repossess the crown,
'Tis like that Richmond with the rest shall down.
Som. It shall be so; he shall to Brittany.
Come therefore; let's about it speedily.

[Exit.

SCENE VII.—Before York.

Enter King Edward, Gloster, Hastings, and foreign Forces.

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, lord Hastings, and the rest,
Yet thus far fortune maketh us amend,
And says that once more I shall interchange
My wani'd state for Henry's regal crown.
Well have we past, and now pass'd the seas,
And brought desired help from Burgundy:
What then remains, we being thus arriv'd
From Ravensburg haven before the gates of York,
But that we enter as into our dukedom?
Glo. The gates made fast.—Brother, I like not this;
SCENE VIII.---London. A Room in the Palace.

War. What counsel, lords? Edward from Belgia, with hasty Germans, and blunt Hollanders, hath pass'd in safety through the narrow seas, and with his troops doth march amain to London; and many giddy people flock to him.

K. Hen. Let a levy men, and beat him back again.

Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out, which being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.

War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted friends, not mutinous in peace, yet bold in war; those will I muster up: and thou, son Clarence, shalt stir up in Suffolk, Norfolk, and in Kent, the knights and gentlemen to come with thee: thou, brother Montague, in Buckingham, Northampton, and in Leicester-shire, shalt find Men well inclin'd to hear what thou command'st: and thou, brave Oxford, wonder'st well belov'd. In Oxfordshire shalt muster up thy friends.

My sovereign, with the loving citizens, like to his island girt in with the ocean; or modest Diana circled with her nymphs, Shall rest in London, till we come to him: Fair lords, take leave, and stand not to reply: Farewell, my sovereign.

K. Hen. Farewell, my Hector, and my Troy's true help.

Clar. In sign of truth I kiss your highness' hand.

K. Hen. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate.

Mont. Comfort, my lord: and so I take my leave.

Orf. And thus [Kissing Henry's hand] I seal my truth, and bid adieu.

K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague, and all at once, once more a happy farewell.

War. Farewell, sweet lords: let's meet at Coventry.

[Exeunt War. Clar. Oxf. and Mont.]
K. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest a while.
Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship?
Methinks, the power that Edward hath in field,
Should not be able to encounter mine.

Exe. The doubt is, that he will seduce the rest.
K. Hen. That's not my fear; my mind hath got me
I have now told him what I did demand, [fame.]
Nor posted off their suits with slow delays;
My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,
My mildness hath alway'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dry'd their bitter-flowing tears:
I have not been desirous of their wealth,
Nor much oppress'd them with great subsidies,
Nor forward of revenge, though they much err'd
Then, why should they love Edward more than me?
No, Exeter, these graces challenge grace;
And, when the lion fawns upon the lamb,
The lamb will never cease to follow him.

[Shout within. A Lancaster! A Lancaster!]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Coventry.

Enter upon the Walls, Warwick, the Mayor of Coventry, Two Messengers, and others.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford?
How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow?
1 Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.
War. How far off is our brother Montague?—
Where is the post that came from Montague?
2 Mess. By this at Dunstry, with a puissant troop.
Enter Sir John Somerville.
War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?
And, by thy guess, how nigh is Clarence now?
Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces,
And do expect him here some two hours hence.
[Drum heard.
War. Then Clarence is at hand, I hear his drum.
Som. It is not his, my lord; here Southam lies:
The drum your honour hears marcheth from Warwick.
War. Who should that be? belieke, unlook'd-for friends.
Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.
March. Flourish. Enter King Edward, Gloster, and Forces. [parle.
K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a Glo. See, how the surly Warwick mans the wall.
War. 0, unbid spite! is sportful Edward come?
Where slope our scouts, or how are they setdoe'd,
That we could hear no news of his repair? [gates?
K. Edw. Now, Warwick, wilt thou ope the city
Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee,
Call Edward king, and at his hands beg mercy,
And he shall pardon thee these outrages.
War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,
Confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down?
Call Warwick patron, and be penitent,
And thou shalt still remain— the duke of York.
Glo. I thought, at least, he would have said the king;
Or did he make the jest against his will?
War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?
Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor carl to give:
I'll do thee service for so good a gift.
War. 'T was I, that gave the kingdom to thy brother.
K. Edw. Why then, 't is mine, if but by Warwick's gift.
War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:

1 meed: in f. e. 2 water-flowing: in f. e. 3 Pack of cards.

Eze. Hark, hark, my lord! what shouts are these?
Enter King Edward, Gloster, and Soldiers.
K. Edw. Seize on the shame-face'd Henry! bear him hence,
And once again proclaim us king of England.—
You are the fouls that makes small brooks to flow:
Now stops thy spring; my sea shall suck them dry,
And so well much the higher by their ebb.
Hence with him to the Tower! let him not speak.
[Exeunt some with King Henry.
And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course,
Where peremptory Warwick now remains.
The sun shines hot, and, if we use delay,
Cold biting winter mars our hop'd-for lay.
Glo. Away betimes, before his forces join,
And take the great-grown traitor unawares.
Brave warriors, march amain towards Coventry.
[Exeunt.
SCENE III.

KING HENRY VI.

506.

Glo. Two of thy name, both dukes of Somerset, Have sold their lives unto the house of York; And thou shalt be the third, if this sword hold.

Enter Clarence, with Drum and Colours.

War. And lo! where George of Clarence sweeps along, Of force enough to bid his brother battle; With whom an upright zeal to right prevails, More than the nature of a brother's love. —

[Gloster and Clarence whisper.
Come, Clarence, come; thou wilt, if Warwick calls.

Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this means? [Taking the red Rose out of his Hat.

Look here, I throw my infamy at thee: I will not ruinate my father's house, Who gave his blood to lime the stones together, And set up Lancaster. Why, trow'st thou, Warwick, That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt, unnatural, To bend the fatal instruments of war Against his brother, and his lawful king? Perhaps, thou wilt object my holy oath: To keep that oath, were more impious Than Jephtha's, when he sacrificed his daughter. I am so sorry for my trespass made, That to deserve well at my brother's hands, I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe: With resolution, wheresoe'er I meet thee, (As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad) To plague thee for thy foul misleading me. And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee, And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks.— Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends; And, Richard, do not frown upon my faults, For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belov'd, Than if thou never hadst deserv'd our hate.

Glo. Welcome, good Clarence: this is brother-like.

War. O passing traitor, perjur'd, and unjust!

K. Edw. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the town and fight, Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears?

War. Alas! I am not cooped here for defence: I will away towards Barnet presently, And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou dar'st.

K. Edw. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way,— Lords, to the field! Saint George, and victory! [March. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Field of Battle near Barnet.

Alarums, and Excursions.

Enter King Edward, bringing in Warwick wounded.

K. Edw. So, lie thou there: die thou, and die our fear, For Warwick was a bug, I that fear'd us all.— Now, Montague, sit fast: I seek for thee, That Warwick's bones may keep thine company. [Exit.

War. Ah! who is nigh? come to me, friend or foe, And tell me, who is victor, York, or Warwick? Why ask I that? my mangled body shows, My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shows, That I must yield my body to the earth, And by my fall the conquest to my foe. Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge, Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle, Under whose shade the ramping lion slept; Whose top-branch overpeep'd Jove's spreading tree, And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind. These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's black veil, Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun, To search the secret treasons of the world: The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood, Were liken'd oft to kingly sepulchres. For who liv'd king, but I could dig his grave? And who durst smile when Warwick bent his bow? Lo, now my glory smeared in dust and blood! My parks, my walks, my manors that I had, Even now, forsake me; and, of all my lands, Is nothing left me, but my body's length. Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust? And, live we how we can, yet die we must.

Enter Oxford and Somerset.

Som. Ah, Warwick! Warwick! wert thou as we, We might recover all our loss again. The queen from France hath brought a puissant power; Even now we heard the news. Ah, couldst thou fly! War. Why, then would not thy flight.—Ah, Montague! If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand, And with thy lips keep in my soul awhile, Thou love' st me not; for, brother, if thou dist, Thy tears would wash this cold concealed blood, That glues my lips, and will not let me speak. Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead.

Som. Ah, Warwick! Montague hath breath'd his last; And to the latest gap, cri'd out for Warwick, And said— "Command me to thy valiant brother," And more he would have said; and more he spoke, Which sounded like a cannon in a vault, That might not be distinguish'd: but, at last, I well might hear, deliver'd with a groan,— "Oh, farewell Warwick!"— War. Sweet rest his soul!—Fly, lords, and save yourselves; For Warwick bids you all farewell, to meet in heaven. [Dies.

Oxf. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power! [Exeunt, bearing off Warwick's Body.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field.

Flourish. Enter King Edward in triumph; with Clarence, Gloster, and the rest.

K. Edw. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course, And we are graec'd with wreaths of victory. But in the midst of this bright shining day, I spy a black, suspicius, threat'ning cloud, That will encounter with our glorious sun, Ere he attain his easy western bed; I mean, my lords, those powers, that the queen Hath rais'd in Gallia, have arriv'd our coast, And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.

Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud, And blow it to the source from whence it came: Thy very beams will dry those vapours up, For every cloud engenders not a storm.

Glo. The queen is val'd thirty thousand strong, And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her: If she have time to breathe, be well assur'd, Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

K. Edw. We are advertis'd by our loving friends, That they do hold their course toward Tewksbury. We, having now the best at Barnet field, Will strike them straight, for willingness rides way; And, as we march, our strength will be augmented In every county as we go along.— Strike up the drum! cry—Courage! and away. [Flourish. Exeunt.
SCENE IV.—Plains near Tewkesbury.

March. Enter Queen Margaret, Prince Edward, Somerset, Oxford, and Soldiers.

Q. Mar. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wait their loss,
But cheerly seek how to redress their harms.
What though the mast be now blown over-board,
The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot still: 'tis meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
With tearful eyes add water to the sea,
And give more strength to that which hath too much;
Whiles in his main the ship splits on the rock,
Which industry and courage might have sav'd?
Ah! what a shame, ah! what a fault were this.
Say, Warwick was our anchor; what of that?
And Moniague our top-mast; what of him?
Our slaught'rd friends the tackles; what of these?
Why, is not Oxford here another anchor,
And Somerset another goodly mast?
The friends of France our shrouds and tackling?
And, though unskillful, why not Ned and I.
For once allow'd the skilful pilot's charge?
We will not from the helm to sit and weep,
But keep our course, though the rough wind say no,
From shelves and rocks that threaten us with wreck,
As good to chide the waves, as speak them fair.
And what is Edward but a ruthless sea?
What Clarence but a quicksand of deceit?
And Richard but a ragged fatal rock?
All these the enemies to our poor bark.
Say, you can swim; alas! 'tis but a while:
Trend on the sand; why, there was quickly sink:
Bestride the rock; the tide will wash you off,
Or else you famish; that's a threefold death.
This speak I, lords, to let you understand,
If case some one of you would fly from us,
That there's no hop'd-for mercy with the brothers,
More than with ruthless waves, with sands, and rocks.
Why, courage, then! what cannot be avoided,
'T were childish weakness to lament, or fear.

Prince. Methinks, a woman of this valiant spirit
Should, if a coward heard her speak these words,
Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.
I speak not this, as doubting any here;
For, did I but suspect a fearful man,
He should have leave to go away betimes,
Lost in our need he might infect another,
And make him of like spirit to himself.
If any such be here, as God forbid!
Let him depart before we need his help.

Oxf. Women and children of so high a courage,
And warriors faint! why, 't were perpetual shame,—
O, brave young prince! thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee: long may'st thou live,
To bear his image, and renew his glories!

Som. And he, that will not fight for such a hope,
Go home to bed, and, like the owl by day,
If he arise, a mock'd and wonder'd at.

Prince. And take his thanks, that yet hath nothing else.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand,
Ready to fight: therefore, be resolute.

---

Oxf. I thought no less: it is his policy
To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided.
Som. But he's deceiv'd: we are in readiness.

Q. Mar. This cheers my heart to see your forwardness.

Oxf. Here pitch our battle; hence we will not budge.

Flourish and March. Enter King Edward, Clarence, Gloster, and Forces.

K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood.
Which, by the heavens' assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.
I need not add more fuel to your fire,
For, well I wot, ye blaze to burn them out.
Give signal to the fight, and to it, lords.

Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what I should say,
My tears gainsey; for every word I speak,
Ye see, I drink the water of my eye.
Therefore, no more but this.—Henry, your sovereign,
Is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp'd,
His realm a slaughterhouse, his subjects slain,
His statutes cancel'd, and his treasure spent;
And yonder is the wolf that makes this spoil.
You fight in justice: then, in God's name, lords,
Be valiant, and give signal to the fight.

[Exeunt both Armies.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Same.

Alarums: Excursions: and afterwards a Retreat.
Then enter King Edward, Clarence, Gloster, and Forces: with Queen Margaret, Oxford, and Somerset, Prisoners.

K. Edw. Now, here a period of tumultuous broils.
Away with Oxford to Hammes' castle straight;
For Somerset, off with his guilty head;
Go, bear them hence: I will not hear them speak.

Oxf. For my part, I'll not trouble thee with words.

Som. Nor I; but stoop with patience to my fortune.

[Exeunt Oxford and Somerset, guarded.

Q. Mar. So part we sadly in this troublous world,
To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem.

K. Edw. Is proclamation made, that who finds Edward Shall have a high reward, and he his life?

Glo. It is: and, lo! where youthful Edward comes.

Enter Soldiers, with Prince Edward.

K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant: let us hear him speak.

[Exeunt Edward sits.

What! can so young a thorn begin to prick?
Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make,
For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,
And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?

Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York.
Suppose that I am now my father's mouth:
Resign thy chair, and where I stand kneel thou,
Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee,
Which, traitor, thou wouldst have me answer to.

Q. Mar. Ah, that thy father had been so resolv'd!
Glo. That you might still have worn the petticote,
And ne'er have stoil the brench from Lancaster.

Prince. Let E'sop fable in a winter's night;
His current tiddles sport not with the place.

Glo. By heaven, brat, I'll plague you for that word,
Q. Mar. Ay, thou wast born to be a plague to men.
Glo. For God's sake, take away this captive scold.

Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crook-back, rather.

K. Edw. Peace! willful boy, or I will charm your tongue.
SCENE VI.—London. A Room in the Tower.

King Henry is discovered reading.

Enter Gloster and the Lieutenant.

Glo. Good day, my lord. What, at your book so hard?
K. Hen. Ay, my good lord: my lord, I should say rather:

’T is sin to flatter; good was little better:
Good Gloster, and good devil, were alike,
And both preposterous; therefore, not good lord.

Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer.

[Exit Lieutenant.

K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf:
So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece,
And next his throat unto the butcher’s knife.—

What scene of death hath Roscius now to act?

Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind:
The thief doth fear each bush an officer.

K. Hen. The bird, that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush;
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim’d, was caught, and kill’d.

Glo. Why, what a peevish fool was that of Crete,
That taught his son the office of a fowl?
And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown’d.

K. Hen. I, Deedalus; my poor boy, Icarus;
Thy father, Minos, that denied our course;
The sun, that scar’d the wings of my sweet boy,
Thy brother Edward; and thyself, the sea,
Whose envious gulf did swallow up his life.
Ah! kill me with thy weapon, not with words.
My breast can better brook thy dagger’s point,
Than can my ears that tragic history.
But wherefore dost thou come? is’t for my life?
Glo. Think’st thou I am an executioner?
K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art:
If murdering innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner.

Glo. Thy son I kill’d for his presumption.
K. Hen. Hadst thou been kill’d, when first thou didst presume,
Thou hadst not liv’d to kill a son of mine.
And thus I prophesy,—that many a thousand,
Which now mistrust no parcel of my fear,
And many, old man’s sighs and many a widow’s,
And many an orphan’s water-standing eye,—
Men for their sons’, wives for their husbands’,
Orphans for their parents’ timeless death,
Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born.
The owl shriek’d at thy birth, an evil sign:
The night-crow cried, a boding luckless tune;
Dogs howl’d, and hideous tempest shook down trees:
The raven rock’d her on the chimney’s top,
And chattering pies in dismal discord sung.
Thy mother felt more than a mother’s pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother’s hope;
To wit,—an indigist deformed lump,
Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree.
Teeth hadst thou in thy head, when thou wast born,
To signify, thou cam’st to bite the world:
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou cam’st—

Glo. I’ll hear no more.—Die, prophet, in thy speech:

[Stabs him.

For this, amongst the rest, was I ordain’d.

K. Hen. Ay, and for much more slaughter after this.
O! God forgive my sins, and pardon thee.

[Dies.

Clar. Untutor’d lad, thou art too malapert.

Prince. I know my duty: you are all unfruitful.
Lascivious Edward,—and thou perjur’d George,
And thou mis-shapen Dick,—I tell ye all,
I am ye better, traitors as ye are:
And thou usurp’st my father’s right and mine.

K. Edw. Take that, the likeness of this railler here.

[Glo. Stabs him.

Clar. And there’s for twitting me with perjury.

[Clari. stabs him.

Q. Mor. O, kill me too!

Glo. Marry, and shall.

[Offers to kill her.

K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold! for we have done too much.

Glo. Why should she live, to fill the world with words?

K. Edw. What! doth she swoon? use means for her recovery

Glo. Clarence, excuse me to the king, my brother.

I’ll hence to London on a serious matter:
Ere ye come there, be sure to hear some news.

Clar. What? what?

Glo. The Tower! the Tower!

[Exit.

Q. Mor. O, Ned! sweet Ned! speak to thy mother,

boy;

Canst thou not speak?—O traitors! murderers!—

They, that stabb’d Caesar shed no blood at all,

Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame,

If this foul deed were by to sequel it:

He was a man: this, in respect, a child;

And men ne’er spend their fury on a child.

What’s worse than murderer, that I may name it?

No, no; my heart will burn, as I can speak;

And I will speak, that so my heart may burn.—

Butchers and villains! bloody cannibals!

How sweet a plant have you untimely cropp’d!

You have no children, butchers! if you had,

The thought of them would have stirr’d up remorse:

But, if you ever chance to have a child,

Look in his youth to have him so cut off.

As, deathsmen, you have rid this sweet young prince!

K. Edw. Away with her! go, bear her hence perforce.

Q. Mor. Nay, never bear her hence, despatch me here;

Here saeth thy sword, I’ll pardon thee my death.

What! wilt thou not?—then, Clarence, do it thou.

Clar. By heaven, I will not do thee so much ease.

Q. Mor. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou do it.

Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear I would not do it?

Q. Mor. Ay, but thou usest to forswear thyself:

’T is sin before, but now ’t is charity.

What! wilt thou not? where is that devil’s butcher,

Hard-favour’d Richard? Richard, where art thou?

Thou art not here: murder is thy alms-deed;

Petitioners for blood thou ne’er put’st back.

Q. Mor. So come to you, and yours, as to this prince!

[Exit.

K. Edw. Where’s Richard gone?

Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess,

To make a bloody supper in the Tower.

K. Edw. He’s sudden, if a thing comes in his head.

Now march we hence: discharge the common sort

With pay and thanks, and let’s away to London,

And see our gentle queen how well she fares:

By this, I hope, she hath a son for me.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

ACT V.

Glo. What! will the aspiring blood of Lancaster Sink in the ground? I thought it would have mounted. See, how my sword weeps for the poor king’s death! O, may such purple tears be always shed From those that wish the downfall of our house!— If any spark of life be yet remaining, Down, down to hell; and say I sent thee thither, [Stabs him again.

I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear. Indeed, 'tis true, that Henry told me of; For I have often heard my mother say, I came into the world with my legs forward. Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste, And seek their ruin that usurp’d our right? The midwife wonder’d; and the women cried, "O, Jesus bless us! he is born with teeth!" And so I was; which plainly signified That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog. Then, since the heavens have shap’d my body so, Let hell make crook’d my mind to answer it. I have no brother, I am like no brother; And this word love, which greybeards call divine, Be resident in men like one another, And not in me: I am myself alone.— Clarence, beware: thou keep’st me from the light; But I will sort a pitchy day for thee: For I will buzz abroad such prophecies, That Edward shall be fearful of his life; And then, to purge his fear, I’ll be thy death. King Henry, and the prince his son, are gone; Clarence, thy turn is next, and then the rest; Counting myself but bad, till I be best.— I’ll throw thy body in another room, And triumph, Henry in thy day of doom. [Exit with the Body.

SCENE VII.—The Same. A Room in the Palace. King Edward is discovered sitting on his Throne. Queen Elizabeth; a Nurse with the Infant Prince, Clarence, Hastings, and others.

K. Edw. Once more we sit in England’s royal throne. Re-purchas’d with the blood of enemies. What valiant foe-men, like to autumn’s corn, Have we mow’d down, in tops of all their pride? Three dukes of Somerset, threefold renown’d For hardy and redeemed 2 captives:

Two Cliffsords, as the father and the son; And two Northumberlands; two braver men Ne’er spurr’d their courser at the trumpet’s sound: With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and Montague, That in their chains fetter’d the kingly lion, And made the forest tremble when they rost’d. Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat, And made our footstool of security.—

Enter Gloster behind.

Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy.— Young Ned, for thee, thin uncle, and myself. Have in our armours watch’d the winter’s night; Went all a-foot in summer’s scalding heat; That thou mightst repossess the crown in peace; And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain. Glo. I’ll blast his harvest, if your head were laid; [Aside.

For yet I am not look’d on in the world. This shoulder was ordain’d so thick, to heave; And heave it shall some weight, or break my back,— Work thou the way, and that shall execute. K. Edw. Clarence, and Gloster, love my lovely queen; And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both.

Clar. The duty that I owe unto your majesty, I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe. [Kissing it. K. Edw. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brothers. Glo. And, that I love the tree from whence thou spring’st, [Kissing the infant

Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit.— [Aside. To say the truth, so Judas kiss’d his master, And cried—all hail! when as he meant—all harm. K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights, Having my country’s peace, and brothers’ loves. Clar. What will your grace have done with Margaret? Reignier, her father, to the king of France Hath pawn’d the Sicils and Jerusalem, And hither have they sent it for her ransom. K. Edw. Away with her, and waft her hence to France.— And now what rests, but that we spend the time With stately triumphs, martiall comic shows, Such as befit the pleasure of the court? Sound, drums and trumpets!—farewell, sour annoys; For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. Now is the winter of our discontent Made glorious summer by this sun1 of York; And all the clouds that lower'd upon our house, In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths; Our bruised arms hung up for monuments; Our dreadful marches to delightful measures. Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front; And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds, To fright the souls of fearful adversaries, He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber, To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.2 But I, that am not shap'd for sportive tricks, Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass; I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's Majesty, To strut before a wanton ambling nymph; I, that am curtail'd thus of fair proportion, Cheated of feature by dissembling nature, Deform'd, unfinished, sent before my time Into this breathing world, scarce half made up, And that so lamely and unashionable, That dogs bark at me, as I halt by them; Why, I, in this weak piping time of peace,

1 The cognizance of Edward IV. consisted of three suns. 2 Caprisoned. 3 love: in quarto. 4 curtail'd of this: in f. e. 5 spy: in quarto.
O! belike, his majesty hath some intent,
That you should be new christened in the Tower.
But what's the matter, Clarence? may I know?
    Clar. Ye, Richard, when I know; but I protest,
As yet I do not: but, as I can learn,
He hearkens after prophecies and dreams;
And from the cross-rod plucks the letter G,
And says, a wizard told him, that by G
His issue disinherited should be;
And, for my name of George begins with G,
It follows in his thought that I am he.
These, as I learn, and such like toys as these,
Have mov'd his highness to commit me now.
    Glo. Why, this it is, when men are rul'd by women,
'Tis not the king that sends you to the Tower:
My lady Grey, his wife, Clarence, 'tis she,
That tempts him to this hard' extremity.
Was it not she, and that good man of worship,
Antony Woodville, her same1 brother there,
That made him send lord Hastings to the Tower,
From whence this present day he is deliver'd?
We are not safe, Clarence; we are not safe.
    Clar. By heaven, I think, there is no man secure,
But the queen's kindred, and night-walking heralds
That trudge betwixt the king and mistresse Shore.
Heard you not, what an humble supplian
Lord Hastings was to her for delivery?2
    Glo. Humbly complaining to her deity
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.
I'll tell you what; I think, it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her livery:
The jealous o'er-worn widow, and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in our monarchy.
    Brak. I beseech your grace both to pardon me:
His majesty hath straitly given in charge,
That no man shall have private conference,
Of what degree soever, with your brother.
    Glo. Even so; an please your worship, Brakenbury,
You may partake of any thing we say.
We speak no treason, man: we say, the king
Is wise and virtuous; and his noble queen
Well struck in years; fair, and not jealous:—
We say that Shere's wife hath a pretty foot,
A cherry lip, a bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue;
And the queen's kindred are made gentlefolks.
How say you, sir? can you deny all this?
    Brak. With this, my lord, myself have nought to do.
    Glo. Nought to do with mistress Shore? I tell thee, fellow,
He that doth nought with her, excepting one,
Were best to do it secretly, alone.
    Brak. What one, my lord?
    Glo. Her husband, knave. Wouldst thou betray me?
    Brak. I do beseech your grace to pardon me; and withal,
Forbear your conference with the noble duke.
    Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will obey.
    Glo. We are the queen's subjects, and must obey.—
Brother, farewell: I will unto the king;
And whatsoever you will employ me in,
Were it to call king Edward's widow sister,
I will perform it to enfranchise you.
Mean time, this deep disgrace in brotherhood
Tounces me deeper than you can imagine.
    Clar. I know it, it pleatheth neither of us well.

SCENE II.

KING RICHARD III.

511

Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son, Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds! Lo, in these windows, that let forth thy life, I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes:—
O, cursed be the hand that made these holes! Cursed the heart, that had the heart to do it! Cursed the blood, that let this blood from hence! 1
More direful hap betide that hated wretch, That makes us wretched by the death of thee, Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads, Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives! If ever in more child, abortive be it, Prodigious, and untimely brought to light, Whose ugly and unnatural aspect May fright the hopeful mother at the view; And that be heir to his unhappiness 2
If ever he have wife, let her be made More' miserable by the death of him, Than I am made by my young lord, and thee!—
Come, now toward Chertsey with your holy load, Taken from Paul's to be interred there; And still, as you are weary of this weight, Rest you, whilsts I lament King Henry's corse.

[Glo. The Bearers take up the Corse and advance.]

Enter Gloster.

Glo. Stay you, that bear the corse, and set it down.

Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds?

Glo. Villains, set down the corse; or, by Saint Paul, I'll make a corse of him that doth obey.

1 Gent. My lord, stand back, and let the coffin pass.

Glo. Unmann'd dog! stand thou when I command:
Advance thy halberd higher than my breast, Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot, And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

[The Bearers set down the Coffin.]

Anne. What! do you tremble! are you all afraid?

Alas! I blame you not; for you are mortal, And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.—
Avault, thou dreadful minister of hell!
Thou hast but power over his mortal body, His soul thou canst not have: therefore, be gone.

Glo. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curt.

Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not;
For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell, Fill'd it with cursing cries, and deep exclamations. If thou delight to view thy leinous deeds,
Behold this pattern of thy butcheries.—
O, gentlemen! see, see!—dead Henry's wounds Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!—
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity, For 'tis thy presence that exhausts this blood From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells:
Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural, Provokes this deluge most unnatural,—
O God, which this blood mad'st, revenge his death! O earth, which this blood drink'st, revenge his death! Either, heaven, with lightning stroke the murderer dead, Or, earth, gape open wide, and eat him quick, As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood, Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butchered!

Glo. Lady, you know no rules of charity, Which renders good for bad, blessings for curses.

Anne. Villain, thou know'st nor law of God nor man:
No beast so fierce, but knows some touch of pity.

Glo. But I know none, and therefore am no beast.

Anne. O wonderful! when devils tell the truth!

Glo. More wonderful, when angels are so angry.—Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman, Of these supposed evils to give me leave By circumstance but to acquit myself.

Anne. Vouchsafe, diffuse'd infection of a man, For these known evils but to give me leave By circumstance to curse thy cursed self.

Glo. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me have Some patient leisure to excurse myself.

Anne. Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make No excuse current, but to hang thyself.

Glo. By such despair I should accuse myself.

Anne. And, by despairing, shalt thou stand excused For doing worthy vengeance on thyself, That didst unworthy slaughter upon others.

Glo. Say, that I slew them not?

Anne. Then say they were not slain. 4
But dead they are, and, devilsish slave, by thee.

Glo. I did not kill your husband.

Anne. Why, then he is alive.

Glo. Nay, he is dead; and slain by Edward's hand.

Anne. In thy foul throat thou liest: queen Margaret saw
Thy murderous' falshion smoking in his blood;
The which thou once didst bend against her breast, But that thy brothers beat aside the point.

Glo. I was provoked by her slanderous tongue, That laid their guilt upon my guiltless shoulders.

Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody mind, That never dreamt on aught but butcheries. Didst thou not kill this king?

Glo. I grant ye.

Anne. Dost grant me, hedge-hog? then, God grant me too,
Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed!
O! he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.

Glo. The fitter for the King of heaven that hath him.

Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never come.

Glo. Let him thank me, that help'd to send him thither; For he was fitter for that place than earth.

Anne. And thou unbit for any place but hell.

Glo. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me name it

Anne. Some dungeon.

Glo. Your bed-chamber.

Anne. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou liest.

Glo. So will it, madam, till I lie with you.

Anne. I hope so.

Glo. I know so.—But, gentle lady Anne,—To leave this keen encounter of our wits, And fall something into a slower method, Is not the cause of the timeless deaths Of these Plantagenets, Henry, and Edward.

Anne. Thou wast the cause, and most accrues'd effect.

Glo. Your beauty was the cause of that effect; Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep, To undertake the death of all the world, So I might live 8 one hour in your sweet bosome.

Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide, These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.

Glo. These eyes could not endure that 10 beauty's wrench;
You should not blemish it, if I stood by: As all the world is cheered by the sun, So I by that; it is my day, my life.

Anne. Black night o'ershade thy day, and death thy life!
Glo. Curse not thyself, fair creature; thou art both.
Anne. I would I were, to be reveng'd on thee.
Glo. It is a quarrel most unnatural,
To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.
Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable,
To be reveng'd on him that kill'd my husband.
Glo. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband,
Did it to help thee to a better husband.
Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the earth.
Glo. He lives that loves you better than he could.
Anne. Name him.
Glo. Plantagenet.
Anne. Why, that was he.
Glo. The self-same name, but one of better nature.
Anne. Where is he?
Glo. Here: [She spits at him.] Why dost thou spit at me?
Anne. Would it were mortal poison, for thy sake!
Glo. Never came poison from so sweet a place.
Anne. Never hung poison on a fooler toad.
Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.
Glo. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.
Anne. Would they were basilisks, to strike thee dead!
Glo. I would they were, that I might die at once,
For now they kill me with a living death.
Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears;
Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops:
These eyes, which never shed remorseful tear;
No, when my father York, and Edward wept
To hear the piteous moan that Rutland made,
When black-face'd Clifford shook his sword at him;
Nor when thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
And twenty times made pause to sob and weep,
That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks,
Like trees bedash'd with rain; in that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn a humble tear:
And what these sorrows could not thenthence, thy beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping. I never sued to friend, nor enemy;
My tongue could never learn sweet smoothing word;
But now thy beauty is prop'd my foe.
My proud heart sweats, and prays my tongue to speak.
[She looks scornfully at him.]
Teach not thy lip such scorn; for it was made
For kissing, lady, not for such contempt.
If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,
Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword;
Which if thou please to hide in this true breast,
And let the soul forth that adoreth thee,
I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,
And humbly beg the death upon my knee.
[He lays his Breast open: she offers at it with his Sword.
Nay, do not pause; for I did kill king Henry:—
But 'tis a beauty that provoked me.
Nay, now despatch; 'tis I that stabbed young Edward:—
But 'tis that heavenly face that set me on.
[She lets fall the Sword.
Take up the sword again, or take up me.
Anne. Arise, dissembler: though I wish thy death,
I will not be thy executioner.
Glo. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it.
[Taking up the Sword.]
Anne. I have already.
Glo. That was in thy rage:
Speak it again, and even with the word.
This hand, which for thy love did kill thy love,
Shall for thy love kill a far truer love:
To both their deaths shalt thou be necessary.
Anne. I would I knew thy heart.
Glo. 'Tis figur'd in my tongue.
Anne. I bear me, both are false.
Glo. Then, never man was true.
Anne. Well, well, put up your sword.
Glo. Say, then, my peace is made.
Anne. That shall thou know hereafter.
Glo. But shall I live in hope? [Sheathing his Sword.
Anne. All men, I hope, live so.
Glo. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.
Anne. To take, is not to give. [He puts on the Ring.
Glo. Look, how my ring capasseth thy finger,
Even so thy breast enсуseth my poor heart;
Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.
And if thy proud devoted suppliant may
But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,
Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever.
Anne. What is it?
Glo. That it may please you leave these sad designs
To him that hath most cause to be a mourner,
And presently repair to Crosby-place.
Where (after I have solemnly inter'd,
At Chertsey monastery, this noble king,
And wect his grave with my repentant tears)
I will with all expedient duty see you:
For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you.
Grant me this boon.
Anne. With all my heart; and much it joys me too,
To see you are become so penitent.—
Tressel, and Berkley, go along with me.
Glo. Bid me farewell.
Anne. 'T is more than you deserve;
But since you teach me how to flatter you,
Imagine I have said farewell already.
[Exeunt Lady Anne, Tressel, and Berkley.
Glo. No, to White-Friars; there attend my coming.
Exeunt the rest, with the Corne.
Was ever woman in this humours, too?
Was ever woman in this humour won?
I'll have her, but I will not keep her long,
What! I that kill'd her husband, and his father,
To take her in her heart's extremest hate;
With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,
The bleeding witness of my12 hatred by,
Having God, her conscience, and these bars against me,
And no friends to back my suit withal;4
But the plain devil, and dissembling looks,
And yet to win her,—all the world to nothing! Ha!
Hath she forgot already that brave prince,
Edward, her lord, whom I, some three months since,
Stabb'd in my angry mood at Towalbury?
A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,—
Framed in the prodigality of nature,
Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal,—
The spacious world cannot again afford:
And will she yet abase her eyes on me,
That cropp'd the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woful bed?
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?
On me, that hath, and am mis-shapen thus?
My dukedom to a beggarly denier,
I do mistake my person all this while:
1 skew: in quartos. 2 This and the eleven preceding lines, are 3 it was I that kill'd your husband: in quartos. 4 kill'd: in quartos. 6 ex- 5 peditions. 10 The quartos insert: "Glos. Take up the cross, sir."). 11 Eich 6 debas: in quartos.
Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,
Myself to be a marvellous proper man.
I'll be at charges for a looking-glass;
And entertain a score or two of tailors,
To study fashions to adorn my body.
Since I am apt in favour with myself,
I will maintain it with some little cost.
But, first, I'll turn you; fellow in his grave,
And then return lamenting to my love.—
Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass,
That may be seen by us as I pass.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen Elizabeth, Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey.

Riv. Have patience, madam: there's no doubt, his majesty
Will soon recover his accustomed health.

Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse:
Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort,
And cheer his grace with quick and merry words. 1

Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would beside on me?

Grey. No other harm, but loss of such a lord.

Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harms.

Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a goodly son,
To be your comforter when he is gone.

Q. Eliz. Ah! he is young; and his minority
Is put unto the trust of Richard Gleser,
A man that loves not me, nor none of you.

Riv. Is it concluded, he shall be protector?

Q. Eliz. It is determin'd, not concluded yet;
But so it must be, if the king misreason.

Enter Buckingham and Stanley. 2

Grey. Here come the lords of Buckingham and Stanley.

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace.

Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been!

Q. Eliz. The countess Richmond, good my lord of Stanley,
To your good prayer will scarcely say amen.
Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And loves not me, be you, good lord, assur'd,
I hate not you for your proud arrogancy.

Stan. I do beseech you, either not believe
The envious slanderers of false accusers;
Or, if she be accus'd on true report,
Bear with her weakness, which I think, proceeds
From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice.

Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my lord of Stanley?

Stan. But now, the duke of Buckingham, and I,
Are come from visiting his majesty.

Q. Eliz. What? likelihood of his amendment, lords?

Buck. Madam, good hope: his grace speaks cheerfully.

Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer with him?

Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atonement
Between the duke of Gloster and your brothers,
And between them and my lord chamberlain;
And sent to warn them to his royal presence. [Be:

Q. Eliz. Would all be well?—But that will never
I fear, our happiness is at the height. 4

Enter Gloster, stamping angrily, with Hastings, and Dorset.

Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it.
Who are they, that complain unto the king,
That I, forsooth, am stern, and love them not?
By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly,
That fill his ears with such dissentious rumours.
Because I cannot flatter, and speak fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods and asplish courtesy,
I must be in a rancor, and envenom,
Cannot a plain man live, and think no harm,
But thus his simple truth must be abused
With silken, sly, insinuating Jacks?

Grey. To whom in all this presence speaks your grace?

Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty, nor grace.
When have I injur'd thee? when done thee wrong?—
Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction?
A plague upon you all! His royal grace,
(Whom God preserve better than you would wish!)—
Cannot be quiet secres a breathing-while,
But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.

Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloster, you mistake the matter.
The king, on his own royal disposition,
And not provok'd by any suitor else,
Aiming, belike, at your inferior hatred,
That in your outward action shows itself,
Against my children, brothers, and myself,
Makes him to send; that thereby he may gather
The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.

Glo. I cannot tell:—the world is grown so bad,
That wrens make prey where eagles dare not perch:
Since every Jack became a gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, we know your meaning, brother Gloster:
You envy my advancement, and my friends.
God grant, we never may have need of you!

Glo. Meantime, God grants that I have need of you:
Our brother is imprison'd by your means;
Myself disgrac'd, and the nobility
Held in contempt; while many great promotions
Are daily given, to enoble those
That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble.

Q. Eliz. By him that raised me to this careful height
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,
I never did incense his majesty
Against the duke of Clarence: but have been
An earnest advocate to plead for him.
My lord, you do me shameful injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.

Glo. You may deny, that you were not the mean
Of my lord Hastings' late imprisonment.

Riv. She may, my lord; for—

Glo. She may, lord Rivers,—why, who knows not so?
She may do more, sir, than denying that:
She may help you to many fair preferments,
And then deny her aiding hand therein,
And lay those honour's on your high desert.
What may she not? She may,—ay, marry, may she,—

Riv. What, marry, may she?

Glo. What, marry, may she? marry with a king,
A bachelor, and a handsome striping too.

I wis, your grandam had a worser match.

Q. Eliz. My lord of Gloster, I have too long borne
Your blunt upbraiding, and your bitter scoffs:
By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty,
Of those gross taunts that oft I have endure'd,
I had rather be a country serving-maid,
Than a great queen with this condition,
To be thus taunted, scorn'd, and baited at; 11
Small joy have I in being England's queen.

Enter Queen Margaret, behind.

Q. Mar. And lesson’d be that small, God, I beseech him! [Aside.]

Thy honour, state, and seat, is due to me.

Glo. What! threat’st you me with telling of the king? Tell him, and spare not: look, what I have said,
I will avouch in presence of the king:
I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower?
'Tis time to speak; my pains are quite forgot.

Thou kill’st my husband Henry in the Tower,
And Edward, my poor son, at Towksbury.
Glo. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,
I was a pack-horse in his great affairs;
A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends:
To royalize his blood, I spent mine own.

Q. Mar. Ay, and much better blood than his, or thine. [Aside.

Glo. In all which time, you, and your husband Grey,
Were factious for the house of Lancaster:—
And, Rivers, so were you.—Was not your husband
In Margaret’s battle at Saint Alban’s slain?
Let me put in your minds, if you forget,
What you have been ere this; and what you are;
Withal, what I have been, and what I am.

Q. Mar. A murderous villain, and so still thou art.

Glo. Poor Clarence did forsake his father Warwick,
Ay, and forswore himself,—which Jean pardon!—

Glo. To fight on Edward’s party, for the crown;
And, for his need, poor lord, he is mew’d up.
I would to God, my heart were flint like Edward’s,
Or Edward’s soft and pitiful, like mine:
I am too childish-foolish for this world.

Q. Mar. Hie thee to hell for shame, and leave this world,
Thou cæcidenon! there thy kingdom is.

Riv. My lord of Gloster, in those busy days,
Which had you among the enemies,
We follow’d then our lord, our sovereign king;
So should you we, if you should be our king.

Glo. If I should be?—I had rather be a pedlar.
Far be it from my heart the thought thereof!

Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose
You should enjoy, were you this country’s king,
As little joy you may suppose in me.
That I enjoy, being the queen thereof.

Q. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof; [Aside.

For I am she, and altogether joyless.
I can no longer hold me patient.—[Coming forward. They all start.

Hear me, you wrangles, you pitfalls that fall out
In sharing that which you have pill’d from me!
Which of you trembles not, that looks on me?
If not, that, I being queen, you bow like subjects,
Yet that, by you depos’d, you quake like rebels?—
Ah! gentle villain, do not turn away. [sight?

Glo. Feul wrinkled witch, what mak’st thou in my

Q. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast marr’d;
That will I make, before I let thee go.

Glo. Wert thou not banished, on pain of death?

Q. Mar. I was; but, I do find more pain in banishment,
Than death can yield me here by my abode.

A husband, and a son, thou ow’st to me,—
And then a kingdom;—all of you, allegiance:
This sorrow that I have, by right is yours,
And all the pleasures you usurp are mine.

Glo. The curse my noble father laid on thee,
When thou didst crown his warlike brows with paper,
And with thy scorns drew’st rivers from his eyes;
And then, to dry them, gav’st the duke a clout
Stee’d in the faultless blood of pretty Rutland;—
His curses, then from bitterness of soul
Denounce’d against thee; are all fallen upon thee,
And God, not we, hath plaguid’ thy bloody deed.

Q. Eliz. So just is God, to right the innocent.

Hast. O! the sourest of th’ inimical being, was the fairest
And the most merciful that ever was heard of.

Riv. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported.

Dors. No man but prophesied revenge for it.

Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it.

Q. Mar. What! were you snarling all, before I came Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me?
Did York’s dread curse prevail so much with heaven,
That Henry’s death, my lovely Edward’s death,
Their kingdom’s loss, my woful banishment,
Should all but answer for that peevish brat?
Can curses pierce the clouds, and enter heaven?
—Why, then give way, dull clouds, to my quick curses.—
Though not by war, but by thy person, thou king,
As ours by murder, that ere was heard of,
Edward, thy son, that now is prince of Wales,
For Edward, our son, that was prince of Wales,
Die in his youth by like untimely violence!
Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen,
Outlive thy glory, like my wretched self!
Long mayst thou live, to wail thy children’s death;—
And see another, as I see thee now,
Deck’d in thy rights, as thou art staid in mine!
Long die thy happy days before thy death;
And, after many lengthen’d hours of grief,
Die neither mother, wife, nor England’s queen.
Rivers, and Dorset, you were standers by,
And so friends suspect, lord Hastings, when my son
Was stabb’d with bloody daggers: God, I pray him,
That none of you may live his natural age,
But by some unlook’d accident cut off!

Glo. Have done thy charm, thou hateful wither’d hag.

Q. Mar. And leave out thee? stay, dog, for thou shalt hear me.
If heaven have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,
O! let them keep it, till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee, the troubler of the poor world’s peace!
The worm of conscience still be-gnaw thy soul.
Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou liv’st,
And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!
No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,
Unless it be while some tormenting dream
Affright thee with a hell of ugly devils!
Thou elivish-mank’d, abortive, rooting hog!
Thou that wast seal’d in thy nativity
The stain of nature, and the scorn of hell!
Thou slander of thy heavy mother’s womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father’s lains!
Thou rag of honour! thou detested—

Glo. Margaret.

SCENE III.

KING RICHARD III.

Glo. Ha?

Q. Mar. I call thee not.

Glo. I cry thee mercy then; for I did think,
That thou hadst call’d me all these bitter names.

Q. Mar. Why, so I did; but look’d for no reply.

O! let me make the period to my curse.

Glo. ‘Tis done by me, and ends in—Margaret.

Q. Eliz. Thus have you breath’d your curse against yourself.

Q. Mar. Poor painted queen, vain flourish of my fortune;
Why strew’dst thou sugar on that bottle1 spider,
Whose deadly web ensnareth thee about?

Fool, fool! thou whcst’s a knife to kill thyself.

The day will come, that thou shalt wish for me
To help thee curse this poisonous bunch-back’d toad.

Hast. False-bodied woman, end thy frantic curse,
Lest to thy harm thou move our patience.

Q. Mar. Foul shame upon you; you have all mov’d mine.

Riv. Were you well serv’d, you would be taught your duty.

Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do me duty,
Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects.

O! serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty.

Dor. Dispute not with her, she is lunatic.

Q. Mar. Peace, master marquess! you are malapert: Your fire-new stamp of honour is scarce current.

O, that your young nobility could judge,
What ’t were to lose it, and be miserable!

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,
And if they fall they dash themselves to pieces.

Glo. Good counsel, marry—learn it, learn it, marquess.

Dor. It touches you, my lord, as much as me.

Glo. Ay, and much more; but I was born so high:
Our eyry buildeth in the cedar’s top,
And dailles with the wind, and scorches the sun.

Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade.—alas! alas!—
Witness my son, now in the shade of death;

Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudly wrath
Hath in eternal darkness folded up.

Your eyry buildeth in our eyry’s nest.—

O God! that seest it, do not suffer it:
As it was won with blood, lost be it so!

Buck. Peace, peace! for shame, if not for charity.

Q. Mar. Urge neither charity nor shame to me—
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher’d.

My charity is outrage, life my shame,
And in that shame still live my sorrow’s rage!

Buck. Have done, have done.

Q. Mar. O, princely Buckingham! I’ll kiss thy hand,
In sign of league and amity with thee;
Now, fair befal thee, and thy noble house!

Thy garments are not spotted with our blood,
Nor thou within the compass of my curse.

Buck. Nor no one here; for curses never pass
The lips of those that breathe them in the air.

Q. Mar. I will not think2 but they ascend the sky,
And there take God’s gentle-sleeping peace.

O Buckingham! take heed of yonder dog;
Look, when he fawns, he bites; and when he bites,
His venom tooth will raffle3 to the death:
Have not to do with him, beware of him;

Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks on him,
And all their ministers attend on him.

Glo. What doth she say, my lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious lord.

Q. Mar. What! dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel,
And soothe the devil that I warn thee from?

O! but remember this another day,
When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow,
And say, poor Margaret was a prophetess.—

Live each of you the subjects to his hate,
And he to yours, and all of you to God’s!
[Exit.

Hast. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses.

Riv. And so doth mine. I muse, why she’s at liberty.

Glo. I cannot blame her: by God’s holy mother,
She hath had too much wrong, and I repent
My part thereof, that I have done to her.

Q. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge.

Glo. Yet you have all the vantage of her wrong.

I was too hot to do somebody good,
That is too cold in thinking of it now.

Marry, as for Clarence, he is well repaid;
He is frank’d4 up to fathining for his pains:—

God pardon them that are the cause thereof!

Riv. A virtuous and a Christian-like conclusion,
To pray for them that have done saeth to us.

Glo. So do I ever, being well advis’d;

For had I ears’d now, I had ears’d myself.

Enter Catesby.

Cat. Madam, his majesty doth call for you,—

And for your grace, and you, my noble lords.

Q. Eliz. Catesby, I come.—Lords, will you go with me?

Riv. We wait upon your grace.

[Exeunt all but GLOSTER.

Glo. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawl.
The secret mischief that I set abroad,
I lay unto the grievous charge of others.
Clarence, whom I, indeed, have cast in darkness,
I do beweep to many simple gulls;

Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham;

And tell them, ‘tis the queen and her allies,
That stir the king against the duke my brother.

Now, they believe it; and withal whet me
To be reveng’d on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey;

But then I sigh, and, with a piece of scripture,

Tell them, that God bids us do good for evil; and Thus I clothe my naked villainy

With odd old ends, stolen forth of holy writ,

And seem a saint when most I play the devil.

Enter two Murderers.

But soft! here come my executioners.—

How now, my hardy, stout resolved mates!
Are you now going to dispatch this thing?

1 Murd. We are, my lord; and come to have the warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is.

Glo. Well thought upon; I have it here about me.

[Given the Warrant.

When you have done, repair to Crosby-place.

But, sirs, be sudden in the execution.

Withal obdurate: do not hear him plead;
For Clarence is well spoken, and, perhaps,

May move my heart to pity, if you mark him.

1 Murd. Tis, but! my lord; we will not stand to grade;

Talkers are no good doers: be assur’d,

We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.
KING RICHARD III.

Glo. Your eyes drop mill-stones, when fools' eyes fall; tears:
I like you, jadis;—about your business' straight;
Go, go, despatch. 1

1 Murd. We will, my noble lord. [Exeunt.

Enter Clarence and Brakenbury.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?

Clar. O! I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights,*
That, as I am a Christian faithful man,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy days,
So full of dismal terror was the time.

Brak. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you, tell me.

Clar. Methought, that I had broken from the Tower,
And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;
And, in my company, my brother Gloster,
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
Upon the hatches: thence we look'd toward England,
And cited up a thousand heavy times,
During the wars of York and Lancaster,
That had befall'n us. As we pact'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels;
All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea;
Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in the holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were creeps
(As 'twere in scorn of eyes) reflecting gems,
That would do ruin to the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the deep's own whoring face by face.

Brak. Had you such leisure, in the time of death,
To gaze upon these secrets of the deep?

Clar. Methought I had, and often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood
Stop'd in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast, and wandering air;
But smoother'd it within my panting bulk,
Which almost burst to belech in the sea.

Brak. Awak'd you not in this sore agony?

Clar. No, no; my dream was lengthen'd after life.
O! then began the tempest to my soul!
I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With its sour streams which poete write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that did greet my stranger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Who crois'd aloud,—* What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarch aqueat false Clarence?*
And so he vanish'd. Then, came wandering by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood; and he shriek'd out aloud,—
"Clarence is come,—false, fleeting, perjur'd Clarence,—
That stabb'd me in the field by Tewsbury;—
Seize on him, furies! take him unto torment."

With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise,
I trembling wak'd, and, for a season after,
Could not believe but that I was in hell;
Such terrible impression made my* dream.

Brak. No marvel, lord, though it affrighted you;
I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clar. Ah, keeper, keeper! I have done these things
That now give* evidence against my soul.
For Edward's sake; and, see, how he requites me!—
O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be wrong'd on my misdeeds,
I execute thy wrath on one alone:
O, spare my guiltless wife and my poor children!—

Keeper, I pr'ythee, sit by me awhile;
My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep.

[Brak.] I will, my lord: God give your grace good rest.—

[CLARENCE sleeps.]

Sorrow breaks seasons, and reposing hours,
Makes the night lengthen, and the noon-tide night.
Princes have but their titles for their glories;
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares
So that, between their titles and low name,
There's nothing suffers but the outward name.

Enter the two Murderers.

1 Murd. Ho! who's here? 1

Brak. What wouldst thou, fellow? and how canst thou hither?

1 Murd. I would speak with Clarence; and I came hither on my legs.

Brak. What! so brief?

2 Murd. 'Tis better, sir, than to be tedious.—
Let him see our commission; and talk no more.

[A Paper delivered to Brakenbury, who reads it.

Brak. I am, in this, commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands.
I will not reason what is meant hereby.
Because I will be guiltless from the meaning:
There lies the duke asleep, and there the keys.
I'll to the king, and signify to him,
That thus I have resign'd to your charge.
1 Murd. You may, sir; 'tis a point of wisdom:
Fare you well. [Erit Brakenbury.

2 Murd. What, shall we stab him as he sleeps?

1 Murd. No; he'll say, 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.

2 Murd. Why, he shall never wake until the great judgment day.

1 Murd. Why, then he'll say; we stabb'd him sleeping.

2 Murd. The urging of that word, judgment, hath bred a kind of remorse in me.

1 Murd. What! art thou afraid?

2 Murd. Not to kill him, having a warrant; but to be damn'd for killing him, from the which no warrant can defend me.

1 Murd. I thought, thou hadst been resolute. 20

2 Murd. So I am, to let him live.

1 Murd. I'll back to the duke of Gloster, and tell him so.

2 Murd. Nay, I pr'ythee, stay a little: I hope, this compassionate* humour of mine will change; it was wont to hold me but while one tells twenty.

Before I be convict by course of law,
To threaten me with death is most unlawful.
I charge you, as you hope to have redemption,
By Christ's dear blood shed for our grievous sins,
That you depart, and lay no hands on me:
The deed you undertake is damnable.

2 Murd. What will you do, we do upon command
2 Murd. And he, that hath commanded, is our king.

Clar. Erroneous vassals! the great King of kings
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder: will you, then,
Spurn at his edict, and fulfill a man's?
Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
2 Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on thee.
For false forswearing, and for murder too,
Thou didst receive the sacrament, to fight
In quarrel of the house of Lancaster,

1 Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God,
Didst break that vow; and, with thy treacherous blade,
Unripp'dst the bowels of thy sovereign's son.
2 Murd. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend.

1 Murd. How canst thou urge God's dreadful law to us,
When thou hast broke it in such dear degree?

Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed?
For Edward, for my brother, for his sake:
He sends you not to murder me for this;
For in that sin he is as deep as I.
If God will be avenged for the deed,
O! know you yet, he doth it publicly.
Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm;
He needs no indirect or lawless course,
To cut off those that have offended him.

1 Murd. Who made thee, then, a bloody minister,
When gallant-springing, brave Plantagenet,
That princely novice, was struck dead by thee?

Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my rage.

1 Murd. Thy brother's love, our duty, and thy faults,
Provok'es us hither now to slaughter thee.

Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me;
I am his brother, and I love him well.
If you are hir'd for me, go back again,
And I will send you to my brother Gloucester,
Who shall reward you better for my life,
Than Edward will for tidings of my death.

2 Murd. You are deceiv'd: your brother Gloucester hates you.

Clar. O! no; he loves me, and he holds me dear.
Go you to him from me.

Both Murd. Ay, so we will.

Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father York
Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm,
And charg'd us from his soul to love each other,
He little thought of this divided friendship:
Bid Gloucester think on this, and he will weep.

1 Murd. Ay, mill-stones; as he lesson'd us to weep.

Clar. O! do not slander him, for he is kind.

1 Murd. Right; as snow in harvest.—Come, you deceive yourself;
'Tis he that sends us to destroy you here.

Clar. It cannot be; for he bequeath my fortune,
And hugg'd me in his arms, and swore, with sobs,
That he would labour my delivery.

1 Murd. Why, so he doth, when he delivers you
From this earth's thraldom to the joys of heaven.

2 Murd. Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.

Clar. Have you that holy feeling in your souls, To counsel me to make my peace with God, And are you yet to your own souls so blind, That you will war with God by murdering me?— O! sirs, consider, they that set you on To do this deed, will hate you for the deed. 2 Murd. What shall we do?

Clar. Relent, and save your souls.

Which of you, if you were a prince's son, Being pent from liberty, as I am now, If two such murderers as yourselves came to you, Would not entreat for life? As you would beg Were you in my distress, so pity me. 1 Murd. Relent? no: 'tis cowardly, and womanish.

Clar. Not to relent, is beastly, savage, devilish.—

My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks; O! if thine eye be not a flatterer, Come thou on my side, and entreat for me. A begging prince what beggar pities not?

2 Murd. Look behind you, my lord.

ACT II.

Enter King Edward, led in sick, Queen Elizabeth, Dorset, Rivers, Hastings, Buckingham, Grey, and others.

K. Edw. Why, so:—now have I done a good day's work:—

You peers, continue this united league: I every day expect an embassage From my Redeemer to redeem me hence; And more at peace my soul shall part to heaven, Since I have made my friends at peace on earth, Rivers, and Hastings, take each other's hand; Dissemble not your hatred, swear your love.

Riv. By heaven, my soul is purg'd from grudging hate; And with my hand I seal my true heart's love.

Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like.

K. Edw. Take heed, you dally not before your king; Lost he, that is the supreme king of kings, Confound your hidden falsehood, and award Either of you to be the other's end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love.

Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart.

K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt from this,— Nor you, son Dorset,—Buckingham, nor you;— You have him, he factions one against the other. Wife, love lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand; And what you do, do it unfeignedly.

Q. Eliz. There, Hastings:—I will never more remember Our former hatred, so thrive I, and mine.

Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest, Upon my part shall be inviolable.

Hast. And so swear I.

K. Edw. Now, prince Buckingham, seal thou this league With thy embracements to my wife's allies.

---

1 Murd. Take that, and that: if all this will not do, [Stabs him.

I'll drown you in the malmsey-butt within. [Exit with the Body.

2 Murd. A bloody deed, and desperately dispatch'd! How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands Of this most grievous guilty murder done. 3 Re-enter first Murderer.

1 Murd. How now! what mean'st thou, that thou help'st me not? By heaven, the duke shall know how slack you have been.

2 Murd. I would he knew, that I had sav'd his brother. Take thou the seer and tell him what I say, For I repent me that the duke is slain. [Exit. 1 Murd. So do not I: I go, coward, as thou art. — Well, I'll go hide the body in some hole, Till that the duke give order for his burial: And when I have my meed, I will away; For this will out, and then I must not stay. [Exit.

And make me happy in your unity.

Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate Upon your grace, [To the Queen.] but with all duteous love Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me With hate in those where I expect most love. When I have most need to employ a friend, And most assured that he is a friend, Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile, Be he unto me. This do I beg of heaven, When I am cold in love to you, or yours.

K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham, Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart. There wanteth now our brother Gloster here, To make the blessed period of this peace. Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble duke.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. Good-morrow to my sovereign king, and queen. And, princely peers, a happy time of day! K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the day.— Gloster, we have done deeds of charity; Made peace of enmity, fair love of hate, Between these swelling wrong-encensed peers. Glo. A blessed labour, my most sovereign lord. Among this princely heap, if any here, By false intelligence, or wrong surmise, Hold me a foe; If I unwittingly, or in my rage, Have aught committed that is hardly borne To any in this presence, I desire To reconcile me to his friendly peace: 'T is death to me, to be at enmity; I hate it, and desire all good men's love.— First, madam, I entreat true peace of you, Which I will purchase with my duteous service; Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham, If ever any grudge were lodg'd between us; Of you, and you, lord Rivers, and of Dorset, That all without desert have frown'd on me; Of you, lord Woodville, and lord Scales, of you;

SCENE II.

KING RICHARD III.

Dukes, earls, lords, gentlemen; indeed, of all.
I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night.
I thank my God for my humility.

[Aside.

Q. Eliz. A holy day shall this be kept hereafter:—
I would to God, all strife was well compounded.—
My sovereign lord, I do beseech your highness
To take our brother Clarence to your grace.
Glo. Why, madam, have I offer’d love for this,
To be so foiled in this royal presence?
Who knows not, that the gentle duke is dead?
[They all start.

You do him injury to scorn his corpse.
K. Edu. Who knows not, he is dead! who knows he is?
Q. Eliz. All-seeing heaven, what a world is this!
Buck. Look I so pale, lord Dorset, as the rest?
Dor. Ay, my good lord; and no man in the presence,
But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks.
K. Edu. Is Clarence dead? the order was revers’d.
Glo. But he, poor man, 2 by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear;
Some tardy crysle bare the countermand,
That came too late to see him buried.
God grant, that some, less noble, and less loyal,
Nearer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,
Deserve not worse than wretched Clarence did,
And yet go current from suspicion.

[Enter STANLEY.

Stan. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done!

[Kneels.

K. Edu. I pr’ythee, peace: my soul is full of sorrow.
Stan. I will not rise, unless your highness hear me.
K. Edu. Then say at once, what is it thou requestest.

Stan. The forfeit, sovereign, of my servant’s life;
Who slew to-day a riotous gentleman,
Lately attendant on the duke of Norfolk.
K. Edu. Have I a tongue to doom my brother’s death,
And shall that tongue 4 give pardon to a slave?
My brother kill’d no man, his fault was thought,
And yet his punishment was bitter death.
Who sued to me for him? who, in my wrath,
Kneel’d at my feet, and bade me be advis’d?
Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love?
Who told me, how the poor soul did forsake
The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me?
Who told me, in the field at Tewksbury,
When Oxford had me down, he resum’d me,
And said, “Dear brother, live, and be a king”?
Who told me, when we both lay in the field,
From almost to death, how he did lap me
Even in his garments; and did give himself,
All thin and naked, to the numb-cold night?
All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluck’d, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind.
But when your carers, or your waiting-vassals,
Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac’d
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon;
And I, unjustly too, must grant it you.
But for my brother not a man would speak;
Nor I, ungracious, speak unto myself.
For him, poor soul.—The proudest of you all

Have been beholding to him in his life,
Yet none of you would once beg 4 for his life.—
O God! I fear, thy justice will take hold
On me, and you, and mine, and yours, for this.—
Come, Hastings, prithee 4 help me to my closet.
Ah, poor Clarence!

[Exeunt King, Queen, Hastings, Rivers, Dorset, and GREY.

Glo. This is the fruit of rashness.—Mark’d you not,
How that the guilty-kindred of the queen
Look’d pale, when they did hear of Clarence’ death?
O! they did urge it still unto the king:
God will revenge it. Come, lords; will you go,
To comfort Edward with our company?
Buck. We wait upon your grace.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London.

Enter the Duchess of York, with a Son and Daughter of CLARENCE.

Son. Good grandam, tell us, is our father dead?
Duch. No, boy.

Daugh. Why do you weep so? and oft beat your breast?
And ery: O Clarence, my unhappy son!
Why do you look on us, and shake your head,
And call us—orphans, wretches, cast-aways,
If that our noble father were alive?
Duch. My pretty cousins, you mistake me both,
I do lament the sickness of the king,
As loath to lose him, not your father’s death,
It were lost sorrow to wail 4 one that’s lost.

Son. Then you conclude, my grandam, he is dead.
The king mine uncle is to blame for it:
God will revenge it; whom I will importune
With earnest prayers all to that effect.

Daugh. And so will I.

Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth love you well.

Ineapable and shallow innocents,
You cannot guess who caus’d your father’s death.

Son. Grandam, we can; for my good uncle Gloster
Told me, the king, provok’d to it by the queen,
Devil’s impeachments to imprison him:
And when my uncle told me so, he wept,
And pitted me, and kindly kiss’d my cheek;
Bade me rely on him, as on my father,
And he would love me dearly as a child.

Duch. Ah! that deceit should steal such gentle shape,
And with a virtuous visor hide deep vice!
He is my son, ay, and therein my shame,
Yet from my dugs he drew not this deceit.

Son. Think you, my uncle did dissemble, grandam?
Duch. Ay, boy.

Son. I cannot think it.—Hark! what noise is this!
Enter Queen Elizabeth, distractedly: RIVERS and DORSET, following her.

Q. Eliz. Ah! who shall hinder me to wail and weep,
To chide my fortune, and torment myself?
I’ll join with black despair against my soul,
And to myself become an enemy.

Duch. What means this scene of rude impertinence?
Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence.

Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead!—
Why grow the branches, when the root is gone? 21
Why wither not the leaves, that want their sap? 22
If you will live, lament; if die, be brief;
That our swift-winged souls may catch the king’s;

To his new kingdom of ne'er changing light.

That is the butt-end of a mother's blessing;
I marvel, that her grace did leave it out.

Thou. You cloudy princes, and heart-sorrowing peers,
That bear this heavy mutual load of moan,
Now cheer each other in each other's love:
Though we have spent our harvest of this king,
We are to reap the harvest of his son.
The broken rancour of your high-swollen hates,
But lately splinter'd, knit, and join'd together,
Must gently be preserv'd, cherish'd, and kept:
Me seemeth good, that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fet
Hither to London; to be crown'd our king.

Why with some little train, my lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Marry, my lord, lest, by a multitude,
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out;
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is green, and yet un govern'd;
Where every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself,
As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented.

Glo. I hope the king made peace with all of us:
And the compact is firm and true in me.

Riv. And so in me; and so, I think, in all:
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put
To no apparent likelihood of breach,
Which, haply, by much company might be urg'd
Therefore, I say with noble Buckingham,
That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Hast. And so say I.

Glo. Then be it so; and go we to determine
Who they shall be that shall straight shall post to Ludlow.
Madam,—and you my sister,—will you go
To give your censure in this business?

[Exeunt all but BUCKINGHAM and GLOSTER.]

Buck. My lord, whoever journeys to the prince,
For God's sake, let not us two stay at home;
For by the way I'll sort occasion,
As index to the story we late talk'd of,
To part the queen's proud kindred from the prince.

Glo. My other self; my counsel's consistory;
My oracle, to my father; to my dear cousin,
1, as a child, will go by thy direction.
Towards Ludlow then, for we'll not stay behind.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Same. A Street.

Enter two Citizens, meeting.

1 Citi. Good morrow, neighbour: whither away so fast?
2 Citi. I promise you, I scarcely know myself.

Hear you the news abroad?
1 Citi. Yes; that the king is dead.
2 Citi. Ill news, by'r lady: seldom comes the better:
I fear, I fear, 'twill prove a giddy world.

Enter another Citizen.

3 Citi. Neighbours, God speed!
1 Citi. Give you good morrow, sir.
2 Citi. Doth the news hold of good king Edward's death?
3 Citi. Ay, sir; it is too true; God help, the while!
3 Citi. Then, masters, look to see a troublesome world.

1 Citi. No, no; by God's good grace, his son shall reign.
3 Citi. Woe to that land that 's govern'd by a child!
SCENE IV.

KING RICHARD III.

2 Cit. In him there is a hope of government,
With, in his notion, counsel under him;
And, in his full and ripe'd days, himself,
No doubt, shall then, and till then, govern well.
1 Cit. So stood the state, when Henry the Sixth
Was crown'd in Paris but at nine months old.
3 Cit. Stood the state so? no, no, good friends, God wor;
For then this land was famously enrich'd,
With politic grave counsel: then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.
1 Cit. Why, so hath this, both by his father and mother.
3 Cit. Better it were they all came by his father,
Or by his father there were none at all;
'For emulation, who shall now be nearest,
Will touch us all too near, if God prevent not.
O! full of danger is the duke of Gloster;
And the queen's sons, and brothers, brought and proud:
And were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This sickly land might solace as before.
1 Cit. Come, come; we fear the worst: all will be well.
3 Cit. When clouds are seen, wise men put on their clouts;
When great leaves fall, then winter is at hand:
When the sun sets, who doth not look for night?
Untimely storms make men expect a dearth.
All may be well; but, if God sort it so,
'Tis more than we deserve, or I expect.
2 Cit. Truly, the hearts of men are full of fear:
You cannot reason almost with a man
That looks not heavily, and full of dread.
3 Cit. Before the days of change, still is it so.
By a divine instinct men's minds mistrust
Pursuing danger; as by proof we see
The winter swell before a boisterous storm,
But leave it all to God. Whither away?
2 Cit. Marrv, we were sent for to the justices.
3 Cit. And so was I: I'll bear you company.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of York, the young Duke of York,
Queen Elizabeth, and the Duchess of York.

Arch. Last night, I heard, they lay at Stony-Stratford,
And at Northampton they do rest to-night;
To-morrow, or next day, they will be here.

Duch. I long with all my heart to see the prince:
I hope, he is much grown since last I saw him.

Q. Eliz. But I hear, no: they say, my son of York
Hath almost over'than him in his growth.

York. Ay, mother, but I would not have it so.

Duch. Why, my young cousin? it is good to grow.

York. Grandam, one night, as we did sit at supper,
My uncle Rivers talk'd how I did grow
More than my brother; "Ay," quoth my uncle Gloster,
"Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace:"
And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast.
Because sweet flowers are slow, and weeds make haste.

Duch. 'Good faith,' 'good faith, the saying did not hold
In him that did object the same to thee:
He was the wretchedest thing when he was young,

So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That, if his rule were true, he should be gracious.

Arch. And so, no doubt, he is, my gracious madam.

Duch. I hope, he is; but yet let mothers doubt.

York. Now, by my troth, if I had been remember'd,
I could have given my uncle's grace a flout,
To touch his growth nearer than he touch'd mine.

Duch. How, my young York? I pr'ythee, let me hear it.

York. Marrv, they say, my uncle grew so fast,
That he could gnaw a crust at two hours old:
'Twas full two years ere I could get a tooth.

Grandam, this would have been a biting jest.

Duch. I pr'ythee, pretty York, who told thee this?
York. Grandam, his nurse.

Duch. His nurse! why, she was dead ere thou wast born.

York. If't were not she, I cannot tell who told me.

Q. Eliz. A parlous boy. Go to, you are too shrewd.

Arch. Good madam, be not angry with the child.

Q. Eliz. Pitchers have ears.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a messenger: what news with you?

Mess. Such news, my lord, as grieves me to report.

Q. Eliz. How doth the prince?

Mess. Well, madam, and in health.

Duch. What is thy news?

Mess. Lord Rivers and lord Grey are sent to Pomfret,
And with them sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners.

Duch. Who hath committed them?

Mess. The mighty dukes,
Gloster and Buckingham.

Arch. For what offence?

Mess. The sum of all I can I have disclos'd:
Why, or for what, the nobles were committed,
Is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.

Q. Eliz. Ah me! I see the ruin of my house.

The tiger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind;
Insulting tyranny begins to jet!
Upon the innocent and awless? throne:—
Welcome, destruction, blood, and massacre!
I see, as in a map, the end of all.

Duch. Accursed and unquiet wrangling days,
How many of you have mine eyes beheld?
My husband lost his life to get the crown;
Too often up and down my sons were lost,
For me to joy, and weep, their gain, and loss:
And being seated, and domestic broils
Clean over-blown, themselves, the conquerors,
Make war upon themselves; brother to brother,
Blood to blood, self against self;—O! preposterous
And frantic outrage, end thy damned spleen;
Or let me die, to look on death no more.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy; we will to sanctuary.

Madam, farewell.

Duch. Stay, I will go with you.

Q. Eliz. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious lady, go, [To the Queen.
And thither bear your treasure and your goods.
For my part, I'll resign unto your grace
The seal I keep: and so betide to me,
As well I tender you, and all of yours.
Go; I'll conduct you to the sanctuary.

[Exeunt.

1 That, which: in f.  2 Encroach.  3 lawless: in quarter.
ACT III.

This prince hath neither claim'd it, nor deserv'd it; Therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it: Then, taking him from thence, that is not there, You break no privilege nor charter there. Oft have I heard of sanctuary men, But sanctuary children, ne'er till now. Card. My lord, you shall o'er-rule my mind for once — Come on, lord Hastings; will you go with me? Hast. I go, my lord. Prince. Good lords, make all the speedy haste you may. — [Exeunt Cardinal and Hastings. Say, uncle Gloster, if our brother come, Where shall we sojourn till our coronation? Glo. Where it seems best unto your royal self. If I may counsel you, some day, or two, Your highness shall repose you at the Tower Then, where you please, and shall be thought most fit For your best health and recreation. Prince. I do not like the Tower, of any place. Did Julius Caesar build that place, my lord? Buck. He did, my gracious lord, begin that place, Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edified. Prince. Is it upon record, or else reported Successively from age to age, he built it? Buck. It is upon record, my gracious lord. Prince. But say, my lord, it were not register'd, Methinks, the truth should live from age to age, As 't were retail'd to all posterity, Even to the general all-ending day. Glo. So wise so young, they say; do ne'er live long. [Aside. Prince. What say you, uncle? Glo. I say without characters fame lives long. Thus, like the formal Vice, Iniquity, I moralize two meanings in one word. Prince. That Julius Caesar was a famous man: With what his valour did enrich his wit, His wit set down to make his valour live: Death makes no conquest of his conqueror, For now he lives in fame, though not in life. — I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham. buck. What, my gracious lord? Prince. An if I live until I be a man, I'II win our ancient right in France again, Or die a soldier, as I liv'd a king. Glo. Short summers lightly have a forward spring. [Aside. Enter York, Hastings, and the Cardinal. Buck. Now, in good time here comes the duke of York. Prince. Richard of York! how fares our noble brother? York. Well, my dear lord; so must I call you now. Prince. Ay, brother; to our grief, as it is yours. Too late he died that might have kept that title, Which by his death hath lost much majesty. Glo. How fares our cousin, noble lord of York? York. I thank you, gentle uncle. O! my lord, You said, that idle weeds are fast in growth: The prince my brother hath outgrown me far. Glo. He hath, my lord! York. And therefore is he idle? Glo. O! my fair cousin, I must not say so. York. Then he is more beholding to you, than I.
SCENE II.

KING RICHARD III.

Glo. He may command me as my sovereign, But you have power o'er me as a kinsman. York. I pray you, uncle, give me this dagger.

Prince. A beggar, brother?

York. Of my kind uncle, that I know will give; And, being but a toy, which is no grief to give.

Glo. A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin. York. A greater gift! O! that's the sword to it.

Glo. As a gentle cousin it was light enough.

York. O! then, I see, you'll part but with light gifts: In weightier things you'll say a beggar, nay.

Glo. It is too weighty for your grace to wear.

York. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.

Glo. What! would you have my weapon, little lord?

York. I would, that I might thank you as you call me.

Glo. How?

York. Little.

Prince. My lord of York will still be cross in talk.—

Uncle, your grace knows how to bear with him.

York. You mean, to bear me, not to bear with me.—

Uncle, his brother mocks both you and me: Because that I am little, like an ape

He thinks that you should bear me on your shoulders.

Buck. With what a sharply pointed wit he reasons: To mitigate the scorn he gives his uncle, He prettily and aptly taunts himself.

So cunning, and so young, is wonderful.

Glo. My lord, will 't please your grace to pass along? Myself, and my good cousin Buckingham, Will to your mother, to entreat of her.

To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

York. What? will you go unto the Tower, my lord?

Prince. My lord protector needs will have it so.

York. I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower.

Glo. Why, what should you fear?

York. Marry, my uncle Clarence's angry ghost:

My grandam told me he was murder'd there.

Prince. I fear no uncles dead.

Glo. Nor none that live, I hope.

Prince. An if they live, I hope, I need not fear. But come, my lord, and, with a heavy heart, Thinking on them, go unto the Tower.

[Exeunt.]

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord! my lord!—[Knocking at the door.]

Hast. [Within.]—Who knocks?

Mess. One from the lord Stanley.

Hast. [Within.] What is 't o' clock?

Mess. Upon the stroke of four.

Enter Hastings.

Hast. Cannot lord Stanley sleep these tedious nights?

Mess. So it appears by that I have to say. First, he commends him to your noble self.

Hast. What then?

Mess. Then certifies your lordship, that this night He dreamt the boar had rased off his helm: Besides, he says, there are two counsellors kept; And that may be determin'd at the one, Which may make you and him to rue at th' other. Therefore, he sends to know your lordship's pleasure,— If you will presently take horse with him, And with all speed post with him toward the north, To shun the danger that his soul divides. Hast. Go, follow, go; return unto thy lord. Bid him not fear the separated council: His honour and myself are at the one, And at the other is my good friend Catesby; Where nothing can proceed that toucheth us, Whereof I shall not have intelligence. Tell him, his fears are shallow, without instance: And for his dreams—I wonder he's so simple* To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers. To fly the boar, before the boar pursues, Were to incense the boar to follow us; And make pursuit, where he did most chase.

1 sharp provided: in f. e. 2 This and the previous line, are not in the quartos. 3 Private. 4 willingness: in quartos. 5 So it should seem: in quartos.
Go, bid thy master rise and come to me; And we will both together to the Tower, Where, shall see, the boar will use us kindly.

Mess. I'll go, my lord, and tell him what you say.

[Exit.

Enter Catesby.

Cate. Many good morrows to my noble lord!

Host. Good morrow, Catesby: you are early stirring, What news, what news, in this our tottering state?

Cate. It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord; And, I believe, will never stand upright, Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

Host. How? wear the garland! dost thou mean the crown?

Cate. Ay, my good lord.

Host. I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders, Before I'll see the crown so foul misplace'd. But canst thou guess that he doth aim at it?

Cate. Ay, on my life; and hopes to find you forward Upon his party for the gain thereof; And thereupon he sends you this good news,— That this same very day your enemies, The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret.

Host. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news, Because they have been still my adversaries. But, that I'll give my voice on Richard's side, To bar my master's heirs in trite descent, God knows, I will not do it, to the death.

Host. God keep your lordship in that gracious mind. But I shall laugh at this a twelve-month hence, That they which brought me in my master's hate, I live to look upon their tragedy. Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older, I'll send some packing that yet think not on't.

Cate. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord, When men are unprepared, and look not for it.

Host. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey; and so 'twill do With some men else, who think themselves as safe As thou, and I; who, as thou know'st, are dear To princely Richard, and to Buckingham.

Cate. The princes both make high account of you: For they account his head upon the bridge. [Aside.

Host. I know they do, and I have well deserved it.

[Exit Catesby.

Enter Stanly.

Stan. My lord, good morrow: — good morrow, Catesby.— You may jest on, but, by the holy rood, I do not like these several councils, I.

Host. My lord, I hold my life as dear as yours; And never, in my days, I do protest, Was it so precious to me as 'tis now. Think you, but that I know our state secure, I would be so triumphant as I am?

Stan. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from London, Were jeocund, and supposed their states were sure, And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust; But yet, you see, how soon the day o'er-cast. This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt: Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward! What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Host. Come, come, have with you.—Wot you what, my lord? To-day, the lords you talk of are beheaded. Stan. They for their truth might better wear their heads Than some that have ascends'd them wear their hats. But come, my lord, let's away.

[Exit a Pursuivant.

Host. Go on before; I'll talk with this good fellow. [Exit Stanly and Catesby.

How now, sirrah! how goes the world with thee?

Purs. The better, that your lordship please to ask.

Host. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now, Than when thou met'st me last, where now we meet: Then, was I going prisoner to the Tower, By the suggestion of the queen's allies; But now, I tell thee, (keep it to thyself!) This day those enemies are put to death, And I in better state than ere I was.

Purs. God hold it to your honour's good content.

Host. Gramercy, fellow. There, drink that for me. [Throwing his Purse.

Purs. I thank your honour. [Exit Pursuivant.

Enter a Priest.

Pr. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honour.

Host. I thank thee, good sir John, with all my heart, I'm in your debt for your last exercise; Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.

Pr. I'll wait upon your lordship.

Enter Buckingham.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain! Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest: Your honour hath no shriving work in hand.

Host. 'Good faith, and when I met this holy man, The men you talk of came into my mind. What, go you toward the Tower?

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I cannot stay there: I shall return before your lordship thence.

Host. Nay, like enough, for I stay dinner there.

Buck. And supper too, although thou know'st it not. [Aside.

Come, will you go?

Host. I'll wait upon your lordship. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Pomfret. Before the Castle.

Enter Ratcliff, with a Guard, conducting Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan, to execution.

Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliff, let me tell thee this:— To-day shalt thou behold a subject die For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.

Grey. 'God bless the prince from all the pack of you! A knot you are of dammed blood-suckers.

Vagh. You live, that shall cry woe for this here-after.

Ret. Despatch! the limit of your lives is out.

Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O, thou bloody prison, Fatal and ominous to noble peers! Within the guilty closure of thy walls, Richard the Second here was hack'd to death: And, for more slander to thy dismal soul! We give to thee our guiltless blood to drink.

Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fallen upon our heads. When she exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and me: For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.

Riv. Then curs'd she Richard, then curs'd she Buck- ingham, Then curs'd she Hastings.—O, remember, God, To hear her prayer for them, as now for us!

My gracious lord, I'll: in quarto. 2 Upon my life, my lord: in quarto. 3 mine enemies: in quarto. 4 What, my lord: in quarto. 5 you do yours: in quarto. 6 more precious to me than: in quarto. 7 This and the previous lines, are not in the quarto. 8 soul: in quarto.
And for my sister, and her princely sons,
Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt.

Rat. Make haste, the hour of death is expiate.

Riv. Come, Grey,—come, Vaughan,—let us here embrace:

Farewell, until we meet again in heaven.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Tower.

Buckingham, Stanley, Hastings, the Bishop of Ely,

Catesby, Love, and others, sitting at a Table:

Officers of the Council attending.

Hast. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met
Is to determine of the coronation:

In God's name, speak, when is this royal day?

Buck. Are all things ready for the royal time?

Stan. They are; and want but nomination.

Ely. To-morrow, then, I judge* a happy day.

Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?

Who is most inward* with the noble duke?

Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind.

Buck. We know each other's faces; for our hearts,

He knows no more of mine, than I of yours;
Nor I of his, my lord, than you of mine.

Lord Hastings, you and he are near in love.

Hast. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well;
But for his purpose in the coronation,
I have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd
His gracious pleasure any way therein:

But you, my honourable* lords, may name the time;
And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice,
Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

[Enter Gloster.

Ely. In happy time here comes the duke himself.

Glo. My noble lords and cousins, all, good morrow.

I have been long a sleeper; but I trust,

My absence doth neglect no great design,
Which by my presence might have been concluded.

Buck. Had you not come upon your cue, my lord,
William lord Hastings had pronounced your part,

I mean, your voice, for crowning of the king.

Glo. Than my lord Hastings, no man might be bolder.

His lordship knows me well, and loves me well.

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,

I saw good strawberries in your garden there;

I do beseech you, send for some of them.

Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart.

[Exit Ely.

Glo. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

[Taking him aside.

Catesby hath sounded Hastings in our business,

And finds the testy gentleman so hot,

That he will lose his head, ere give consent,
His master's child, as worshipfully he terms it,

Shall lose the royalty of England's throne.

Buck. Withdraw yourself awhile: I'll go with you.

[Exeunt Gloster and Buckingham.

Stan. We have not yet set down this day of triumph,

To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden;

For I myself am not so well provided,

As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

[Re-enter Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my lord, the duke of Gloster?

I have sent for these strawberries.

Hast. His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning;

There's some conceit or other likes him well,

When that he bids good morrow with such spirit.

I think, there's never a man in Christendom

Can lesser hide his love, or hate, than he;

For by his face straight shall you know his heart.

Stan. What of his heart perceive you in his face,

By any livelihood* he show'd to-day?

Hast. Marry, that with no man here he is offended;

For, were he, he had shown it in his looks.

[Re-enter Gloster and Buckingham.

Glo. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve,

That do conspire my death with devilish plots

Of damned witchcraft? and that have prevail'd

Upon my body with their hellish charms?

Hast. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord,

Makes me most forward in this princely presence

To doom th' offenders: whoseo'er they be,

I say, my lord, they have deserved death.

Glo. Then, be your eyes the witness of their evil.—

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold mine arm

Is like a blasted sapling wither'd up:

And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous witch,

 Consorted with that harlot, strumpet Shore,

That by their witchcraft thus have marked me.

Hast. If they have done this deed, my noble lord,—

Glo. If I, true protector of this damned strumpet,

Talk'st then to me of it?—Thou art a traitor:—

Off with his head!—now, by Saint Paul I swear,

I will not dine until I see the same.—

Love, and Ratelifl, look that it be done:

The rest, that love me, rise, and follow me.

[Exeunt Council, with Gloster and Buckingham.

Hast. Woe, woe, for England! not a whit for me;

For I, too fond, might have prevented this.

Stanley did dream the boar did rase his helm;

And I did seern it, and disdained to fly.

Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumble,

And started when he look'd upon the Tower,

As loath to bear me to the slaughter-house.

O! now I need the priest that spake to me;

I now repent I told the pursuivant,

As too triumphing, how mine enemies,

To-day at Pomfret bloodily was butcher'd,

And I myself secure in grace and favour.

O, Margaret, Margaret! how thy heavy curse

Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head.

Rat. Come, come; despatch, the duke would be at dinner:

Make a short shift: he longs to see your head.

Hast. O, momentary grace of mortal men,

Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!

Who builds his hope in air of your good looks,

Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast;

Ready with every nod to tumble down

Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Lov. Come, come, despatch: he is bootless to exclaim.

Hast. O, bloody Richard! miserable England!

I prophesy the fearfulst time to thee,

That ever wretched age hath look'd upon:*

Come, lead me to the block: bear him my head:

They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. The Tower Walls.

[Enter Gloster and Buckingham, in rusty armour, marvellous ill-favoured, and in haste.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quave, and change thy colour,

Murther thy breath in middle of a word,
And then again begin, and stop again,
As if thou wert distraught, and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut! I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Speak and look back, and prey on every side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw;
Intending deep suspicion: glastly looks
Are at my service, like enforced smiles;
And both are ready in their offices,
At any time to grace my stratagems.

But what, is Catesby gone?

Glo. He is; and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Lord Mayor and Catesby.

Buck. Lord Mayor,—

Glo. Look to the drawbridge there!

Buck. Hark! a drum.

Glo. Catesby, o’erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord Mayor, the reason we have sent—

Glo. Look back, defend thee: here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocence defend and guard us!

Enter Lovel and Ratcliff, with Hastings’ Head, on a Spear.

Glo. Be patient, they are friends; Ratcliff, and Lovel:
Lovel. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glo. So dear I lov’d the man, that I must weep;
I took him for the plainest harmless creature,
That breath’d upon the earth a Christian;
Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded
The history of all her secret thoughts:
So smooth he daub’d his vice with show of virtue,
That, his apparent open guilt omitted,
I mean his conversation with Shore’s wife,
He liv’d from all attainer of suspects.

Buck. Well, well, he was the covert’s shelter’d traitor
That ever liv’d.—
Would you imagine, or almost believe,
Were’t not that by great preservation
We live to tell it, that the subtle traitor
This day had plotted, in the council house,
To murder me, and my good lord of Gloster?

May. Had he done so?

Glo. What should it be, that again we are Turks, or infidels?
Or that we would, against the form of law,
Proceed thus rashly in the villain’s death,
But that the extreme peril of the case,
The peace of England, and our persons’ safety,
Enforced us to this execution?

May. Now, fair befal you! he deserv’d his death;
And your good graces both have well proceeded,
To warn false traitors from the like attempts.

Buck. I never look’d for better at his hands,
After he once fell in with mistress Shore;
Yet had we not determin’d he should die,
Until your lordship came to see his end,
Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Something against our meanings, hath prevented:
Because, my lord, I would have had you hear
The traitor speak, and timorously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same
Unto the citizens, who, haply, may
Misconstrue us in him, and wail his death.

May. But, my good lord, your grace’s words shall serve,
As well as I had seen, and heard him speak:
And do not doubt, right noble princes both,

But I’ll acquaint our duteous citizens
With all your just proceedings in this case.

Glo. And to that end we wish’d your lordship here,
To avoid the censures of the earing world.

Buck. But since you come too late of our intent,
Yet witness what you hear we did intend:
And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

Exit Lord Mayor.

Glo. Go, after, after, cousin Buckingham.
The mayor towards Guildhall lieth him in all post:
There, at your meetest vantage of the time,
Infer the bastardy of Edward’s children:
Tell them, how Edward put to death a citizen,
Only for saying, he would make his son
Heir to the crown; meaning, indeed, his house,
Which by the sign thereof was termed so.
Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,
And bestial appetite in change of lust;
Which stretch’d unto their servants, daughters, wives,
Even where his raging eye, or savage heart,
Without control lust to make a prey.

Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person:
Tell them, when that my mother went with child
Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,
My princely father, then had wars in France;
And by true computation of the time,
Found that the issue was past his begot;
Which well appeared in his lineaments:
Being nothing like the noble duke my father.
Yet touch this sparingly, as ’t were far off;
Because, my lord, you know, my mother lives.

Buck. Doubt not, my lord, I’ll play the orator,
As if the golden fee, for which I plead,
Were for myself: and so, my lord, adieu.

Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard’s castle,
Where you shall find me well accompanied,
With reverend fathers, and well-learned bishops.

Buck. I go: and, towards three or four o’clock,
Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

Exit Buckingham.

Glo. Go, Lovel, with all speed to doctor Shaw—
Go thou [To Cat.] to friar Penker—bid them both Meet me within this hour at Baynard’s castle.*

[Exit Lovel and Catesby.

Now will I go, to take some privy order,
To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight;
And to give order, that no manner person
Have any time recourse unto the princes.

SCENE VI.—A Street.

Enter a Scrivener, with a writing.

Scri. Here is the indiciimt of the good lord Hastings;
Which in a set hand fairly is engross’d,
That it may be to-day read o’er in Paul’s;
And mark how well the sequel hangs together.
Eleven hours I have spent to write it over,
For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me,
The precedent was full as long a doing;
And yet within these five hours Hastings liv’d,
Untainted, unexam’d, free, at liberty.
Here’s a good world the while!—Who is so gross,
That cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold, but says he sees it not?
Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
When such ill dealing must be seen or thought.[Exit.
SCENE VII.—The Same. The Court of Baynard's Castle.

Enter GLOSTER at one Door, and BUCKINGHAM at another.

Glo. How now, how now! what say the citizens?

Buck. Now by the holy mother of our Lord, The citizens are mum, say not a word.

Glo. Touch not the bastards of Edward's children?

Buck. I did; with his contract with Lady Lucy, And his contract by deputy in France.

Th' insatiate greediness of his desires, And his enforcement of the city wives: His tyranny for trifles; his own bastardy, As being got, your father then in France; And dis-resemblance, being not like the duke.

Withal I did infer your lineaments, Being the right idea of your father, Both in your form and nobleness of mind: Laid open all your victories in Scotland, Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace, Your bounty, virtue, fair humility; Indeed, left nothing fit for your purpose Untouch'd, or slightly handled in discourse:

And, when my oratory drew toward end, I bade them that did love their country's good, Cry—"God save Richard, England's royal king!"

Glo. And did they so?

Buck. No, so God help me, they spake not a word; But, like dumb statues, or breathing stones, Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Which when I saw, I reprehended them, And ask'd the mayor, what meant this wilful silence? His answer was, the people were not us'd To be spoke to, but by the recorder.

Then, he was urg'd to tell my tale again:— "Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke inform'd;" But nothing spoken in warrant from himself. When he had done, some followers of mine own, At lower end of the hall, hurl'd up their caps, And some ten voices cried, "God save king Richard!" And thus I took the vantage of those few,— "Thanks, gentle citizens, and friends," quoth I; "This general applause, and cheerful shout, Argues your wisdom, and your love to Richard;" And even here brake off, and came away.

Glo. What tongueless blocks were they! would they not speak?

Will not the mayor, then, and his brethren, come? Buck. The mayor is here at hand. Intend some fear; Be not you spoke with, but by mighty suit: And look you get a prayer-book in your hand, And stand between two churchmen, good my lord; For on that ground I 'll make a holy descant: And be not easily won to our requests; Play the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it.

Glo. I go; and if you plead as well for them, As I can say nay to thee for myself, No doubt we bring it to a happy issue.

[Knocking heard.]

Buck. Go, go, up to the leads! the lord mayor knocks. [Exit Gloster. Enter the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord: I dance attendance here; I think the duke will not be spoke withal. — Enter from the Castle, Catesby.

Now, Catesby! what says your lord to my request?

Cate. He doth entreat your grace, my noble lord, To visit him to-morrow, or next day. He is within, with two right reverend fathers, Divinely bent to meditation; And in no worldly suit would he be mov'd, To draw him from his holy exercise.

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious duke: Tell him, ourself, the mayor, and aldermen, In deep designs, in matter of great moment, No less importing than our general good, Are come to have some conference with his grace.

Cate. I'll signify so much unto him straight. [Exit. Buck. Ah, ha! my lord, this prince is not an Edward: He is not lulling on a lewd love-bed, But on his knees at meditation; Not dallying with a brace of courtezans, But meditating with two deep divines; Not sleeping to engross his idle body, But praying to enrich his watchful soul. Happy were England, would this virtuous prince Take on his grace! the sovereignty thereof; But sore I fear we shall not win him to it. May Marry, God forbid! no man should say us nay! Buck. I fear, he will. Here Catesby comes again.—[Re-enter Catesby.

Now, Catesby, what says his grace?

Cate. He wonders to what end you have assembled Such troops of citizens to come to him: His grace not being warn'd thereof before, He fears, my lord, you mean no good to him.

Buck. Sorry I am, my noble cousin should Suspect me, that I mean no good to him: By heaven, we come to him in perfect love; And so once more return, and tell his grace. [Exit Catesby.

When holy and devout religious men Are at their heads, 'tis much to draw them thence; So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter GLOSTER, with a book, in a Gallery above, between two Bishops. CATESBY returns.

May, Sir, where his grace stands 'twixt two clergy-men! Buck. Two props of virtue for a Christian prince, To stay him from the fall of vanity; And, see, a book of prayer in his hand; True ornament to know a holy man. Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince, Lead favourable ear to our requests, And pardon us the interruption

Of thy devotion, and right-christian zeal.

Glo. My lord, there needs no such apology; I do beseech your grace to pardon me, Who, earnest in the service of my God, Deferr'd the visitation of my friends. But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure?

Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above, And all good men of this ungodly isle.

Glo. I do suspect, I have done some offence, That seems disgraceful in the city's eye; And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You have, my lord: would it might please your grace,

On our entreaties to amend your fault.

Glo. Else wherefore breathe I in a Christian land? Buck. Know then, it is your fault that you resign The supreme seat, the throne majestic, The scepter'd office of your ancestors, spoke not: in quartos. * This and the previous line, and also the next but one after, are not in the quartos. * his resemblance: id f. e. * This line is not in the quartos. * star'd: in quartos.  star'd: in quartos. 13 day-bed: in quartos. 11 himself: in quartos. 12 sure: in f. e. 14 The words, "with a book," are not in f. e. 15 This and the previous line, are not in the quartos.

Your state of fortune, and your due of birth, 1
The lineal glory of your royal house,
To the corruption of a blemish’d stock; 2
Whiles, in the mildness of your sleepy thoughts,
Which here we waken to our country’s good,
This noble issue doth want her proper limbs;
Her face defaul’d with scars of infamy,
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants,
And almost shoulder’d in the swallowing gulf
Of dark forgetfulness, and deep oblivion.
Which to reverse, we heartily beg.

Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kindly government of this your land:
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another’s gain:
But as successively from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own.
For this, consort’d with the citizens,
Your very worshipful and loving friends,
And by their vehement instigation,
In this just cause come I to move your grace.

Glo. I cannot tell, if to depart in silence,
Or bitterly to speak in your reproof.
Best fitted for my degree, or your condition:
If, not to advance, you might half think.
Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded,
To hear the golden yoke of sovereignty,
Which fondly you would here impose on me:
If to reprieve you for this suit of yours,
So season’d with your faithful love to me,
Then, on the other side, I check’d my friends.
Therefore, to speak, and to avoid the first,
And then, in speaking, not to incur the last,
Definitively thus I answer you. 4

Your love deserves my thanks, but my desert,
Unmeritable, shuns your high request.
First, if all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe revenue and due of birth;
Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty, and so many, my defects,
That I would rather hide me from my greatness,
Being a bark to brook no mighty sea,
Than in my greatness covet to be hid,
And in the vapour of my glory smother’d.
But, God be thank’d, there is no need of me;
And much I need to help you, were there need:
The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which, mellow’d by the heating hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty,
And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay that you would lay on me,
The right and fortune of his happy stars;
Which God defend that I should wring from him.

Buck. My lord, this argueth conscience in your grace;
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial,
All circumstances well considered.
You say, that Edward is your brother’s son:
So we say too, but not by Edward’s wife;
For first was he contract to lady Lucy;
Your mother lives a witness to his vow:
And afterward by substitute brother’d
To Bona, sister to the king of France.
These both put off, a poor petitioner,
A care-craz’d mother to a many sons,
A beauty-waning and distress’d widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days.

Made prize and purchase’ of his wanton eye,
Seduc’d the pitch and height of his degree 5
To base declension and loath’d bigames.
By her, in his unlawful bed, he got
This Edward, whom our manners call the prince.
More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that, for reverence to some alive,
I give a sparing limit to my tongue.
Then, good my lord, take to your royal self
This proffer’d benefit of dignity;
If not to bless us of the land withal,
Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the corruption of abusing times,
Unto a lineal true-derived course.

May. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat you,
Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer’d love. 6
Cate. O! make them joyful; grant their lawful suit
Glo. Alas! why would you heap this care on me?
I am unfit for state and majesty 10
I do beseech you, take it not amiss;
I cannot, nor I will not, yield to you.
Buck. If you refuse it,—as in love and zeal,
Loath to despise the child, your brother’s son;
As well we know your tenderness of heart,
And gentle spirit, to forecast your course.
Which we have noted in you to your kindred,
And equally, indeed, to all estates,—
Yet know, wher you accept our suit or no,
Your brother’s son shall never reign our king.
But we will plant some other in your throne,
To the disgrace and downfall of your house.
And, in this resolution, here we leave you.—
Zounds, 11 citizens! we will entreat no more.

Glo. O! do not swear, my cousin Buckingham. 12

[Exit Buckingham. 13

Cate. Call him again, sweet prince; accept their suit:
If you deny them, all the land will rue it.

Glo. Will you enforce me to a world of cares?
Call him again; I am not made of stone.
But penetrable to your kind entreaties, [Exit Catesby.
Albeit against my conscience, and my soul.—

Re-enter Buckingham. 14

Cousin of Buckingham, and sage, grave men,
Since you will bucklie fortune on my back,
To bear her burden, wher’ I will, or no,
I must have patience to endure the load:
But if black scandal, or soul-fac’d reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blot and taint thereof;
For God doth know, 15 and you may partly see,
How far I am from the desire of this.
May. God bless your grace! we see it, and will say it.

Glo. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.

Buck. Then I salute you with this royal title,—
Long live king Richard, England’s worthy king!

All. Amen.
Buck. To-morrow may it please you to be crown’d?
Glo. Even when you please, for you will have it so.
Buck. To-morrow, then, we will attend your grace:
And so, most joyfully, we take our leave.

Glo. Come, let us to our holy work 16 again.

[To the Bishops.

Farwell, my cousin,—farewell, gentle friends.

[Exeunt.
ACT IV.

You shall have letters from me to my son
In your behalf, to meet you on the way:
Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Duch. O ill-dispersing wind of misery!-
O, my accursed womb, the bed of death!
A cockatrice hast thou hatch'd to the world,
Whose unaverted eye is murderous!

Stan. Come, madam, come: I in all haste was sent.
Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.-
O! would to God, that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to sear me to the brain!
Anointed let me be with deadly venom;
And die, ere men can say—God save the queen!

Q. Eliz. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;
To feed my humour, wish myself no harm. [now.
Anne. No! why?—When he, that is my husband
Came to me, as I follow'd Henry's corse;
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his hands,
Which issu'd from my other angel husband,
And that dear saint which, then, I weeping follow'd;
O! when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,
This was my wish,—"Be thou," quoth I, "accurs'd,
For making me, so young, so old a widow!
And, when thou wert lest, let sorrow haunt thy bed;
And be thy wife (if any be so mad)
More miserable by the life of thee,
Than thou hast made me by my dear lord's death!"
Lo! ere I can repeat this curse again,
Within so small a time, my woman's heart
Grossly grew captive to his honey words,
And prov'd the subject of mine own soul's curse:
Which hitherto I held mine eyes from rest;
For never yet one hour in his bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd.
Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick;
And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me.

Q. Eliz. Poor heart, adieu; I pity thy complaining.
Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn for yours.

Dor. Farewell, thou woeful welcomer of glory.
Anne. Adieu, poor soul, that take'st thy leave of it.
Duch. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee!—
[To Dorset. Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee!—
[To Anne. Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee!—
[To Queen Elizabeth. I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me!
Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd'd with a week of teem!—
Q. Eliz. Stay yet; look back, with me, unto the Tower.—
Pity, you ancient stones, those tender babes,
Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls;
Rough cradle for such little pretty ones!
Rude ragged nurse, old sullen play-fellow
For tender princes, use my babies well!
So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell. [Exeunt.
SCENE II.—A Room of State in the Palace.

Sound a Sennet. Richard, crowned upon his Throne; Buckingham, Catesby, a Page, and others.

K. Rich. Stand all apart.—Cousin of Buckingham!

Buck. My gracious sovereign.

K. Rich. Give me thy hand. Thus high, by thy advice.

[Trumpets sound.

And thy assistance, is king Richard seated?

But shall we bear these glories 3 for a day,

Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?

Buck. Still live they, and for ever let them last!

K. Rich. Ah! Buckingham, now do I play the touch,

To try if thou be current gold, indeed.—

Young Edward lives.—Think now what I would speak.

Buck. Say on, my loving lord.

K. Rich. Why, Buckingham, I say, I would be king:

Buck. Why, so you are, my thrice-renowned lord.

K. Rich. Ha! am I king? 'T is so; but Edward lives.

Buck. True, noble prince.

K. Rich. O bitter consequence!

That Edward still should live,—true, noble prince.—

Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull:

Shall I be plain?—I wish the bastards dead;

And I would have it suddenly perform'd.

What say'st thou now? speak suddenly; be brief.

Buck. Your grace may do your pleasure.

K. Rich. Tut, tut! thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes.

Say, have I thy consent that they shall die?

Buck. Give me some little breath, some pause, dear lord,

Before I positively speak in this:

I will resolve you herein presently. [Exit Buckingham.

Cate. The king is angry: see, he gnaws his lip.

[Aside.

K. Rich. I will converse with iron-witted fools,

[Descends from his Throne.

And unrespective boys: none are for me,

That look into me with considerate eyes.

High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect.

Boy!—

Page. My lord.

K. Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting
gold

Will tempt unto a close exploit of death?

Page. I know a discontented gentleman,

Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit:

Gold were as good as twenty orators,

And will, no doubt, tempt him to any thing.

K. Rich. What is his name?

[Exit Page.

The deep-revolving, witty Buckingham

No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels.

Hath he so long held out with me untird,

And stops he now for breath?—Well, be it so.—

Enter Stanley.

How now, lord Stanley? what's the news with you?

Stan. Know, my loving lord,

The marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled

To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.

K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby: rumour it abroad,

That Anne, my wife, is very grievous sick;

I will take order for her keeping close.

Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter:

The boy is foolish, and I fear not him.—

Look, how thou dream'st!—I say again, give out,

That Anne my queen is sick, and like to die:

About it; for it stands me much upon,

To stop all hopes whose growth may damage me.—

[Exit Catesby.

I must be married to my brother's daughter,

Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass.

Murder her brothers, and then marry her?

Uncertain way of gain! But I am in

So far in blood, that sin will pluck out sin.

Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.—

Re-enter Page, with Tyrrell.

Is thy name Tyrrell?

Tyr. James Tyrrell, and your most obedient subject.

K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?

Tyr. Prove me, my gracious lord.

K. Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?

Tyr. Please you; but I had rather kill two enemies.

K. Rich. Why, then thou hast it: two deep enemies,

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep disturbers,

Are they that I would have thee deal upon.

Tyrrell, I mean those bastards in the Tower.

Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them,

And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them. [Kneeling.

K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark, come hither,

Tyrrell:—

Go, by this token.—Rise, and lend thine ear.

[TYRRELL rises, and RICHARD Whispers. 8

There is no more but so:—say, it is done,

And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.

Tyr. I will despatch it straight. [Exit.

Re-enter Buckingham.

Buck. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind

The late demand that you did sound me in.

K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Richmond.

Buck. I hear the news, my lord.

K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son:—well look unto it.

Buck. My lord, I claim the gift, my due by promise,

For which your honour and your faith are pawn'd;

Th' earldom of Hereford, and the moveables,

Which you have promised I shall possess.

K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife: if she convey

Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.

Buck. What says your highness to my just request? 10

K. Rich. I do remember me,—Henry the sixth

Did prophecy that Richmond should be king,

When Richmond was a little peevish boy.

A king!—perhaps—

Buck. My lord—

K. Rich. How chance, the prophet could not at that time

Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him?

Buck. My lord, your promise for the earldom,—

K. Rich. Richmond!—When last I was at Exeter,

The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle,

And call'd it—Rouge-mont: at which name I started,

Because a bard of Ireland told me once,

I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

Buck. My lord.

K. Rich. Ay; what's o'clock?

Buck. I am thus bold to put your grace in mind

Of what you promis'd me.'
SCENE IV.

K. Rich. Well, but what's o'clock?
Buck. Upon the stroke of ten.
K. Rich. Well, let it strike.
Buck. Why, let it strike?
K. Rich. Because that, like a Jack, I keep'st the stroke
Betwixt thy begging and my meditation.
I am not in the giving vein to-day.
Buck. Why then resolve me whether you will or no?
K. Rich. Thou troubltest me: I am not in the vein.
Exeunt King Richard angrily, and his Train.
Buck. And is it thus? repays he my deep service
With such contempt? made I him king for this?
O! let me think on Hastings, and be gone
To Brecknock, while my fearful head is on. [Exit.}

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Tyrell.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of.
Dighton and Forrest, whom I did suborn
To do this piece of ruthless butchery,
Albeit they were flesh'd villains, blooded dogs,
Melted with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children in their death's sad story.
"O! thus," quoth Dighton, "lay the gentle babes —
"Thus, thus," quoth Forrest, "girdling one another
Within their alabaster innocent arms:
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other.
A book of prayers on their pillow lay; [mind
Which once, quoth Forrest, "almost chang'd my But, O! the devil!"—there the villain stopp'd;
When Dighton thus told on, — "we smothered
The most replenished sweet work of nature,
That, from the prime creation, e'er she fram'd;"—
Hence both are gone; with conscience and remorse,
They could not speak; and so I left them both,
To bear this tidings to the bloody king.

Enter King Richard.
And here he comes.—All health, my sovereign lord!
K. Rich. Kind Tyrell, am I happy in thy news?
Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in charge
Begot your happiness, be happy then,
For it is done.
K. Rich. But didst thou see them dead?
Tyr. I did, my lord.
K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrell?
Tyr. The chaplains of the Tower hath buried them;
But where, to say the truth, I do not know.
K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrell, soon, and after supper,
When thou shalt tell the process of their death,
Mean time but think how I may thee do good,
And be inheritor of thy desire.
Farewell, till then.

Tyr. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.

K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I sent up close;
His daughter mealy have I match'd in marriage;
The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom,
And Anne my wife hath bid this world good-night.
Now, for I know the Bretagne Richard aims
At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,
And by that knot looks proudly on' the crown,
To her go I, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter Catesby, in haste.

Cate. My lord! —

K. Rich. Good or bad news, that thou com'st in so bluntly?
Cate. Bad news, my lord: Morton is fled to Richmond:
And Buckingham, back'd with the hardy Welshmen,
Is in the field, and still his power increaseth.
K. Rich. Evil with Richmond troubles me more near,
Than Buckingham and his rash-levied strength.
Come; I have learn'd, that fearful commotion
Is leaden servant to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pae'd beggary:
Then, fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king.—

Go, muster men: my counsel is my shield:
We must be brief, when traitors brave the field.

[Exeunt.]
Thou hast an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
Thou hast a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.

Duch. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill him: I had a Rutland too; thou holp'st to kill him.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death:
That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,
To worry lambs, and lap their gentle blood:
That foul defacer of God's handy-work,
That reigns in galled eyes of weeping souls,
That excellent grand tyrant of the earth:
Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves.—
O! upright, just, and true-disposing God,
How do I thank thee, that this carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body,
And makes her pew-fellow\(^1\) with others' moan!

Duch. O, Harry's wife! triumph not in my woes:
God witness with me, I have wept for thine.

Q. Mar. Bear with me; I am hungry for revenge,
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward;
Thy other Edward dead, to quit my Edward;
Young York he is but boot, because both they Match not the high perfection of my loss.
Thy Clarence he is dead, that stabb'd my Edward;
And the beholders of this frantic\(^2\) play,
Th' adulterate Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,
Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves.
Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligence,
Only reserv'd their factor, to buy souls,
And send them thither; but at hand, at hand,
Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:
Earth gapes, hell burns, fiends roar, saints pray,
To have him suddenly convey'd from hence.\(^3\)
Cancel his bond of life, dear God! I pray,
That I may live and say, the dog is dead.

Q. Eliz. O! thou didst prophesy; the time would come,
That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bottle spider, that foul lunch-back'd toad.

Q. Mar. I call'd thee then, vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then, poor shadow, painted queen;
The presentation of but what I was,
The flattering index of a direful pageant,
One head\(^4\) o' high, to be hurl'd down below:
A mother only meek'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast; a garish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot;
A sign of dignity, a breath, a bubble;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.
Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers?
Where be thy two sons?\(^5\) wherein dost thou joy?
Who sues, and kneels, and says—God save the queen?
Where be the bending peers that flatt'rd thee?
Where be the thronging troops that follow'd thee?
Decline all this, and see what now thou art.
For happy wife, a most distressed widow;
For joyful mother, one that waifs the name;
For one being sued to, one that humbly sues;
For queen, a very caiff'd crown'd with care:
For one that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me;
For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one;
For one commanding all, obey'd of none.
Thus hath the course of justice whirl'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time;
Having no more but thought of what thou wast
To torture thee the more, being what thou art.
Thou didst usurp my place, and dost thou not
Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow?
Now, thy proud neck bears half my burden'd yoke;
From which, even here, I slip my wearied head,
And leave the burden of it all on thee.

Farwell, York's wife, and queen of sad mischance:
These English woes shall make me smile in France.

Q. Eliz. O! thou well skill'd in curses, stay a while,
And teach me how to curse mine end.

Q. Mar. Forbear to sleep the night, and fast the day,
Compare dead happiness with living woe;
Think that thy babes were fairer\(^6\) than they were,
And he that slew them fouler then he is:
Bettering thy loss makes the bad-causer worse:
Revolving this will teach thee how to curse.

Q. Eliz. My words are dull; O! quicken them with thine.

Q. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and pierce like mine.

[Exit Queen MARGARET.

Duch. Why should calamity be full of words?

Q. Eliz. Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airey successors of intestine joys,
Poor breed! how should we amuse them!
Let them have scope: though what they do impair
Help nothing else, yet do they ease the heart.

Duch. If so, then be not tongue-ty'd: go with me,
And in the breadth of bitter words let's smoother
My damned son, that thy two sweet sons smother'd.

[As Trumpet heard.

The trumpet sounds;\(^7\) be copious in exclaims.

Enter King Richard, and his Train, marching.

K. Rich. Who interceips me in my expedition?

Duch. O! she, that might have interceiped thee,
By strangling thee in her accused womb,
From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast done.

Q. Eliz. Hid'st thou that forehead with a golden crown,
Where 't should be branded, if that right were right,
For slaughter of the prince that ow'd that crown,
And the dire death of my poor sons and brothers?
Tell me, thou villain-slave, where are my children?

Duch. Thou toad, thou toad, where is thy brother
Clarence.

And little Ned Plantagenet, his son?

Q. Eliz. Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan, Grey?

Duch. Where is kind Hastings?

K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets!—strike alarum, drums!
Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women
Rail on the Lord's anointed. Strike, I say! —

[Flourish. Alarms.

Either be patient, and entreat me fair,
Or with the clamorous report of war
Thus will I drown your exclamations.

Duch. Art thou my son?

K. Rich. Ay; I thank God, my father, and yourself.

Duch. Then patiently hear\(^8\) my impatience.

K. Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your condition,
That cannot brook the accent of reproof.

Duch. O! let me speak.

K. Rich. Do then; but I'll not hear.

Duch. I will be mild and gentle in my words.

K. Rich. And brief, good mother, for I am in haste.

Duch. Art thou so hasty? I once\(^9\) slay'd for thee,
God knows, in torment and in agony!

K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?

But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame,
My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys,
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes;
And I, in such a desperate bay of death,
Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reft,
 Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom. K. Rich. Madam, so thrive I in my enterprise,
And dangerous success of bloody wars,
As I intend more good to you and yours,
Than ever you or yours by me were harm'd!
Q. Eliz. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven,
To be discover'd that can do me good?
K. Rich. Thy advancement of your children gentle
lady.
Q. Eliz. Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads
K. Rich. Unto the dignity and height of honour. The high imperial type of this earth's glory.
Q. Eliz. Flatter my sorrow with report of it:
Tell me, what state, what dignity, what honour,
Canst thou demise to any child of mine?
K. Rich. Even all I have; ay, and myself and all,
Will I withal endow a child of thine;
So in the Lethe of thy angry soul
Thou drown the sad remembrance of those wrongs,
Which, thou supposest, I have done to thee.
Q. Eliz. Be brief, lest that the process of thy kindness
Last longer telling than thy kindness' date.
K. Rich. Then know, that from my soul I love thy daughter.
Q. Eliz. My daughter's mother thinks it with her soul.
K. Rich. What do you think?
Q. Eliz. That thou dost love my daughter from thy soul.
So, from thy soul's love diest thou love her brothers;
And from my heart's love do I thank thee for it.
K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning.
I mean, that with my soul I love thy daughter,
And do intend to make her queen of England.
Q. Eliz. Well, then, who dost thou mean shall be her king?
K. Rich. Even he that makes her queen: who else should be?
Q. Eliz. What! thou?
K. Rich. Even so: how think you of it?
Q. Eliz. How canst thou woo her?
K. Rich. That I would learn of you,
As one being best acquainted with her honour.
Q. Eliz. And wilt thou learn of me?
K. Rich. Madam, with all my heart.
Q. Eliz. Send to her by the man that slew her brothers,
A pair of bleeding hearts; thereon engraft
Edward and York; then, haply will she weep:
Therefore present to her,—as sometime Margaret
Did to thy father, steep'd in Rutland's blood,—
A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain
The purple sap from her sweet brother's body,
And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withal.
If this indiction move her not to love,
Send her a letter of thy noble deeds;
Tell her thou mad'st away her uncle Clarence,
Her uncle Rivers; ay, and, for her sake,
Mad'st quick conveyance with her good aunt Anne.
K. Rich. You mock me, madam; this is not the way
To win your daughter.
Q. Eliz. There is no other way,
Unless thou couldst put on some other shape,
And not be Richard that hath done all this.
K. Rich. Say, that I did all this for love of her.
Q. Eliz. Nay, then indeed, she cannot choose but hate thee.

Having bought love with such a bloody spoil.
K. Rich. Look, what is done cannot be now amended.

Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent:
If I did take the kingdom from your sons,
To make amends I'll give it to your daughter.
If I have kill'd the issue of your womb,
Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter.
A grandam's name is little less in love,
Than is the doting title of a mother:
They are as children, but one step below,
Even of your mettle, of your very blood;
Of all one pain, save for a night of groans
Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like sorrow.

Your children were vexation to your youth;
But mine shall be a comfort to your age.
The loss you have is but a son, being king,
And by that loss your daughter is our queen:
I cannot make you what amends I would,
Therefore, accept such kindness as I can.

Dorset, your son, that with a fearful soul
Treads dissatisfied steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions and great dignity:
The king, that calls your beauteous daughter wife,
Familiarly shall call thy Dorset brother;
Again shall you be mother to a king,
And all the ruins of distressful times
Repair'd with double riches of content.

What! we have many goodly days to see:
The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again transform'd to orient pearl,
Advantaging their loan with interest
Of ten-times-double gain of happiness.
Go then, my mother; to thy daughter go:
Make bold her bashful years with your experience;
Prepare her cars to hear a wooer's tale;
Put in her tender heart th' aspiring flame
Of golden sovereignty; acquaint the princess
With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys:
And when this arm of mine hath estalished
The petty rebel, dull-brain'd Buckingham,
Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
To whom I will retain my conquest won,
And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar.

Q. Eliz. What were I best to say? her father's brother
Would be her lord? Or shall I say, her uncle?
Or he that slew her brothers, and her uncles?
Under what title shall I woo for thee,
That God, the law, my honour, and her love,
Can make seem pleasing to her tender years?
K. Rich. Infer fair England's peace by this alliance.
Q. Eliz. Which she shall purchase with still lasting war.
K. Rich. Tell her, the king, that may command, entreats.
Q. Eliz. That at her hands, which the king's King for this shall hold.
K. Rich. Say, she shall be a high and mighty queen.
Q. Eliz. To wait the title, as her mother doth.
K. Rich. Say, I will love her everlasting.
Q. Eliz. But how long shall that title, ever, last?

Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last?
K. Rich. As long as heaven, and nature, lengthen it.
Q. Eliz. As long as hell, and Richard, like of it.
K. Rich. Say I, her sovereign, am her subject low.
Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, loaths such sovereignty.
K. Rich. Be eloquent in my behalf to her.
Q. Eliz. An honest tale speeds best, being plainly told.
K. Rich. Then, plainly to her tell my loving tale.
Q. Eliz. Plain, and not honest, is too harsh a style.
K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow and too quick.
Q. Eliz. O! no, my reasons are too deep and dead;
Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their graves.
K. Rich. Harp not on that string, madam; that is past.
Q. Eliz. Harp it on still I, till heart-string's break.
K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my crown,

Q. Eliz. Profan'd, dishonour'd, and the third usurp'd.
K. Rich. I swear—
Q. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no oath.

Thy George, profan'd, hath lost its lordly honour;
Thy garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue;
Thy crown, usurp'd, disgrac'd his kingly glory.
If something thou wouldest swear to be believe'd,
Swear then by something that thou hast not wrong'd.
K. Rich. Now by the world,—
Q. Eliz. 'Tis full of thy foul wrongs.
K. Rich. My father's death,—
Q. Eliz. Thy life hath it dishonour'd.
K. Rich. Then, by myself—
Q. Eliz. Thyself is self-mis-us'd.
K. Rich. Why then, by God,—
Q. Eliz. God's wrong is most of all.

If thou hast fear'd to break an oath with him,
The unity, the king my husband made,
Thou hast not broken, nor my brother died.
If thou hast fear'd to break an oath by him,
The imperial metal, circling now thy head,
Had grac'd the tender temples of my child;
And both the princes had been breathing here,
Which now, two tender bed-fellows for dust,
Thy broken faith hath made the prey for worms.
What canst thou swear by now?

K. Rich. The time to come.
Q. Eliz. That thou hast wronged in the time o'er-past:
For I myself have many tears to wash
Hereafter time, for time past wrong'd by thee.
The children live whose fathers thou hast slaughter'd,
Un governed youth, to wait it with their age;
The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher'd,
Old barren plants, to wait it with their age.
Swear not by time to come: for that thou hast
Misus'd ere us'd, by times ill-us'd o'er-past.
K. Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repent,
So thrive I in my dangerous attempt?
Of hostile arms! myself myself confound'd!
Heaven and fortune bar me happy hours!
Day, yield me not thy light, nor, night, thy rest!
Be opposite all planets of good luck
To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts.
I tender not thy beauteous princes' daughter!
In her estates my happiness and thing:
Without her, follows to myself, and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a Christian soul,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay:

leads: in f. e. The preceding fifty-five lines are only in the folio. Then, in plain terms, tell her: in quartos. holy: in quartos. So the quartos: the folio: he swears first by himself, next by the world, and then by his father's death. This line is not in the quartos.
It cannot be avoided, but by this;
It will not be avoided, but by this.
Therefore, dear mother, (I must call you so)
Be the attorney of my love to her.
Plead what I will be, not what I have been;
Not my deserts, but what I will deserve:
Urge the necessity of state and times.

And be not peevish! fond in great designs.
Q. Eliz. Shall I be tempted of the devil thus?
K. Rich. Ay, if the devil tempt thee to do good.
Q. Eliz. Shall I forget myself, to be myself?
K. Rich. Ay, if your self’s remembrance were wrong yourself.

K. Rich. But in your daughter’s womb I’ll bury them:
Where, in that nest of spicery, they will breed
Selves of themselves, to your recomfort.
Q. Eliz. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?
K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.
Q. Eliz. I go.—Write to me Richard, very shortly;
And you shall understand from me her mind.

K. Rich. Bear her my true love’s kis, and so farewell.

[Kissing her.] Exit Q. Elizabeth.

Relenting fool, and shallow, changing woman!—
How now! what news?

Enter Ratcliff in haste; Catesby following.

Rat. Most mighty sovereign, on the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm’d, and unresolv’d to beat them back.
’Tis thought that Richmond is their admiral:
And there they hull, expecting but the aid
Of Buckingham to welcome them ashore.

K. Rich. Some light-foot friend post to the duke of Norfolk:—

Ratcliff, my self,—or Catesby; where is he?

Cate. Here, my good lord.

Cate. I will, my lord, with all convenient haste.

K. Rich. Ratcliff, come hither. Post to Salisbury:
When thou com’st thither,—Dull, unmindful villain,

[To Catesby.
Why stay’st thou here, and go’st not to the duke?

Cate. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness’ pleasure,

What from your grace I shall deliver to him.

K. Rich. O! true, good Catesby.—Bid him levy straight
The greatest strength and power he can make,
And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.

Cate. I go. [Exit.]

Rat. What, may it please you, shall I do at Salisbury?

K. Rich. Why, what wouldst thou do there, before I go?

Rat. Your highness told me, I should post before.

Enter Stanley.

K. Rich. My mind is chang’d.—Stanley, what news with you?

Stan. None good, my liege, to please you with the hearing;
Nor none so bad, but well may be reported.

K. Rich. Heyday, a riddle! neither good nor bad?
What need’st thou run so many miles about,
When thou may’st tell thy tale the nearest way?
Once more, what news?
Enter a fourth Messenger.

4 Mess. Sir Thomas Lovel, and lord Marquess Dorset, ’T is said, my liege, in Yorkshire are in arms;
But this good comfort bring I to your highness,—
The Bretagne navy is dispers’d by tempest.
Richmond, in Dorsetshire, sent out a boat
Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks,
If they were his assistants, yea, or no;
Who answer’d him, they came from Buckingham
Upon his party: he, mistrusting them,
Hoist’s sail, and made his course again for Bretagne.
K. Rich. March on, march on, since we are up in arms;
If not to fight with foreign enemies,
Yet to beat down these rebels here at home.
[Enter Caterby.

Cate. My liege, the duke of Buckingham is taken;
That is the best news: that the earl of Richmond
Is with a mighty power landed at Milford,
Is colder news, but yet they must be told.
K. Rich. Away towards Salisbury! while we reason here,
A royal battle might be won and lost.—
Some one take order, Buckingham be brought To Salisbury; the rest march on with me. [Exeunt.

Scene I.—Salisbury. An open Place.

Enter the Sheriff, and Guard, with Buckingham led to Execution.

Buck. Will not king Richard let me speak with him?
Sher. No, my good lord; therefore, be patient.
Buck. Hastings, and Edward’s children, Grey, and Rivers,
Holy king Henry, and thy fair son Edward,
Vaughan, and all that have miscarried
By underhand corrupted foul injustice,
If that your Moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction!—
This is All-Souls’ day, fellow, is it not?
Sher. It is,
Buck. Why, then All-Souls’ day is my body’s doomsday.
This is the day, which, in king Edward’s time,
I wish’d might fall on me, when I was found
False to his children, or his wife’s allies:
This is the day, wherein I wish’d to fall
By the false faith of him whom most I trusted;
This, this All-Souls’ day to my fearful soul
Is the determined respite of my wrongs.
That high All-See, which I dallied with,
Hath turn’d my feign’d prayer on my head,
And given in earnest what I begg’d in jest.
Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men
To turn their own points in their masters’ bosoms.
Thus Margaret’s curse falls heavy on my neck:—
“ When he,” quoth she, “ shall split thy heart with sorrow,
Remember Margaret was a prophetess.”—
Come, lead me, officers, to the block of shame;
Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame.
[Exeunt Buckingham and Officers.

Scene II.—A Plain near Tamworth.

Enter, with Drum and Colours, Richmond, Oxford, Sir James Blunt, Sir Walter Herbert, and others, with Forces, marching.

Richm. Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
Bruis’d undernath the yoke of tyranny,
Thus far into the bowels of the land
Have we march’d on without impediment;
And here receive we from our father Stanley [Showing a Paper.

Lines of fair comfort and encouragement.
The reckless, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoil’d your summer fields, and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough
In your embowell’d bosoms, this sole swine
Is now even in the centre of this isle,
Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn:
From Tamworth thither, is but one day’s march.
In God’s name, cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace
By this one bloody trial of sharp war.
Of. Every man’s conscience is a thousand men,
To fight against this guilty homicide.
Herb. I doubt not, but his friends will turn to us.
Blunt. He hath no friends, but what are friends for Which in his dearest need will fly* from him. [Fear,
Richm. All for our vantage: then, in God’s name march.
True hope is swift, and flies with swallow’s wings,
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.
[Exeunt.

Scene III.—Bosworth Field.

Enter King Richard, and Forces; the Duke of Norfolk, Earl of Surrey, and others.

K. Rich. Here pitch our tent, even here in Bosworth field.—

---
My lord of Surrey, why look you so sad?
Syr. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.
K. Rich. My lord of Norfolk,—
Nor. Here, most gracious liege,
K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knockes; ha! must we not?
Nor. We must both give and take, my loving lord.
K. Rich. Up with my tent! here will I lie to-night;
[Soldiers begin to set up the King's Tent.]
But where to-morrow?—Well, all 's for that.—
Who hath descried the number of the traitors?
Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.
K. Rich. Why, our battle trothes that account:
Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength,
Which they upon the adverse faction want.
Up with the tent!—Come, noble gentlemen,
Let us survey the vantage of the ground.—
Call for some men of sound direction.—
Let's lack no discipline, make no delay,
For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day. [Exeunt.]

Enter, on the other side of the Field, Richmond, Sir William Brandon, Oxford, and other Officers.

Some of the Soldiers pitch Richmond's Tent.
Richm. The weary sun hath made a golden set, And by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives on a goodly day to-morrow.—
Sir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard.
Give me some ink and paper in my tent:
I'll draw the form and model of our battle,
Limit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small power.
My lord of Oxford,—you, Sir William Brandon,—
And you, sir Walter Herbert, stay with me.¹
The earl of Pembroke keeps his regiment:
Good captain Blunt, bear my good night to him,
And by the second hour in the morning
Desire the earl to see me in my tent—
Yet one thing more, good captain, do for me:
Where is lord Stanley quarter'd, do you know?
Blunt. Unless I have mislaid his colours much,
(Which, well I am assure'd, I have not done)
His regiment lies half a mile, at least,
South from the mighty power of the king.
Richm. If without peril it be possible,
Sweet Blunt, make some good means to speak with him,
And give him from me this most needful note.
Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I'll undertake it:
And so, God give you quiet rest to-night.²
Richm. Good night, good Captain Blunt. —Come, gentlemen,
Let us consult upon to-morrow's business.
In to my tent, the dew's is raw and cold.

Enter, to his Tent, King Richard, Norfolk, Ratcliff, and Catesby.

K. Rich. What is 't o'clock.
Cate. It's supper time, my lord; it's nine o'clock.
K. Rich. I will not sup to-night. —
Give me some ink and paper —
What, is my beaver easier than it was,
And all my armour laid into my tent?
Cate. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness.
K. Rich. Good Norfolk, be thee to thy charge.
Use careful watch; choose trusty sentinels.
Nor. I go, my lord.
K. Rich. Stir with the lark to-morrow; gentle Norfolk.
Nor. I warrant you, my lord. [Exit.]

K. Rich. Ratcliff! Rat. My lord?
K. Rich. Send out a pursuivant at arms
To Stanley's regiment: bid him bring his power
Before sun-rising, lest his son George fall
Into the blind cave of eternal night.—
Fill me a bowl of wine.—Give me a watch:
Saddle white Surrey for the field to-morrow.—
Look that my staves be sound, and not too heavy.
Ratcliff.—
Rat. My lord?
K. Rich. Saw'st thou the melancholy lord Northumber-land?
Rat. Thomas the earl of Surrey, and himself,
Much about cock-shut time, from troop to troop
Went through the army, cheering up the soldiers.
K. Rich. So: I am satisfied. Give me a bowl of wine:
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.—

Set it down.—Is ink and paper ready?
Rat. It is, my lord.
K. Rich. Bid my guard watch. Leave me,
Ratcliff, about the mind of night, come to my tent
And help to arm me.—Leave me, I say.
[King Richard retires into his Tent. Exeunt Ratcliff and Catesby.

RICHMOND's Tent opens, and discovers him and his Officers, &c.

Enter Stanley.

Stan. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm!
Richm. All comfort that the dark night can afford,
Be to thy person, noble father-in-law!
Tell me, I pray, how fares our loving mother?
Stan. I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother,
Who prays continually for Richmond's good:
So much for that.—The silent hours steal on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east.
In brief, for so the season bids us be,
Prepare thy battle early in the morning;
And put thy fortune to the arbitration
Of bloody strokes, and mortal-staring war.
I, as I may, (that which I would I cannot)
With best advantage will deceive the time,
And aid thee in this doubtful shock of arms:
But on thy side I may not be too forward,
Lest, being seen, thy brother, tender George,
Be executed in his father's sight.
Farewell. The leisure and the fearful time
Cuts off the ceremonious vows of love,
And ample interchange of sweet discourse,
Which so long sunder'd friends should dwell upon.
God give us leisure for these rites of love!
Once more, adieu—Be valiant, and speed well!
Richm. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment.
I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap;
Lest laden slumber pipes me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory,
Once more, good night. kind lords, and gentlemen.
[Exeunt Lords, &c., with Stanley.
O! Thou, whose captain I account myself, [Kneeling,³
Look on my forces with a gracious eye;
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries!
Make us thy ministers of chastisement,
That we may praise thee in thy victory! —
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,

Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping, and waking, O, defend me still!

[Lines down and sleeps.]

The Ghost of Prince Edward, Son to Henry the Sixth, rises between the two Tents.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

[To King Richard.]

Think how thou stabbedst me, in my prime of youth,
At Tewskbury: despair, therefore, and die,—
Be cheerful, Richard; for the wrong'd souls
Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:
King Henry's issue, Richmond, comforts thee.
The Ghost of King Henry the Sixth rises.

Ghost. When I was mortal, my appointed body
To King Richard.

By thee was punched full of deadly' holes.
Think on the Tower, and me: despair, and die;
Harry the sixth bids thee despair and die,—
Mirths and holy, be thou conqueror!

[To Richmond.]

Harry, that prophesy'd thou should'st be king,
Doth comfort thee in sleep: live thou, and flourish.

The Ghost of Clarence rises.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow.

[To King Richard.]

I, that was wash'd to death with home wine,
Poor Clarence, by thy guile betray'd to death!
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword. Despair, and die,—
Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster,

[To Richmond.]

The wronged heirs of York do pray for thee;
Good angels guard thy battle! Live and flourish.
The Ghosts of Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan rise.

Rev. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow.

Rivers, that died at Pompfret. Despair, and die.

Grey. Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair.

[To King Richard.]

 Vaugh. Think upon Vaughan, and with guilty fear
Let fall thy pointless' lance. Despair, and die,—
Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster,

[To Richmond.]

All. Awake! and think our wrongs in Richard's bosom
Will conquer him.—Awake, and win the day!
The Ghost of Hastings rises.

Ghost. Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake:

[To King Richard.]

And in a bloody battle end thy days.
Think on lord Hastings; so 'tis, despair, and die.
Quiet untroubled soul, awake, awake!

[To Richmond.]

Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake:
The Ghosts of the two young Princess rise.

Ghosts. Dream on thy cousins smother'd in the Tower:
Let us be lead within thy bosom, Richard,
And weep thee down to ruin, shame, and death.
Thy nephews' souls bid thee despair, and die,—
Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the born's annoy!
Live, and begat a happy race of kings.

Edward's unhappy sons do bid thee flourish.
The Ghost of Queen Anne rises.

Ghost. Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy wife,
That never slept a quiet hour with thee,
Now fills thy sleep with perturbations.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy powerless arm.° Despair, and die.—
Thou, quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet sleep.

[To Richmond.]

Dream of success and happy victory:
Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.
The Ghost of Buckingham rises.

Ghost. The first was I that help'd thee to the crown;
To King Richard.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny.
O! in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness.
Dream on, dream on, of bloody deeds and death:
Painting, despair; despairing, yield thy breath.—
I died for hope ere I could lend thee aid;

[To Richmond.]

But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd:
God, and good angels fight on Richard's side;
And Richard fall in height of all his pride.
The Ghosts vanish. King Richard starts out of his dream.

K. Rich. Give me another horse!—bind up my wounds!—

Have mercy, Jesu!—Soft! I did but dream.
O, coward conscience, how dost thou affliet me!—
The lights burn blue.—It is now dark midnight.
Cold fearful drops do stand on my trembling flesh.
What do I fear? myself? there's none else by:
Richard loves Richard; that is, I am I.
Is there a murderer here? No yes: I am I.
Then fly.—What, from myself? Great reason: why?
Lest I revenge. What! Myself upon myself?
Alack! I love myself. Wherefore? for any good,
That I myself have done unto myself?
O! no: alas! I rather hate myself,
For hateful deeds committed by myself.
I am a villain. Yet I lie; I am not.
Fool, of thyself speak well;—Fool, do not flatter.
My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain.
Perjury, foul! perjury, in the highest degree;
Murder, stern murder, in the dirt's degree:
All several sins, all us'd in each degree,
Throng to the bar, crying all.—Guilty! guilty!
I shall despair.—There is no creature loves me;
And if I die, no soul shall pity me:
Nay, wherefore should they? since that I myself
Find in myself no pity to myself.
Methought, the souls of all that I had murder'd
Came to my tent; and every one did threat.

To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter Ratcliff.

Rat. My lord.

K. Rich. What's there?

Ratcliff, my lord; 'tis I. The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn:
Your friends are up, and buckle on their armour.

K. Rich. O Ratcliff! I have dream'd a fearful dream.—

What think'st thou? will our friends prove all true?

Rat. No doubt, my lord.

K. Rich. O Ratcliff! I fear, I fear—
Rat. Nay; good my lord; be not afraid of shadows.

K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to-night
Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers,
Arm'd in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.
KING RICHARD III.

It is not yet near day. Come, go with me:
Under our tents I'll play the eaves-dropper,
To hear if any mean to shrink from me.

[Exeunt King Richard and Ratcliff. Enter Oxford and others.

Lords. Good morrow, Richmond.

Richm. Cry mercy, lords, [Waking.] and watchful gentlemen,
That you have ta'en a tardy slumber here.

Lords. How have you slept, my lord? Richm. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boding dreams,
That ever entered in a drowsy head.

Have I since your departure had, my lords,
Methought, their souls, whose bodies Richard murdered,
Came to my tent, and cried—On! victory!
I promise you, my heart is very jocund
In the remembrance of so fair a dream.
How far into the morning is it, lords?

Lords. Upon the stroke of four.

Richm. Why, then 'tis time to arm, and give direction.

[He advances to the Troops. More than I have said, loving countrymen.
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on: yet remember this,—
God and our good cause fight upon our side;
The prayers of holy saints, and wronged souls,
Like high-sounding bugwarks stand before our faces.
Richard except, those whom we fight against
Had rather have us win, than him they follow.
For what is he they follow? truly, gentlemen,
A bloody tyrant, and a homicide;
One rais'd in blood, and one in blood establish'd;
One that made means to come by what he hath,
And slaughter'd those that were the means to help him;
A base foule stone, made precious by the foil
Of England's chair, where he is falsely set;
One that hath ever been God's enemy.
Then, if you fight against God's enemy,
God will, in justice, ward you as his soldiers:
If you do sweat to put a tyrant down,
You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain;
If you do fight against your country's foes,
Your country's fat shall pay your pains the hire;
If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors;
If you do free your children from the sword,
Your children's children quit it in your age.
Then, in the name of God, and all these rights,
Advance your standards, draw your willing swords.
For me, the ransom of my bold attempt
Shall be this cold corpse on the earth's cold face;
But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt,
The least of you shall share his part thereof.
Sound, drums and trumpets, boldly, cheerfully;
God, and Saint George! Richmond, and victory!

[Exeunt Re-enter King Richard, Ratcliff, Attendants, and Forces.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland, as touching Richmond?

Rat. That he was never trained up in arms.

K. Rich. He said the truth: and what said Surrey then?

Rat. He smil'd and said, the better for our purpose.

K. Rich. He was i' the right; and so, indeed, it is.

[Clock strikes.
Tell the clock there.—Give me a calendar.

[Calendar brought.

Who saw the sun to-day?

Rat. Not I, my lord.

K. Rich. Then he disdains to shine; for, by the book,
He should have brav'd the east an hour ago:
A black day will it be to somebody.—

Ratcliff!—

Rat. My lord.

K. Rich. The sun will not be seen to-day:
The sky doth frown and leart upon our army.
I would, these dewy tears were from the ground.
Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me,
More than to Richmond? for the self-same heaven,
That frowns on me, looks sadly upon him.

Enter Norfolk.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord! the foe vaunts in the field.

Call up lord Stanley, bid him bring his power.
I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And thus my battle shall be ordered.

My foreward shall be drawn out in length,
Consisting equally of horse and foot:
Our archers shall be placed in the midst,
John duke of Norfolk, Thomas earl of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of the foot and horse.
They thus directed, we will follow them.
In the main battle; whose puissance on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.
This, and Saint George to boot!—What think'st thou,
Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign.—
This found I on my tent this morning.

[Giving a Paper.

K. Rich. "Jockey of Norfolk be not too bold,

[Reads.

For Dickon thy master is bought and sold?"

A thing devised by the enemy.—
Go, gentlemen; every man to his charge.
Let not our babbling dreams affright our souls;
For conscience is a word that cowards use.
David's at first to keep the strong in awe;
Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law.
March on, join bravely, let us to 't pell-mell;
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.—
What shall I say more than I have infer'd?
Remember who you are to cope withal:—
A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and run-aways,
A scum of Bretagne, and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits forth
To desperate ventures and assur'd destruction.
You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest;
You having lands, and bless'd with beauteous wives,
They would distract the one, distract the other.
And who doth lead them but a paltry fellow,
Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost;
A milk-sop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow?
Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives;
Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit,
For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd themselves.
If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us,
And not these bastard Bretagnes; whom our fathers
Have in their own land beaten, bobb'd, and thump'd;
And, on record, left them the heirs of shame.
Shall these enjoy our lands? lie with our wives?
Ravish our daughters?—Hark, I hear their drum.

[Drum afar off.

Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen! Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head; Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood: Amaze the welkin with your broken staves.

Enter a Messenger.

What says lord Stanley? will he bring his power?

Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come.

K. Rich. Off with his son George's head.

Nor. My lord, the enemy is pass'd the marsh: After the battle let George Stanley die.

K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my bosom.

Advance our standards! set upon our foes! Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George, Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons! Upon them! Victory sits on our helmets! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Field.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter Norfolk, and Forces; to him Catesby.

Cate. Rescue, my lord of Norfolk! rescue, rescue! The king enchant's more wonders than a man, Daring an opposite to every danger. His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights, Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death. Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarum. Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Cate. Withdraw, my lord; I'll help you to a horse.

K. Rich. Slave! I have set my life upon a cast, And I will stand the hazard of the die. I think there be six Richmonds in the field; Five have I slain to-day, instead of him,— A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! [Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter King Richard and Richmond; and exeunt, fighting. Retreat and flourish. Then enter Richmond, Stanley bearing the Crown, with divers other Lords, and Forces.

Richm. God, and your arms, be prais'd, victorious friends,

The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead.

Stan. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acquitted.

Lo! here, this usurped royalty. From the dead temples of this bloody wretch Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy brows withal: Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of heaven, say, amen, to all!— But, tell me, is young George Stanley living?

Stan. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town; Whither, if you please, we may withdraw us.

Richm. What men of name are slain on either side?

Richm. Inter their bodies as basely as their births, Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers dead, That in submission will return to us; And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament, We will unite the white rose and the red. — Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction, That long hath frown'd upon their enmity!— What traitor hears me, and says not, amen? England hath long been mad, and scatter'd herself; The brother blindly shed the brother's blood, The father rashly slaughter'd his own son, The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sire; All this divided York and Lancaster, Divided in their dire divisions. O! now, let Richmond and Elizabeth, The true successors of each royal house, By God's fair ordinance conjoin together: And let their heirs, (God, if thy will be so) Enrich the time to come with smooth-face'd peace, With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days! Rebate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord, That would reduce these bloody days again, And make poor England weep in streams of blood! Let them not live to taste this land's increase, That would with treason wound this fair land's peace! Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again: That she may long live here, God say, amen! [Exeunt.

PROLOGUE.

I come no more to make you laugh: things now,
That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow;
We now present. Those that can pity, here
May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
The subject will deserve it: such, as give
Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too: those, that come to see
Only a show or two, and so agree
The play may pass, if they be still and willing,
I'll undertake, may see away their shilling
Richly in two short hours. Only they,
That come to hear a merry, bawdy play,
A noise of targets, or to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded¹ with yellow,

Will be deceiv'd; for, gentle hearers, know,
To rank our chosen truth with such a show
As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting
Our own brains, and the opinion that we bring,
To make that only true we now intend,
Will leave us never an understanding friend.
Therefore, for goodness' sake, and as you are known,
The first and happiest hearers of the town,
Be sad as we would make ye: think, ye see
The very persons of our noble story,
As they were living; think, you see them great,
And follow'd with the general throng, and sweat
Of thousand friends; then, in a moment, see
How soon this mightiness meets misery:
And, if you can be merry then, I'll say,
A man may weep upon his wedding day.

ACT I.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, at one door; at the other,
the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Abergavenny.

Buck. Good morrow, and well met. How have you done,
Since last we saw in France?

Nor. I thank your grace,
Heathful; and ever since a fresh admirer
Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimely age

Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when
Those suns of glory; those two lights of men,
Met in the vale of Andren.

Nor. "Twixt Guynes and Arde.
I was then present, saw them salute on horseback;
Beheld them, when they lighted, how they clung,
In their embracement, as they grew together;
Which had they, what four thron'd ones could have weigh'd
Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time
I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost

¹ Bordered.
The view of earthly glory: men might say,
Till this time, pomp was single; but now married
To one above itself. Each following day
Became the next day’s master, till the last
Made former wonders its: to-day the French
All clading, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English; and to-morrow they Made Britain, India: every man that stood Show’d like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were
As cherubins, all gilt: the madams, too,
Not us’d to till, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that their very labour
Was to them as a painting: now this mask
Was cried incomparable; and the ensuing night
Made it a fool, and beggar. The two kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst;
As presence did present them; him in eye,
Still him in praise; and, being present both,
’T was said, they saw but one: and no discern
Durst wag his tongue in council. When these suns
(For so they praise ’em) by their heralds challenge’d
The noble spirits to arms, they did perform
Beyond thought’s compass; that former fabulous story,
Being now seen possible enough, got credit,
That Bevis was believ’d.

Buck. O! you go far,
Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In honour honesty, the tract of every thing
Would by a good discourse lessen some life,
Which action’s self was tongue to. All was royal:
To the disposing of it ought rebell’d;
Order gave each thing view.

Buck. The office did
Distinctly his full function. Who did guide,
I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
Nor. One, certes, that promises no element
In such a business.

Buck. I pray you, who, my lord?
Nor. All this was order’d by the good discretion
Of the right reverend cardinal of York.

Buck. The devil speed him! no man’s pie is freed
From his ambitious finger. What had he
To do in these fereé vanities? I wonder,
That such a keech can, with his very bulk,
Take up the rays o’ the beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir,
There’s in him stuff that puts him to these ends;
For, being not propp’d by ancestry, whose grace
Chalks successors their way, nor call’d upon
For high feats done to the crown; neither allied
To eminent assistants, but, spider-like,
Out of his self-drawing web, he* gives us note,
The force of his own merit makes his way;
A gift that heaven gives him, and which buys
A place next to thieving.

Aber. I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him; let some graver eye
Pierce through each part of him: whence has he that?
If not from hell, the devil is a naggard;
Or has given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himself.

Buck. Why the devil,
Upon this French going-out, took he upon him,
(Without the privity o’ the king) t’ appoint
Who should attend on him? He makes up the file

Of all the gentry; for the most part such
Too,* whom as great a charge as little honour
He meant to lay upon: and his own letter,
The honourable board of council out,
Must fetch him in the papers.

Aber. I do know
Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have
By this so sicken’d their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly.

Buck. O! many
Have broke their backs, with laying manors on them
For this great journey. What did this vanity,
But minister the consummation of
A most poor issue?

Nor. Grievously I think,
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it.

Buck. Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow’d, was
A thing inspir’d; and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy,—that this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, abode
The sudden breach on’t.

Nor. Which is budded out;
For France hath flaw’d the league, and hath attach’d
Our merchants’ goods at Bordeaux.

Aber. It is therefore
Th’ ambassador is silence’d?

Nor. Marry, is’t.

Aber. A proper title of peace, and purchas’d
At a superfluous rate.

Buck. Why, all this business
Our reverend cardinal carried.

Nor. Like it your grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you,
(And take it from a heart that wishes towards you Honour and plenteous safety) that you read
The cardinal’s maleice and his potency
Together: to consider farther, that
What his high hatred would effect wants not
A minister in his power. You know his nature,
That he’s revengeful; and, I know, his sword
Hath a sharp edge: it’s long, and ’t may be said,
It reaches far; and where ’t will not extend,
Neither does it darts. Bosh up my counsel;
You’ll find it wholesome. Lo! where comes that rock,
That I advise your shunning.

Enter Cardinal Wolsey (the purse borne before him), certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries with Papers. The Cardinal in his passage fixeth his eye on Buckingham, and Buckingham on him, both full disdain.

Wol. The duke of Buckingham’s surveyor? ha!
Where’s his examination?

1 Ser. Here, so please you.

Wol. Is he in person ready?

1 Ser. Ay, please your grace.

Wol. Well, we shall then know more; and Buckingham

Shall lessen this big look. [Exeunt Wolsey, and Train.

Buck. This butcher’s cur is venom-mouth’d, and I
Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore, best
Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar’s brood?
Out-worths a noble’s blood.

Nor. What, are you chaf’d?
Ask God for temperance; that’s th’ appliance only,
Which your disease requires.

1 Of Southampton, the hero of an old romance. 2 This sentence is assigned to Norrox, in f. e. 3 A ball of fat, rolled up by butchers.
* O: in folio. Steevens made the change. * To: in folio; which Knight retains. 4 minister communication: in f. e. 7 book: in f. e.
I read in 's looks
Matter against me; and his eye revil'd
Me, as his abject object: at this instant
He bores me with some trick. He's gone t' the king:
I'll follow, and out-stare him.

Nor. Stay, my lord,
And let your reason with your cholr question
What 't is you go about. To climb steep hills,
Requires slow pace at first: anger is like
A full-hot horse, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Not a man in England
Can advise me like you; be to yourself,
As you would to your friend.

Buck. I'll to the king;
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's insolence, or proclaim
There's difference in no persons.

Nor. Be advis'd;
Heat not a furnace for your foes so hot
That it do singe yourself: we may outrun
By violent swiftness that which we run at,
And lose by over-rushing. Know you not,
The fire that mounts the liquor till 't run o'er,
In seeming to augment it wastes it? Be advis'd:
I say again, there is no English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself,
If' with the sap of reason you would quench,
Or but allay, the fire of passion.

Buck. Sir,
I am thankful to you, and I'll go along
By your prescription; but this top-proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions, by intelligence,
And proofs as clear as fountains in July, when
We see each grain of gravel, I do know
To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not, treasonous.
Buck. To the king I'll say 't, and make my vouch as strong
As shore of rock. Attend: this holy fox,
Or wolf, or both, (for he is equal ravenous,
As he is subtle, and as prone to mischief,
As able to perform 't, his mind and place
Infesting one another, yea, reciprocally)
Only to show his pomp, as well in France
As here at home, suggests the king, our master,
To this last costly treaty, th' interview
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break 't the rinsing.

Nor. Faith, and so it did.

Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning cardinal
The articles o' the combination drew,
As himself pleas'd; and they were ratified,
As he cried, "Thus let be," to as much end,
As give a crutch t' the dead. But our count-cardinal
Has done this, and 't is well: for worthy Wolsey,
Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows,
(Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy
To the old dam, treason) Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen, his aunt,
(For 't was, indeed, his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey) here makes visitation:
His fears were, that the interview betwixt
England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league,
Peep'd harms that menace'd him. He privily
Deals with our cardinal, and, as I tow,
Which I do well; for, I am sure, the emperor
Paid ere he promis'd, whereby his suit was granted,
Ere it was ask'd: but when the way was made,
And pav'd with gold, the emperor thus desir'd:—
That he would please to alter the king's course,
And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know,
(As soon he shall by me) that thus the cardinal
Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases,
And for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry
To hear this of him; and could wish he were Something mistaken in't.

Buck. No, not a syllable:
I do pronounce him in that very shape,
He shall appear in proof.

Enter Brandon; a Sergeant at Arms before him, and
Two or three of the Guard.

Bran. Your office, sergeant; execute it.

Serg. Sir,
My lord the duke of Buckingham, and earl
Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I
 Arrest thee of high treason, in the name
Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lo, you, my lord!
The net has fall'n upon me: I shall perish
Under device and practice.

Bran. I am sorry
To see you tak'en from liberty, to look on
The business present. 'T is his highness' pleasure,
You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me,
Which makes my whist's part black. The will of heaven
Be done in this and all things.—I obey—
O! my lord Abergavenny, fare you well.

Bran. Nay, he must bear you company.—The king
Is pleas'd you shall to the Tower, till you know
How he determines farther.

Aber. As the duke said,
The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure
By me obey'd.

Bran. Here is a warrant from
The king t' attach lord Montacute; and the bodies
Of the duke's confessor, John de la Car,
And Gilbert Pock, his chancellor, —

Buck. So, so;
These are the limbs o' the plot.—No more, I hope.

Bran. A monk o' the Chartreux.

Buck. O! Nicholas Hopkins?

Bran. He.

Buck. My surveyor is false: the o'er-great cardinal
Hath show'd him gold. My life is spann'd already:
I am the shadow of poor Buckingham,
Whose figure even this instant cloud puts on,
By darkening my clear sun.—My lord, farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Council-Chamber.

Cornets. Enter King Henry, leaning on the Cardinal's shoulder; Wolsey, the Lords of the Council, Sir Thomas Lovell, Officers, Secretary.

K. Hen. My life itself, and the best heart of it,
Thanks you for this great care. I stood 't the level
Of a full charg'd condeleyency, and give thanks
To you that chok'd it.—Let be call'd before us
That gentleman of Buckingham's: in person
I'll hear him his confessions justify,
And point by point the treasons of his master
He shall again relate.

The King takes his State. The Lords of the Council
Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze.
Alliance in them: their curses now Live where their prayers did; and it's come to pass, Their tractable obedience is a slave.
To each incensed will. I would, your highness Would give it quick consideration, for There is no pruner business.

K. Hen. By my life, This is against our pleasure.

Wol. And for me, I have no farther gone in this, than by A single voice, and that not pass'd me but By learned approbation of the judges. If I am Traduc't? I am ignorant of it; neither know My faculties, nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my doing, let me say, 'T is but the fate of place, and the rough brake That virtue must go through. We must not stint Our necessary actions, in the fear To cope malicious censurers; which ever, As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow That is new trim'm'd, but benefit no farther Than vainly longing. What we oft do best, By sick interpreters (ones weak ones) is Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft, Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up For our best act. If we shall stand still In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd at, We should take root here, where we sit, or sit State statues only.

K. Hen. Things done well, And with a care, exempt themselves from fear: Things done without example, in their issue Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent Of this commission? I believe, not any. We must not rend our subjects from our laws, And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each? A trebling' contribution! Why, we take, From every tree, lob, bark, and part of the timber; And, though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd, The air will drink the sap. To every county Where this is question'd send our letters, with Free pardon to each man that has denied The force of this commission. Pray, look to't; I put it to your care.

Wol. A word with you. [To the Secretary. Let there be letters writ to every shire, Of the king's grace and pardon. The griev'd commons Hardly conceive of me: let it be nois'd, That through our intercession this revokement And pardon comes. I shall anon advise you Further in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary.

Enter Surveyor.

Q. Kath. I am sorry that the duke of Buckingham Is much in your displeasure.

K. Hen. It grieves many: The gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare speaker; To nature none more bound; his training such, That he may furnish and instruct great teachers, And never seek for aid out of himself: yet see, When these so noble benefits shall prove Not well disposed, the mind growing once corrupt, They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly Than ever they were fair. This man so complete, Who was enrol'd 'mongst wonders, and when we, Almost with ravish'd listing, could not find His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady, Hath into monstrous habits put the grace. That once were his, and is become as black.
As if beasm'ed in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear (This was his gentleman in trust) of him Things to strike honour sad.—Bid him recount The fore-recited practices, whereof We cannot feel too little, hear too much. Wol. Stand forth; and with bold spirit relate what you, Most like a careful subject, have collected. Out of the duke of Buckingham. K. Hen. Speak freely. Surv. First, it was usual with him, every day It would infect his speech, that if the king Should without issue die, he'd carry it so To make the sceptre his. These very words I've heard him utter to his son-in-law, Lord Abergany, to whom by oath he menace'd Revenge upon the cardinal. Wol. Please your highness, note This dangerous conception in this point. Not friended by his wish, to your high person His will is most malignant; and it stretches Beyond you, to your friends. Q. Kath. My learn'd lord cardinal, Deliver all with charity. K. Hen. Speak on. How grounded he his title to the crown, Upon our fail? To this point hast thou heard him At any time speak aught? Surv. He was brought to this By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins. K. Hen. What was that Hopkins? Surv. Sir, a Chartres friar, his confessor; who fed him every minute With words of sovereignty. K. Hen. How know'st thou this? Surv. Not long before your highness sped to France, The duke being at the Rose, within the parish Saint Lawrence Poultney, did of me demand What was the speech among the Londoners Concerning the French journey? I replied, Men fear'd the French would prove peridious, To the king's danger. Presently the duke Said, it was the fear, indeed; and that he doubted, 'T would prove the verity of certain words Spoke by a holy monk; "that oh," says he, "Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit John de la Car, my chaplain, a choice hour To hear from him a matter of some moment: Whom after, under the confession's seal, He solemnly had sworn, that what he spoke My chaplain to no creature living, but To me, should utter, with demure confidence This pausingly ensued.—Neither the king, nor his heir, (Tell you the duke) shall prosper: bid him strive To gain the love of the commonalty: the duke Shall govern England. Q. Kath. If I know you well, You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office On the complaint of the tenants. Take good heed, You charge not in your spleen a noble person, And spoil your nobler soul: I say, take heed; Yes, heartily beseech you. K. Hen. Let him on.— Go forward. Surv. On my soul, I'll speak but truth. I told my lord the duke, by the devil's illusions The monk might be deceiv'd; and that 'twas dangerous From this to ruminate on it so far, until It for'd him some design, which, being believ'd, It was much like to do; He answered, "Tush! It can do me no damage?" adding farther, That had the king in his last sickness fail'd, The cardinal's and sir Thomas Lovell's heads Should have gone off. K. Hen. Ha! what, so rank? Ah, ha! There's mischief in this man.—Canst thou say farther? Surv. I can, my liege. K. Hen. Proceed. Surv. Being at Greenwich, After your highness had reprov'd the duke About sir William Blommer,— K. Hen. I remember, Of such a time: being my sworn servant, The duke retain'd him his.—But on: what hence? Surv. "If," quoth he, "I for this had been committed, As, to the Tower, I thought, I would have play'd The part my father meant to act upon Th' usurper Richard; who, being at Salisbury, Made suit to come in's presence, which if granted, As he made semblance of his duty, would Have put his knife into him." K. Hen. A giant traitor! Wol. Now, madam, may his highness live in freedom, And this man out of prison? Q. Kath. God mend all! K. Hen. There's something more would out of thee: what say'st? Surv. After "the duke his father," with "the knife," He stretch'd him, and with one hand on his dagger, Another spread on's breast, mounting his eyes, He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenor Was,—were he evil us'd, he would out-go His father, by as much as a performance Does an irreligious purpose. K. Hen. There's his period, To sheathe his knife in us.—He is attach'd; Call him to present trial: if he may Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none, Let him not seek't of us. By day and night, He is a daring traitor to the height. [Exeunt. SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace. Enter the Lord Chamberlain, and Lord Sands. Cham. Is't possible, the spells of France should juggle Men into such strange mysteries? Sands. New customs, Though they be never so ridiculous, Nay, let 'em be unmanly, yet are follow'd. Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English Have got by the late voyage is but merely A fit or two of the face; but they be shrewd ones, For when they hold 'em, you would swear directly, Their very noses had been counsellors To Pepin or Clotharius, they keep state so. Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones: one would take it That never saw 'em pace before, the spavin, Or springhalt reign'd among them. Cham. Death! my lord, Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too, That, sure, they've worn out Christendom.—How now! What news, Sir Thomas Lovell? Enter Sir Thomas Lovell. Lov. "Faith, my lord, I hear of none, but the new proclamation That's clapp'd upon the court-gate. Cham. What is't for?
KING HENRY VIII.

ACT I.

Lov. The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors.
Cham. I am glad 'tis there: now, I would pray our monsieurs
To think an English courtier may be wise,
And never see the Louvre.

Lov. They must either
(For so run the conditions) leave those remnants
Of fool, and feather, that they got in France,
With all their honourable points of ignorance
Pertaining thereunto, as fights and fireworks;
Abusing better men than they can be,
Out of a foreign wisdom; renouncing clean
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short bluster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understand again like honest men,
Or pack to their old playfellows; there, I take it
They may, cum privilegio, wear away
The lag end of their lowness, and be laug'd at.
Sands. 'Tis time to give 'em physic, their diseases
Are grown so catching.
Cham. What a loss our ladies
Will have of these trim vanities.
Lov. Ay, marry,
There will be woe indeed, lords: the sly whoresons
Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies;
A French song and a fiddle have no fellow.
Sands. The devil fiddle them! I am glad they're going,
For, sure, there's no converting them now:
An honest country lord, as I am, beaten
A long time out of play, may bring his plain-song,
And have an hour of hearing, and by'r-lady,
Hold current music too.
Cham. Well said, lord Sands;
Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.
Sands. No, my lord;
Nor shall not, while I have a stump.
Cham. Sir Thomas,
Whither were you a going?
Lov. To the cardinal's.
Cham. Your lordship is a guest too.
This night he makes a supper, and a great one,
To many lords and ladies: there will be
The beauty of this kingdom: I'll assure you.
Lov. That churchman bears a bounteous mind indeed;
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us:
His dews fall every where.
Cham. No doubt, he's noble;
He had a black month that said other of him.
Sands. He may, my lord, he has wherewithal: in him
Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine.
Men of his sway ¹ should be most liberal;
They are sent here for examples.
Cham. True, they are so;
But few now give so great ones. My barge stays;
Your lordship shall along.—Come, good sir Thomas,
We shall be late else; which I would not be,
For I was spoke to, with sir Henry Guildford,
This night to be comptrollers.
Sands. I am your lordship's. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Presence-Chamber in York-Place.
Hautboys. A small Table under a State for the Cardinal, a longer Table for the Guests; then enter Anne Bullen, and divers Lords, Ladies, and Gentlemen, as Guests, at one door; at another door, enter Sir Henry Guildford.

Guild. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace

Salutes ye all: this night he dedicates
To fair content, and you. None here, he hopes,
In all this noble bevy, has brought with her
One care abroad; he would have all as merry
As, first, good company, good wine, good welcome
Can make good people.—O, my lord! y'are tardy;
Enter Lord Chamberlain, Lord Sands, and Sir Thomas Lovell.
The very thought of this fair company
Clapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, sir Harry Guildford.
Sands. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal
But half my lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested,
I think, would better please 'em: by my life,
They are a sweet society of fair ones.
Lov. O! that your lordship were but now confessor
To one or two of these.

Sands. I would, I were;
They should find easy penance.
Lov. Faith, how easy?
Sands. As easy as a down-bed would afford it.
Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit? Sir Harry,
Place you that side, I'll take the charge of this.
His grace is entering.—Nay, you must not freeze;
Two women placed together makes cold weather:
My lord Sands, you are one will keep 'em waking;
Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sands. By my faith,
And thank your lordship.—By your leave, sweet ladies;
[Seats himself between Anne Bullen and another Lady.
If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me;
I had it from my father.

Anne. Was he mad, sir?
Sands. O! very mad, exceeding mad; in love too;
But he would bite none: just as I do now,
He would kiss you twenty with a breath. [Kisses her.

Cham. Well said, my lord.—
So, now you are fairly seated.—Gentlemen,
The penance lies on you, if these fair ladies
Pass away frowning.

Sands. For my little cure,
Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter Cardinal Wolsey, attended, and takes his State.

Wol. Y'are welcome, my fair guests: that noble lady,
Or gentleman, that is not freely merry,
Is not my friend. This, to confirm my welcome;
And to you all good health. [Drinks.

Sands. Your grace is noble:
Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks,
And save me so much talking.
Wol. My lord Sands,
I am beholding to you: cheer your neighbours.—
Ladies, you are not merry.—gentlemen,
Whose fault is this?

Sands. The red wine first must rise
In their fair cheeks, my lord; then, we shall have 'em
Talk us to silence.

Anne. You are a merry gamester,
My lord Sands.
Sands. Yes, if I make my play,
Here's to your ladyship; and pledge it, madam,
For 'tis to such a thing,—

Anne. You cannot show me.
Sands. I told your grace how they would talk anon.
[Drum and Trumpets within; Chambers' discharged.
Wol. What's that?

Cham. Look out there, some of you. [Exit a Servant.
SCENE I. — A Street.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. Whither away so fast?
2 Gent. O! — God save you.

E'en to the hall, to hear what shall become
Of the great duke of Buckingham.

1 Gent. I'll save you
That labour, sir: All's now done, but the ceremony
Of bringing back the prisoner.

2 Gent. Were you there?
1 Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.
2 Gent. Pray, speak what has happened.
1 Gent. You may guess quickly what.
2 Gent. Is he found guilty?
1 Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemn'd upon it.
2 Gent. I am sorry for it.
1 Gent. So are a number more.
2 Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it?

1 Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke
Came to the bar; where, to his accusations
He pleaded still not guilty, and alleg'd
Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on the examinations, proofs, confessions
Of divers witnesses, which the duke desir'd
To have brought, cried to, to his face:
At which appeared against him, his surveyor;
Sir Gilbert Peck his chancellor; and John Car,
Confessor to him; with that devil-monk,
Hopkins, that made this mischief.

2 Gent. That was he,
That fed him with his prophecies?
1 Gent. The same.

All these accus'd him strongly; which he fain
Would have flung from himself, but, indeed, he could not:
And so his peers, upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high treason. Much

---

1 This word is not in f. e.
2 Not in f. e.
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten.
2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself?
1 Gent. When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirred
With such an agony, he sweat extremely,
And something spoke in choicer, ill, and hasty:
But he fell to himself again, and sweetly
In all the rest shew'd a most noble patience.
2 Gent. I do not think, he fears death.
3 Gent. Sure, he does not;
He was never so womanish: the cause
He may a little grieve at.
2 Gent. Certainly.
The cardinal is the end of this.
1 Gent. 'Tis likely
By all conjectures: first, Kildare's attainer,
Then deputy of Ireland: who remov'd,
Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too,
Lest he should help his father.
2 Gent. That trick of state
Was a deep envious one.
1 Gent. At his return,
No doubt, he will requite it. This is noted,
And generally—whether the king favours,
The cardinal instantly will find employment.
And far enough from court too.
2 Gent. All the commons
Hate him perniciously, and, o' my conscience,
Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as much
They love and dote on; call him, bounteous Buckingham,
The mirror of all courtesy—
1 Gent. Stay there, sir;
And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.
Enter Buckingham from his Arrangement; Tiptop before him; the Axe with the edge towards him;
Halberds on each side: accompanied with Sir Thomas
Lovell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir William Sands, and common People.
2 Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.
Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all:
There cannot be those numberless offences
'Gainst me, that I cannot take peace with: no black envy
Shall make my grave. Commend me to his grace;
And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him,
You met him half in heaven. My vows and prayers
Yet are the king's; and, till my soul forsake,
Shall cry for blessings on him; may he live
Longer than I have time to tell his years.
Ever below me, loving, base accusers:
And when old time shall lead him to his end,
Goodness and he fill up one monument!
Lou. To the water side I must conduct your grace;
Then, give my charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who undertakes you to your end.
Vaux. Prepare there!
Buck. Nay, sir Nicholas,
Let it alone: my state now will but mock me.
When I came hither I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now, poor Edward Bohun:
Yet I can hold, rather than my base accusers,
That never knew what truth meant. I now seal it;
And with that blood will one day make them groan for't,
My noble father, Henry of Buckingham,
Who first rais'd head against usurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his servant Banister,
Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd,
And without trial fall: God's peace be with him!
Henry the seventh succeeding, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd me to my honours, and out of ruins
Made my name once more noble. Now, his son
Buckingham, his noble son, Henry the eighth,
Life, honour, name, and all
That made me happy; at one stroke has taken
For ever from the world. I had my trial,
And, must needs say, a noble one: which makes me
A little happier than my wretched father;
Yet thus far we are one in fortunes,—both
Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most:
A most unnatural and faithless service.
Heaven has an end in all; yet, you that hear me,
This from a dying man receive as certain:
Where you are liberal of your loves and counsels,
Be sure, you be not loose; for those you make friends,
And give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye; never found again
But when they mean to sink ye. All good people,
Pray for me. I must now forsake ye: the last hour
Of my long weary life is come upon me.
Farewell: and when you would say something that is sad,
Speak how I fell.—I have done, and God forgive me!
1 Gent. O! this is full of pity.—Sir, it calls,
I fear, too many curses on their heads
That were the authors.
2 Gent. If the duke be guiltless,
'Tis full of woe: yet I can give you inpling
Of an ensuing evil, if it fall,
Greater than this.
1 Gent. Good angels keep it from us!
What may it be? — You do not doubt my faith, sir?
2 Gent. This secret is so weighty, 't will require
SCENE II.

KING HENRY VIII. 549

A strong faith to conceal it. Let me have it:
1 Gent. I do not talk much.
2 Gent. I am confident:
You shall, sir. Did you not of late days hear
A buzzing of a separation
Between the king and Katharine?
1 Gent. Yes, but it held not;
For when the king once heard it, out of anger
He sent command to the lord mayor straight
To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues
That durst disperse it.
2 Gent. But that slander, sir,
Is found a truth now; for it grows again
Fresher than ever it was, and held for certain.
The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal,
Or some about him near, have out of malice
To the good queen possess'd him with a scruple,
That will undo her: to confirm this, too,
Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately,
As all think, for this business.

1 Gent. 'Tis the cardinal;
And merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
The archbishopric of Toledo, this purpose'd.
2 Gent. I think, you have hit the mark: but 'tis not cruel,
That she should feel the smart of this? The cardinal
Will have his will, and she must fall.
1 Gent. 'T is woful.
We are too open here to argue this;
Let's think in private more.  [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a Letter.

Cham. "My lord,—The horses your lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young, and handsome, and of the best breed in the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission and main power, took them from me;
with this reason,—his master would be served before a subject, if not before the king; which stopped our mouths, sir."

I fear, he will, indeed. Well, let him have them:
He will have all, I think.

Enter the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk.

Nor. Well met, my lord chamberlain.
Cham. Good day to both your graces.
Suff. How is the king employ'd?
Cham. I left him private,
Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. What's the cause?
Cham. It seems, the marriage with his brother's wife
Has crept too near his conscience.
Suff. No; his conscience
Has crept too near another lady.
Nor. This is the cardinal's doing: the king-cardinal:
That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune,
Turns what he list. The king will know him one day.
Suff. Pray God, he do: he'll never know himself else.

2 Gent. How holily he works in all his business,
And with what zeal; for, now he has crack'd the league
Between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew,
He dives into the king's soul: and there scatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the conscience,
Fears, and despair, and all these for his marriage:
And, out of all these, to restore the king,
He counsels a divorce; a loss of her,
That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre;
Of her, that loves him with that excellence
That angels love good men with; even of her
That when the greatest stroke of fortune falls,
Will bless the king. And is not this course pious?
Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel! 'Tis most true,
These news are everywhere; every tongue speaks them,
And every true heart weeps for 't. All, that dare
Look into these affairs, see this main end,—
The French king's sister. Heaven will one day open
The king's eyes, that have so long slept upon
This bold bad man.

Suff. And free us from his slavery.
Nor. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliverance,
Or this imperious man will work us all
From princes into pages. All men's honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pitch he please.

Suff. For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him; there's my cred.
As I am made without him, so I'll stand,
If the king please: his curses and his blessings
Touch me alike, they're breath I not believe in.
I knew him, and I know him; so I leave him
To him that made him proud, the pope.

Nor. Let's in,
And with some other business put the king
From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon
My lord, you'll bear us company?

Cham. Excuse me;
The king hath sent me other-where: besides,
You'll find a most unfit time to disturb him.
Health to your lordships.

Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.  [Exeunt

Curtain drawn: the King is discovered sitting, and reading pensively.

Suff. How sad he looks: sure, he is much afflicted.
K. Hen. Who is there? ha!
Nor. Pray God, he be not angry.
K. Hen. Who's there, I say? How dare you thrust yourselves
Into my private meditations?
Who am I? ha!
Nor. A gracious king, that pardons all offences,
Malice ne'er meant: our breach of duty this way
Is business of estate, in which we come
To know your royal pleasure.
K. Hen. Ye are too bold. Go to: I'll make ye know your times of business:
Is this an hour for temporal affairs? ha!—
[raising his book.]

Enter Wolsey and Campeius.

Who's there? my good lord cardinal?—O! my Wolsey,
The quiet of my wounded conscience;
Thou art a cure fit for a king. —You're welcome,
[To Campeius
Most learned reverend sir, into our kingdom:
Use us, and it.—My good lord, have great care
I be not found a talker.

Wol. Sir, you cannot.
I would, your grace would give us but an hour
Of private conference.
K. Hen. We are busy; go.
[To Norfolk and Suffolk.
Nor. This priest has no pride in him.
Suf. Not to speak of; I would not be so sick though for his place:
But this cannot continue.
Nor. If it do, I'll venture one heave at him.

[Aside.]

Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom
Above all princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voice of Christendom.
Who can be angry now? what envy reach you?
The Spaniard, tied by blood and favour to her,
Must now confess, if they have any goodness,
The trial just and noble.
All the clerks,
I mean the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms
Have their free voices: Rome, the nurse of judgment,
Invited by your noble self, hath sent
One general tongue unto us, this good man,
This just and learned priest, Cardinal Campeius;
Whom once more I present unto your highness.
K. Hen. And once more in mine arms I bid him welcome,
And thank the holy conclave for their loves:
They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd for.
Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all strangers' loves,
You are so noble. To your highness' hand
[Kneeling and rising again.]
I tender my commission; by whose virtue,
(The court of Rome commanding) you, my lord
Cardinal of York, are join'd with me, their servant,
In the unpartial judging of this business.
K. Hen. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted
Forthwith for what you came.—Where's Gardiner?
Wol. I know, your majesty has always lov'd her
So dear in heart, not to deny her that
A woman of less place might ask by law,
Scholars, allow'd freely to argue for her.
K. Hen. Ay, and the best, she shall have; and my favour
To him that does best: God forbid else.
Cardinal, Pr'ythee, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary:
I find him a fit fellow.
[Exit Wolsey.

Re-enter Wolsey, with Gardiner.

Wol. Give me your hand: much joy and favour to you;
You are the king's now.

Gard. But to be commanded
For ever by your grace, whose hand has rae'd me.
K. Hen. Come hither, Gardiner.
[They walk and whisper.

Cam. My lord of York, was not one doctor Pace
In this man's place before him?
Wol. Yes, he was.
Cam. Was he not held a learned man?
Wol. Yes, surely.
Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread, then,
Even of yourself, lord cardinal.
Wol. How! of me?
Cam. They will not stick to say, you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,
That he ran mad, and died.
Wol. Heaven's peace be with him!
That's Christian care enough: for living murmurers
There's places of rebnike. He was a fool,
For he would needs be virtuous: that good fellow,
If I command him, follows my appointment:
I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,
We live not to be grip'd by meaner persons.
K. Hen. Deliver this with modesty to the queen.
[Exit Gardiner.

The most convenient place that I can think of,
For such receipt of learning, is Black-Friars:
There ye shall meet about this weighty business.
My Wolsey, see it furnish'd.—O! my lord!
Would it not grieve an able man, to leave
So sweet a bedfellow? But, conscience, conscience,—
O! 'tis a tender place, and I must leave her.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—An Ante-chamber in the Queen's Apartments.

Enter Anne Bollen, and an old Lady.

Anne. Not for that neither:—here's the pang that pinches;
His highness having liv'd so long with her, and she
So good a lady, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her: by my life,
She never knew harm-doing.—O! my lord!
So many courses of the sun enthrone'd
Still growing in a majesty and pomp, the which
To leave 'a thousand-fold more bitter than Sweet at first 't acquire.—after this process,
To give her the avault! it is a pity
Would move a monster.
Old L. Hearts of most hard temper
Melt and lament for her.

Anne. O, God's will! much better,
She ne'er had known pomp: though it be temporal,
Yet, if that cruel fortune do divorce
It from the bearer, 't is a sufferance panging
As soul and body's severing.
Old L. Alas, poor lady!
She's a stranger now again?
Anne. So much the more
Must pity drop upon her. Verily,
I swear, 't is better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistening grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.
Old L. Our content
Is our best having.
Anne. By my troth, and maidenhead,
I would not be a queen.

Old L. Beseech me, I would,
And venture maidenhead for 't; and so would you,
For all this space of your hypocrisy.
You that have so fair parts of woman on you,
Have, too, a woman's heart; which ever yet
Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty:
Which, to say sooth, are blessings, and which gifts
(Saving your mining) the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it.
Anne. Nay, good troth.
Old L. Yes, troth, and troth.—You would not be a queen?
Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven.
Old L. 'Tis strange: a three-pence bowered might hire me.
Old as I am, to queen it. But, I pray you,
What think you of a duchess? have you limbs
To bear that load of title?
Anne. No, in troth.
Old L. Then you are weakly made. Puck off a little:

[1 Not in f. e. 2 If that quarrel, fortune, do divorse, &c. : in f. e. 3 Kid-skin. 4 Descend.]
I would not be a young count in your way,
For more than blushing comes to. If your back
Cannot vouc Safes this burden, 't is too weak
Ever to get a boy.
Anne.
How you do talk!
I swear again, I would not be a queen
For all the world.
Old L.
In faith, for little England
You'd venture an embalming? I myself
Would for Carnarvishire, although there 'long'd
No more to the crown but that. Lo! who comes here?
Enter the Lord Chamberlain.
Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What were't worth to know The secret of your conference?
Anne.
My good lord,
Not your demand: it values not your asking.
Our mistress' sorrows we were pitying.
Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming
The action of good women: there is hope
All will be well.
Anne.
Now, I pray God, amen!
Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly blessings
Follow such creatures. That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, and high notes
Take'en of your many virtues, the king's majesty
Commends his good opinion of you to you, and Does purpose honour to you, no less flowing
Than marchioness of Pembroke; to which title
A thousand pound a year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds.
Anne.
I do not know,
What kind of my obedience I should tender:
More than my all is nothing; nor my prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes.
More worth than empty vanities: yet prayers, and wishes,
Are all I can return. Beseech your lordship,
Vouchsafe to speak my thanks, and my obedience,
As from a blushing handmaid, to his highness;
Whose health, and royalty, I pray for.
Cham.
Lad'y,
I shall not fail t' improve* the fair conceit.
The king hath of you,—I have perus'd her well: [Aside.
Beauty and honour in her are so mingled
That they have caught the king; and who knows yet,
But from this lady may proceed a gem
To lighten all this isle?—[To her.] I'll to the king,
And say, I spoke with you.
Anne.
My honour'd lord. [Exit Lord Chamberlain.
Old L. Why, this it is; see, see!
I have been begg'g sixteen years in court,
(And yet a courier beggarly) nor could Come pat betwixt too early and too late
For any suit of pounds; and you, O fate!
A very fresh-fish here, (tie, tie, tie upon
This compell'd fortune!) have your mouth fill'd up,
Before you open it.
Anne.
This is strange to me.
Old L. How tastes it? is it bitter? forty pence, no.
There was a lady once, (it is an old story)
That would not be a queen, that would she not,
For all the mud in Egypt;—have you heard it?
Anne. Come, you are pleasant.
Old L.
With your theme I could
O'er mount the lark. The marchioness of Pembroke!
A thousand pounds a year for pure respect;

1 Referring to the ball, one of the royal insignia.
2 approve: in f. e.
3 salute: in f. e.
I ever contradicted your desire,
Or made it not mine too? or which of your friends
Have I not strove to love, although I knew
He were mine enemy? what friend of mine,
That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I
Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice
He was from thence desir'd. Sir, call to mind
That I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years, and have been blest
With many children by you: if in the course,
And process of this time you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honour aught,
My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty;
Against your sacred person, in God's name,
Turn me away; and let the foulst contemp
Shut door upon me, and so give me up.
To the sharpest knife of justice. Please you, sir,
The king, your father, was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
An unmatch'd wit and judgment: Ferdinand,
My father, king of Spain, was reckond one
The wisest prince, that there had reign'd by many
A year before: it is not to be question'd
That they had gather'd a wise council to them
Of every realm, that did debate this business,
Who deem'd our marriage lawful. Wherefore I humbly
Beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may
Be by my friends in Spain advis'd, whose counsel
I will implore: if not, I, the name of God,
Your pleasure be fulfill'd! Wol.
You have here, lady,
(And of your choice) these reverend fathers; men
Of singular integrity and learning,
Yea, the elect o' the land, who are assembled
To plead your cause. It shall be therefore bootless,
That longer you defer the court, as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsettled in the king.
Com.
His grace
Hath spoken well, and justly: therefore, madam,
It's fit this royal session do proceed,
And that, without delay, their arguments
Be now produc'd and heard.
Q. Kath.
Lord cardinal,
To you I speak.
Wol.
Your pleasure, madam?
Q. Kath.
Sir,
I am about to weep; but, thinking that
We are a queen, (or long have dream'd so) certain
The daughter of a king, my drops of tears
I'll turn to sparks of fire.
Wol.
Be patient yet.
Q. Kath.
I will, when you are humble; nay, before,
Or God will punish me. I do believe,
Induc'd by potent circumstances, that
You are mine enemy, and make my challenge:
You shall not be my judge; for it is you
Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me,
Which God's due quench.—Therefore, I say again,
I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul,
Refuse you for my judge; whom, yet once more,
I hold my most malicious foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth.
Wol.
I do profess,
You speak not like yourself: who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd th' effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom
O'er topping woman's power. Madam, you do me wrong:
I have no spleen against you; nor injustice
For you, or any: how far I have proceeded,
Or how far farther shall, is warrant'd
By a commission from the consistory,
Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge me,
That I have blown this coal: I do deny it.
The king is present: if it be known to him,
That I gainsay my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood; yea, as much
As you have done my truth. If he know
That I am free of your report, he knows,
I am not of your wrong: therefore, in him
It lies to cure me; and the cure is, to Remove these thoughts from you: the which, before
His highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking,
And to say no more.
Q. Kath.
My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. Y'are meek and humble-mouth'd;
You sign your place and calling in full seeming,
With meekness and humility; but your heart
Is cram'd with arrogance, spleen, and pride.
You have, by fortune and his highness' favours,
Gone slightly o'er low steps, and now are mounted
Where powers are your retainers; and your words,
Domestics to you, serve your will, as 'tis please
Yourself pronounce their office. I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than
Your high profession spiritual; that again
I do refuse you for my judge, and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the pope,
To bring my whole cause 'fore his holiness,
And to be judged by him.
[She curtsies to the King, and offers to depart.
Cam.
The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be tried by 't: 'tis not well.
She's going away.
K. Hen.
Call her again.
Crier.
Katharine, queen of England, come into the court.
Gent. Wol.
Madam, you are call'd back.
Q. Kath.
What need you note it? pray you, keep your way:
When you are call'd, return.—Now the Lord help!
They vex me past my patience.—Pray you, pass on.
I will not tarry: no, nor ever more,
Upon this business, my appearance make
In any of their courts.
[Exeunt Queen, and her Attendants.
K. Hen.
Go thy ways, Kate:
That man i' the world who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that. Thou art alone
(If thy rare qualities, sweetness, meekness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like, government,
Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out)
The queen of earthly queens.—She's nobly born;
And, like her true nobility, she has Carried herself towards me.
Wol.
Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,
That it shall please you to declare, in hearing
Of all these ears, (for where I am robb'd and bound,
There must I be unloos'd, although not there)
At once, and fully satisfied) whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness, or

1 kind: in f. e
2 desire: in f. e
3 In some mod. eds. this speech is given, without warrant, to Griffith.
Laid any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question on 't? or ever
Have to you, but with thanks to God for such A royal lady, spake one the least word, that might Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person?

K. Hen. My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you; yea, upon mine honour,
I free you from 't. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village culls,
Bark when their fellows do: by some of these
The queen is put in anger. You are excused;
But will you be more justified? You ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business; never Desir'd it to be stirr'd; but oft have hinder'd, oft,
The passages made toward it.—On my honour,
I speak my good lord cardinal to this point,
And thus far clear him. Now, what mov'd me to 't,
I will be bold with time, and your attention:
Then, mark th' inducement. Thus it came;—give heed to 't.

My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness,
Scruple, and pricking, on certain speeches utter'd
By the bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassador,
Who had been either sent on the debating
A marriage 'twixt the duke of Orleans and
Our daughter Mary. 'T was the progress of this business,
Ere a determinate resolution, he (IMean, the bishop) did require a respite;
Wherein he might the king his lord advertise
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our marriage with the dowager,
Sometime our brother's wife. This respite shook
The bottom of my conscience, enter'd me,
Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast; which forc'd such way,
That many maz'd considerations did throng,
And press in with this caution. First, methought,
I stood not in the smile of heaven; who had Commanded nature, that my lady's womb,
If it conceiv'd a male child by me, should Do no more offices of life to 't, than
The grave does to the dead; for her male issue,
Or died where they were made, or shortly after
This world had air'd them. Hence I took a thought,
This was a judgment on me; that my kingdom,
Well worthy the best heir o' the world, should not Be gladd'd in 't by me. Then follows, that I weigh'd the danger which my realms stood in
By this my issue's fall; and that gave to me
Many a groaning throe. Thus, hulling in
The wild sea of my conscience, I did siever
Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now present here together; that's to say, I Meant to rectify my conscience,—which
I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,—
By all the reverend fathers of the land,
And doctors learn'd. First, I began in private
With you, my lord of Lincoln; you remember
How under my oppression I did reel,
When I first mov'd you.

Lin. Very well, my liege.

K. Hen. I have spoke long; be pleas'd yourself to say
How far you satisfied me.

Lin. So please your highness,
The question did at first so stagger me,—
Bearing a state of mighty moment in 't,
And consequence of dread,—that I committed
The daring'st counsel which I had to doubt,
And did entreat your highness to this course,
Which you are running here.

K. Hen. I then mov'd you,
My lord of Canterbury; and got your leave
To make this present summons.—Unsolicited
I left no reverend person in this court;
But by particular consent proceeded,
Under your hands and seals: therefore, go on;
For no dislike 't the world against the person
Of the good queen, but the sharp thorny points
Of my alleged reasons drive this forward.
Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life,
And kindly dignity, we are contented
To wear our mortal state to come with her,
Katharine our queen, before the primest creature
That's paragon'd o' the world.

Cam. So please your highness,
The queen being absent, 't is a needful fitness
That we adjourn this court till farther day:
Meanwhile must be an earnest motion
Made to the queen, to call back her appeal
She intends unto his holiness.

K. Hen. I may perceive, [Aside.
These cardinals trible with me: I labor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome.
My learn'd and well-below'd servant, Cranmer,
Prythee, return! with thy approach. I know,
My comfort comes along. [Aloud.]—Break up the court:
I say, set on. [Exeunt, in manner as they entered.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Palace at Bridewell.
A Room in the Queen's Apartment.

The Queen, and her Women, as at work.

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles;
Sing, and disperse them, if thou canst. Leave working.

Song:
Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves, when he did sing:
To his music, plants, and flowers,
Ever spring; as sun, and showers,
There had made a lasting spring.

Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by.
In sweet music is such art,
Killing care and grief of heart
Fall asleep, or, hearing, die.

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now!

Gent. An't please your grace, the two great cardinals
Wait in the presence.

Q. Kath. Would they speak with me?

Gent. They will'd me say so, madam.

Q. Kath. Pray their graces
To come near. [Exit Gent.] What can be their business
With me, a poor weak woman, fallen from favour?
I do not like their coming; now I think on’t.
They should be good men, their affairs as righteous;
But all hoods make not monkeys.

EATER WOLSEY AND CAMPEHRS.

Wol. Peace to your highness.

Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a housewife;
I would be all, against the worst may happen.
What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords?

Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw
Into your private chamber, we shall give you
The full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here.

There’s nothing I have done yet, o’ my conscience,
Deserves a corner: would all other women Could speak this with as free a soul as I do! My lords, I care not, (so much I am happy Above a number) if my actions
Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw them,
Envy and base opinion set against them,
I know my life so even. If your business
Seek me out, and that way I am wise in,
Out with it boldly: truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas, regina serenissima.—

Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin:
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have liv’d in:
A strange tongue makes my cause more strange, suspicious!

Pray, speak in English. Here are some will thank you,
If you speak truth, for their poor mistress’ sake:
Believe me, she has had much wrong. Lord cardinal,
The willingest sin I ever yet committed
May be absolv’d in English.

Wol. Noble lady;
I am sorry, my integrity should breed,
(And service to his majesty and you)
So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant.
We come not by the way of accusation,
To taint that honour every good tongue blesses,
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow;
You have too much, good lady; but to know
How you stand minded in the weighty difference
Between the king and you, and to deliver,
Like free and honest men, our just opinions,
And comforts to your cause.

Cam. Most honour’d madam,
My lord of York,—out of his noble nature,
Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace,
Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure
Both of his truth and him, (which was too far)—
Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace,
His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath. To betray me. [Aside]

My lords, I thank you both for your good wills,
Ye speak like honest men. (pray God, ye prove so!)
But how to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
(More near my life, I fear,) with my weak wit,
And to such men of gravity and learning,
In truth, I know not. I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men, or such business.
For her sake that I have been, for I feel
The last fit of my greatness, good your graces,
Let me have time and counsel for my cause.
Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.

Wol. Madam, you wrong the king’s love with these fears:
Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Q. Kath. In England,
But little for my profit: can you think, lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel?
Or be a known friend, ‘gainst his highness’ pleasure,
(Though he be grown so desperate to be honest)
And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends,
They that must weigh out my affections,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here
They are, as all my other comforts, far hence,
In mine own country, lords.

Cam. I would, your grace
Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath. How, sir? Cam. Put your main cause into the king’s protection;
He’s loving, and most gracious: it will be much
Both for your honour better, and your cause;
For if the trial of the law o’ertake you,
You’ll part away disgrac’d.

Wol. He tells you rightly.

Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both,—my ruin.
Is this your Christian counsel? out upon ye!

Heaven is above all yet; there sits a Judge
That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us.

Q. Kath. The more shame for ye! holy men I thought ye,
Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues;
But cardinal sins, and hollow hearts, I fear ye.
Mend them for shame, my lords. Is this your comfort?

The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady?
A woman lost among ye, laugh’d at, scorn’d?
I will not wish ye half my miseries,
I have more charity; but say, I warn’d ye:
Take heed, for heaven’s sake, take heed, lest at once
The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction
You turn the good we offer into envy.

Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing. Woe upon ye,
And all such false preachers! Would ye have me
(If ye have any justice, any pity,
If ye be any thing but churchmen’s habits)
Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me?
Alas! he has banish’d me his bed already;
His love, too long ago: I am old, my lords,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him
Is only my obedience. What can happen
To me above this wretchedness? all your studies
Make me a curse like this.

Cam. Your fears are worse.

Q. Kath. Have I liv’d thus long,—(let me speak myself,
Since virtue finds no friends,—a wife, a true one?
A woman (I dare say without vain-glory)
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Have I with all my full affections
Still met the king? lov’d him next heaven? obey’d
him?

Been, out of fondness, superstitions to him?
Almost forgot my prayers to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? ’tis not well, lords.
Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne’er dream’d a joy beyond his pleasure,
And to that woman, when she has done most,
Yet will I add an honour,—a great patience.

Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at.
KING HENRY VIII.

Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so guilty, To give up willingly that noble title To your master wed me: nothing but death Shall e'er divide my dignities.

Wol. Pray, hear me.

Q. Kath. Would I had never trod this English earth, Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it! Ye have angels' faces, but heaven knows your hearts. What will become of me now, wretched lady? I am the most unhappy woman living— Alas! poor wenches, where are now your fortunes!

[To her Women.]

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity, No friends, no hope, no kindred weep for me, Almost no grave allow'd me.—Like the lily, That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd, I'll hang my head, and perish.

Wol. If your grace Could but be brought to know our ends are honest, You'd feel more comfort. Why should we, good lady, Upon what cause, wrong you? alas! our places, The way of our profession is against it: We are to cure such sorenesse, not to sow them: For goodness' sake, consider what you do: How may you hurt yourself, ay, utterly Grow from the king's acquaintance, by this carriage. The hearts of princes kiss obedience, So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits, They swell, and grow as terrible as storms. I know, you have a gentle, noble temper, A soul as even as a calm: pray, think us Those who profess, peace-makers, friends, and servants.

Com. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your virtues With these weak women's fears: a noble spirit, As yours was put into you, ever casis Such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves you; Beware, you lose it not: for us, if you please To trust us in your business, we are ready To use our utmost study in your service.

Q. Kath. Do what ye will, my lords: and, pray, forgive me, If I have us'd myself unnamnerly: You know I am a woman, lacking wit To make a seemly answer to such persons. Pray do my service to his majesty: He has my heart yet, and shall have my prayers, While I shall have my life. Come, revered fathers, Bestow your counsel on me: she now begs, That little thought, when she set footing here, She should have bought her dignities so dear. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Ante-chamber to the King's Apartment. Enter the Duke of Norfolk, the Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints, And force them with a constaney, the cardinal Cannot stand under them: if you omit The offer of this time, I cannot promise, But that you shall sustain more new disgraces, With these you bear already.

Sur. I am joyful To meet the least occasion, that may give me Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke, To be reveng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the peers Have uncomendg done by him, or at least Strangely neglected? when did he regard The stamp of nobleness in any person;

Out of himself?

Cham. My lords, you speak your pleasures. What he deserves of you and me. I know; What we can do to him, (though now the time Gives way to us) I much fear. If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft Over the king in's tongue.

Nor. O! fear him not; His spell in that is out: the king hath found Matter against him, that for ever mars The honesty of his language. No, he's settled, Not to come off, in his displeasure.

Sur. Sir, I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true. In the divorces his contrary proceedings Are all unfolded; wherein he appears, As I could wish mine enemy.

Suf. How came His practices to light?

Nor. Most strangely.

Sur. O! how? how?

Suf. The cardinal's letter to the pope miscarried, And came to the eye o' the king; wherein was read, How that the cardinal did treat his holiness To stay the judgment o' the divorce; for if It did take place, "I do," quoth he, "perceive, My king is tangle'd in affection to A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen." Sur. Has the king this?

Suf. Believe it.

Sur. Will this work?

Cham. The king in this perceives him, how he coasts, And hedges, his own way. But in this point All his tricks founder, and he brings his physic After his patient's death: the king already Hath married the fair lady.

Suf. Would he had! May you be happy in your wish, my lord; For, I profess, you have it.

Sur. Now, may all joy*

Trace the conjunction!

Suf. My amen to.'t

Nor. All men's.

Suf. Sir. There's order given for her coronation: Marry, this is yet but young, and may be left To some ears unaccounted.—But, my lords, She is a gallant creature, and complete In mind and feature; I persuade me, from her Will fall some blessing to this land, which shall In it be memoriz'd.

Sur. But, will the king Digest this letter of the cardinal's?

Nor. Marry, amen!

Sur. The lord forbid!

Nor. No, no:

There be more wasps than buzz about his nose, Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal Campeius Is stolen away to Rome; hath ta'en no leave; Has left the cause o' the king unhandled, and Is posted as the agent of our cardinal, To second all his plot; I do assure you The king cried, ha! at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him, And let him cry ha! louder.

Nor. But, my lord, When returns Cranmer?
Springs out into fast gait; then, stops again,
Strikes his breast hard; and anon he casts
His eye against the moon. In most strange postures
We have seen him set himself.

K. Hen. It may well be:
There is a mutiny in 's mind. This morning
Papers of state he sent me to peruse,
As I requir'd; and, wot you, what I found
There, on my conscience, put unwittingly?
Forsooth an inventory, thus importing,—
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which
I find at such proud rate, that it out-speaks
Possession of a subject.

Nor. 'Tis heaven's will:
Some spirit put this paper in the packet,
To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen. If we did think
His contemplation were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings; but, I am afraid,
His thoughts are below the moon, not worth
His serious considering.

[He takes his seat, and whispers Lovell, who goes to Wolsey.

Wol. Heaven forgive me! [Amaz'dly.

K. Hen. Ever God bless your highness.

Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman, a knight's daughter,
To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's queen!—
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must stuff it;
Then, out it goes.—What though I know her virtuous,
And well deserving, yet I know her for
A spleeny Lutheran; and not wholesome to
Our cause, that she should lie i' the bosom of Our hard-ruled king. Again, there is sprung up
An heretic, an arch one, Cranmer; one
Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle. [Retires, mus'ng.

Nor. He is vex'd at something.

Wol. I would, 't were something that would fret the string.

The master-chord on 's heart.

Enter the King, reading a Schedule; and Lovell.

K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated,
To his own portion! and what expense by the hour
Seem to flow from him! How, 'tis the name of thrift,
Does he make this together?—Now, my lords;
Saw you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have [Coming forward.

Stood here observing him. Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
 Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then, lays his finger on his temple; straight,
To the good of your most sacred person, and
The profit of the state. For your great graces
Heape[d] upon me, poor undeserver, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks;
My prayers to heaven for mine, my loyalty,
Which ever has, and ever shall be growing,
Till death, that winter, kill it.

K. Hen. Fairly answer'd:
A loyal and obedient subject is Therein illustrated. The honour of it
Does pay the act of it; as, 'tis the contrary,
The foulness is the punishment. I presume,
That as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honour, more
On you than any; so your hand, and heart,
Your brain, and every function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 't were in love's particular; be more
To me, your friend, than any.

Wol. I do profess,
That for your highness' good I ever labour'd
More than mine own: that am, have, and will be—(Though all the world should crack their duty to you,
And throw it from their soul: though perils did Abound, as thick as thought could make them, and Appear in forms more horrid) yet my duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours.

K. Hen. 'Tis nobly spoken.
Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast.
For you have seen him open't.—Read o'er this:
[Giving him Papers.
And, after this; and then to breakfast,
What appetite you have.
[Exit King, frowning upon Cardinal Wolsey: the Nobles thro' after him, smiling, and whispering.

Wol. What should this mean?
What sudden anger's this? how have I reap'd it?
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him,
Then, makes him nothing. I must read this paper;
I fear, the story of his anger.—'Tis so.

This paper has undone me!—'Tis the account
Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together
For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom,
And fee my friends in Rome. 0 negligence!
Fit for a fool to fall by.  What cross devil
Made me put this main secret in the packet
I sent the king?  Is there no way to cure this?
No new device to beat this from his brains?
I know 'twill stir him strongly; yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune
Will bring me off again. What's this?—"To the Pope?"

The letter, as I live, with all the business
I writ to his holiness. Nay then, farewell! I
Have touch'd the highest point of all my greatness,
And from that full meridian of my glory,
I haste now to my setting: I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more.  [Sinks in a chair.]

Ret-enter the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal; who commands you
To render up the great seal presently

Into our hands, and to confine yourself
To Asher's house, my lord of Winchester's,
Till you hear farther from his highness.

Suf. Stay: [Rising.]
Where's your commission, lords? words cannot carry Authority so weighty.

Suf. Who dare cross them,
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly?
Wol. Till I find more than will, or words, to do it,
(I mean your malice) know, officious lords,
I dare, and must deny it. Now, I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded,—envy;
How eagerly ye follow my disgraces,
As if it fed ye: and how sleek and wanton
Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin.
Follow your envious courses, men of malice;
You have Christian warrant for them, and, no doubt,
In time will find their fit rewards. That seal,
You ask with such a violence, the king,
(Mine, and your master) with his own hand gave me;
Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honours,
During my life, and to confirm his goodness,
Tied it by letters patent. Now, who 'l take it?

Suf. The king that gave it.
Wol. It must be himself, then.
Suf. Thou art a proud traitor, priest.
Wol. Proud lord, thou liest:
Within these forty hours Surrey durst better
Have burnt that tongue, than said so.

Suf. Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land:
Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law:
The heads of all thy brother cardinals,
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together)
Weigh'd not a hair of his. Plague of your policy
You sent me deputy for Ireland,
Far from his succour, from the king, from all
That might have mercy on the fault thou gav'st him;
Whilst your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Abolish'd him with an axe.

Wol. This, and all else
This talking lord can lay upon my credit,
I answer, is most false. The duke by law
Found his deserts: how innocent I was
From any private malice in his own soul,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.
If I lov'd many words, lord, I should tell you,
You have as little honesty as honour,
That in the way of loyalty and truth
Toward the king, my ever royal master,
Dare make a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follicles.

Suf. By my soul,
Your long coat, priest, protects you: thou shouldst feel
My sword i' the life-blood of thee else.—My lords,
Can ye endure to hear this arrogance?
And from this fellow? If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility; let his grace go forward,
And dare us with his cap, like larks.

Wol. All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.

Suf. Yes, that goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion;
The goodness of your intercepted packets,
You writ to the pope, against the king; your goodness,
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.—
My lord of Norfolk,—as you are truly noble,
As you respect the common good, the state
Of our despis'd nobility, our issues,
(Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen)
Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles
Collected from his life,—I'll startle you
Were than the sacred bell, when the brown wench
Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal!
But, that I am bound in charity against it.
Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's hand;
Bt, thus much, they are foul ones.
Wol. So much fairer,
And spotless, shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth.

Sir. This cannot save you.
I thank my memory, I yet remember
Some of these articles; and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush, and cry guilty, cardinal,
You'll show a little honesty.
Wol. Speak on, sir; I dare your worst objections: if I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners.
Sir. I had rather want those, than your head. Have at you.—

First, that without the king's assent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.
Nor. Then, that in all you writ to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, Ego et Rex meus
Was still inscrib'd; in which you brought the king
To be your servant.

Suf. Then, that without the knowledge
Either of king or council, when you went
Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.
Sir. Then, you sent a large commission
To Gregory de Cassalis, to conclude,
Without the king's will or the state's allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara.
Suf. That out of mere ambition you have caus'd
Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin.
Suf. Then, that you have sent innumerable substance,
(By what means got I leave to your own conscience)
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities; to the mere' undoing
Of all the kingdom. Many more there are;
Which, since they are of you, and odious,
I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord! Press not a falling man too far; 't is virtue,
His faults lie open to the laws: let them,
Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see him
So little of his great self.

Sir. I forgive him.

Suf. Lord cardinal, the king's farther pleasure is,— Because all those things, you have done of late
By your power legantine within this kingdom,
Fall into the compass of a pramunire,—
That therefore such a writ be sued against you;
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be
Out of the king's protection.—This is my charge.

Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations,
How to live better. For your stubborn answer,
About the giving back the great seal to us,
The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall thank you.
So, fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.

Exit all but Wolsey.

Wol. So, farewell to the little good you bear me.
Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness!
This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honour thick upon him:
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And,—when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening,—nips his root.
And then he falls, as I do. I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
This many summers in a sea of glory,
But far beyond my depth: my high blown pride
At length broke under me; and now has left me,
Weary and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must forever hide me.
Vain pomp and glory of this world, I hate ye:
I feel my heart new open'd. O! how wretched
Is that poor man, that hangs on princes' favours,
There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin,
More pangs and fears than wars or women have;
And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Never to hope again.—

Enter Cromwell, amazed.

Crom. Why, how now, Cromwell!

Wol. What! amaz'd
At my misfortunes? can thy spirit wonder,
A great man should decline? Nay, an you weep,
I am fallen indeed.

Crom. How does your grace?

Wol. Why, well:
Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell.
I know myself now; and I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities,
A still and quiet conscience. The king has cur'd me,
I humbly thank his grace, and from these shoulders,
These ruind' pillars, out of pity, taken
A load would sink a navy—too much honour.
O! 't is a burden, Cromwell, 't is a burden,
Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven.

Crom. I am glad your grace has made that right
Use of it.

Wol. I hope I have: I am able now, methinks,
(Out of a fortitude of soul I feel)
To endure more miseries, and greater far,
Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.

What news abroad?

Crom. The heaviest, and the worst,
Is your displeasure with the king.

Wol. God bless him!

Crom. The next is, that sir Thomas More is chosen
Lord Chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden;
But he's a learned man. May he continue
Long in his highness' favour, and do justice
For truth's sake, and his conscience; that his bones,
When he has run his course and sleeps in blessings,
May have a tomb of orphans' tears wept on 'em?
What more?

Crom. That Cranmer is returned with welcome,
Installed and Archbishop of Canterbury.

Wol. That's news indeed!

Crom. Last, that the lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in seeredom long married,
This day was view'd in open, as his queen,
Going to chapel; and the voice is now
Only about her coronation.
KING HENRY VIII.

Wol. There was the weight that pulled me down.
O Cromwell!

The king has gone beyond me: all my glories
In that one woman I have lost for ever.
No sun shall ever ne'er forth mine honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited
Upon my smiles. Go, get thee from me, Cromwell;
I am a poor fallen man, unworthy now.

To be thy lord and master. Seek the king;
(That sun, I pray, may never set!) I have told him
What, and how true thou art: he will advance thee.
Some little memory of me will stir him,
(I know his noble nature) not to let
Thy hopeful service perish too. Good Cromwell,
Neglect him not; make use now, and provide
For thine own future safety.
Crom. O, my lord!
Must I then leave you? must I needs forgo
So good, so noble, and so true a master?
Bears witness all that have not hearts of iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord.—
The king shall have my service; but my prayers,
For ever and for ever, shall be yours.
Wol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me,
Out of thy honest truth, to play the woman.
Let's dry our eyes; and thus far hear me, Cromwell:
And, when I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me more must be heard of,—say, I taught thee,
Say, Wolsey, that once trod the ways of glory,
And sound'd all the depths and honours, found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in;
A sure and safe one, though thy master miss'd it.
Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me.
Cromwell, I charge thee, sing away ambition:
By that sin fell the angels; how can man, then,
The image of his Maker, hope to win by 't?
Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate thee:
Corruption wins not more than honesty.
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues: be just, and fear not.
Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's: then, if thou fail'st, O Cromwell!

Thou fall'st in a blessed martyr.
Serve the king; and,—Pr'ythee, lead me in:
There take an inventory of all I have,
To the last penny; 'tis the king's; my robe,
And my integrity to heaven, is all.
I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.
Crom. Good sir, have patience.
Wol. So I have.—Farewell
The hopes of court: my hopes in heaven do dwell.
[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Street in Westminster.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. You're well met once again.
2 Gent. So are you.
1 Gent. You come to take your stand here, and behold
The lady Anne pass from her coronation.
2 Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter,
The duke of Buckingham came from his trial.
1 Gent. 'Tis very true; but that time offer'd sorrow,
This general joy.
2 Gent. 'Tis well! the citizens,
I am sure, have shown at full their royal minds;
As, let'em have their rights, they are ever forward
In celebration of this day with shows,
Pageants, and sights of honour.
1 Gent. Never greater;
Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.
2 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains,
That paper in your hand?
1 Gent. Yes; 'tis the list

Of those that claim their offices this day,
By custom of the coronation.
The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims
To be high steward: next, the duke of Norfolk,
He to be earl marshal. You may read the rest.
2 Gent. I thank you, sir; I had not known those customs,
I should have been beholding to your paper.
But, I beseech you, what's become of Katharine,
The princess dowager? how goes her business?
1 Gent. That I can tell you too. The archbishop Of Canterbury, accompanied with other

LEARNED AND REVEREND FATHERS OF HIS ORDER.

Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off
From Ampthill, where the princess lay; to which
She was often cited by them, but appear'd not:
And, to be short, for not appearance, and
The king's late scruple, by the main assent
Of all these learned men she was divore'd;
And the late marriage made of none effect:
Since which she was removed to Kimbolton,
Where she remains now, sick.
2 Gent. Alas, good lady!—

THE TRUMPETS.

The trumpets sound: stand close, the queen is coming.

SACRED.

THE ORDER OF THE CORONATION.

A Lively flourish of Trumpets.

1. Then, two Judges.

2. Lord Chancellor, with purse and mace before him.

3. Choristers singing.

[Music.

4. Mayor of London bearing the mace. Then, Garter in his coat of arms; and on his head he wore a Gilt Copper crown.

5. Marquess Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold; on his head a demi-coron of gold. With him the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dove; crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.

6. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshalship; a coronet on his head.
Collars of SS.

7. A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports; under it,
The Queen in her robe; in her hair, richly adorned with pearl, crowned. On each side her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.

8. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, flowered with flowers, bearing the Queen’s train.

9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circles of gold without flowers.

2 Gent. A royal train, believe me. These I know: Who is that, that bears the sceptre?

1 Gent. Marquess Dorset: And that the earl of Surrey, with the rod.

2 Gent. A bold brave gentleman. That should be The duke of Suffolk.

1 Gent. 'T is the same; high-steward.

2 Gent. And that my lord of Norfolk?

1 Gent. Yes.

2 Gent. Heaven bless thee! [Looking on the Queen. Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look’d on.—

Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel:
Our king has all the Indies in his arms,
And more, and richer, when he strains that lady.
I cannot blame his conscience.

1 Gent. They, that bear

The cloth of honour over her, are four barons
Of the cinque-ports.

2 Gent. These men are happy; and so are all, are near her.

I take it, she that carries up the train
Is that old noble lady, duchess of Norfolk.

1 Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.

2 Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars, indeed;

And sometimes falling ones.

1 Gent. No more of that.

[Exit Procession, with a great flourish of Trumpets.

Enter a third Gentleman.

God save you, sir! Where have you been broiling?

3 Gent. Among the crowd! The abbey? where a finger
Could not be wagg’d in more: I am stifled
With the mere rankness of their joy.

2 Gent. You saw the ceremony?

3 Gent. That I did.

1 Gent. How was it?

3 Gent. Well worth the seeing.

2 Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.

3 Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream,
Of lords and ladies, having brought the queen.
To a proper place in the choir, fell off
A distance from her; while her grace sat down
To rest a while, some half an hour or so,
In a rich chair of state, opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people.
Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman
That ever lay by man: which when the people
Had the full view of, such a noise arose
As the shrords make at sea in a stiff tempest
As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, cloaks, (Doubloons, I think) flew up; and had their faces
Been lose’d, this day they had been lost. Such joy
I never saw before. Great-bellied women,
That had not half a week to go, like rains
In the old time of war, would shake the press,
And make them reel before them. No man living
Could say, "This is my wife," there; all were woven
So strangely in one piece.

2 Gent. But, what follow’d?

3 Gent. At length her grace arose, and with modest paces — Came to the altar; where she kneel’d, and saint like

Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray’d devoutly.
Then rose again, and bowed her to the people:
When by the archbishop of Canterbury
She had all the royal makings of a queen:
As holy oil, Edward Confessor’s crown,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems
Laid nobly on her: which perform’d, the choir,
With all the choicest music of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,
And with the same full state passe’d back again
To York-place, where the feast is held.

1 Gent. Sir,
You must no more call it York-place, that’s past;
For, since the cardinal fell, that title’s lost:
’T is now the king’s, and call’d—Whitehall.

2 Gent. I know it;
But ’t is so lately alter’d, that the old name
Is fresh about me.

2 Gent. What two reverend bishops
Were those that went on each side of the queen?

3 Gent. Stokesley and Gardiner; the one of Wincheste.

Newly prefer’d from the king’s secretary;
The other, London.

2 Gent. He of Winchester
Is held no great good lover of the archbishop’s,
The virtuous Cranmer.

3 Gent. All the land knows that,
However, yet there’s no great breach: when it comes,
Cranmer will find a friend will not shrink from him.

2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?

3 Gent. Thomas Cromwell;
A man in much esteem with the king, and truly
A worthy friend.—The king has made him
Master o’ the jewel-house,
And one, already, of the privy-council.

2 Gent. He will deserve more.

3 Gent. Yes, without all doubt.
Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which
Is to the court, and there ye shall be my guests:
Something I can command. As I walk thither,
I’ll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Kimbolton.

Enter Katherine. Dowager, sick; led between Griff
Fith and Patience.

Griff. How does your grace?

Kath. O, Griffith! sick to death:
My legs, like loaded branches, bow to the earth,
Willing to leave their burden. Reach a chair.—

[Each down.

So,—now, methinks, I feel a little ease.
Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou led’st me,
That the great child of honour, cardinal Wolsey,
Was dead?

Griff. Yes, madam; but, I think, your grace,
Out of the pain you suffer’d, gave no ear to’t.

Kath. Pr’ythee, good Griffith, tell me how he died:
If well, he stepp’d before me, happily,
For my example.

Griff. Child. Well, the voice goes, madam:
For after the stout earl Northumberland
 Arrested him at York, and brought him forward,
As a man sorely tainted, to his answer,
He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill,
He could not sit his mule.

Kath. Alas, poor man!
Grif. At last, with easy roads, he came to Leicester; Lodg’d in the abbey, where the reverend abbot, With all his convent, honourably receiv’d him; To whom he gave these words, — "O father abbot An old man, broken with the storms of state, Is come to lay his weary bones among ye: Give him a little earth for charity!" So went to bed, where canon’d his sickness Purs’d him still; and three nights after this, About the hour of eight, which he himself Foretold should be his last, full of repentence, Continental meditations, tears, and sorrows, He gave his honours to the world again, His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace. Kath. So may he rest: his faults lie light’ry on him: Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak him, And yet with charity. — He was a man Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes; one, that by suggestion Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play; His own opinion was his law: i’ the presence He would say untruths, and be ever double, Both in his words and meaning. He was never, But where he meant to ruin, pitiful: His promises were, as he then was, mighty; But his performance, as he is now, nothing. Of his own body he was ill, and gave The clergy ill example. Grif. Noble madam, Men’s evil manners live in brass; their virtues We write in water. May it please your highness To hear me speak his good now? Kath. Yes, good Griffith; I were malicious else. Grif. This cardinal, Though from a humble stock, undoubtedly Was fashion’d to much honour from his cradle. He was a scholar, and a rie, and good one; Exceeding wise, fair spoken, and persuading; Lofty and sour to them that lov’d him not; But, to those men that sought him, sweet as summer; And though he were unsatisfied in getting, (Which was a sin) yet in bestowing, madam, He was most princely. Ever witness for him Those twins of learning, that he rais’d in you, Ipswich, and Oxford! one of which fell with him, Unwilling to outlive the good man? did it; The other, though found, yet so famous, So excellent in art, and still so rising, That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue. His overthorow heap’d happiness upon him; For then, and not till then, he felt himself, And found the blessedness of being little: And, to add greater honours to his age Than man could give him, he died fearing God. Kath. After my death I wish no other herald, No other speaker of my living actions, To keep mine honour from corruption, But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Whom I most hated living; thou hast made me, With thy religious truth and modesty, Now in his ashes honour. Peace be with him! — Patience, be near me still; and set me lower: I have not long to trouble thee. — Good Griffith, Cause the musicians play me that sad note I nam’d my knell, whilst I sit meditating On that celestial harmony I go to. [Sad and solemn music. Grif. She is asleep. Good wench, let’s sit down quiet, For fear we wake her: — softly, gentle Patience. The Vision. Enter, solemnly tripping one after another, six Personages, clad in white robes, wearing on their heads garlands of bays, and golden wands on their faces: branches of bays, or palm, in their hands. They first gongee unto her; then Maker; and, at certain changes, the first two hold a spare garland over her head; at which, the other four make reverend curtesies: then, the two that held the garland deliver the same, to the other two, who observe the same order in their changes, and holding the garland over her head. Which done, they deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order; at which, (as it were by inspiration) she makes in her deep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands to heaven. And so in their dancing they vanish, carrying the garland with them. The music continues. Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone, [Waking: And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye? Grif. Madam, we are here. Kath. It is not you I call for. Saw ye none enter, since I slept? Grif. None, madam. Kath. No! saw you not, even now, a blessed troop Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun? They promis’d me eternal happiness, And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall, assuredly. Grif. I am most joyful, madam, such good dreams Possess your fancy. Kath. Bid the music leave, They are harsh and heavy to me. [Music ceases. Pat. But how much her grace is alter’d on the sudden? How long her face is drawn? How pale she looks, And of an earthy coldness? 2 Mark her eyes! Grif. She is going, wench. Pray, pray. Pat. Heaven comfort her! [Enter a Messenger. Mess. An’t like your grace,— Kath. You are a saucy fellow: Deserve we no more reverence? Grif. You are to blame, Knowing she will not lose her wonted greatness, To use so rude behaviour: go to; kneel. Mess. I humbly do entreat your highness’ pardon: [Kneeling. My haste made me unmannerly. There is staying A gentleman, sent from the king to see you. Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith: but this fellow Let me ne’er see again. [Exeunt Griffith and Messenger. Re-enter Griffith, with Capuecius. Cap. If my sight fail not, You should be lord ambassador from the emperor, My royal nephew, and your name Capuecian. Kath. You are the man, then; and, O my lord! The times, and titles, now are alter’d strangely. With me, since first you knew me. But, I pray you, What is your pleasure with me? Cap. Noble lady, First, mine own service to your grace; the next, The king’s request that I would visit you; Who grieves much for your weakness, and by me Sends you his princely commendations, And heartily entreats you take good comfort.
Kath. O! my good lord, that comfort comes too late:
'Tis like a pardon after execution.
That gentle physic, given in time, had cur'd me;
But now I am past all comforts here, but prayers.
How does his highness?

Cap. Madam, in good health.
Kath. So may he ever do; and ever flourish,
When he shall dwell with worms, and my poor name
Banish'd the kingdom.—Patience, is that letter,
I caus'd you write, yet sent away?

Pet. No, madam. [Giving it to Katharine.
Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to the lord the king.

Cap. Most willing, madam.
Kath. In which I have commended to his goodness
The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter:—
The dews of heaven fall thick in blessings on her!
Beseeching him to give her virtuous breeding.
She is young, and of a noble modest nature,
I hope, she will deserve well; and a little
To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd him,
Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women, that so long,
Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully:
Of which there is not one, I dare avow,
(And now I should not lie) but will deserve,
For virtue, and true beauty of the soul.
For honesty, and decent carriage,
A right good husband, let him be a noble;
And, sure, those men are happy that shall have them.
The last is, for my men—they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me:—
That they may have their wages duly paid them,
And something ever to remember me by:
If heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer life,
And able means, we had not parted thus.
These are the whole contents—am good my lord,
By that you love the dearest in this world,
As you wish Christian peace to souls departed,
Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king
To do me this last right.

Cap. By heaven, I will,
Or let me lose the fashion of a man!
Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember me
In all humility unto his highness:
Say, his long trouble now is passing
Out of this world: tell him, in death I bless'd him,
For so I will.—Mine eyes grow dim. Farewell,
My lord.—Griffith, farewell.—Nay, Patience,
You must not leave me yet: I must to bed;
Call in my worship. With that one good wench,
Let me be us'd with honour: strew me over
With maiden flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste wife to my grave. Embalm me;
Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.
I can no more.—[Exeunt, leading Katharine.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Gallery in the Palace.

Enter Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a Torch before him; met by Sir Thomas Lovell.

Gar. It's one o'clock, boy, is 't not?

Boy. It hath struck.

Gar. These should be hours for necessities,
Not for delights; times to repair our nature
With comforting repose, and not for us
To waste those times.—Good hour of night, sir Thomas:
Whither so late?

Lov. Came you from the king, my lord?

Gar. I did, sir Thomas; and left him at primrose
With the duke of Suffolk.

Lov. I must to him too,
Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave.

Gar. Not yet, sir Thomas Lovell. What's thematter?
It seems you are in haste: an if there be
No great offence belongs to 't, give your friend
Some touch of your late business, Affairs that walk
(As, they say, spirits do) at midnight have
In them a wilder nature, than the business
That seeks despatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you,
And durst commend a secret to your ear
Much weightier than this work. The queen's in labour;
They say, in great extremity, and fear'd,
She 'll with the labour end.

Gar. The fruit she goes with
I pray for heartily; that it may find
Good time, and live: but for the stock, sir Thomas,
I wish it grubb'd up now.

Lov. Methinks, I could

2 Summoned.
KING HENRY VIII.

Scene I.  [Exeunt Gardiner and Page.

As Lovell is going out, enter the King, and the Duke of Suffolk.

K. Hen. Charles, I will play no more to-night:
My mind's not on't; you are too hard for me.

Suf. Sir, I did never win of you before
K. Hen. But little, Charles;
Nor shall not when my fancy's on my play.—
Now, Lovell, from the queen what is the news?

Lov. I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me; but by her woman
I sent your message; who return'd her thanks
In the greatest hussiness, and deser'd your highness Most heartily to pray for her.

K. Hen. What say'st thou? ha!
To pray for her? what! is she crying out?

Lov. So said her woman; and that her sufferance made
Almost each pang a death.

K. Hen. Alas, good lady!
Suf. God safely quit her of her burden, and
With gentle travail, to the gladding of
Your highness with an heir!

K. Hen. 'Tis midnight, Charles: Prythee, to bed; and in thy prayers remember
Th' estate of my poor queen. Leave me alone,
For I must think of that, which company
Would not be friendly to.

Suf. I wish your highness
A quiet night; and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

K. Hen. Charles, good night.— [Exit Suffolk.

Enter Sir Anthony Denny.

Well, sir, what follows?

Den. Sir, I have brought my lord the archbishop,
As you commanded you.

K. Hen. Ha! Canterbury?

Den. Ay, my good lord.

K. Hen. 'Tis true: where is he, Denny?

Den. He attends your highness' pleasure.

Lov. This is about that which the bishop spake:

I am happily come hither.

Re-enter Denny, with Cranmer.

K. Hen. Avoid the gallery. [Lovell seems to stay.

Ha!—I have said. Be gone.

What!—[Exeunt Lovell and Denny.

Cran. I am fearful. Wherefore frowns he thus?

[Aside.]

'T is his aspect of terror: all's not well.

K. Hen. How now, my lord! You do desire to know
Wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. It is my duty [Kneeling.]

K. Hen. Pray you, arise,
My good and gracious lord of Canterbury;
Come, you and I must walk a turn together; I have news to tell you. Come, come, give me your hand.

Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,
And am right sorry to repeat what follows.
I have, and most unwillingly, of late
Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord,
Grievous complaints of you; which being consider'd
Have mov'd us and our council, that you shall
This morning come before us: where, I know,
You cannot with such freedom purge yourself,
But that, till farther trial in those charges
Which will require your answer, you must take
Your patience to you, and be well contented
To make your house our Tower: to a brother of us,
It fits me thus proceed, or I'll do no witness
Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thank your highness,
And am right glad to catch this good occasion

[Exeunt.]

Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly saunder; for, I know,
There's none stands under more calamulous tongues
Than I myself, poor man.

K. Hen. Stand up, good Canterbury: Thy truth, and thy integrity, is rooted
In us, thy friend: Give me thy hand; stand up:

[Aside.

Pr'ythee, let's walk: Now, by my holy dame,
What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd
You would have given me your petition, that I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you,
Without indulgence, farther.

Cran. Most dread liege,
The ground! I stand on, is my truth, and honesty:
If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies,
Will triumph o'er my person, which I weigh not,
Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing
What can be said against me.

K. Hen. Know you not
How your state stands in the world, with the whole world?
Your enemies are many, and not small; their practices
Must bear the same proportion: and not ever
The justice and the truth o' the question carries
The due o' the verdict with it. At what ease
Might corrupt minds procure knaves, as corrupt,
To swear against you: such things have been done:
You are potently oppos'd, and with a malice
Of as great size. Ween you of better luck,
I mean in perjurd witness; than your Master,
Whose minister you are, whiles here he liv'd
Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to:
You take a precipice for no leap of danger;
And woo your own destruction.

Cran. God, and your majesty,
Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me!

K. Hen. Be of good cheer;
They shall no more prevail, than we give way to.
Keep comfort to you; and this morning, see
You do appear before them. If they shall chance,
In charging you with matters, to commit you,
The best persuasions to the contrary
Fail not to use, and with what vehemency
The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties
Will render you no remedy, this ring
Deliver them, and your appeal to us
There make before them.—Look, the good man weeps:
He's honest, on mine honour. God's blest mother!
I swear, he is true-hearted; and a soul
None better in my kingdom.—Get you gone,
And do as I have bid you.—[Exit Cranmer.] He has strangled
His language in his tears.

Enter an old Lady, in haste.

Gent. [Within.] Come back: what mean you?

Lady. I'll not come back; the tidings that I bring
Will make my boldness manners.—Now, good angels
By holy Mary, Butts, there's knavery.
Let 'em alone, and draw the curtain close;
We shall hear more anon.  [Exeunt.]

Enter the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Suffolk, Earl of Surrey, Lord Chamberlain, Gardiner, and Cromwell. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left void above him, as for the Archbishop of Canterbury. The rest seat themselves in order on each side. Cromwell at the lower end, as secretary.

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now.  [Cranmer approaches the Council-table.

Chan. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry To sit here at this present, and behold That chair stand empty: but we all are men, In our own natures frail, and culpable! Of our flesh: few are angels: out of which frailty, And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us, Have misdemean'd yourself, and not a little, Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling The whole realm, by your teaching, and your chaplains, (For so we are inform'd) with new opinions, Divers, and dangerous; which are heresies, And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Ger. Which reformation must be sudden too, My noble lords; for those that tame wild horses Pace them not in their hands to make them gentle, But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur them;

Till they obey the manage. If we suffer, Out of our easiness and childish pity, To one man's honour, this is dangerous sickness, Farewell all physic: and what follows then? Commotions, uproars, with a general taint Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbours, The upper Germany, can dearly witness, Yet freshly pitted in our memories.

Chan. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress Both of my life and office, I have labour'd, And with no little study, that my teaching; And the strong course of my authority, Might go one way, and safely; and the end Was ever, to do well: nor is there living (I speak it with a single heart, my lords,) A man, that more detests, more strives, against Both in his private conscience and his place, Defacers of the public peace, than I do. Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart With less allegiance in it! Men, that make Envy and crooked malice nourishment, Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships, That in this case of justice, my accusers, Be what they will, may stand forth face to face, And freely urge against me.

Suf. Nay, my lord, That cannot be: you are a counsellor,
And by that virtue no man dare accuse you.

Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment, We will be short with you. 'Tis his highness' pleasure, And our consent, for better trial of you, From hence you be committed to the Tower: Where, being but a private man again, You shall know many dare accuse you boldly, More than, I fear, you are provided for.

Cran. Ah! my good lord of Winchester, I thank you; You are always my good friend: if your will pass, I shall both find your lordship judge and juror, You are so merciful. 'I see your end; 'Tis my undoing. Love and meekness, lord, Become a churchman better than ambition: Win straying souls with modesty again, Cast none away. That I shall clear myself, Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience, I make as little doubt, as you do conscience In doing daily wrongs. I could say more, But reverence to your calling makes me modest.

Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary: That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discover, To men that understand you, words and weakness.

Crom. My lord of Winchester, you are a little, By your good favour, too sharp: men so noble, However faulty, yet should find respect For what they have been: 'tis a cruelty, To load a falling man.

Gar. Good master secretary I cry your honour mercy: you may, worst Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord?

Gar. Do not I know you for a favourer Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound?

Gar. Not sound, I say.

Crom. Would you were half so honest;

Men's prayers, then, would seek you, not their fears.

Gar. I shall remember this bold language.

Crom. Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much:

Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Gar. I have done.

Crom. And I.

Chan. Then thus for you, my lord.—It stands agreed, I take it, by all voices, that forthwith You be convey'd to the Tower a prisoner; There to remain, till the king's farther pleasure Be known unto us. Are you all agreed, lords? All. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy, But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?

Gar. What other Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome. Let some o' the guard be ready there.

Crom. For me?

Must I go like a traitor thither?

Enter Guard.

Gar. Receive him, And see him safe i' the Tower.

Cran. Stay, good my lords; I have a little yet to say.—Look there, my lords: By virtue of that ring I take my cause Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it To a most noble judge, the king my master. Chan. This is the king's ring.

Sur. 'T is the right ring, by heaven! I told ye all, When we first put this dangerous stone a rolling, 'T would fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords, The king will suffer but the little finger Of this man to be vex'd?

Chan. 'T is now too certain, How much more is his life in value with him. Would I were fairly out on't.

Crom. My mind gave me, In seeking tales, and informations, Against this man, whose honesty the devil And his disciples only envy at, Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Now, have at ye. Enter the King, frowning on them: he takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to heaven In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince; Not only good and wise, but most religious: One that in all obedience makes the church The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen That holy duty, out of dear respect, His royal self in judgment comes to hear The cause betwixt her and this great offender.

K. Hen. You were ever good at sudden commendations, Bishop of Winchester; but know, I come not To hear such flattery now, and in my presence: They are too thin and base to hide offences. To me you cannot reach. You play the spaniel, And think with wagging of your tongue to win me But, whatso'ever thou tak'st me for, I'm sure, Thou hast a cruel nature, and a bloody,— Good man, [To Cranmer.] sit down. Now, let me see the proudest, [Cranmer sits.] He that dares most, but wag his finger at thee: By all that's holy, he had better starve, Than but once think this place becomes thee not.

Sur. May it please your grace,—

K. Hen. No, sir, it does not please me. I had thought, I had had men of some understanding And wisdom of my council; but I find none. Was it discretion, lords, to let this man, This good man, (fow of you deserve that title) This honest man, that like a lousy footboy At chamber door? and one as great as you are? Why, what a shame was this! Did my commission Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye Power, as he was a counsellor to try him, Not as a grooms. There's some of ye, I see, More out of malice than integrity, Would try him to the utmost, had ye mean; Which ye shall never have the while I live. Chan.

Thus far, My most dread sovereign, may it like your grace To let my tongue excuse all. What was purposed Concerning his imprisonment, was rather (If there be faith in men) meant for his trial, And fair purgation to the world, than malice, I'm sure, in me.

K. Hen. Well, well, my lords, respect him: Take him, and use him well; he's worthy of it. It will say thus much for him: if a prince May be beholding to a subject, I, Am, for his love and service, so to him. Make me no more ado, but all embrace him: [They embrace him: Gardiner last.] Be friends, for shame, my lords!—My lord of Canterbury:
I have a suit which you must not deny me;
That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism,
You must be godfather, and answer for her.

Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory
In such an honour; how may I deserve it,
That am a poor and humble subject to you?

K. Hen. Come, come, my lord, you'ld spare your spoons?

You shall have two noble partners with you;
The old duchess of Norfolk, and lady marquess Dorset:
Will these please you?

Once more, my lord of Winchester, I charge you,
Embrace and love this man.

Gar. With a true heart.

And brother's love, I do it. [Embrace again.

Cran. And let heaven
Witness, how dear I hold this confirmation.

K. Hen. Good man! those joyous tears show thy
The common voice, I see, is verified [true heart.
Of thee, which says thus, "Do my lord of Canterbury
A shrewd turn, and he is your friend for ever."—

Come, lords, we trifle time away: I long
To have this young one made a Christian.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;
So I go stronger; you more honour gain. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Palace Yard.

Noise and Tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals: do you take the court, for Paris-garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gaping.

[Within.] Good master porter, I belong to the larder.

Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, you rogue! Is this a place to roar in?—Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones: these are but switches to them.—I'll scratch your heads: you must be seeing christenings? Do you look for ale and cakes here.
you rude rascals? [Tumult within.]

Man. Pray, sir, be patient: 'tis as much impossible,
Unless we sweep 'em from the door with cannons,
To scatter 'em, as 'tis to make 'em sleep.
On May morning, when I will procure,
We may as well rush against Paul's, as stir 'em.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd?

Man. Alas, I know not: how gets the tide in?
As much as one sound cudgel of four foot
(You see the poor remainder) could distribute,
I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.

Man. I am not Samson, nor sir Guy, nor Colbrond,
To mow 'em down before me; but if I spared any,
That had a head to hit, either young or old,
He or she, euckold or euckold-maker,
Let me ne'er hope to see a queen' again;
And that I was not, nor a crown, God save her.

[Within.] Do you hear, master Porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy.—Keep the door close, sirrah.

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock 'em down by the dozens? Is this Moorfields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? [Noise.] Bless me, what a fay of fornication is at door! On my Christian conscience, this one christening will beget a thousand: here will be father, godfather, and all together.

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brazier by his fame, for, as I saw, the twain of the dog-days now reign in his nose: all that stand about him are under the line; they need no other penance. That fire-drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharged against me: he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pink'd porring'er fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I miss'd the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, cubs! when I might see from far some forty trancheenors draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on:
I made my place at length they came to the broocstaff with me; I desist 'em still; when suddenly a file of boys behind 'em, loose shot, delivered such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let 'em win the work. The devil was amongst 'em, I think, surely. [Shouts.]

Port. These are the yachts that thunder at a playhouse, and fight for bitter apples: that no audience, but the Tribulation of Tower-hill, or the limbs of Limousine, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days, besides the running banquet of two beadles, that is to come. [Tumult and Shouts.]

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Money o' me, what a multitude are here! They grow still, too; from all parts they are coming,
As if we kept a fair! Where are these porters,
These lazy knaves?—Ye have made a fine hand,
fellows:
There's a trim rabble let in. Are all these
Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall have Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies,
When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An't please your honour
We are but men; and what so many may do,
Not being torn a pieces, we have done:
An army cannot rule 'em.

Cham. As I live,
If the king blame me for 't, I'll lay ye all
By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads
Clap round fines for neglect. 'Y are lazy knaves;
And here ye lie bating of bombards, when [Trumpets.
Ye should do service. Hark! the trumpets sound;
They're come already from the christening.
Go, break among the press, and find a way out
To let the troop pass fairly, or I'll find.
A Marshalsea shall hold ye play these two months.
Port. Make way there for the princess.

Man. You great fellow, [Tumult and confusion.
Stand close up, or I'll make your head ache.
Port. You 't the emblab, get up o' the rail;
I'll peer you o'er the pole else. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Palace at Greenwich.

Enter Trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garter, Cranmer, Duke of Norfolk, with his Marshal's staff, Duke of Suffolk, two Noblemen bearing great standing bowls for the christening gifts:
then, four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the Duchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heaven,

From thy endless goodness, send prosperous life,
Long, and ever happy, to the high and mighty
Princess of England, Elizabeth!

Flourish. Enter King, and Train.

Cran. And to your royal grace, and the good queen, [Prostration.

My noble partners, and myself, thus pray:—
All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady,
Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy;
May hourly fall upon ye!

K. Hen. Thank you, good lord archbishop.

K. Hen. What is her name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

K. Hen. Stand up, lord. [Cran. rises.]

With this kiss take my blessing; God protect thee!
Into whose hand I give thy life. [Kissing the child.

Cran. Amen!

K. Hen. My noble gossips, ye have been too prodigal.
I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady,
When she has so much English.

Cran. Let me speak, sir.

For Heaven now bids me; and the words I utter
Let none think flattering, for they'll find them true.

This royal infant,—heaven still move about her!—
Though in her cradle, yet now promises
Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings,
Which time shall bring to ripeness. She shall be (But few now living can behold that goodness)
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed: Sheba was never
More covetous of wisdom, and fair virtue,
Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces,
That mould up such a mighty piece as this is,
With all the virtues that attend the good,
Shall still be doubled on her: truth shall nurse her;
Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her;
She shall be lovd, and fear'd: her own shall bless her;
Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn
And hang their heads with sorrow: good grows with her.

In her days every man shall eat in safety
Under his own vine what he ploughs, and sing
The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours.
God shall be truly known; and those about her
From her shall read the perfect ways of honour,
And by those claim their greatness, not by blood.
Nor shall this peace sleep with her: but as when
The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix,
She ashes new create another heir,
As great in admiration as herself;
So shall she leave her blessedness to one, [ness]
(When heaven shall call her from this cloud of dark-
Who, from the sacred ashes of her honour,
Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
To stand and M. Peace, justice, love, truth, terror,
And all that were the servants to this chosen infant,
Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him:
Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine,
His honour and the greatness of his name
Shall be, and make new nations: he shall flourish,
And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches
To all the plains about him. Our children's children
Shall see this, and bless heaven.

K. Hen.

Thou speakest wonders.

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England,
An aged princess; many days shall see her,
And yet no day without a deed to crown it.
Would I had known no more! but she must die:
She must; the saints must have yet a virgin,
A most unspotted lily shall she pass
To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her.

K. Hen. O, lord archbishop!

Thou hast made me now a man: never, before
This happy child, did I get any thing.
This oracle of comfort has so pleased me,
That when I am in heaven I shall desire
To see what this child does, and praise my Maker.—
I thank ye all.—To you, my good lord mayor,
And you, my brethren, I am much beholding:
I have receiv'd much honour by your presence,
And ye shall find me thankful.—Lead the way, lords:
Ye must all bear the queen, and she must thank ye;
She will be sick else. This day, no man think
He has business at his house, for all shall stay;
This little one shall make it holiday.

[Exeunt.

EPilogue.

All the expected good we're like to hear
For this play, at this time, is only in
The merciful construction of good women;
For such a one we show'd 'em. If they smile,
And say, 't will do, I know, within a while
All the best men are ours; for 't is ill hap,
If they hold, when their ladies bid 'em clap.

'1 is ten to one, this play can never please
All that are here. Some come to take their ease,
And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear,
We have frightened with our trumpets; so, 't is clear,
They'll say, 't is naught: others, to hear the city
Abus'd extremely, and to cry,—"that's witty,"
Which we have not done neither; that, I fear,

THE PROLOGUE1 (in Armour²).

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece,
The princes orgulous, their high blood chat'd,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war: sixty and nine, that wore
Their crownets regal, from the Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia; and their vow is made,
To ransack Troy, within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps; and that's the quarrel.
To Tenedes they come,
And the deep-drawing barks do there disgorge
Their warlike fraughtage; now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Ilias, Chetas, Trojan,
And Antenorides, with massy staples
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperr² up the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits
On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
Sets all on hazard.—And hither am I come
A Prologue arm'd,—but not in confidence
Of author's pen, or actor's voice, but suited
In like conditions as our argument,—
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
Leaps o'er the vaunts³ and firstlings of those broils,
Beginning in the middle; starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play.
Like, or find fault; do as your pleasures are;
Now, good or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

ACT I.

Enter Troilus armed, and Pandarus.

Tro. Call here my varlet⁴; I'll unarm again:
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within?
Each Trojan, that is master of his heart,
Let him to the field; Troilus, alas! hath none.

Pan. Will this gear ne'er be mended?

Tro. The Greeks are strong and skilful to their strength,
Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant;

But I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance;
Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
And skill-less as unpractis'd infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this: for my part, I'll not meddle nor make no farther. He that will have a cake out of the wheat must³ tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the boling.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the botting; but you must marry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening: but here's yet, in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating the oven, and the baking: nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what needless care she be, doth lessen blame at sufferance than I do.

At Priam's royal table do I sit;
And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—
So, traitor! — when she comes! — When is she thence?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—when my heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain,
Lest Hector or my father should perceive me,
I have (as when the sun doth light a storm)
Bury'd this sigh in wrinkle of a smile;
But sorrow, that is couched in seeming gladness,
Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's, (well, go to) there were no more comparison between the women,—but, for my part, she is my kinswoman: I would not, as they term it, praise her,—but I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did: I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit, but—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—
When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drown'd,
Reply not in how many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd, — I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressid's love: thou answer'st, she is fair;
Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice;
Handiest in thy discourse, O! that her hand,
In whose comparison all whites are ink,
Writing their own reproach: to whose soft seizure
The cygnet's down is harsh, and spirit of sense
Hard as the palm of ploughman! — This thou tell'st me,
As true thou tell'st me, when I say,—I love her;
But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm,
Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given me
The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. 'Tis faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let her be as she is: if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; and she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus. How now, Pandarus! Pan. I have had my labour for my travail; ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought on of you: gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus? what, with me, Pan. Because she's kin to me, therefore, she's not so fair as Helen: and she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not, an she were a black-a-moor; 'tis all one to me.

Tro. Say I; she is not fair?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father: let her to the Greeks: and so I'll tell her the next time I see her. For my part, I'll meddle nor make no more of I' the matter.

Tro. Pandarus —

Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus —

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me: I will leave all as I found it, and there an end. [Exit PAN. An Alarum.

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clammers! peace, rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,
When with your blood you daily paint her thus.
I cannot fight upon this argument;
It is too star'd a subject for my sword.
But Pandarus — O gods, how do you plague me!
I cannot come to Cressid, but by Pandar;
And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo;
And she is stubborn-chaste against all suit.
Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,
What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we?
Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl:
Between our Ilium, and where she resides,
Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood;
Ourself the merchant, and this sailing Pandar,
Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark.

Alarum. Enter Aneas.

Anea. How now, prince Troilus! wherefore not afield?

Tro. Because not there: this woman's answer sorts,
For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Aneas, from the field to-day?

Anea. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Aneas?

Anea. Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed: 'tis but a scar to scorn;
Paris is gored with Menelaus' horn. [Alarum.

Anea. Hark, what good sport is out of town to-day!

Tro. Better at home, if "'t would I might," were "may." —

But to the sport abroad — are you bound thither?

Anea. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come; go we, then, together. [Exeunt

SCENE II. —The Same. A Street.

Enter Cressida and Alexander.

Cres. Who were those went by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba, and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they?

Alex. Up to the eastern tower, whose height commands as subject all the vale,
To see the battle. Hector, whose patience
Is as a virtue fix'd, to-day was mov'd;
He chid Andromache, and struck his armourer;
And, like as there were husbandry in war,
Before the sun rose he was harness'd fight,
And to the field goes he; where every flower
Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw
In Hector's wrath.

Cres. What was his cause of anger?

Alex. The noise goes, thus: there is among the Greeks
A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector;
They call him, Ajax.

Cres. Good; and what of him?

Alex. They say he is a very man per se,
And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men; unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions: he is as valiant as the lion,
Churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant; a man into whom nature hath so crowded humours, that his valour
Is crushed into folly; his folly sauced with discretion:
there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a Glimpse of, nor any man an attain but he carries some Stain of it. He is melancholy without cause, and Merry against the hair: he hath the joints of every TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT I.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Cres. Hector is a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid. What do you talk of?—Good morrow, Alexander.—How do you, cousin? When were you at Illium?

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of, when I came? Was Hector armed, and gone, ere ye came to Illium? Helen was not, nor was he.

Cres. Hector was gone; but Helen was not up.

Pan. E'en so: Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says, here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too. He'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them that; and there's Troilus will not come far behind him: 'tis them take heed of Troilus, I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O, Jupiter! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not-between Troilus and Hector? Do you know a man if you see him?

Cres. Ay: if I ever saw him before, and knew him.

Pan. Well, I say, Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for, I am sure, he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degrees.

Cres. 'T is just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself? Alas, poor Troilus! I would, he were,—

Cres. So he is.

Pan. —Condition, I had gone bare-foot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself? no, he's not himself. —Would 'a were himself! Well the gods are above; time must friend, or end. Well, Troilus, well—I would, my heart were in her body!—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. Th' other's not come to 't; you shall tell me another tale, when th' other's come to 't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities.

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'T would not become him; his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece. Helen herself swore th' other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour, (for so 'tis, I must confess)—not brown neither—

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. 'Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then, Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his: he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek, indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him th' other day into the compassed window? and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetick may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young; and yet will he, within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifier?

Pan. But, to prove so to you that Helen loves him—she came, and puts me her white hand to his eleven chin.

Cres. Juno have mercy! How came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled. I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Pan. O! he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O! yes, an't were a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to then.—But to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,—

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll prove it a little.

Pan. Troilus? why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens if the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled his chin:—indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alarm, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But, there was such, laughing: queen Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er.

Cres. With mill-stones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes: did her eyes run o'er too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An it had been a green hair I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair, as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, here's but two and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true: make no question of that. "Two and fifty hairs," quoth he, "and one white: that white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons." "Jupiter!" quoth she, "which of these hairs is Paris, my husband?" "The forked one," quoth he; "pluck’t out, and give it him?" But there was such laughing, and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.

Cres. So let it now, for it has been a great while going by.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on it, I pray.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I’ll be sworn, it’s true: he will weep you, an’t were a man born in April.

Cres. And I’ll spring up in his tears, an’t were a nottle against [A recent sounded.]

Pan. Hark! they are coming from the field. Shall we stand up here, and see them, as they pass toward Ilum? good niece, do; sweet niece, Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure. Pan. Here, here; here’s an excellent place: here we may see most bravely. I’ll tell you them all by their names, as they pass by, but mark Troilus above the rest.

Cres. Speak not so loud. *Exeunt passes over the Stage.

Pan. That’s Eneres. Is not that a brave man? he’s one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you, but mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Cres. Who’s that?

Antenor passes over.

Pan. That’s Antenor: he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he’s a man good enough: he’s one of the soundest judgment in Troy, whosever, and a proper man of his person.—When comes Troilus?—I’ll show you Troilus anon: if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.

Pan. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

Hector passes over.

Pan. That’s Hector; that, that, look you, that; there’s a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector.—There’s a brave man, niece.—O brave Hector!—Look how he looks; there’s a countenance. Is’t not a brave man? Cres. O! a brave man.

Pan. Is’t a not? It does a man’s heart good.—Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there. There’s no jesting: there’s jaying on, take’t off who will, as they say; there be hacks! Cres. Be those with swords?

*Enter Paris passes over.

Pan. Swords? any thing, he cares not; an the devil come to him, it’s all one: by god’s lid, it does one’s heart good.—Yonder comes Paris; yonder comes Paris; look ye yonder, niece; is’t not a gallant man too, is’t not?—Why, this is brave now.—Who said he came hurt home to-day? he’s not hurt: why, this will do Helen’s heart good now. Ha! would I could see Troilus now.—You shall see Troilus anon.

Cres. Who’s that?

*Enter Helenus passes over.

Pan. That’s Helenus.—I marvel, where Troilus is.

That’s Helenus.—I think he went not forth to-day.—That’s Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helenus? no;—yes, he’ll fight indifferent well.—I marvel, where Troilus is.—Hark! do you not hear the people cry, Troilus?—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Pan. Where? yonder? that’s Deiphobus.—’Tis Troilus! there’s a man, niece!—Hem!—Brave Troilus, the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace! for shame; peace!

Pan. Mark him; note him.—O brave Troilus!—look well upon him, niece: look you how his sword is blooded, and his helm more hack’d than Hector’s; and how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! he ne’er saw three and twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way: had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris?—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

*Soldiers pass over the Stage.

Cres. Here come more.

Pan. Asses, fools, doves, chaff and bran, chaff and bran; porridge after meet. I could live and die i’ the eyes of Troilus. Ne’er look, ne’er look; the eagles are gone; crows and daws, crows and daws. I had rather be such a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks Achilles, a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well?—Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

Pan. Ay, a mince man; and then to be baked with no date in the pye—for then the man’s date’s out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; upon my mask, to defend my beauty; and upon you, to defend all these; and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Pan. Nay, I’ll watch you for that; and that’s one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow, unless it swel past hinding, and then it’s past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

*Enter Troilus’ Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come. [Exit Boy.

I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I’ll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle,—

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token, you are a bawd.—

*Exit Pandarus.
Therefore, this maxim out of love I teach,—
Achieved men still command;
Then, though my heart's content firm love doth bear,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp. Before Agamemnon’s Tent.

Senet. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses, Menelaus, and others.

Agam. Princes, What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks? The ample proposition, that hope makes In all designs begun on earth below, Fails in the promis’d largeness: checks and disasters Grow in the veins of actions highest rear’d; As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap, Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Nor, princes, is it matter new to us, That we come short of our purpose so far, That after seven years’ siege yet Troy walls stand; Sith every action that hath gone before, Whereof we have record, trial did draw Bias and thwart, not answering the aim, And that unbounded figure of the thought That gave ’t surmise shape. Why then, you princes, Do you with cheeks abash’d behold our woes; And call? then shame, which are, indeed, nought else But the protractive trials of great Jove, To find persistent constancy in men? The fineness of which metal is not found In fortune’s love; for then, the bold and coward, The wise and fool, the artist and unread, The hard and soft, seem all affin’d and kin: But, in the wind and tempest, astray fro’ Distinction, with a broad* and powerful fan, Puffing at all, winnows the light away; And what hath mass, or matter, by itself.* Lies rich in virtue, and unmingled.

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat, Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance Lies the true proof of men. ‘The sea being smooth, How many shallow bauble boats dare sail Upon her patient breast, making their way With those of nobler bulk: But let the rufian Boreas once enrage The gentle Thebias, and anon, behold, The strong-rib’d bark through liquid mountains cut, Bounding between the two moist elements, Like Perseus’ horse: where’s then the saucy boat, Whose weak untimber’d sides but even how Co-rival’d greatness? either to harbour fled, Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so Doth valour’s show, and valour’s worth, divide In storms of fortune: for, in her ray and brightness, The herd hath more annoyance by the briar* Than by the tiger; but when the splitting wind Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks, And flies fled under shade, why then, the thing of courage. As rous’d with rage, with rage doth sympathize, And with an accent tun’d in self-same key, Replies* to chiding fortune.

Ulyss. Agamemnon, Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece, Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit, In whom the tempers and the minds of all

Should be shut up, hear what Ulysses speaks.
Besides the applause and approbation
The which,—most mighty for thy place and sway,—
[To Agamemnon,
And thou most reverend for thy stretch’d out life,—
[To Nestor.
I give to both your speeches, which were such,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again,
As Venerable Nestor, hatch’d in silver,
Should with a bond of air (strong as the axletree
On which heaven rides) knit all the Greekish ears
To his experience’d tongue,—yet let it please both.—
Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.

Agam.* Speak, prince of Ithaca; and be’t of less expect
That matter needless, of importless burden,
Divide thy lips, than we are confident,
When rank Thersites ope’s his mastiff jaws,
We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

Ulyss. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down, And the great Hector’s sword had lack’d a master, But for these instances.
The sanctity of rule hath been neglected: And look, how many Grecian tents do stand Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.
When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the foragers shall all repair,
What honey is expected? Degree being vizard, Th’ unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.
The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre, Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insinuate, course, proportion, season, form, Office, and mission, in a due order.
And therefore is the glorious planet, Sol, In noble eminence enthron’d and spher’d Amidst the other; whose med’cinable eye Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
And posts, like the commandment of a king,
Sans check, to good and bad. But when the planets,
In evil mixture, to disorder wander,
What plagues, and what portents! what mutiny!
What raging of the sea, shaking of earth,
Commotion in the winds, frights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states.
Quite from their fixure; Of whom degree is shak’d,
Which is the ladder to all high designs,
The enterprise is sick. How could communities,
Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerce from dividable shores,
The primogenitive and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels, But by degree stand in authentic place?
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And, hark, what discord follows! each thing meets*
In mere oppugnancy: the bounded waters
Should lift their bosome higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe:
Strength should be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son should strike the father dead:
Force should be right; or, rather, right and wrong,
(Between whose endless Jesse justice resides)
Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite;
And appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,

\[^{1}\text{Achievement is command: in f. a. }^{2}\text{ works: in f. a. }^{3}\text{ think: in folio. }^{4}\text{ loud: in folio. }^{5}\text{ Goofy. }^{6}\text{ Returns: in f. a. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE III.

Must make perfuse an universal prey, And last eat up himself. Great Agamemnon, This chaos, when degree is suffocate, Follows the choking: And this neglect of degree it is, That by apace goes backward, with a purpose It hath to climb. The general is disdain'd By him one step below; he, by the next; That next, by him beneath: so, every step, Exampled by the first pace that is sick. Of his offenders grows to an envious fever Of pale and bloodless emulation. And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot, Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length, Troy in our weakness stands, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd The fever whereof all our power is sick.

Agam. The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses, What is the remedy?

Ulyss. The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns The sinew and the forefront of our host, Having his ear full of his airy fame, Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent Lies mock'd and humour'd designs. With him, Patroclus, Upon a lazy bed the livelong day Breaks scurril jests; And with ridiculous and awkward action (Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,) He pageants us: sometime, great Agamemnon, Thy topless deputation he puts on; And, like a strutting player,—whose conceit Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich To hear the wooden dialogue and sound

'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage,— Such to-be-pitted and o'er-wrested seeming He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks, 'tis like a chime a mending; with terms unsavour'd, Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon drop'd, Would seem hyperboles. At this flashy stuff The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling, From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause; Cries:—"Excellent! 'tis Agamemnon right.— Now play me Nestor;—hem, and stroke thy beard As he, being 'drest to some oration." That's done;—as near as the extremest ends Of parallels—as like as Vulcan and his wife: Yet god Achilles still cries, "Excellent! 'tis Nestor right! Now play him me, Patroclus, Arming to answer in a night alarm." And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age, Must be the scene of mirth; to cough, and spit, And with a palsy, bumbling on his gerget, Shake in and out the rivet,—and at this sport, Sir Valour dies; cries." O!—enough, Patroclus, Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all In pleasure of my spleen." And in this fashion, All our abilities, gifts, naturals, shapes, Severals and generals, all grace extract, Achievements, plots, orders, preventions, Excitements to the field, or speech for truce, Success, or loss, what is, or is not, serves As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twain, (Whom, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns With an imperial voice) many are infect. With his own self-all'd; and bears his head In such a rein, in full as proud a place As bread Achilles: keeps his tent like him; Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war, Bold as an oracle; and sets Thersites, A slave whose gall coins slanders like a mint, To match us in comparisons with dirt; To weaken and discredit our exposure, How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulyss. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice; Count wisdom as no member of the war; Forestall precipicence, and esteem no set But that of hands: the still and meek parts— That do contribute how many hands shall strike, When fitness calls them on, and know, by measure Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight,— Why, this hath not a finger's dignity. They call this bed-work, mappery, closet-war: So that the ram, that batters down the wall, For the great swing and rudeness of his poise, They place before his hand that made the engine, Or those that with the fineness of their souls By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse Makes many Thetis' sons.

[Enter ENEAS.

Men. From Troy.

Agam. What would you 'fore our tent.

Ene. Is this Great Agamemnon's tent, I pray you?

Agam. Even this.

Ene. May one, that is a herald and a prince, Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm, Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice Call Agamemnon head and general.

Ene. Fair leave, and large security. How may A stranger to those most imperial looks Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Agam. How?

Ene. Ay; I ask, that I might waken reverence, And bid the cheek be ready with a blush, Modest as morning when she coldly eyes The youthful Phorbas.

Which is that god in office, guiding men?

Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Agam. This Trojan seorns us, or the men of Troy Are ceremonious courtiers.

Ene. Courtiers as free, as debonair, unmard, As bending angels: that's their fame in peace; But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls, Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and, Jove's accord, Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Eneas! Peace, Trojan! lay thy finger on thy lips. The worthiness of praise distains his worth, If that the praise'd himself bring the praise forth; What's the repining enemy commends, That breath fame blows; that praise, soul-pure, transcends.

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Eneas?

Ene. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Agam. What's your affair, I pray you?

Ene. Sir, pardon: 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.

Agam. He hears nought privately that comes from Troy.

Ene. Nor I from Troy came not to whisper him: I bring a trumpet to awake his ear; To set his sense on the attentive bent, And then to speak.

Agam. Speak frankly as the wind. It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour:

1 lives: in folio. 2 silly: in quarto. 3 just: in folio. 4 of grace exact: in f. e. 5 But what: in f. e. 6 sole pure: in f. e.
That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

_Ene._

Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;
And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly shall be spoke aloud.

[Trumpet sounds.

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy,
A prince call'd Hector, Priam is his father,
Who in this dull and long-continu'd truce
Is rustily grown: he bade me take a trumpet,
And to this purpose speak.—Kings, princes, lords,
If there be one among the fair'st of Greece,
That holds his honour higher than his ease;
That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril;
That knows his valour, and knows not his fear;
That loves his mistress more than in confession
With truant vows to her own lips he loves;
And dare avow her beauty and her worth
In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.
Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it.
He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did couple in his arms;
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call,
Mid-way between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love.
If any come, Hector shall honour him;
If none, he'll say in Troy, when he retires,
The Grecian grooms are sun-burnt, and not worth
The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

_Agam._ This shall be told our lovers, lord _Eneas._
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home; but we are soldiers,
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

_Nest._ Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandsire suck'd: he is old now;
But if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man that hath one spark of fire,
To answer for his love, tell him from me,
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vantage put this w ith'er'd brawn;
And, meeting him, will tell him, that my lady
Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste
As may be in the world. His youth in flood;
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

_Ene._ Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth!

_Ulyss._ Amen.

_Agam._ Fair lord _Eneas_, let me touch your hand;
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir.
Achilles shall have word of this intent,
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent;
Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but _Ulysses_ and _Nestor_.

_Nest._ What says _Ulysses_?

_Ulyss._ I have a young conception in my brain;
Doth not nature mean to bring it to some shape.

_Nest._ What is't?

_Ulyss._ This 'tis:
Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the seeded pride,
That hath to this maturity grown up
In rank Achilles, must or now be crop'd;
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,
To overbulk us all.

_Nest._ Well, and how?

_Ulyss._ This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,
However it is spread in general name,
Relate in purpose only to Achilles.

_Nest._ The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up:
And in the publication make no strain,
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
As banks of Libya, (though, Apollo knows,
'T is dry enough) will, with great speed of judgment,
Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose
Pointing on him.

_Ulyss._ And wake him to the answer, think you?

_Nest._ Why, it is most meet: whom may you else oppose,
That can from Hector bring his honour off.
If not Achilles? Though 'tis to be a sportful combat,
Yet in the trial much opinion dwells;
For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute.
With their fin'st palate: and trust to me, _Ulysses_,
Our reputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action; for the successes,
Although particular, shall give a scantling:
Of good or bad unto the general;
And in such indexes (although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes) there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd,
He that meets Hector issues from our choice:
And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,
Makes merit her election; and doth boil,
As 't were from forth us all, a man distill'd
Out of our virtues; who miscarrying,
What heart receives from hence the conquering part,
To steel a strong opinion to themselves?
Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments,
In no less working, than are swords and bows
Directive by the limbs.

_Ulyss._ Give pardon to my speech:—
Therefore 'tis meet Achilles meet not Hector.
Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think; perchance, they'll sell; if not,
The lustre of the better shall exceed,
By showing the worst first. Do not consent,
That ever Hector and Achilles meet;
For both our honour and our shame, in this,
Are dogg'd with two strange following.

_Nest._ I see them not with my old eyes: what are they?

_Ulyss._ What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,
Were he not proud, we all should share' with him:
But he already is too insolent;
And we were better parch in Afric sun,
Than in the pride and salt scor'd of his eyes,
Should he 'scape Hector fair. If he were fob'd,
Why, then we did our main opinion crush
In taint of our best man. No; make a lottery,
And by device let blockish Ajax draw
The sort to fight with Hector: among ourselves
Give him allowance for the better man,
For that will physic the great Myrmidon,
Who breaks the earth's applause and make him fall
His crest, that prouder than blue Iris bends.
If the dull, brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices: if he fail,
Yet go we under our opinion still,
That we have better men. But, hit or miss;

1. _feuds_; in quarto. 2. _compass_; in folio. 3. _I'll be_; in folio. 4. _mould_; in folio. 5. _pawn_; in folio. 6. _Yes_; in folio. 7. _yet to show_; in folio. 8. _Shall show the better_; in folio. 9. _wear_; in folio. 10. _As the words_;
Our project's life this shape of sense assumes.—Ajax employ'd plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Now I begin to relish thy advice; And I will give a taste of it forthwith

---

II.

How now, Thersites! what's the matter, man?

Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. Ay; what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do: what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why do I so do.

Ther. But yet you look not well upon him: for, whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what medicums of wit he utters! his orations have ears thus long. I have bobbed his brain, more than he has beat my bones: I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his pia mater is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord, Achilles, Ajax, who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head, I'll tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I say, this Ajax—

Achil. Nay, good Ajax. [Ajax offers to strike him.

Ther. Has not so much wit—

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool!

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he, look you there.

Ajax. O, thou damm'd cur! I shall—

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's? Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will shame it.

Patr. Good words, Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrel?

Ajax. I bade the vile wog learn me the tenour of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go to, go to.

Ther. I serve here voluntary.

Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. Even so—a great deal of your wit, too, lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a sturdy nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses, and old Nestor,—whose wit was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on their toes,—yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the war.

Achil. What? what?

Ther. Yes, good sooth: to Achilles! to Ajax! to—

Achil. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou, afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace!

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach!

---

1 Set on. 2 Most mouldy. 3 The rest of the speech is only in the quartus. 4 Pound. 5 A small ass. 6 Dog.
Troilus. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotted poes, ere I come any more to your tents: I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools. [Exit.]

Patr. A good riddance.

Troilus. Marry, this, sir, is proclaimed through all our host:

That Hector, by the fifth hour of the sun,
Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy,
To-morrow morning call some knight to arms,
That hath a stomach: and such a one, that dare maintain— I know not what: 'tis trash. Farewell.

Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Troilus. I know not: it is put to lottery; otherwise, he knew his man.

Ajax. O! meaning you.—I will go learn more of it. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter Priam, Hector, Troilus, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,
Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:

'Deliver Helen, and all damage else—
As honour, loss of time, travail, expence,
Wounds, friends, and what else that is consum'd,
In hot digestion of this cormorant war,
Shall be struck off.'—Hector, what say you to 't?

Hec. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I,
As far as toucheth my particular,
Yet, dread Priam,
There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More spungy to suck in the sense of fear,
More ready to cry out—'Who knows what follows?'
Than Hector is. The wound of peace is surely,
Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:
Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
Every tithe soul, 'mongst many thousand diseases,
Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean, of ours:
If we have lost so many tenths of ours,
To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to us,
Hades, and sure, he blew of one ten
What merit's in that reason which denies
The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fie, fie! my brother
Weigh you the worth and honour of a king,
So great as our dread father, in a scale
Of common ounces? will you with counters sum
The past-proportion of his infinite?
And buckle in a waist most fathomless,
With spans and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons? fie, for godly shame!

Hec. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,
You are so empty of them. Should not our father
Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons,
Because your speech hath none, that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and clumbers, brother priest:
You far your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons:

You know, an enemy intends you harm,
You know, a sword employ'd is perilsious,
And reason flies the object of all harm.

Who marvels, then, when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels,
And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,
Or like a star dis-orb'd?—Nay, if we talk of reason,

Let's shut our gates, and sleep: manhood and honour
Should have here hearts, would they but fat their thoughts.
With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect
Make lives pale, and lustihood defect.

Hec. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost
The holding.

Tro. What is sought, but as 'tis valued?

Hec. But value dwells not in particular will;
It holds his estimate and dignity,
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself,
As in the prizer. 'Tis mad idolatry,
To make the service greater than the god;
And the will doth, that is inclinable*
To what infectiously jolly affects.
Without some image of th' affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;
My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. How may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what it elected,
The wise I chose? there can be no evasion
To blench from this, and to stand firm by honour.
We turn not back the silks upon the merchant,
When we have sold them; nor the remainder viands
We do not throw in respective sieves,
Because we now are full. It was thought meet,
Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:
Your breath of full consent bellied his sails;
The seas and winds (old wranglers) took a truce,
And did him service; he touch'd the ports desir'd;
And for an old aunt, whom the Greeks held captive,
He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness
Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes pale the morning.
Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt?
Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl;
Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,
And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.
If you'll avouch 't was wisdom Paris went,
''As you must need, for you all cry—'Go, go!'
If you'll confess he have the prize noble prise
As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands,
And cry'd—'Inestimable?' why do you now
The issue of your proper winnings rate,
And do a deed that fortune never did,
Beggars the estimation which you priz'd
Richer than sea and land? O, theft most base,
That we have stolen what we do fear to keep!
But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stolen,
That in their country did them that disgrace,
We fear to warrant in our native place!

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry!

Pri. What noise? what shriek is this?

Tro. 'Tis our mad sister: I do know her voice.

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans!

Hec. It is Cassandra.

Enter Cassandra, wailing.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes,
And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

Hec. Peace, sister, peace!

Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled old,
Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry,
Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes
A moiety of that mass of moan to come.
Cry, Trojans! cry! practise your eyes with tears.
Troy must not be, nor goodly Lion stand;
Our fire-brand brother, Paris, burns us all.

Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen, and a woe!
Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go. [Exit.

Hect. Now, youthful Troilus, do these high
Divination in our sister work
Some touches of remorse? or is your blood
So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,
Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same?

Tro. Why, brother Hector,
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it;
Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures
Cannot dissuade the goodness of a quarrel,
Which hath our several honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons;
And Jove forbid, there should be done amongst us
Such things as might offend the weakest spleen
To fight for, and maintain.
Par. Else might the world convince of levity,
As well my undertakings, as your counsels;
But, I attest the gods, your full consent
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on so dire a project:
For what, alas! can these my single arms?
What propagation is in one man's valour,
To stand the press and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest,
Were I alone to poise the difficulties,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should no more retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.
Pri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights:
You have the honey still, but these the gall.
So to be valiant is no praise at all.
Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself
The pleasures such a beauty brings with it,
But I would have the soil of her fair rape
Wip'd off in honourable keeping her.
What treason were it to the ransack'd queen,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up,
On terms of base compulsion? Can it be,
That so degenerate a strain as this,
Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?
There's not the meanest spirit on our party,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended; nor none so noble,
Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death unam'd,
Where Helen is the subject: then, I say,
Well may we fight for her, whom we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel
Hect. Paris, and Troilus, you have both said well;
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have glaz'd,—but superciliously; not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Urn'd to hear moral philosophy.
The reasons you allege do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood,
Than to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure, and revenge,
Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision. Nature craves,
All due be render'd to their owners: now,
Where nearer debt in all humanity
Than wife is to the husband? if this law
Of nature be corrupted through affection,
And that great minds, of partial indulgence
To their bent hours, will resist the same,
There is a law in each well-order'd nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are
Most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen, then, be wife to Sparta's king,
As it is known she is, these moral laws
Of nature, and of nation, speak aloud
To have her back return'd: thus to persist
In doing wrong externates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion
Is this, in way of truth: yet, ne'ertheless,
My spirited brethren, I propend to you
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependence
Upon our joint and several dignities.

Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design.
Were it not glory that we more affected,
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,
She's a theme of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds;
Whose present courage may beat down our foes.
And fame in time to come canonize us:
For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.
Hect. I am yours,
You valiant offspring of great Priamus,—
I have a rising challenge sent amongst
The dule and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits.
I was advertis'd, their great general slept,
Whilst emulation in the army erod:
This, I presume, will wake him.

Enter Thersites.

Ther. How now, Thersites! what! lost in the labyrinth of thy fury? Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! would, it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me. 'Sfoot, I'll learn to converse and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful excorciations.' Then, there's Achilles,—a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves.

[Knell's] O, thou great thunder-darter of Olympus! forget that thou art Jove the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy Caduceus, if ye take not that little, little, less-than-little wit from them that they have; which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their masy iron and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp; or, rather the Neapolitan bone-ache: for that, methinks, is the curse dependant on those that war for a backlet. [Rises.] I have said my prayers, and devil, envy, say Amen. What, ho! my lord Achilles! Enter Patroclus.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gift counterfeit, thou wouldst not have slipped out of my contempla-

1 Convict. 2 pass: in f. c. 3 Not in f. e. 4 Dyce reads: short-aim'd. 5 * Not in f. e. 6 Not in f. e.
tion; but it is no matter: thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then, if she, that lays thee out, says thou art a fair corse, I’ll be sworn and sworn upon’t she never shrouded any but lazars. Amen.

Where’s Achilles?

Patr. What! art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?
Ther. Ay; the heavens hear me!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who’s there?
Patr. Theristes, my lord.
Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come? Why, my cheere, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come; what’s Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles. Then, tell me, Patroclus, what’s Achilles?
Patr. Thy lord, Theristes. Then, tell me, I pray thee, what’s thyself?
Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus. Then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?
Patr. Thou must tell, that knowest.
Achil. Of! tell, tell.
Ther. I’ll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus’ knower; and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You rascal!
Ther. Peace, fool! I have not done.
Achil. He is a privileged man.—Proceed, Theristes.
Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool.
Theristes is a fool; and, as advised, Patroclus is a fool.
Achil. Derive this: come.
Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Theristes is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why am I a fool?
Ther. Make that demand of thy Creator. It suffices me, thou art. Look you, who comes here?

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Diomedes, and Ajax.

Achil. Patroclus, I’ll speak with nobody.—Come in with me, Theristes. [Exit.]

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is a cuckold, and a whore; a good quarrel, to draw emulous factions, and bleed to death upon. Now, the dry serpent on the subject, and war and lechery confound all! [Exit.

Agam. Where is Achilles?
Patr. Within his tent; but ill-disposed, my lord.

Ajax. Let it be known to him that we are here.

We sent four our messengers; and we lay by our appertainments visiting of him.

Let him be told so, lest, perchance, he think we dare not move the question of our place, or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit. Ulysses. We saw him at the opening of his tent: he is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but by my head, ’tis pride: but why? why? let him show us a cause.—A word, my lord.

[Taking Agamemnon aside.

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?
Ulyss. Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.}

Nest. Who? Theristes?
Ulyss. He.

Nest. This will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No; you see, he is his argument, that has his argument, Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their fraction is more our wish, than their faction: but it was a strong composition, a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily unite. Here comes Patroclus.
Nest. No Achilles with him.

Re-enter Patroclus.

Ulyss. The elephant hath but one; but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.
Patr. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry, If any thing more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness, and this noble state, To call upon him: he hopes, it is no other. But, for your health and your digestion sake, An after-dinner’s breath.

Agam. Hear you, Patroclus. We are too well acquainted with these answers; But his evasion, wing’d thus swift, with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Much attribute he hath, and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him; yet all his virtues, Not virtuously on his own part beheld, Do in our eyes begin to lose their gloss; Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him, We come to speak with him; and you shall not sin, If you do say, we think him over-proud, And under-honest; in self-assumption greater, Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on, [himself Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite in an observing kind His humorous predominance: yea, watch His pettish lunes, his obbs, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide. Go, tell him this: and add, That, if he overhold his price so much, We’ll none of him; but let him, like an engine Not portable, lie under this report— Bring action lither, this cannot go to war. A stirring dwarf we do allowance give Before a sleeping giant — tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently. [Exit. Agam. In second voice we’ll not be satisfied, We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter you.

[Exit Ulysses.

Ajax. What is he more than another?
Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.
Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think, he thinks himself a better man than I am?
Agam. No question.
Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say he is? Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.
Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.
Agam. Your mind is the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud, eats up himself; pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed, doth yours the deed in the praise.
Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engendering of toads.
Nest. Yet he loves himself: is’t not strange? [Aside.

Rec-enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What’s his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none; but carries on the stream of his dispose. Without observance or respect of any, in will peculiar, and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request, untent his person, and share the air with us? Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request’s sake only, he makes important. Possess’d he is with greatness; and speaks not to himself, but with a pride That quarrels at self-breath: imagin’d worth Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse, that, twixt his mental and his active parts, Kingdom’d Achilles in commotion ranges, and butters down himself. What should I say? He is so plagy proud, that the death tokens of it cry—no recovery."

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.—
Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent: "Tis said, he holds you well; and will be led, at your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon! let it not be so: We’ll concerrette the steps that Ajax makes when they go from Achilles. Shall the proud lord, that bastes his arrogance with his own seam, and never suffers matter of the world enter his thoughts,—save such as doth revolve and ruminate himself,—shall he be worshipp’d of that we hold an idol more than he? No, this three worthy and right valiant lord must not so stale his palm, nobly acquire’d; no, by my will, asubjugate his merit, as amply titled as Achilles is, by going to Achilles: that were to ennard his fat-already pride; and add more coals to Cancer, when he burns with entertaining great Hyperion. This lord go to him? Jupiter forbid; and say in thunder—”Achilles, go to him.”

Nest. O! this is well; he rubs the vein of him. [Aside.

Dio. And how his silence drinks up this applause! [Aside.

Ajax. If I go to him, with my armed fist I’ll push him o’er the face.

Agam. O, no! you shall not go.

Ajax. An’b’r proud with me, I’ll pheaze his pride. Let me go to him.

Nest. How he describes himself?

Ajax. Can he not be sociable?

Ulyss. The raven.

Chides blackness.

Ajax. I’ll let his humour blood.

Agam. He will be the physician, that should be the patient.

Ajax. An all men were o’ my mind,—

Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion. [Aside.

Ajax. ‘A should not bear it so, ‘A should eat swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nest. An’t would, you’d carry half. [Aside.

Ulyss. ‘A would have ten shares. [Aside.

Ajax. I will knead him; I will make him supple. Nest. He’s not yet thorough warm; force him with praises.

Pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry. [Aside.

Ulyss. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.

[TO AGAMEMNON.

Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

Ulyss. Why, ’tis this naming of him does him harm. Here is a man—but ’tis before his face; I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?

If he is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter thus with us!
Would, he were a Trojan!

Nest. What a vice

Were it in Ajax now—

Ulyss. If he were proud?

Dio. Or covetous of praise?

Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne?

Dio. Or strange, or self-affected?

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure;

Praise him that got thee, her that gave thee suck:
Fam’d be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature.
Thrice-fam’d, beyond all erudition;
But he that disciplin’d thine arms to fight,
Let Mars divide eternity in twain,
And give him half; and for thy vigour,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield.

To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,
Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines
Thy spacious and dilated parts: here’s Nestor,
Instructed by the antiquary times,
He must, he is; he cannot but be wise;
But pardon, father Nestor, were your days
As green as Ajax, and your brain so temper’d,
You should not have the eminence of him.

But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Nest. Ay, my good son.

Dio. Be rul’d by him, lord Ajax.

Ulyss. There is no tarrying here: the hurt Achilles keeps thicket.—Please it our great general to call together all his state of war:

Fresh kings are come to Troy; to-morrow,

We must with all our main of power stand fast:
And here’s a lord,—come knights from east to west,
And call their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.

Agam. Go we to council: let Achilles sleep.

Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks draw deep. [Exeunt.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Room in Priam’s Palace.

Enter Pandarus and a Servant.

Pan. Friend you; pray you, a word. Do not you follow the young lord Paris?

Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.

Pan. You depend upon him, I mean?

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.

Pan. You depend upon a noble gentleman: I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!

Pan. You know me, do you not?

Serv. Faith, sir, superficially.

Pan. Friend, know me better. I am the lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope, I shall know your honour better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace. [Music within.

Pan. Grace! not so, friend; honour and lordship are my titles.—What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir; it is music in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, sir.

Pan. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Pan. Azt whose pleasure, friend?

Serv. At mine, sir; and theirs that love music.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another: I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That’s to’t; indeed, sir. Marry, sir, at the request of Paris, my lord, who is there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love’s invisible soul—

Pan. Who? my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen: could you not find out that by her attire, sir?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the prince Troilus: I will make a complimentary assault upon him, for my business seethes.

Serv. Sudden business: there’s a strewed phrase, indeed.

Enter Paris and Helen, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them; especially to you, fair queen: fair thoughts be your fair pillow!

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.—Fair prince, here is good broken music.

Par. You have broke it, cousin; and, by my life, you shall make it whole again: you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance.—Nell, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. O, sir!—

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude.

Par. Well said, my lord. Well, you say so in fits.

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen.—My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we’ll hear you sing, certainly.

* These words are only in the quartos.  * disposer: in f. e.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me. But, marry, thus, my lord.—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus—

Helen. My lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord,—

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends himself most affectionately to you.

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody: if you do, our melancholy on your head.

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that’s a sweet queen,—'tis faith—

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad is a sour offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn: that shall it not, in truth, la! Nay, I care not for such words: no, no.—And, my lord, he desires you, that if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen,—my very very sweet queen?

Par. What exploit’s in hand? where sups he tonight?

Helen. Nay, but my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.

Par. I’ll lay my life, with my dispraiser, Cressida.

Pan. No, no; no such matter, you are wide. Come, your dispraiser is sick.

Par. Well, I’ll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say Cressida? no, your poor dispraiser’s sick.

Par. I spy.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy?—Come, give me an instrument.—Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my lord Paris.

Pan. He! no, she’ll none of him; they two are twain.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, I’ll hear no more of this. I’ll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, pr’ythee now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love: this love will undo us all. O, Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Par. Ay, good now; love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so:

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, oh! love bow

Shoots back and doe:

The shaft confounds,

Not that it wounds

But tickles still the sore.

These lovers cry—Oh! oh! they die!

Yet that which seem a wound to kill,

Doth turn ok! ok! to ha! ha! ha!

So dying love lives still:

Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!

Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha—

Hey ho!
Helen. In love; 'tis faith, to the very tip of the nose.
Pan. Her eyes nothing but doves, love.
Pan. And that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.
Helen. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds?—Why, they are vipers: is love a generation of vipers?
Pan. Sweet lord, who's a field to-day?
Par. Hector. Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-day, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?
Helen. He hangs the tip at something.—You know all, lord Pandarus.
Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen.—I long to hear how they sped to-day.—You'll remember your brother's excuse?
Par. To a hair.
Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.
Helen. Commend me to your niece.
Pan. I will, sweet queen. [Exit.
Helen. They're come from field: let us to Priam's hall,
To greet the warriors.
Pan. Sweet Helen, I must woo you
To help unarm our Hector; his stubborn buckles,
With these your white enchancing fingers touch'd,
Shall more obey than to the edge of steel,
Of force of Grecish sinews: you shall do more,
Than all the island kings, disarray great Hector.
Helen. T' will make us proud to be his servant,
Paris:
Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty,
Gives us more palm in beauty than we have:
Yea, overshines ourself.
Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. Pandarus' Orchard.

Enter Pandarus and a Servant, meeting.
Pan. How now! where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?
Serv. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter Troilus.
Pan. O! here he comes.—How now, how now!
Tro. Sirrah, walk off. [Exit Servant.
Pan. Have you seen my cousin?
Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door,
Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks
Staying for waftage. O! be thou my Charon,
And give me swift transortance to those fields,
Where I may wallow in the lily beds
Propos'd for the deserver. O, gentle Pandarus!
From Cupid's shoulder pike his painted wings,
And fly with me to Cressid.
Pan. Walk here i' the orchard: I'll bring her straight.

Enter Pandlus.
Tro. I am giddy: expectation whirls me round.
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet
That it enchants my sense; what will it be,
When that the watery palate tastes indeed
Love's thrice-reproved nectar? death, I fear me;
Swooning destruction; or some joy too fine,
Too subtle-potent, tur'd too sharp in sweetness,
For the capacity of my ruder powers.
I fear it much: and I do fear besides,
That I shall lose distinction in my joys,
As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.

Re-enter Pandarus.
Pan. She's making her ready; she'll come straight:
you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were fray'd with a spite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain: she fetches her breath so short as a new-ta'en sparrow.
[Exit Pandarus.

Tro. Even such a passion-doth embrace my bosom:
My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse,
And all my powers do their bestowing lose,
Like vassalage at unawares encountering
The eye of majesty.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.
Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby.—Here she is now: swear the oath now to her, that you have sworn to me. What! are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you in the fills. — Why do you not speak to her?—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. [Unveiling her. * Alas the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an't were dark, you'd close sooner. So; so rub on; and kiss the mistress.*
How now! a kiss in fee-farm? build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out, ere I part you. The falcon as the terek,* for all the ducks! the river go to, go to.
Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.
Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds; but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What! billing again? Here's—* In witness whereof the parties interchangeably.—Come in, come in: I'll go get a fire.
[Exit Pandarus.
Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?
Tro. O Cressida! how often have I wished me thus?
Cres. Wished, my lord?—The gods grant!—O my lord!
Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption? What too curious dregs espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?
Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.
Tro. Fears make devils of cherubins; they never see truly.
Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason, stumbling without fear: to fear the worst, oft cures the worse.
Tro. O! let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.
Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?
Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough, than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed.
This is the monstrosity in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit.
Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able; and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one.
They that have the voice of lions, and the act of hares, are they not monsters?
Tro. Are there such? such are not we. Praise us as we are tasted; allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare, till merit crown it. No perfection in reversion. shall have a praise in present: we will not name detert, before his birth; and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what envy can say worst, shall be a mock for his truth; and what truth can speak truer, not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter Pandar/us.

Pan. What! blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that: if my lord get a boy of you, you'11 give him me. Be true to my lord; if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word, and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'11 give my word for her too. Our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant, being won: they are burs, I can tell you;
they'11 stick where they are thrown.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart.

Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and day
For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid, then, so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord,
With the first glance that ever — Pardon me,—
If I confess much, you will play the tyrant.
I love you now; but not, till now, so much
But I might master it.—In faith, I lie:
My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown
Too headstrong for their mother: see, we fools!
Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?—
But, though I lov'd you well, I wo'd you not;
And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man,
Or that we women had men's privilege
Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue;
For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak
The thing I shall repent. See, see! your silence,
Cunning in dullness, from my weakness draws
My very soul of counsel.

Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues hence.

Kissing her

Pan. Pretty, i' faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me;
'T was not my purpose thus to beg a kiss.
I am asham'd: —O heavens! what have I done?—
For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid?

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morn-

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun

Yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try.
I have a kind self* that resides with you;
But an unkind self, that itself will leave
To be another's fool. I would be gone.—

Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak, that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I show more craft than love,
And fell so roundly to a large confession,
To angle for your thoughts; but you are wise,
Or else you love not, for to be wise, and love,
Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.

Tro. O! that I thought it could be in a woman,
(As, if it can, I will presume in you)
To feed for aye her lamp and flame of love;
To keep her constancy in plight and youth,
Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind
That doth renew swifter than blood decays:
Or, that persuasion could but thus convince me,
That my integrity and truth to you
Might be apprized with the match and weight
Of such a winnow'd purity in love;
How were I then uplifted! but, alas!
I am as true as truth's simplicity,
And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Tro. O, virtuous fight!
When right with right wars who shall be most right.
True swains in love shall, in the world to come,
Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes, truth tir'd with iteration,—
As true as steel, as plantation  to the moon,
As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,—
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
As truth's authentic author to be cited,
As true as Troilus shall crown up the verse,
And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states character'd are grated
To dusty nothing; yet let memory,
From false to false among false maid's in love,
Upbraid my falsehood. When they have said—as false
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son,
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
As false as Cressid.

Troilus kisses her.

Pan. Go to, a bargain made; seal it, seal it; I'll be the witness.—Here I hold your hand; here, my convin's:—if ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all!—Pandar/us: let all constant men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers-between Pandars! say, amen.

Tro. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber; which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away!
[Exeunt.

And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here,
Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear!
[Exit.

ACT III.
SCENE III.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

583

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp.

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Diomedes, Nestor, Ajax, Menelaus, and Calchas.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you, 'Tis advantage of the time prompts me, aloud To call for recompense. Appeal it to your mind, That, through the sight I bear in things above, I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession, Incur'd a traitor's name; expos'd myself; From certain and possess'd conveniences, To doubtful fortunes; sequestering from me all That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition, Made tame and most familiar to my nature; And here, to do you service, am become As new into the world, strange, unaccustomed: I do beseech you, as in way of taste, To give me now a little benefit, Out of those many register'd in promise, Which, you say, live to come in my behalf. Agam. What wouldst thou of us, Trojan? Make demand.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor, Yesterday took: Troy holds him very dear. Oft have you, (often have you thanks therefore) Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange, Whom Troy hath still denied; but this Antenor, I know, is such a wrest* in their affairs, That their negotiations all must slake, Wanting his manage: and they will almost Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam, In change of him: let him be sent, great princes, And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence Shall quite strike off all service I have done In most accepted pain.

Agam. Let Diomedes bear him, And bring us Cressid hither: Calchis shall have What he requests of us.—Good Diomed, Furnish you fairly for this interchange: Withal, bring word, if Hector will to-morrow Be answer'd in his challenge. Ajax is ready. Dio. This shall I undertake: and 'tis a burden Which I am proud to bear.

Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on A form of strangeness as we pass along; So do each lord: and either greet him not, Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way. Achil. What! comes the general to speak with me? You know my mind: I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy. Agam. What says Achilles? would he aught with us? Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general? Achil. No. Nest. Nothing, my lord.

1 Appear: in f. e. 2 to Love: in f. e. 3 A tuner of musical instruments. Dowce. 4 Not in f. e. 5 Endowed. 6 This and the previous line are not in the folio. 7 married: in f. e.
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat. I was much wrapt in this;
And apprehended here immediately
The unknown Ajax.
Heavens, what a man is there! a very horse;
That has he knows not what. Nature! what things there are,
Most abject in regard, and dear in use:
What things, again, most dear in the esteem,
And poor in worth. Now, shall we see to-morrow,
An act that very chance doth throw upon him,
Ajax renowned. O heavens! what some men do,
While some men leave to do.
How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,
Whiles others play the idiots in her eyes!
How one man eats into another's pride,
While pride is feasting in his wantonness!
To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrieking!

_Achilles._ I do believe it; for they pass'd by me,
As misers do by beggars, neither gave to me.
Good word, nor look. What! are my deeds forgot?
_Ulysses._ Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts alms for oblivion.
A great-sized monster of ingratitude:
Those scraps are good deeds past; which are devour'd
As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done. Perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honour bright: to have done, is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail
In monumental mockery. Take the instant way;
For honour travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast: keep, then, the path
For emulation hath a thousand sons,
That one by one pursue: if you give way,
Or edge aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost;
Or, like a gallant horse fallen in first rank,
Lie there for pavement to the abject rear,
O'er-run and trampled on. Then, what they do in present,
Though less than yours in past, must o'ertop yours;
For time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand,
And with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps-in the comer: welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. Let not virtue seek Remuneration for the thing it was; for beauty, wit,
High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To envious and calumniating time.
One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,—
That all, with one consent, praise new-born gawds,
Though they are made and moulded of things past,
And give to dust, that is a little gill,
More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.
The present eye praises the present object:
Then, marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax,
Since things in motion quicklier catch the eye,
Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again,
If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in thy tent;
Whose glorious deeds, but in the fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drave great Mars to faction.

_Achilles._ Of this my privacy
I have strong reasons.

_Ulysses._ But 'gainst your privacy
The reasons are more potent and heroic.
'T is known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.

_Achilles._ Ha! known?

_Ulysses._ Is that a wonder?
The providence that's in a watchful state
Knows almost every grain of Plutus' gold,
Finds bottom in th' uncomprehensive deeps,
Keeps pace with thought, and almost, like the gods,
Does thoughts unveil in their dumb crudities.
There is a mystery (with whom relation Durst never meddle) in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine
Than breath, or pen, can give expressure to.
All the commerce that you have had with Troy
As perfectly is ours, as yours, my lord;
And better would it fit Achilles much
To throw down Hector, than Polyxena:
But it must grieve young Pyrrhus: now at home,
When fame shall in our islands sound her trump,
And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing,—
"Great Hector's sister did Achilles win,
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him."
Farewell, my lord; I as your lover speak:
The soul eludes o'er the ice that you should break.

Exit.

_Patroclus._ To this effect, Achilles, have I mov'd you.
A woman impudent and mannish grown
Is not more loath'd, than an effeminate man
In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this:
They think, my little stomach to the war,
And your great love to me, restrains you thus.
_Swiftly_rouse yourself; and the weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold,
And, like a dow-droop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air!

_Achilles._ Shall Ajax fight with Hector?

_Patroclus._ Ay; and, perhaps, receive much honour by him.

_Achilles._ I see, my reputation is at stake;
My fame is shrewdly gird'd.

_Patroclus._ O! then beware:
Those wounds heal ill that men do give themselves.
Omission to do what is necessary
Seals a commission to a blank of danger;
And danger, like an ague, subtly taints,
Even then, when we sit idly in the sun.

_Achilles._ Go call Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus.
I'll send the fool to Ajax; and desire him
To invite the Trojan lords, after the combat,
To see us here unarmed. I have a woman's longing,
An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace;
To talk with him, and to behold his visage,
Even to my full of view.—A labour sav'd!

_Enter Thersites._

_Thersites._ A wonder!

_Achilles._ What?

_Thersites._ Ajax goes up and down the field asking for himself.

_Achilles._ How so?

_Thersites._ He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector;
And is so prophetically proud of his heroic endgalling,
that he raves in saying nothing.

_Achilles._ How can that be?
Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock; a stride, and a stand: ruminates, like an hostess, that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning: bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say, 'tis there wit in this head, an 't would out; and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man's undone for ever; for if Hector break not his neck in the combat, he'll break 't himself in vain-glory. He knows not me: I said, 'Good-morrow, Ajax;' and he replies, 'Thanks, Agamemnon.' What think you of this man, that takes me for the general? He's grown a very land-fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him, Therites.

Ther. Who, I? why, he'll answer nobody; he professes not answering; speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in his arms. I will put on his presence: let Patroclus make his demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: tell him,—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe conduct for his person of the magnanimous, and most illustrious, six-or-seven-times-honoured, captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax.

Ther. Humph!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Street.

Enter, at one side, Æneas, and Servant, with a Torch; at the other, Paris. Deiphobus, Antenor, Diomedes, and others, with torches.

Par. See, ho! who is that there?

Dei. It is the lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the prince there in person?

Par. Had so good occasion to lie long.

As you, prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Dio. That's my mind too.—Good morrow, lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Æneas, take his hand, Witness the process of your speech, wherein You told how Diomed, a whole week by days, Did haunt you in the field.

Æne. Health to you, valiant sir, During all question of the gentle truce; But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance, As heart can think, or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces. Our bloods are now so warm, and so long health; But when contention and occasion meets By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life, With all my fierce pursuit, and policy.

Æne. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly With his face backward.—In humane gentleness, Welcome to Troy: now, by Æneas' life, Welcome, indeed. By Venus' hand I swear, No man alive can love, in such a sort, The thing he means to kill, more excellently.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent.—

Ther. Humph!

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to 't?

Ther. God be wi' you with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other: howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this time, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out of tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not; but, I am sure, none, unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make callings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse, for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd; And I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus.

Ther. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it. I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance.

[Exit.
Dio. Both alike:
He merits well to have her, that doth seek her
Not making any scruple of her solace,
With such a hell of pain, and world of charge;
And you as well to keep her, that defend her
Not palating the taste of her dishonour,
With such a costly loss of wealth and friends.
He, like a piling eucokid, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece;
You, like a leecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleased to bleed out your inheritors;
Both merits pois'd, each weighs nor less nor more;
But he as he, each heavier for a whore.

Par. You are too bitter to your countrywoman.
Dio. She's bitter to her country. Hear me, Paris:
For every false drop in her bawdy veins
A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple
Of her contaminated carrion weight,
A Trojan hath been slain. Since she could speak,
She hath not given so many good words breath,
As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy;
But we in silence hold this virtue well,—
We'll not commend what we intend not sell.
Here lies our way. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Same. A Court before the House of Pandarus.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself: the morn is cold.
Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down;
He shall unbolt the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not;
To bed, to bed; sleep kill these pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses,
As infants' empty of all thought!

Cres. Good morrow, then.

Tro. Pr'ythee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you aware of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, hath rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer,
I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Brishew the witch! with venomous wights she stays,
As tidiously as hell; but flies the grasps of love,
With wings more momentary-swift than thought.
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. Pr'ythee, tarry.

You men will never tarry.
O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off,
And, then, you would have had any.

Hark! there's one up.

Pan. [Within.] What! are all the doors open here?

Tro. It is your uncle.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking;
I shall have such a life—

Pan. How now, how now! how go maidenheads?—
Here, you maid; where's my cousin Cressid?

Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!
You bring me to do,—and then you fliest me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what?—let her say what:
—what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come; brishew your heart! you'll ne'er be good,
Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor cupachio!
—hast not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man,
let it sleep? a bugbear take him! [Knocking.

Cres. Did not I tell you?—would he were knocked off the head!—

Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.—
My lord, come you again into my chamber:
You smile, and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd; I think of no such thing.—

[Knocking.

How earnestly they knock.—Pray you, come in:
I would not for half 'troy have you seen here.

Pan. [Going to the door.] Who's there? what's the matter?
will you beat down the door?—How now?
what's the matter?—

[Opening it.

Enter Æneas.

Æne. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my lord Æneas! By my troth,
I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Æne. Is not prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here?

Æne. Come, he is here, my lord; do not deny him:
it doth import him much to speak with me.

Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I know, I'll be sworn:—for my own part, I came in late. What should he do here?

Æne. Who!—nay, then:—come, come, you'll do him wrong ere ye are ware. You'll be so true to him, to be false to him. Do not you know of him, but yet go fetich him hither: go.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. How now! what's the matter?

Æne. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash. There is at hand
Paris your brother, and Deiphobus,
The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor
Deliver'd to us; and for him, forthwith,
Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour,
We must give up to Diomedes' hand
The lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Æne. By Priam, and the general state of Troy:
They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!
I will go meet them:—and, my lord Æneas,
We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Æne. Good, good, my lord; the secret of nature,
Have no more gift in taciturnity. [Exeunt Troil. & Æne.

Pan. Is it possible? no sooner got; but lost? The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad.
A plague upon Antenor! I would, they had broke's neck!

Enter Cressida.

Cres. How now! What is the matter? Who was here?

Pan. Ah! ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord? gone!
Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Cres. O the gods!—what's the matter?

Pan. Pr'ythee, get thee in. Would thou hadst ne'er been born! I knew, thou wouldst be his death.—
O poor gentleman!—A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you, on my knees I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench; thou must be gone: thou art changed for Antenor. Thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus: 'will be his death; 't will be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O, you immortal gods!—I will not go.
Pan. Thou must.
Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father; I know no touch of consanguinity;
No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me,
As the sweet Troilus.—O, you gods divine,
Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood,
If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death,
Do to this body what extremes you can,
But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very centre of the earth,
Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in, and weep.
Pan. Do, do.
Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks;
Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my heart
With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before Pandaros' House.
Enter Paris, Troilus, Enclas, Deiphobus, Antenor, and Diomedes.
Par. It is great morning, and the hour prefix'd
Of her delivery to this valiant Greek
Comes fast upon.—Good my brother Troilus,
Tell you the lady what she is to do,
And haste her to the purpose.
Tro. Walk into her house,
I'll bring her to the Grecian presently;
And to his hand when I deliver her,
Think it an altar, and thy brother Troilus
A priest, there offering to it his own heart. [Exit.
Par. I know what 'tis to love;
And would, as I shall pity, I could help!—
Please you, walk in, my lords. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Room in Pandaros' House.
Enter Pandaros and Cressida.
Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.
Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?
The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,
And violent[1] in a sense as strong
As that which causeth it: how can I moderate it?
If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment could I give my grief:
My love admits no qualifying dress[2],
No more my grief, in such a precious loss.
[Exeunt Troilus.
Pan. Here, here, here he comes.—A sweet duck!
Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too.
O heart,—as the goody saying is,—
O heart, O heart. O heavy heart!
Why sigh'st thou without breaking?
where he answers again,
Because thou cast not ease thy smart,
There was never a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse: we see it, we see it.—How now, lambus! Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd[1] a purity,
That the bliss'd gods—as angry with my fancy,
More bright in zeal than the devotion which
Cold lips blow to their deities,—take thee from me.
Cres. Have the gods envy?
Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay: 'tis too plain a case.
Cres. And is it true, that I must go from Troy?
Tro. A hateful truth.
Cres. What! and from Troilus too?
Pan. From Troy, and Troilus.
Tro. Is it possible?
Cres. And suddenly; where injury of chance
Puts back leave-taking, justly angered
By all time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoinder, forebodings I I I I
Our lock'd embrasures, strange their dear vows
Even in the birth of our own labouring breath.
We two, that with so many thousand sighs
Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves
With the rude brevity and discharge of one.
Injurious time, now, with a robber's haste,
Crams his rich thievry up, he knows not how:
As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up into one loose adieu;
And scant's us with a single fanish'd kiss,
Dissolute with the salt of broken tears.
[Aside. Within.] My lord! is the lady ready?
Tro. Hark! you are call'd: some say, the Genius so
Cres. Come! to him that instantly must die.—
Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.
Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind,
Or my heart will be blown up by the root! [Exit Pand. Cres. I must then to the Grecians?
Tro. No remedy.
Cres. A woeful Cressid mongst the merry Greeks!
When shall we see again?
Tro. Hear me, my love. Be thou but true of heart—
Cres. I true? how now! what wicked deem is this?
Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,
For it is parting from us. I speak not, "be thou true," as fearing thee;
For I will throw my glove to death himself;
That there's no maculation in thy heart;
But, "be thou true," say I, to fashion in My sequent protestation. Be thou true,
And I will see thee.
Cres. O! you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers
As infinite as imminent: but I'll be true.
Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.
Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?
Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.
But yet, be true.
Cres. O heavens!—be true, again?
Tro. Hear why I speak it, love,
The Grecian youths are full of quality;
Their loving well composed with gift of nature,
Flowing and swelling o'er with arts and exercise:
How novelties may move, and parts with person,
Alas! a kind of godly jealousy
(Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin)
Makes me afraid.
Cres. O heavens! you love me not.
Tro. Die I a villain, then! In this I do not call your faith in question,
So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high loyal[4], nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,
To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant:
But I can tell, that in each grace of those

There lurks a still and dumb-discourse devil, That tempts most cunningly. But be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think, I will?

Tro. No;

But something may be done, that we will not:
And sometimes we are devils to ourselves,
When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their changeful potency.

Æne. [Within.] Nay, good my lord,—

Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus!

Tro. Good brother, come you hither;

And bring Æneas, and the Grecian, with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault;

Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch more simplicity;

Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.

Fear not my truth: the moral of my wit
Is plain, and true,—there's all the reach of it.

Enter Æneas, Paris, Antenor, Deiphobus, and Diomedes.

Welcome, sir Diomed. Here is the lady, Which for Antenor we deliver you:

At the port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand,
And by the way possess thee what she is. Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek, If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword, Name Cressida, and thy life shall be as safe, As Priam is in Ilion.

Dio. Fair lady Cressid,

So please you, save the thanks this prince expects: The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek; Plead your fair usage; and to Diomed You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously, To shame the zeal of my petition to thee, In praising her. I tell thee, lord of Greece, She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises, As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant. I charge thee, use her well, even for my charge; For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not, Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard, I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O! be not mov'd, prince Troilus.

Let me be privilieg'd by my place, and message, To be a speaker free: when I am hence, I'll answer to thy last; and know you, lord, I'll nothing do on charge. To her own worth She shall be priz'd; but that you say—be'st so, I'll speak it in my spirit and honour,—no.

Tro. Come to the port.—I'll tell thee, Diomed, This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head.

Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk, To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

[Exeunt Tro. Cres. and Diom. Trumpet sounded.]

Par. Hawk! Hector's trumpet.

Æne. How have we spent this morning!

The prince must think me tardy and remiss, That swore to ride before him to the field. [him.]

Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault. Come, come, to field with

Dei. Let us make ready straight.

Æne. You, with a bottle deck'd from fresh alacrity,
Let us address to tend on Hector's heels, The glory of our Troy doth this day lie On his fair worth, and some chivalry. [Exeunt.

Enter Ajax, armed; Agamemnon, Achilles, Patroclus, Menelaus, Ulysses, Nestor, and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh and fair, Anticipating time. With startling courage Give with thy trumpet a hark to Troy, Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air May pierce the head of the greater combatant, And hail him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse.

Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe: Blow, villain, till thy sphere'd bias cheek Out-swell the colic of puff'd Aquilon. Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood;

Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.]

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Achil. 'T is but early day. Agam. Is not yond Diomed with Galæas' daughter? Ulyss. 'T is he, I ken the manner of his gait; He rises on the horse: that spirit of his In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter Diomed, with Cressida. Agam. Is this the lady Cressid?

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss. [Kissing her.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular;

'Twere better she were kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin.—

[Putting him back.]

So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair lady; Achilles bids you welcome. [Kissing her.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now:

For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment,

And parted thus you and your argument. [Kissing her.

Ulyss. O! deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns,

For which we lose our heads, to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss;—this mine:

Patroclus kisses you. [Kissing her again.]

Men. O! this is trim.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir,—Lady, by your leave. Cres. In kissing do you render or receive?

Patr. Both take and give.

Cres. I'll make my match to live.

The kiss you take is better than you give;

Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot; I'll give you three for one.

Cres. You're an odd man; give even, or give none.

Men. An odd man, lady? every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true, That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You fillip me o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sworn.

Ulyss. It were no match, your nail against his horn.—

May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may.

Ulyss. I do desire it.

Cres. Why, beg then.

Ulyss. Why then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss, When Helen is a maid again, and his.

Cres. I am your debtor; claim it when 'tis due.

Ulyss. Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.
SCENE V.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA. • 559

Did in great Ilium thus translate him to me.

[Alarum. Hector and Ajax fight.

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own.

Tro. Hector, thou sleep'st:

Awake thee!

Agam. His blows are well dispos'd:—there, Ajax!

Dio. You must no more.

[Trumpets cease.

Hec. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet: let us fight again.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hec. Why then, will I no more.—Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son, A cousin-german to great Priam's seed; The obligation of our blood forbids A gory emulation 'twixt us twain. Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so, That thou couldst say—'This hand is Grecian all, And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister Bounds in my father's?' by Jove multipotent, Thou shouldest not bear from me a Grecian member Wherein my sword had not impressure made Of our rank feud. But the just gods gainsay, That any drop thou borrow'dst from thy mother, My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword Be drain'd. Let me embrace thee, Ajax.—

By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms. Hector would have them fall upon him thus: Cousin, all honour to thee! [They embrace.

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector:

Thou art too gentle, and too free a man. I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence A great addition earned in thy death.

Hec. Not Neoptolemus so mirable On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st Oyez Cries, 'This is he!' could promise to himself A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

There is expectation here from both the sides, What farther you will do.

Hec. We'll answer it;
The issue is embrace.—Ajax, fare well. Ajax. If I might in entertainments find success, As said I have the chance, I would desire My famous cousin to our Grecian tents. Dio. 'T is Agamemnon's wish: and great Achilles Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector. Hec. Eneas, call my brother Troilus to me; And signify this loving interview To the expectors of our Trojan part:

Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my cousin; I will go eat with thee, and see your knights. Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

Hec. The worthieth of them tell me, name by name; But for Achilles, mine own searching eyes Shall find him by his large and portly size. Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one That would be rid of such an enemy. But that's no welcome: understand more clear. What's past, and what's to come, is screwed with husks And forfend not ruin of oblivion; But in this extant moment, faith and troth, Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing, Bids thee, with most divine integrity, From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome. Hec. I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon.

Agam. My well-fam'd lord of Troy, no less to you.

[To Troilus.
Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting:
You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.
Hec. Whom must we answer?

TROILUS

Aene.
The noble Mecenas.
Hec. O! you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet, thanks.
Mock not, that I affect th' untraded oath:
Your quomdam wife swears still by Venus' glove; She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.
Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.
Hec. O! pardon; I offend.

Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,
Labouring for destiny, make cruel way
Through ranks of Greekish youth: and I have seen thee,
As hot as Perseus, spurn thy Phrygian steed,
Despising many forfoits and subduements,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' th' air,
Not letting it decline on the declin'd;
That I have said unto my standers-by,
"Lo! Jupiter is yonder, dealing life."
And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling: this have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now. I know thy grandsire,
And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;
But, by great Mars the captain of us all,
Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

Aene. 'Tis the old Nestor.
Hec. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time.
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.
Nest. I would my arms could match thee in contention,
As they contend with thee in courtesy.
Hec. I would they could.

Nest. Ha! by this white beard, I'd fight with thee to-morrow.
Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time.
Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands,
When we have here her base and pillar by us.
Hec. I know your favour, lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir! there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In lion, on your Greekish embassy.
Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:
My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that portly front your town,
Yond' towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet.
Hec. I must not believe you.
There they stand yet; and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: the end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.
Ulyss. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome.
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and see me at my tent.
Achil. I shall forestall thee, lord Ulysses, then.
Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee:
I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.
Hec. Is this Achilles?
Achil. I am Achilles.
Hec. Stand fair, I pray thee; let me look on thee.

Achil. Behold thy fill.

Hec. Nay, I have done already.
Achil. Thou art too brief: I will the second time,
As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.
Hec. O! like a book of sport thou 'tis read me o'er;
But there's more in me than thou understand'st.

Nest. Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?
Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of my body
Shall I destroy him, whether there, there, or there?
That I may give the local wound a name,
And make distinct the very breach, whereon
Hector's great spirit flew. Answer me, heavens!
Hec. It would discredit the bless'd gods, proud man,
To answer such a question. Stand again;
Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly,
As to predominate in nice conjecture,
Where thou wilt hit me dead?

Achil. I tell thee, yea.
Hec. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well,
For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there;
But, by the forge that stithied Mars his helm,
I'll kill thee everywhere, yea, o'er and o'er.—

You, wise Grecians, pardon me this brag:
His insolence draws folly from my lips:
But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,
Or may I never—

Ajax. Do not chafe thee, cousin:—
And you, Achilles, let these threats alone,
Till accident, or purpose, bring you to't;
You may have every day enough of Hector,
If you have stomach. The general state, I fear,
Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.
Hec. I pray you, let us see you in the field:
We have had pelling wars, since you refuse'd
The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector? To-morrow, do I meet thee, fell as death;
To-night, all friends.
Hec. Thy hand upon that match.
Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent;
There in the full convive we afterwards,
As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall Concur together, severally entreat him.—
Beat loud the tumblin'es, let the trumpets blow;
That this great soldier may his welcome know.

[Exeunt all but Troilus and Ulysses.

Tro. My lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,
In what place of the field doth Callcas keep?
Ulyss. At Mecenas' tent, most princely Troilus:
There Diomed doth feast with him to-night;
Who neither looks upon the heaven, nor earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the fair Cressida.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,
After we part from Agamemnon's tent,
To bring me thither?

Ulyss. You shall command me, sir.
As gentle tell me, of what honour was
This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there
That wails her absence?

Tro. O, sir! to such as boasted show their scars,
A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord?
She was belov'd, she lov'd; she is, and doth:
But still sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

[Exeunt.
ACT V.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. I’ll heat his blood with Grecian wine to-night; Which with my scimitar I’ll cool to-morrow. Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Thersites.

Enter Thersites.

Achil. From whence, fragment? Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy. Patr. Who keeps the tent now? Ther. The surgeon’s box, or the patient’s wound. Patr. Well said, adversity! and what need these tricks? Ther. Prythee be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk; thou art thought to be Achilles’ male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet, you rogue! what’s that.

Ther. Why, his meagrelin where, Now the rotten diseases of the south, the gut-chapping, ruptures, cuisarrows, loads o’ gravel i’ the back, lethargies, cold palisies, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthume, sciaticas, limb-kilms i’ the palm, incredible bone-ache, and the rivelled fee-simple of the tetter, take and take again such preposterous discoulours!

Achil. Why, thou damned box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr. Why no, you ruinous butt, you whoreson indistinguishable curt, no.

Ther. No? why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sneave silk, thou green scarlet flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal’s purse, thou? Ah! how the poor world is pestered with such water-fowl, diminutives of nature?

Patr. Out, gall!

Ther. Finch eggs!

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite From my great purpose in to-morrow’s battle. Here is a letter from queen Hecuba; A token from her daughter, my fair love; Both taxing me, and ‘gaging me to keep An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it: Fall Greeks, fall name, honour, or go, or stay, My major vow lies here; this I’ll obey.— Come, come, Thersites, help to trim my tent; This night in banqueting must all be spent.

Away, Patroclus. [Exit Achil. and Patroclus.

Ther. With too much blood, and too little brain, these two may run mad: but if with too much brain, and too little blood, they do, I’ll be a curer of madmen. Here’s Agamemnon,—an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quails; but he has not so much brain as car-wax: and the goodly transformation of Jupiter there, his brother, the bull,—the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckolds, a thrifty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother’s leg,—to what form, but that he is, should wilt larded with malice, and malice forced with wit, turn him to? To an ass, were nothing: he is both ass and ox; to an ox were nothing; he is both ox and ass. To be a dog; a mule, a cat, a fly, a toad, a lizard, an owl, a putock, or a her-
Tro. Yea, so familiar!
Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.
Ther. And any man may find her key; if he can take her eft; ’tis noted.
Dio. Will you remember?
Dio. Nay, but do then; and let your mind be coupled with your words.
Tro. What should she remember?
Ulyss. List.
Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.
Ther. Queroy?
Dio. Nay, then,—
Cres. I'll tell you what—
Dio. Pho! pho! come tell, a pin; you are forsworn.—
Cres. In faith, I cannot. What would you have me do?
Ther. A juggling trick,—to be secretly open.
Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?
Cres. I pr'ythee, do not hold me to mine oath;
Bid me do any thing but, that, sweet Greek.
Dio. Good night.
Tro. Hold, patience!
Ulyss. How now, Trojan?
Cres. Diomed!—
Dio. No, no; good night! I'll be your fool no more.
Tro. Thy better must.
Cres. O, plague and madness!
Ulyss. You are mov'd; prince: let us depart, I pray you,
Lest your displeasure should enrage itself.
To wrathful terms. This place is dangerous;
The time right deadly: I beseech you, go.
Tro. Behold, I pray you! 1
Ulyss. Nay, my good lord, go off;
You flow to great distraction; come, my lord.
Tro. I pr'ythee, stay.
Ulyss. You have not patience; come.
Tro. I pray you, stay. By hell, and all hell's torments,
I will not speak a word.
Dio. And so, good night.
Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.
Tro. Doth that grieve thee?
Dio. O, wither'd truth!
Ulyss. Why, how now, lord!
Tro. By Jove, I will be patient.
Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek!
Dio. Pho, pho! adieu; you palter.
Cres. In faith, I do not: come hither once again.
Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something: will you go?
You will break out.
Tro. She strokes his cheek!
Ulyss. Come, come.
Tro. Nay, stay: by Jove, I will not speak a word.
There is between my will and all offences
A guard of patience.—Stay a little while.
Ther. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump and potato finger, tickles these together! Fry; lechery, fry!
Dio. But will you then?
Cres. In faith, I will, lord: I never trust me else.
Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.
Cres. I'll fetch you one. 2
[Exit Ulyss.]
Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve. 3
[Giving it.]
Tro. O beauty! where is thy faith?
Ulyss. My lord,—
Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.
Cres. You look upon that sleeve; behold it well.—
He lov'd me—O false wench!—Give 't me again.
Dio. Whose was 't?
Cres. It is no matter, now I have 't again
I will not meet with you to-morrow night.
I pr'ythee, Diomed, visit me no more.
Ther. Now she sharpens.—Well said, whetstone.
Dio. I shall have it.
Cres. What, this?
Dio. Ay, that.
Cres. O, all you gods!—O pretty, pretty pledge!
Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee, and me; and signs, and takes my glove,
And gives memorial dainty kisses to it,
As I kiss thee.—Nay, do not snatch it from me;
He that takes that doth take my heart withal,
Dio. I had your heart before; this follows it.
Tro. I did swear patience.
Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed; faith you shall not:
I'll give you something else. 4
[They strive.]
Dio. I will have this. Whose was it?
Cres. 'Tis no matter.
Dio. Come, tell me whose it was.
Cres. 'T was one's that lov'd me better than you will.
But, now you have it, take it.
Dio. Whose was it?
Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women yond, 5
And by herself, I will not tell you whose.
Dio. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm,
And gripe his spirit that dares not challenge it.
Tro. Wert thou the devil, and worst it on thy horn,
It should be challeng'd. 6
Cres. Well, well, 't is done, 't is past;—and yet it is not:
I will not keep my word.
Dio. Why then, farewell,
Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.
Cres. You shall not go.—One cannot speak a word,
But it straight starts you.
Dio. I do not like this fooling.
Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you, 7 pleases me best.
Dio. What! shall I come? the hour?
Cres. Ay, come:—O Jove!—
Do come:—I shall be plaguid.
Dio. Farewell till then.
Cres. Good night: I pr'ythee, come.— 8
[Exit Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee,
But with my heart the other eye doth see.
Ah, poor our sex! this fault in us I find,
The eye of our error directs our mind.
What error leads must err: O! then conclude,
Minds, sway'd by eyes, are full of turpitude.
[Exit Cressida.]
Ther. A proof of strength, she could not publish more,
Unless she said, "my mind is now turn'd where."
Ulyss. All's done, my lord.
Tro. It is.
Ulyss. Why stay we then?
Tro. To make a recordation to my soul
Of every syllable that here was spoke.
But if I tell how these two did co-act,
Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?
Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esperance so obstinately strong,
That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears;
As if those organs had desperatities,
Created only to delude.
Was Cressid here?

Ulyss. I cannot conjure, Trojan.

Tro. She was not, sure.

Ulyss. Most sure, she was.

Tro. Why, my negotiation hath no taste of madness,
Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here but now.

Tro. Let it not be believed for womanhood!
Think we had mothers: do not give advantage
To stubborn critics—apt, without a theme,
For depravation,—to square the general sex
By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.

Ulyss. What hath she done, prince, that can soil
Our mothers?

Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were she.

Ther. Will he swagger himself out on 'eare own eyes?

Tro. This she? no; this is Diomed's Cressida.

If beauty have a soul, this is not she:
If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimony,
If sanctimony be the gods' delight,
If there be rule in unity itself,
This is not she. O madness of discourse,
That cause sets up with and against itself!
Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolve!
Without perdition, and loss assume all reason
Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid.
Within my soul there doth conduce a fight
Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparable
Divides more wider than the sky and earth;
And yet the spacious breadth of this division
Admits no orifice for a point, as subtle
As Arachne's broken web, to enter.

Instance? Or instance? strong as Pluto's gates,
Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven:
Instance? Or instance? strong as heaven itself;
The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolv'd, and loos'd
And with another knot, five-finger-tied,
The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraped, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are given to Diomed.

Ulyss. May worthy 'Troilus be half attach'd
With that, which here his passion doth express?

Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divulged well
In characters as red as Mars his heart
Inflam'd with Venus: never did young man fancy
With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.

Hark, Greek:—as much as I do Cressid love,
So much by weight hate I her Diomed.
That sleeve is mine, that he'll bear on his helm:
Were it a casque composed by Vulcan's skill,
My sword should bite it. Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
Constring'd in mass by the Almighty wind,
Shall dizzy with more amour Neptune's car
In his descent, than shall my promised sword
Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He'll tickle it for his coney.

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false!
Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
And they'll seem glorious.

Ulyss. O! contain yourself;

Ther. To be sure; such airs serve not.

Ulyss. Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter Aeneas.

Aene. I have been seeking this hour, my lord.

Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy:
Ajax, your guard, stays to conduct you home.

Tro. Have with you, prince.—My courteous lord, adieu.—

Farewell, revolted fair!—and, Diomed,
Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!

Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates.

Tro. Accept distracted thanks.

[Exit TROILUS, AENEAS, AND ULYSSES.

Ther. [Coming forward.] Would, I could meet that rogue Diomed. I would crook like a raven; I would bode. I would bode. Patroclus will give me any thing

For the intelligence of this whore: the parrot will not do more for an almond, than he for a commodious drab.

Lechery, lechery; still, wars and lechery: nothing else holds fashion. A burning devil take them! [Exit.]

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. When was my lord so much ungently tempr'd,
To stop his ears against admonishment?

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in:

For all the everlasting gods, I'll go.

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to-day
Hect. No more, I say.

Enter Cassandra.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here, sister: arm'd, and blood to intent.

Consent with me in love and dear petition:

Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd
Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night
Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.
Cas. O! 'tis true.

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound.

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hect. Begone, I say: the gods have heard me swear.

Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish* vows:
They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And. O! be persuaded: do not count it holy
To hurt by being just: it is as lawful
For us to give much count to violent thefts,
And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow;
But vows to every purpose must not hold.

Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say,

Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:

Life every man holds dear; but the dear man

Holds honour far more precious—dear than life.—

Enter Troilus.

How now, young man? mean'st thou to fight to-day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

[Exit Cassandra.

Hect. No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth;

I am to-day the vein of chivalry.

Let slow thy shews till their knots be strong,

And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.

Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy,

I'll stand to-day for thee, and me, and Troy,

Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,
Which better fits a lion than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

Tro. When many times the captive Grecians fall,

Even in the fan and wind of your fair-sword,

* The folio: "For we would count give much
No to as violent thefts." The line has been variously arranged by modern editors. "For we would give much, to so count violent thefts," is one of the best.
You bid them rise, and live.
Hect. O! it is fair play.
Tro. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.
Hect. How now! how now!
Tro. For the love of all the gods,
Let 's leave the hermit pity with our mothers,
And when we have our armours buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords;
Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.
Hect. Fie, savage, fie!
Tro. Hector, then 't is wars.
Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.
Tro. Who should withhold me?
Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars
Becoming with fiery trocnechon my retire;
Not Priamms and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergalled with remorse of tears
Nor you, my brother, with thy true sword drawn,
Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way,
But by my ruin.

Re-enter Cassandra with Priam.
Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast:
He is thy euloch; now, if thou lose thy stay,
Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,
Fall all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come; go back.
Thy wife hath dream'd, thy mother hath visions,
Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself
Am like a prophet suddenly enrapt,
To tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore, come back.

Hect. wences is a field;
And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks,
Even in the faith of valour, to appear
This morning to them.

Pri. Ay, but thou shalt not go.
Hect. I must not break my faith.
You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir,
Let me not shamo respect, but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice,
Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.
Cas. O Priam! yield not to him.

And. Do not, dear father.
Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you:
Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl
Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O farewell, dear Hector!
Look, how thou diest! look, how thine eye turns pale!
Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents!
Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out!
How poor Andromache shrills her dolour forth!
Behold, distraction, frenzy, and amazement,
Like witless antics, one another meet,
And all cry—Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector!

Tro. Away!—Away!—
Cas. Farewell.—Yet, soft!—Hector, I take thy leave:
Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive.

Hect. You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclain.
Go in, and cheer the town: we'll forth, and fight;
Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at night.

Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee!

[Exeunt severely Priam and Hector. Alarums.

Tro. They are at it; hark!—Proud Priam, believe,
SCENE V.—The Same.

Enter DIONYSES and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse; Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid. Fellow, commend my service to her beauty: Tell her, I have chastis'd the amorous Trojan, And am her knight by proof.

Serv. I go, my lord. [Exit Servant.

Enter AGAMEMNON.

Agam. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamus Hath heat down Menon: bastard Margarelon Hath Doreus prisoner, And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam, Upon the passed corseds of the kings Epistrophus and Cælius: Polichenes is slain; Amphimachus, and Thon, deadly hurt; Patroclus ta'en, or slain; and Palamedes Sore hurt and bruised: the dreadful Sagittary Appals our numbers. Haste we, Dionysus, To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter NESTOR.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles, And bid the snail-pae'd Ajax arm for shame. — There is a thousand Hectors in the field: Now, here he fights on Galathe his horse, And there lacks work; anon, he's there afoot, And there they fly, or die, like seamed souls Before the beleeding whale: then, is he yonder, And there the stragy Greeks, ripe for his edge, Fall down before him, like the mower's swath. Here, there, and every where, he leaves, and takes; Dexterity so obeying appetite,

That what he will, he does: and does so much, That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter ULYSSES.

Ulys. O, courage, courage, princes! great Achilles Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance. Patroclus' wounds have rous'd his drowsy blood, Together with his mangled Myrmidons, That noseless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd, come to him, Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend, And foams at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it, Roaring for Troilus: who hath done to-day A mad and fantastic execution.

Engaging and redeeming of himself, With such a careless force, and forceless care, As if that lack, in very spight of cunning, Bade him win all.

Enter AJAX.

Dio. Ay, there, there.

Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Where is this Hector? Come, come, thou boy-queller, show thy face; Know what it is to meet Achilles angry. Hector I where's Hector? I will none but Hector. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus?

Ajax. What wouldst thou?

Dio. I would correct him.

Ajax. Were I the general, thou shouldest have my office,
SCENE IX.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Hector.

Hec. Most putrified core, so fair without,
Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.
Now is my day's work done; I'll take good breath:
Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death!

[Plucks off his Helmet, and lays down his Sword.

Enter Achilles and Myrmidons.

Achill. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;
How ugly night comes breathing at his heels:
Even with the vail1 and darkening of the sun,
To close the day up, Hector's life is done.
Hec. I am unarm'd: forego this vantage, Greek.
Achill. Strike, fellows, strike! this is the man I seek.

[Hector is slain.

So, llion, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down;
Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.—
On, Myrmidons; and cry ye all aaim.
Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

[Retreat sounded.

Hark! a retreat2 upon our Grecian part.

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord.
Achill. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,
And, stickler3 like, the armies separates.
My half-suppd sword, that frankly would have fed,
Pleas'd with this dainty bit,4 thus goes to bed.—

[Sheathes his Sword.

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail;
Along the field I will the Trojan trail.

[Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The Same.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomedes, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that?
Nest. Peace, drums! Achilles!

[Achilles' voice.

Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!

Dio. The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.4

Ajet. If it be so, yet bragless let it be:
Great Hector was a man as good as he.

Agam. March patiently along.—Let one be sent
To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—
If in his death the gods have us befriended,
Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.

[Exeunt, marching.

SCENE XI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Agamemnon and Trojan Forces.

Aene. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field.
Never go home: here starve we out the night.

[Exeunt.

SCENE XI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. Hector is slain.

All. Hector?—The gods forbid!
Troy. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail,
In beastly sort drag'd through the shamefull field.

Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed!
Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy!
I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy,
And linger not our sure destructions on!

Aene. My lord, you do discomfit all the host.
Tro. You understand me not, that tell me so.
I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all imminence, that gods and men
Address their dangers in. Hector is gone!
Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?
Let him, that will a screech-owl aye be call'd,
Go in to Troy, and say there—Hector's dead:
There is a word will Priam turn to stone,
Make wells and Nieces of the maids and wives,
Cold! statues of the youth; and, in a word,
Scare Troy out of itself. But, march away:
Hector is dead; there is no more to say.
Stay yet.—You vile abominable tents,
Thus proudly pligt6 upon our Phrygian plains,
Let Titan rise as early as he dare,
I'll through and through you!—And, thou great-siz'd coward,

No space of earth shall surder our two hates;
I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still,
That mouldeth goblins swift as frenzy's thoughts.—

Strike a free march to Troy!—with comfort go:
Hope of retenge shall hide our inward woe.

[Exeunt Aeneas and Trojan forces.

As Troilus is going out, enter, from the other side,

Pandarus.

Pan. But hear you, hear you!

Tro. Hence, brothel-lackey! ignomy and shame
Pursue thy life, and live alive with thy name!

[Exit Troilus.

Pan. A goodly medicine for mine aching bones—
[Left alone, let him say this by way of Epilogue.]
O word! world! world! thus is the poor agent desipd. O, traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a work, and how ill requited! why should our endeavour be so loved46, and the performance so loathed? what verse for it? what instance for it?—Let me see.—

"Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing,
Till he hath lost his honey, and his stig;
And being once subdued in armed tail,
Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail."

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths.11

As many as be here of Panda's Hall,
Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall; Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans, Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.
Brethren, and sisters, of the hold-door trade, Some two months hence my will shall here be made: It should be now, but that my fear is this,— Some galled goose of Winchester12 would hiss. Till then I'll sweat, and seek about for cuses; And at that time bequeath you my diseases. [Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.
Enter a Company of mutinous Citizens, with Staves, Clubs, and other Weapons.

1 Cit. Before we proceed any farther, hear me speak. All. Speak, speak.
1 Cit. You are all resolved rather to die, than to famish? All. Resolved, resolved.
1 Cit. First you know, Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.
All. We know 't, we know 't.
1 Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is 't a verdict?
All. No more talking 't; let it be done. Away, away! 2 Cit. One word, good citizens.—
1 Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patriots good. What authority surfeits on, will relieve us: if they would yield us but the superfluity, while it was wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely; but they think, we are too dear: the leanness that afflicts us, the abjectness of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufferance is a gain to them.—Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes: for the gods know, I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.
2 Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?
All. Against him first: he's a very dog to the commonwealth.
2 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?
1 Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for't, but that he pays himself with being proud.
2 Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.
1 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end: though soft-conscienced men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and partly to be proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.

1 object: in f. o. 2 All: in folio.
ACT I.

2 Cit. Care for us?—True, indeed!—They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses crammed with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily every wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious,
Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you
A pretty tale: it may be, you have heard it;
But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture
To scale 't a little more.

2 Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir; yet you must not think
To fob off our disgraces with a tale;
But, an't please you, deliver

Men. There was a time, when all the body's members Rebeld against the belly; thus accus'd it:—
That only like a gulf it did remain
P the midst o' the body, idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest; where th' other instruments
Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And, mutually participate, did minister
Unto the appetite, and affection common
Of the whole body. The belly answered.—

2 Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile,
Where'er came from the lungs, but even thus,
(For, look you, I may make the belly smile,
As awell as speak) it tauntingly replied
To the discontented members, the mutinous parts
That envied his receipt; even so most fitly
As you malign our senators, for that
They are not such as you.

2 Cit. Your belly's answer? What?
The kingly crowned head, the vigilant eye,
The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier,
Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter,
With other muniments and petty helps
In this our fabric, if that they—

Men. What then?

For once, this fellow speaks!—what then? what then?

2 Cit. Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd,
Who is the sink o' the body;—

Men. Well, what then?

2 Cit. The former agents, if they did complain,
What could the belly answer?

Men. I will tell you,
If you 'lt bestow a small (of what you have little)
Patience a while, you'll hear the belly's answer.

2 Cit. Ye' are long about it.

Men. Note me this, good friend;
Your most grave belly was deliberate,
Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd:—
"True is it, my incorporative friends," quoth he,
"That I receive the general food at first,
Which you do live upon; and fit it is,
Because I am the store-house, and the shop
Of the whole body: but if you do remember,
I send it through the rivers of your blood,
Even to the court, the heart, the senate, brain;:
And through the ranks and officers of man:
The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,
From me receive that natural competency
Whereby they live. And though that all at once,
You, my good friends," this says the belly, mark me.—

What says the other troop?

Mar. They are dissolved. Hang 'em! They said, they were an-hungry; sigh'd forth proverbs,—

That hunger broke stone walls; that dogs must eat; That meat was made for months; that the gods sent not Corn for the rich men only.—With these shreds They vented their complainings; which being answer'd, And a petition granted them, a strange one, (To break the heart of generosity, And make bold power look pale) they throw'd their capes As they would hang them on the horns of the moon, Shouting their exultation.

Men. What is granted them?

Mar. Five tribunes, to defend their vulgar wisdoms, Of their own choice: one's Junius Brutus, Sicinius Velutus, and I know not—Sleath! The rabble should have first unroof'd the city, Ere so prevail'd with me: it will in time Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes For insurrection's arising.

Men. This is strange.

Mar. Go; get you home, you fragments! Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where's Caius Marcius?

Mar. Here. What's the matter?

Mess. The news is, sir, the Volscæ are in arms.

Mar. I am glad 'tis: then, we shall have means to vent Our musty superfluity.—See, our best elders. Enter Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators; Junius Brutus, and Sicinius Velutus.

1 Sen. Marcius, 'tis true that you have lately told us; The Volscæ are in arms.

Mar. They have a leader,
Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to't. I sin in envying his nobility, And, were I any thing but what I am, Would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together.

Mar. Were half to half the world by th' ears, and he Upon my party, I'd revolt, to make Only my wars with him: he is a lion That I am proud to hunt.

1 Sen. Then, worthy Marcius, Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir, it is; And I am constant.—Titus Lartius, thou Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus' face. What! art thou stiff? stand'st out?

Tit. No, Caius Marcius; I'll lean upon one crutch, and fight with the other, Ere stay behind this business.

Men. O, true bred!

1 Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where, I know, Our greatest friends attend us.

Tit. Lead you on:

Follow, Cominius; we must follow you, Right worthy your priority.

Com. Noble Marcius!

1 Sen. Hence! To your homes! be gone.

Mar. To the Citizens. Nay, let them follow.

The Volscæ have much corn: take these rats thither, To gnaw their garners.—Worshipful mutineers, Your valour puts well forth: pray, follow, [Exeunt Senators, Com. Mar. Tit. and Menen. Citizens steal away.

Sic. Was ever man so proud as is this Marcius?

Bru. He has no equal.

Sic. When we were chosen tribunes for the people,—

Br. Mark'd you his lip, and eyes?

Sic. Nay, but his taunts

Br. Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods.

Sic. Bemock the modest moon.

Br. The present wars devour him: he is grown Too proud to be so vauntful.

Sic. Such a nature, Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow Which he treads on at noon. But I do wonder, His insolence can brook to be commanded Under Cominius.

Br. Fame, at the which he aims, In whom already he is well grace'd, cannot Better be held, nor more attain'd, than by A place below the first; for what miscarries Shall be the general's fault, though he perform To the utmost of a man; and giddy censure Will then cry out of Marcius, "O, if he Had borne the business!"

Sic. Besides, if things go well, Opinion, that so sticks on Marcius, shall Of his demerits' rob Cominius.

Bru. Come: Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcius, Though Marcius earn'd them not; and all his faults To Marcius shall be honours, though, indeed, In aught he merit not.

Sic. Let's hence, and hear How the despatch is made; and in what fashion, More than his singularity, he goes Upon his present action.

Bru. Let's along. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Coriol. The Senate-House.

Enter Tullus Aufidius, and Senators.

1 Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,
That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels, And know how we proceed.

Aux. Is it not yours? What ever have been thought on in this state, That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome Had circumvention? 'T is not four days gone, Since I heard hence; these are the words: I think, I have the letter here; yes, here it is:— [Reads "They have press'd a power, but it is not known Whether for east, or west. The dearth is great; The people mutinous; and it is rumour'd, Cominius, Marcius your old enemy, (Who is of Rome worse hated than of you) And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman, These three lead on this preparation Whither 'tis bent: most likely, 'tis for you. Consider of it."]

1 Sen. Our army's in the field. We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready To answer us.

Aux. Nor did you think it folly, To keep your great pretences veil'd, till when [ing], They must needs show themselves; which in the hatch- It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery, We shall be shorten'd in our aim; which was, To take in many towns, ere, almost, Rome Should know we were afoot.

2 Sen. Noble Aufidius, Take your commission; be he to your bands. [Giving it.]
Let us alone to guard Coriolanus:
If they set down before 'em, for the remove Bring up your army; but, I think, you'll find
They've not prepared for us.

AUS. O! doubt not that; I speak from certainties. Nay, more;
Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. I leave your honours.
When we and Caesars Marcius chance to meet,
'Tis sworn between us, we shall ever strike
Till one can do no more.

All. The gods assist you! AUS. And keep your honours safe!
1 Sen. Farewell. 2 Sen. Farewell. All. Farewell. [Exeunt.]

Enter Volumnia, and Virgilia. They sit down on two low Stools, and seethe.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a more comfortable sort. If my son were my husband, I should feeler rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embraces of his bed, where he would show most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness plucked all gale his way; when, for a day of King's entreaties, a mother should not sell an hour from her beholding; I,—considering how honour would become such a person; that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir,—was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam? how then?

Vol. Then, his good report should have been my son: I therein would have found issue. Hear me profess sincerely,—had I a dozen sons,—each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius,—I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluntarily surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the lady Valeria is come to visit you. Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire myself.

Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks, I hear hither your husband's drum, See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair; As children from a bear the Volscians shunning him: Methinks, I see him stamp thus, and call thus,—

"Come on, you cowards! you were got in fear, Though you were born in Rome?" His bloody brow With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes, Like to a harvest-man, that's task'd to mow Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow? O, Jupiter! no blood.

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man, Than gilt his trophy: the breasts of Hecuba, When she did muck Hector, look'd not lovelier Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood, At Grecian swords contemning. —Tell Valeria, We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit Gent. Vir. Heavens-bless my lord from fell Aufidius!

Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee, And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with Valeria and her Usher.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing here? a fine spot, in good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

Vol. He had rather see swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his school-master.

Val. O' my word, the father's son: I'll swear, 'tis a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I looked upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: he has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; caught it again: or whether his fall enraged him, or how 't was, he did so set his teeth, and tear it; O! I warrant, how he mummocked it!

Vol. One of his father's moods.

Val. Indeed la, 'tis a noble child.

Vir. A crack, madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitches; I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Vol. Not out of doors?

Vir. She shall, she shall.

Val. Indeed, no, by your patience: I will not ever the threshold, till my lord return from the wars.

Vir. Fie! you confine yourself most unreasonably. Come; you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love.

Val. You would be another Penelope; yet, they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come: I would, your cambrians were sensible as your finger, that you might leave prickity for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth.

Val. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O! good madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily, I do not jest with you, there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Val. In earnest, it's true: I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:—The Volscians have an army forth, against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord, and Titus Lartius, are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This is true on mine honour; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady: as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In troth, I think, she would.—Fare you well then.—Come, good sweet lady.—Pr'ythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out of door, and go along with us.

Vir. No, at a word, madam; indeed, I must not.

I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well then, farewell. [Exeunt.]
SCENE IV.—Before Coriolanus.

Enter, with Drum and Colours, Marcius, Titus Labinius, Officers, and Soldiers.

Mar. Yonder comes news:—a wager, they have met. Lart. My horse to yours, no. Mar. 'Tis done. Agreed.

Enter a Messenger.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy? Mess. They lie in view, but have not spoken as yet. Lart. So, the good horse is mine. Mar. I'll buy him of you. Lart. No, I'll nor sell, nor give him: lend you him I will,

For half a hundred years.—Summon the town. Mar. How far off lie these armies? Mess. Within this mile and half. Mar. Then shall we hear their l'arum, and they ours. Now, Mars, I'prythee, make us quick in work, That we with smoking swords may march from hence, To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy blast. A Parley sounded. Enter, on the Walls, two Senators, and others.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls? 1 Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he, That's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums

[Drums afar off. Are bringing forth our youth: we'll break our walls, Rather than they shall pound us up. Our gates, Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes; They'll open of themselves. Hark you, far off;

[Alarum afar off. There is Aufidius: list, what work he makes Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O! they are at it. Lart. Their noise be our instruction.—Ladders, ho! The Volsces enter, and pass over the Stage. Mar.' They fear us not, but issue forth their city. Now put your shields before your horses, and fight With hearts more proof than shields. Advance, brave Titus: They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts, Which makes me sweat with wrath.—Come on, my He that retires, I'll take him for a Volsc, fellows: And he shall feel mine edge.

Alarum, and extant Romans and Volscs, fighting. The Romans are beaten back to their Trenches. Re-enter Marcius enraged.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you, You shames of Rome! Unheard-of boils and plagues! Plaster you o'er, that you may be abhor'd Further than seen, and one infect another Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese, That bear the shapes of men, how have you run From slaves that apes would beat! Plato and hell! All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale With flight and agued fear! Mend, and charge home, Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe, And make my wars on you. Look to't: come on; If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives, As they us to our trenches follow. Another Alarum. The Volscs and Romans re-enter, and the Fight is renewed. The Volscs retire into Corioli, and Marcius follows them to the Gates. So, now the gates are ope:—now prove good seconds. 'Tis for the followers fortune widens them, Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like. [He enters the Gates, and is shut in.

1 Sol. Fool-hardiness! not I. 2 Sol. Nor I. 3 Sol. See, they have shut him in. [Alarum continues. All. To the port! I warrant him. Enter Titus Labinius.

Lart. What is become of Marcius? All. Slain, sir, doublets.

1 Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels, With them he enters; who, upon the sudden, Clapp'd to their gates: he is himself alone, To answer all the city. Lart. — O noble fellow! Who sensibly outdares his senseless sword, And, when it-bows, stands up. Thou art left, Marcius: A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art, Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks, and The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds, Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world Were feverous, and did tremble.

The Gates open. Re-enter Marcius, bleeding, assaulted by the Enemy.

1 Sol. Look, sir! Lart. O, 'tis Marcius! Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike. [They fight, and all enter the City.

SCENE V.—Within the Town. A Street. Enter certain Romans, with Spoils.

1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome. 2 Rom. And I this. 3 Rom. A murrain on 't! I took this for silver. [Alarum continues still afar off. Enter Marcius, and Titus Labinius, with a Trumpet. Mar. See here these mowers, that do prize their hours At a crack'd dreahum! Cushions, leaden spoons, Irons of a doft, doublets that hungmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves, Ere yet the fight be done, pack up.—Down with them!— And hark, what noise the general makes.—To him! There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romans: then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city, Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste To help Cominius.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st; Thy exercise hath been too violent For a second course of fight. Mar. Sir, praise me not: My work hath yet not warm'd me. Fare you well. The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me. To Aufidius thus I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune, Fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms Misguide thy opposers' swords! Bold gentleman, Prosperity be thy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest. So, farewell. Lart. Thou worthiest Marcius! [Exit Marcius. Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place; Call thither all the officers of the town, Where they shall know our mind. Away! [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Near the Camp of Cominius. Enter Cominius and Forces, as in retreat. Com. Breathe you, my friends. Well sought: we are come off

---

1 f. e. add: "to them a Messenger," and omit the stage direction below. 2 You heed of—Boils and plagues: in f. e. 3 pot: in f. e.
Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs,
We shall be charg'd again. While we have struck,
By interims and conveying gusts we have heard
The charges of our friends:—ye, Roman gods,
Lead their successes as we wish our own,
That both our powers, with smiling fronts encountering
May you give thankfull sacrifice—

Enter a Messenger.

Thy news?

Mess. The citizens of Corioli have issued,
And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle:
I saw their party to their trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speak'st truth,
Methinks, thou speak'st not well. How long is 't since?

Mess. Above an hour, my lord.

Com. 'T is not a mile; briefly we heard their drums:
How couldst thou in a mile confound an hour,
And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Spies of the Volscians
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel.
Three or four miles about; else had I, sir,
Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter MARCIUS.

Com. Who 's yonder,
That does appear as he were flay'd? O gods!
He has the stamp of Marcius, and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,
More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue
From every meane man.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your own.

Mar. O! let me clip you
In arms as sound, as when I woe'd; in heart
As merry, as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burn'd to bedward.

Com. Flower of warriers,
How is 't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees:
Condemning some to death, and some to exile;
Ransoming him, or pitying, threatening the other;
Holding Corioli, in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave,
Which told me they had beat you to your trenches?

Where is he!—Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone,
He did inform the truth: but for our gentlemen,
The common file, (A plague!—Tribunes for them?)
The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think it.
Where is the enemy? Are you lords of the field?
If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Marcius, we have at disadvantage fought,
And did retire to win our purposes.

Mar. How lies their battle? Know you on which side
They have plac'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guess, Marcius,
Those bands if the wayward are the Aniataes,
of their best trust: o'er them Aulidius,
Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I do beseech you,

By all the battles wherein we have fought,
By the blood we have shed together, by the vows
We have made to endure friends, that you directly
Set me against Aulidius, and his Antiiates;
And that you not delay the present, but,
Filling the air with swords advance'd and darts,
We prove this very hour.

Com. Though I could wish
You were conducted to a gentle bath.
And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking. Take your choice of those
That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they
That most are willing.—If any such be here,
(As it were sin to doubt) that love this painting
Wherein you see me smear'd; if any fear
Lesser his person than an ill report;
If any think brave death outweighs bad life,
And that his country's dearer than himself;
Let him, alone, or so many so minded,
Wave thus, to express his disposition,
And follow Marcius.

[They all shout, and wave their Swords; take them up in their arms, and cast up their Caps.
O me, alone! Make you a sword of me?
If these shows be not outward, which of you
But is four Volscians? None of you, but is Able to bear against the great Aulidius
A shield as hard as his. A certain number,
Though thanks to all, must I select from all: the rest
Shall bear the business in some other fight,
As cause will be obey'd. Please you, march before,
And I'll quickly draw out my command,
Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. March on, my fellows:
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Gates of Corioli.

TITUS LARTIUS, having set a Guard upon Corioli, going with Drum and Trumpet toward COMBINUS and CAIUS.
MARCIUS, enters with a Lieutenant, a party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So; let the ports be guarded: keep your duties,
As I have set them down. If I do send, despatch
Those centuries to our aid; the rest will serve
For a short holding: if we lose the field,
We cannot keep the town.

Liu. Fear not our care, sir.

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon us.—
Our guider, come; to the Roman camp conduct us.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—A Field of Battle between the Roman and the Volscian Camps.

Alarum. Enter MARCIUS and AULIDIUS.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate thee
Worse than a promise-breaker.

Aul. We hate alike:
Not Afric owns a serpent I abhor
More than thy fame I envy. Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first budge die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after!

Aul. If I fly, Marcius,
Hallow me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullius,
Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,
And made what work I pleas'd: 'T is not my blood,
Wherein thou seest me mask'd: for thy revenge,
Wrench up thy power to the highest.

_Auf._ Were thou the Hector,

That was the whip of thy bragg'd progeny,

Thou should'st not scape me here.—

[They fight, and certain Volesces come to the aid of AUFIDUS.

Oofficious, and not valiant—you have sham'd me

In your contended seconds.

[Ereunt fighting, all driven in by MARCIUS.

SCENE IX.—The Roman Camp.

ALARUM. A Retreat sounded. Flourish. Enter at one side, COMINIUS, and Romans: at the other side, MARCIUS, with his Arm in a Scarf, and other Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work, Thou 't not believe thy deeds; but I 'll report it,
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles,
Where great patricians shall attend, and shrug.
I' the end, admire; where ladies shall be frighted,
And, gladly quak'd, hear more; where the dull Tribunes,
That with the lusty plebeians hate thine honours,
Shall say, against their hearts—
"We thank the gods our Rome hath such a soldier!"
Yet cam'st thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully dined before.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS with his Power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparison.

Hast thou beheld—

Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother,
Who has a charter to exiol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. I have done,
As you have done; that's what I can; induc'd
As you have been; that's for my country:
He that has but effect'd his good will
Hast over'tain mine act.

Com. You shall not be
The grave of your deserving: Rome must know
The value of her own: 't were a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings; and to silence that,
Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest. Therefore, I beseech you,
In sign of what you are, not to reward
What you have done, before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember'd.

Com. Should they not,
Well might they foster 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses,
(Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store of all)
The treasure, in this field achiev'd and city,
We render you the tenth: to be ta'en forth,
Before the common distribution,
At your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general;
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe to pay my sword: I do refuse it;
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing.

[A long flourish. They all cry, MARCIUS! MARCIUS!
cast up their Corps and Lances: COMINIUS and LARTIUS stand bare.

Mar. May these same instruments, which you profane,
Never sound more: when drums and trumpets shall
In the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing;
When steel grows soft as the parasite's silk,
Let it be made a cover'ture for the wars.

No more, I say. For that I have not wash'd
My nose that bled, or foil'd some debile wretch,
Which without note here's many else have done,
You shott me forth
In acclamations hyperbolical;
As if I loved my little should be dieted
In praises sauc'd with lies.

Com. Too modest are you:
More cruel to your good report, than grateful
To us that give you truly. By your patience,
It 'gainst yourself you be incensed, we 'll put you
(Like one that means his proper harm) in manacles,
Then reason safely with you.—Therefore, be it known,
As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marius
Wears this war's garland: in token of the which
My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him,
With all his trim belonging: and, from this time,
For what he did before Coriol; call him,
With all th' applause and clamour of the host,
CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS—
Bear the addition nobly ever!—

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and Drums.

All. Caius Marius Coriolanus!

Cor. I will go wash;
And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blush, or no: howbeit, I thank you.—
I mean to stride your steed; and, at all times,
To underest your good addition
To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent;
Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success.—You, Titus Lartius,
Must to Corioi back: send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate,
For their own good, and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.
Cor. The gods begin to mock me. 'T, that now
Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg
Of my lord general.

Com. Take it: 't is yours.—What is't?
Cor. I sometime lay, here in Corioi,
At a poor man's house; he us'd me kindly:
He cried to me; I saw him prisoner;
But then Auffidius was within my view,
And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity. I request you to give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well-begg'd! Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marius, his name?
Cor. By Jupiter, forget:—
I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd.—
Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent.
The blood upon your visage dries; 't is time
It should be look'd to. Come.

[Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The Camp of the Volesces.

A Flourish. Cornets. Enter TULLUS AUFIDUS, bloody, with two or three Soldiers.

_Auf._ The town is ta'en.

1 Sold. 'Tis will be deliver'd back on good condition.

_Auf._ Condition!—

I would I were a Roman; for I cannot,
Being a Volesce, be that I am.—Condition!
What good condition can a treaty find
P' the part that is at mercy?—Five times, Marius,
I have fought with thee: so often hast thou beat me;
And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter Menenius, Sicinius, and Brutus.

Men. The augurer tells me, we shall have news to-night.

Bru. Good, or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcus.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, whom does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would the noble Marcus.

Bru. He's a lamb, indeed, that baes like a bear.

Men. He's a bear, indeed, that lives like a lamb. You two are old men: tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcus poor in, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He's poor in no one fault, but stor'd with all.

Sic. Especially in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. You are not the worst.

Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o' the right-hand file? Do you?

Both Trib. Why, how are we censured?

Men. Because you talk of pride now.—Will you not be angry?

Both Trib. Well, well, sir; well.

Men. Why, is there no great matter; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience; give your dispositions the reins, and be angry at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so. You blame Marcus for being proud?

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know, you can do very little alone; for your helps are many, or else your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too infant-like for doing much alone. You talk of pride; O! that you could turn your eyes toward the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O, that you could!

Bru. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, (alias, fools) as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough, too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous master, and one that loves a cup of hot wine, without a drop of

Embracements all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst
My hate to Marcus. Where I find him, were it
At home, upon my brother's guard, even there,
Against the hospitable canon, would I
Wash my fierce hand in 't heart.—Go you to the city:
Learn, how 'tis held; and what they are, that must Be hostages for Rome.

1 Sold. Will not you go?

Men. I am attended at the cypress grove: I pray you,
('T is south the city mills) bring me word thinner
How the world goes, that to the pace of it
I may steer on my journey.

1 Sold. I shall, sir. [Exeunt.]
were she earthy, no nobler) whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Men. Ha! Marcius coming home?

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius, and with most prosperous approbation.

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him: the state hath another; his wife another; and, I think, there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night.—A letter for me?

Vir. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you; I saw it.

Men. A letter for me? It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empirical physic, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. O! no, no, no.

Vol. O! he is wounded; I thank the gods for't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much.—Brings a victory in his pocket, the wounds become him.

Vol. On 's brow: Menenius, he comes the third time home with the oak'd garland.

Men. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Men. And 'tis was time for him too; I'll warrant him that: an he had stay'd by him, I would not have been so solaced for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go.—Yes, yes, yes: the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war. He hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.

Vol. In truth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous: ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True! pow, wow.

Men. True! I'll be sworn they are true.—Where is he wounded?—God save your good worship! [To the Tribunes, who come forward] Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud.—Where is he wounded?

Vol. 'Tis the shoulder, and 'tis the left arm; there will be large cicatrizes to show the people, when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin seven hurts i' the body.

Men. One i' the neck, and two i' the thigh, there's nine that I know. Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now it's twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave. [A Shout and Flourish] Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius: before him he carries noise; and behind him he leaves tears.

Death, that dark spirit, in 's nervy arm doth lie, Which, being advanced, declines, and then men die.

A Sennet. Trumpets sound. Enter Cominius and Titus Lartius: between them, Coriolanus, crowned with an oak'd Garland; with Captains, Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight

Within Corioli's gates: where he hath won, With fame, a name to Caius Marcius; these In honour follows, Coriolanus:—

Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus! [Flourish.]

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

Cor. No more of this; it does offend my heart:

Pray now, no more.

Com. Look, sir, your mother.—

Cor. O!

You have, I know, petition'd all the gods

For my prosperity. [Kneels]

Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up; My gentle Marcius, worthy Caius, and By deed achieving honour newly nam'd, What is it? Coriolanus, must I call thee? But O! thy wife—

Cor. My gracious silence, hail! [Rising.]

Wouldst thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd home, That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah! my dear, Such eyes the widows in Corioli wear, And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now, the gods crown thee!

Cor. And live you yet?—O my sweet lady, pardon.

[To Valeria]

Vol. I know not where to turn:—O! welcome home, And welcome, general;—and you are welcome all.

Men. A hundred thousand welcomes: I could weep, And I could laugh; I am light, and heavy. Welcome! A curse begin at very root on 's heart, That is not glad to see thee!—You are three, That Rome should dote on; yet, by the faith of men, We have some old crab-trees here at home, that will not Be graft'd to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors! We call a nettle, but a nettle; and The faults of fools, but folly.

Com. Ever right.

Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Her. Give way there, and go on!

Cor. Your hand,—and yours. [To his Wife and Mother]

Ere in our own house I do shade my head, The good patriots must be visited; From whom I have receiv'd, not only greetings, But with them charge of honours.

Vol. I have lived To see inherited my very wishes, And the buildings of my fancy: Only there's one thing wanting, which I doubt not, But our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good mother, I had rather be their servant in my way, Than sway with them in theirs.

Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights Are spectacled to see him: your prattling nurse Into a rapture let's her baby cry While she cheers' him: the kitchen malkin' pens Her richest lockram' 'bout her reechy' neck, Clambering the walls to eye him: stalls, bulks, windows, Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hord'd With variable complexions, all agreeing In earnestness to see him: sold-shown flamens Do press among the popular throngs, and puff To win a vulgar station: our veil'd dames Commit the war of white and damask, in Their nicely-gaude'd cheeks, to the wanton spoil

1 Not in f. e. 2 is but empiricist: in f. e.; emperiecoutique: in folio. 3 Not in f. e. 4 Fitz. 5 chates: in f. e. 6 The diminutive of Mall or Mary—used as "wrench." It also means a mop, a clot. 7 A kind of cheap linen. 8 Smoky, dirty.
Of Phoebus' burning kisses: such a mother,
As if that whosoever god, who leads him,
Were sily crept into his human powers,
And gave him graceful posture.

Sic. On the sudden
I warrant him consul.

Bru. Then our office may,
During his power, go sleep.

Sic. He cannot temperately transport his honours
From where he should begin, and end; but will Lose those he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort.

Sic. Doubt not, the commoners, for whom we stand,
But they, upon their ancient malice, will Forget, with the least cause, these his new honours;
Which that he'll give them, make I as little question
As he is proud to do.

Bru. I heard him swear,
Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put
The napless gesture of humility;
Nor, showing (as the manner is) his wounds
To the people, beg their stinking breaths.

Sic. 'T is right.

Bru. It was his word. O! he would miss it, rather Than carry it but by the suit o' the gentry to him,
And the desire of the nobles.

Sic. I wish no better,
Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it
In execution.

Bru. 'Tis most like, he will.

Sic. It shall be to him, then, at our good wills,
A sure destruction.

Bru. So it must fall out
To him, or our authorities, for an end.

We must suggest the people, in what hatred
He still hath held them; that to his power he would Have made them mutes, silen'd their pleaders, and Dispropertied their freedoms; holding them,
In human action and capacity,
Of no more soul, nor fitness for the world,
Than camels in the war; who have their provand
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

Sic. This, as you say, suggested
At some time when his soaring insolence
Shall touch 1 the people, (which time shall not want,
If he be put upon't; and that's as easy,
As to set dogs on sheep) will be his fire
To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bru. What's the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. 'Tis thought,
That Marcus shall be consul. I have seen
The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind
To hear him speak: matrons flung gloves,
Ladies and maids their scurfs and handkerchiefs,
Upon him as he pass'd; the nobles bended,
As to Jove's statue, and the commons made
A shower; and thunder, with their caps, and shouts.
I never saw the like.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol;
And carry with us ears and eyes for the time,
But hearts for the event.

Sic. Have with you. [Exeunt.

---

1 teach: in f. e. 2 treaty: in f. e. 3 blest: in f. e.
He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off:
I would you rather had been silent. Please you
To hear Cominius speak?

Bru. Most willingly;
But yet my caution was more pertinent,
Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people;
But tie him not to be their bed-fellow.—
Worthy Cominius, speak.—Nay, keep your place.

[Cominius rises, and offers to go away.

1 Sen. Sit, Coriolanus: never shame to hear
What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon:
I had rather have my wounds to heal again,
Than hear say how I got them.

Bru. Sir, I hope,
My words dis-bench'd you not.

Cor. No, sir; yet oft,
When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.
You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not. But, your people,
I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.

Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head i' the sun,
When the alarum were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monstrous.

[Exit.]

Men. Masters of the people,
You multiplying spawn how can he flatter,
(That's thousand to one good one) when you now see,
He had rather venture all his limbs for honour,
Than one on 's ears to hear it?—Proceeded, Cominius.

Com. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus
Should not be uttered feebly.—It is held,
That valour is the chiefest virtue, and
Most dignifies the haver: if it be,
The man I speak of cannot in the world
Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought
Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator,
Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him. He bestrode
An over-pressed Roman, and, if the consul's view
Slew three oppressors: Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee. In that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,
He prov'd best man i' the field; and for his heed
Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Man-enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea;
And in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurch'd all swords of the garland. For this last,
Before and in Corioli, let me say,
I cannot speak him home: he stopp'd the fliers,
And by his rare example made the coward
Turn terror into sport. As weeds before
A vessel under sail, so men obey'd,
And fell below his stem; his sword, death's stamp,
Where it did mark, it took: from face to foot
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tuned with dying cries. Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate of the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny, aidless came off,
And with a sudden re-inforcement struck
Corioli like a planet. Now all's his
When by and by the din of war gan pierce
His ready sense: then, straight his doubled spirit
Re-quick'en'd what in flesh was fatigate,
And to the battle came he; where he did
Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if
'T were a perpetual spoil; and till we call'd
Both field and city ours, he never stood
To ease his breast with panting.

Men. Worthy man! 1 Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honours
Which we devise him.

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at; And look'd up on things precious, as they were
The common muck o' the world: he covets less
Than misery itself would give, rewards
His deeds with doing them, and is content
To spend the time to end it.

Men. He's right noble:

Let him be called for.

1 Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter Coriolanus.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still
My life, and services.

Men. It then remains,
That you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you,
Let me o'er-look that custom: for I cannot
Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them,
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage: please you,
That I may pass this doing.

Sic. Sir, the people
Must have their voices; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to't.
Pray you, go fit you to the custom, and Take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honour with your form.

Cor. That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Bru. Mark you that? [To Sicinius.]

Cor. To brag unto them,—thus I did, and thus:—
Show them th' unaching tears which I should hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire
Of their breath only.

Men. Do not stand upon't.—
We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our purpose,—to them, and to our noble consul,
Wish we all joy and honour.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour!

[Flourish. Exeunt Senators.

Bru. You see how he intends to use the people.

Sic. May they perceive's intent! He will require them,
As if he did commen what he requested
Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come; we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here: on the market-place,
I know they do attend us.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. The Forum.

Enter several Citizens.

1 Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may; sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do: for if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them; so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingrateful were to make a

1 Gained by an easy victory. 2 timed: in f. a. 3 Not in L. a. monster of the multitude; of the which we, being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve: for once, when we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured: and truly, I think, if all our wits were to issue out of one skull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent of one direct way should be at once to all the points of the compass.

2 Cit. Think you so? Which way, do you judge, my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man’s will: ’tis strongly wedged up in a blockhead; but if it were at liberty, ’twould, sure, southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where, being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return, for conscience sake, to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks:—you may be you may.

3 Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices? But that’s no matter: the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus and Menenius.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility: mark his behaviour. We are not to stay altogether, but to come by him, where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He’s to make his requests by particulars; wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore, follow me, and I’ll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content. [Exeunt.

Men. O sir! you are not right: have you not known The worthiest men have done ’t?

Cor. What must I say?—

I pray, sir,—Plague upon ’t! I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace.—Look, sir;—my wounds;—

I got them in my country’s service, when Some certain of your brethren roar’d, and ran From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods! You must not speak of that: you must desire Think you upon it.

Cor. Think upon me? Hang ’em! I would they would forget me, like the virtues Which our divines lose by ’em.

Men. You’ll mar all: I’ll leave you. Pray you, speak to them, I pray you, In wholesome manner. [Exit.

Enter two Citizens.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces, And keep their teeth clean.—So, here comes a brace.— You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.

1 Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought you to ’t.

Cor. Mine own desert.

2 Cit. Your own desert? Ay, not

Mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire? Cor. No, sir: ’t was never my desire yet, To trouble the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you any thing, we hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o’ the consulship?

1 Cit. The price is, to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly?

Sir, I pray, let me ha’ t: I have wounds to show you, Which shall be yours in private.—Your good voice, sir; What say you?

2 Cit. You shall ha’ t, worthy sir.

Cor. A match, sir.—

There is in all two worthy voices begg’d.—

I have your alms: adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.

2 Cit. An ’twere to give again,—but ’t is no matter.

Enter the two Citizens. [Exeunt.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices that I may be consul, I have here the customary gown.

3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your enigma?

3 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends: you have not, indeed, loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will not, sir, flatter my sworn brothers, the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them: ’tis a condition they account gentle; and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeith:— that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desire. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

4 Cit. We hope to find you my friend, and therefore give you our voices heartily.

3 Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not stale your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no farther.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily. [Exeunt.

Cor. Most sweet voices!—

Better it is to die, better to starve, Than crave the hire which first we do deserve. Why in this woollen1 toge should I stand here, To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear, Their needless vouches? Custom calls me to ’t:—

What custom wills, in all things should we do? The dust on antique time would lie unswept, And mountainous error be too highly heap’d For truth to o’er-peer.—Rather than feel it so, Let the high office and the honour go To one that would do thus,—I am half through: The one part suffer’d, the other will I do.

Enter three other Citizens.

Here come more voices.—

Your voices: for your voices I have fought; Watch’d for your voices; for your voices bear Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six I have seen, and heard of: for your voices, Have done many things, some less, some more. Your voices; for indeed, I would be consul.

5 Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man’s voice.

6 Cit. Therefore, let him be consul. The gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people.

All. Amen, amen—

God save thee, noble consul! [Exeunt Citizens.

Cor. Worthy voices!
CORIOLANUS.

Re-enter Menenius, with Brutus, and Sicinius.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes
Endue you with the people's voice: remains
That, in the official marks invested, you
Anon do meet the senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sic. The custom of request you have dischag'd:
The people to admit you; and are summon'd
To meet anon upon your approbation.

Cor. Where? at the senate-house?

Sic. There, Coriolanus.

Cor. May I change these garments?

Sic. You may, sir.

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself again,
Repair to the senate-house.

Men. I'll keep you company.—Will you along?

Brutus. We stay here for the people.

Sic. Fare you well.—[Exeunt Coriol. and Menenius.

He has it now; and by his looks, methinks,
'T is warm at 's heart.

Brutus. With a proud heart he wore
His humble weeds. Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sicinius. How now, my masters! have you chose this man?

1 Coriolanus. He has our voices, sir.

Brutus. We pray the gods he may deserve your loves.

2 Coriolanus. Amen, sir. To my poor unworthy notice,
He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices.

3 Coriolanus. Certainly.

He flouted us down-right.

1 Coriolanus. No, 'tis his kind of speech: he did not mock us.

2 Coriolanus. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but says,
He us'd us scornfully: he should have show'd us
His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for 's country.

Sicinius. Why, so he did, I am sure.

All. No, no; no man saw 'em.

3 Coriolanus. He said, he had wounds, which he could show in private;
And with his hat thus waving it in scorn,
"I would be consul," says he: "aged custom,
But by your voices, will not so permit me;
Your voices therefore?" When we granted that,
Here was,—"I thank you for your voices.—thank you,—
Your most sweet voices—now you have left your voices,
I have no farther with you."—Was not this mockery?

Sicinius. Why, either, were you ignorant to see't,
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness
To yield your voices?

Brutus. Could you not have told him,
As you were lesson'd, when he had no power,
But was a petty servant to the state,
He was your enemy; ever spake against
Your liberties, and the charters that you bear
I the body of the weal: and now, arriving
A place of potency, and sway 't the state,
If he should still malignantly remain
Fast foe to the plebeii, your voices might
Be curses to yourselves. You should have said,
That; as his worthy deeds did claim no less
Than what he stood for, so his gracious nature
Would think upon you for your voices, and Translate his malice towards you into love,
Standing your friendly lord.

Sicinius. Thus to have said,
As you were fore-advise'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination: from him pluck'd
Either his gracious promise, which you might,
As cause had called you up, have held him to,
Or else it would have gull'd his surly nature,

1 On. 2 This line was added by Pope.

Which easily endures not article
Tying him to aught; so, putting him to rage,
You should have ta'en th' advantage of his choler,
And pass'd him unelected.

Brutus. Did you perceive,
He did sollicit you in free contempt,
When he did need your loves, and do you think,
That his contempt shall not be bruising to you,
When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies
No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry
Against the rectorship of judgment?

Sicinius. Have you,
Ere now, denied the asker; and, now again,
Of him, that did not ask; but mock, bestow
Your sued-for tongues?

3 Coriolanus. He's not confirmed; we may deny him yet.

2 Coriolanus. And will deny him:
I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.

1 Coriolanus. Ay, twice five hundred; and their friends to piece 'em.

Brutus. Get you hence instantly, and tell those friends,
They have chose a consul that will from them take
Their liberties: make them of no more voice
Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking,
As therefore kept to do so.

Sicinius. Let them assemble;
And, on a safer judgment, all revoke
Your ignorant election. Enforce his pride,
And his old hate unto you: besides; forget not
With what contempt he wore the humble weed;
How in his suit he scorn'd you; but your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,
Which most glibly, ungraciously, he did fashion
After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Brutus. Lay
A fault on us, your tribunes; that we labour'd
[No impediment between] but that you must Cast your election on him.

Sicinius. Say, you chose him
More after our commandment, than as guided
By your own true affections; and that, your minds,
Pre-occupy'd with what you rather must do,
Than what you should, made you against the grain
To voice him consul. Lay the fault on us.

Brutus. Ay, spare us not. Say, we read lectures to you,
How youngly he began to serve his country.
How long continued, and what stock he springs of,
The noble house o' the Marcians: from whence came
That Ancus Marcus, Numa's daughter's son,
Who, after great Hostilius, here was king.
Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,
That our best water brought by conduits hither;
And Censorinus, darling of the people,
And nobly nam'd so, twice being censor,
Was his great ancestor.

Sicinius. One thus descended,
That had beside well in his person wrought
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances; but you have found,
Sealing his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke
Your sudden approbation.

Brutus. Say, you ne'er had done't;
(Harp on that still) but by our putting on;
And presently, when we have draw'n your number,
Repair to the Capitol.

All. We will so: almost all
Repet in their election.

[Exeunt Citizens.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Street.

Cornets. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius, Titus Lartius, Senators, and Patricians.

Cor. Tullius Aufidius, then, had made new head?

Lart. He had, my lord: and that it was, which cause'd

Our swifter composition.

Cor. So then, the Volscyes stand but as at first;

Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road

Upon us again.

Com. They are worn, lord consul, so,

That we shall hardly in our ages see

Their banners wave again.

Cor. 1 Saw you Aufidius?

Lart. On safe-guard he came to me; and did curse

Against the Volscyes, for they had so vilely

Yielded the town: he is retir'd to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me?

Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How? what?

Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword;

That of all things upon the earth he hated

Your person most; that he would pawn his fortunes

To hopeless restitution, so might he

Be call'd your vaquier.

Cor. At Antium lives he?

Lart. At Antium.

Cor. I wish. I had a cause to seek him there,

To oppose his hatred fully.—Welcome home.

[To Lartius.

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Behold! these are the tribunes of the people,

The tongues of the common mouth. I do despise them,

For they do prank them in authority,

Against all noble sufferance.

Sic. Pass no farther.

Cor. Ha! what is that?

Bru. It will be dangerous to go on: no farther.

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter?

Cor. Have I had children's voices?

Sen. Tribunes, give way: he shall to the market-place.

Bru. The people are incens'd against him.

Sic. Stop;

Or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your herd?—

Must these have voices, that can yield them now,

And straight disclaim their tongues?—What are your offices?

You being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth?

Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpose'd thing, and grows by plot,

To curb the will of the nobility:

Suffer 't, and live with such as cannot rule,

Nor ever will be rule'd.

The vantage of his anger.

Sic. To the Capitol;

Come, we'll be there before the stream of the people;

And this shall seem, as partly 'tis, their own,

Which we have goaded onward.

[Exeunt.

Bru. Call't not a plot.

The people cry, you mock'd them; and, of late,

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd;

Scandal'd the suppliants for the people, call'd them

Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Bru. Not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them since?

Bru. How! I inform them?

Com. You are like to do such business.

Bru. Not unlike,

Each way, to better yours.

Cor. Why, then, should I be consul? By yond' clouds,

Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me

Your fellow tribune.

Sic. You show too much of that,

For which the people stir. If you will pass

To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,

Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit;

Or never be so noble as a consul,

Nor yoke him with your tribune.

Men. Let's be calm.

Com. The people are abus'd; set on.—This paltering

Becomes not Rome; nor has Coriolanus

Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely

'Gainst the plain way of his merit.

Cor. Tell me of corn!

This was my speech, and I will speak't again—

Men. Not now, not now.

Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will.—My nobler friends, I

Crate their pardons:—

For the mutable, rank-scented many, let them

Regard me as I do not flatter, and Therein behold themselves. I say again,

In soothing them we nourish against our senate

The cooke of rebellion, insolence, sedition,

Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd, and cast'rd;

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number;

Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that

Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

Sen. No more words, we beseech you.

Cor. How! no more?

As for my country I have shed my blood,

Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs

Coin words till they decay against those meazels,

Which we disdain shouldetter us, yet sought

The very way to catch them.

Bru. You speak o' the people,

As if you were a god to punish, not

A man of their infirmity.

Sic. How? were well,

We let the people know it.

Men. What, what? his choler?

Cor. Choler!

Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,

As patient as the midnight sleep.

1 Lepers.
By Jove, 't would be my mind.

Sic. It is a mind.

That shall remain a poison where it is,
Not poison any farther.

Cor. Shall remain I—

Hear you this Trion of the minnows? mark you
His absolute [shall]?

Com. 'T was from the canon. "Shall!"

O, good but most unwise patricians! why,
You give not but reckless senators, have you thus Given Hydra leave't to choose an officer.
That with his peremptory [shall], being but
The horn and noise o' the monster 2, wants not spirit
To say, he'll turn your current in a ditch,
And make your channel his? If he have power,
Then will your impotence: if none, revolve
Your dangerous bounty. If you are learned,
Be not as common fools; if you are not,
Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians,
If they be senators; and they are no less.

When both your voices blended, the great'st taste
Most palates theirs. "They choose their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his [shall]," his mortal [shall] 3, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. By Jove himself,
It makes the consul base; and my soul aches
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take
The one by the other.

Com. Well—on to the market-place.

Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give forth
The corn o' the store-house gratis, as 't was used
Sometime in Greece,—

Men. Well, well; no more of that.

Cor. Though there the people had more absolute
power,
I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed
The ruin of the state.

Bru. Why, shall the people give
One that speaks thus their voice?

Cor. I'll give my reasons,
More worthier than their voices. They know the corn
Was not their 4 recompence, resting well assur'd
They never'd service for 't. Being press'd to the war,
Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates: this kind of service
Did not deserve corn gratis: being 5 the war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd
Most valor, spoke not for them. They accusation
Which they have often made against the senate,
All cause unborn, could never be the motive 6
Of our so frank donation. Well, what then?
How shall this bison 7 multitude 8 digest
The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express
What's like to be their words:— "We did request it;
We are the greater poll, and in true fear
They gave us our demands."—Thus we debase
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares; fears; which will in time break open
The locks o' the senate, and bring in the crows
To peck the eagles.—

Men. Come, enough.

Bru. Enough, with over-measure.

Cor. No, take more
What may be sworn by, both divine and human,
Seal what I end withal!—This double worship,—

Where one part does disdain with cause, the other
Insult without all reason; where gentry, title, wisdom,
Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no
Of general ignorance,—it must onit
Real necessities, and give way the while.

To unstable sightness. Purpose so hard'd, it follows,
Nothing is done to purpose: therefore, beseech you,
You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the change on't; that prefer
A noble life before a long, and wish
To jump 9 a body with a dangerous physic.
That's sure of death without it, at once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue: let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Your diabolical
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it,
Not having the power to do the good it would,
For th' ill which doth control it.

Bru. He has said enough.

Sic. He has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer
As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee!—
What should the people do with these bold tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience, fails
To the greater bench. In a rebellion,
When what's not meet, but what must be, was law,
Then were they chosen: in a better hour,
Let what is meet be said, it must be meet,
And throw their power if the dust.

Bru. Manifest treason.

Sic. This a consul? no.

Bru. The Ediles, ho!—Let him be apprehended.

Enter an Edile.

Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit Edile.] in whose name, myself

Attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to the public weal. Obey, I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat!

Sen. We'll surely him.

Com. Aged sir, hands off.

Cor. Hence, rotten thing; or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments.

Sic. Help, ye citizens!

Re-enter the Edile, with others, and a Rabble of Citizens.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sic. Here's he, that would Take from you all your power.

Bru. Seize him, Ediles.

Cit. Down with him! down with him! [Several speak.

2 Sen. Weapons! weapons! weapons! [They all butle about Coriolanus.

Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!

Cit. Peace, peace, peace! stay, hold, peace!

Men. What is about to be?—I am out of breath;
Confusion's near: I cannot speak. You, tribunes
To the people.—Coriolanus, patience:

Speak, good Sicinius.

Sic. Hear me! people, peace!

Cit. Let's hear our tribune.—Peace! Speak, speak, speak.

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties:
Marcius would have all from you; Marcius,
Whom hate, you have nam'd for consul.

Men. Fie, fie, fie! This is the way to kindle, not to quench.
Before the tag return, whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear?

-Men. Pray you, be gone.
I'll try whether my old wit be in request
With those that have but little: this must be patch'd
With cloth of any colour.

Com. Nay, come away.

[Exit Coriolanus, Cominius, and others.]

1 Pat. This man has mar'd his fortune.

-Men. His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for 'tis power to thunder. His heart's mouth
What his breast forges; that his tongue must vent;
And, being angry, does forget that ever
He heard the name of death. [A noise within.
Here's goodly work!]

2 Pat. I would they were a-bed!

-Men. I would they were in Tyber!—What, the vengeance,
Could he not speak them fair?

Re-enter BrUTUS and SIMON, with the Rabble.

-Sic. Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself?

-Men. You worthy tribunes.

-Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands: he hath resisted law
And therefore law shall scorn him farther trial
Than the severity of the public power,
Which he so sets at nought.

1 Cit. He shall well know,
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands.

-Cit. He shall, sure on 't.

-Men. Sir, sir.—

-Sic. Peace!

-Men. Do not cry havoc, where you should but hunt
With modest warrant.

-Sic. Sir, how comes 't, that you
Have holt to make this rescue?

-Men. Why, as I know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults.—

-Sic. Consult!—what consult?

-Men. The consul Coriolanus.

-Bru. He a consul!

-Cit. No, no, no, no, no.

-Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good people,
I may be heard, I would crave a word or two;
The which shall turn you to no further harm,
Than so much loss of time.

-Sic. Speak briefly then;
For we are peremptory to despatch
This viperous traitor. To eject him hence,
Were but one danger, and to keep him here,
Our certain death: therefore, it is decreed
He dies to-night.

-Men. Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Towards her deserving* children is enrol'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
Should now eat up her own!—

-Sic. He's a disease, that must be cut away.

-Men. O! he's a limb, that has but a disease;
Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy.

What has he done to Rome that's worthy death?
Killing his enemies? The blood he hath lost,
(Which, I dare vouch, is more than he hath,
By many an ounce: he dropp'd it for his country:
And what is left, to lose it by his country,
Wore to us all, that do 't and suffer it,
A brand to th' end of the world.
   Sic. This is clean kerm.
   Brunt. Merely awry. When he did love his country, It honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foot, Being once gangren'd, is not then respected For what before it was.

Brunt. We'll hear no more.—
Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence, Lest his infection, being of catching nature, Spread farther.

Men. One word more, one word. This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find The harm of unscam'd swiftness, will, too late, Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Proceed by process; Lest parties (as he is belov'd) break out, And great sack Rome with Romans.

Brunt. If it were so,—
   Sic. What do ye talk?
Have we not had a taste of his obedience? Our Eulises smote? ourselves resisted?—Come!—

Men. Consider this:—he has been bred i' the wars Since he could draw a sword, and is ill'schoold In boculated language; meal and bran together He throws without distinction. Give me leave, I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him in peace Where he shall answer, by a lawful form, In peace, to his utmost peril.

1 Sen. Noble tribunes, It is the humane way: the other course Will prove too bloody, and the end of it Unknown to the beginning.

Sic. Noble Menenius, Be you, then, as the people's officer.— Masters, lay down your weapons.

Brunt. Go not home.

Sic. Meet on the market-place.—We'll attend you there.

Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed In our first way. I'll bring him to you. —

Men. Let me desire your company. [To the Senators.] He must come,
Or what is worst will follow.

1 Sen. Pray you, let's to him. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Coriolanus's House. Enter Coriolanus, and Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears: present me Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels; Or pite ten hills on the Tarpeian rock, That the precipitation might down stretch Both the beam of sight, yet will I still Be thus to them.

1 Pat. You do the noblest.

Cor. I curse my mother

Does not approve me farther, who was wont To call them woollen vessels; things created To buy and sell with groats: to show bare heads In congregations, to yawm, be still, and wonder, When one but of my ordinance stand up To speak of peace, or war.

Enter Volumnia.

I talk of you: Why did you wish me milder? Would you have me False to my nature? Rather say, I play The man I am.

Vol. O, son, son, son!

I would have had you put your power well on, Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.

Vol. You might have been enough the man you are, With striving less to be so: lessor had been The thwartings of your dispositions, if You had not show'd them how you were dispos'd, Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.

Vol. Ay, and burn too.

Enter Menenius, and Senators.

Men. Come, come; you have been too rough, some- thing too rough: You must return, and mend it.

1 Sen. There's no remedy; Unless, by not so doing, our good city Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. I have a heart as little apt as yours To brook control without the use of anger; But yet a brain, that leads mine use of anger To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman! Before he should thus stop the heart, but that The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic For the whole state, I would put mine armour on, Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.

Cor. Well, what then? what then then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them?—I cannot do it to the gods; Must I then do't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute; Though therein you can never be too noble, But when extremities speak: I have heard you say, Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends, I' the war do grow together: grant that, and tell me, In peace what each of them by th' other lose, That they combine not there?

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour in your wars to seem The same you are not, (which for your best ends You adopt your policy) how is it less, or worse, That it shall hold companionship in peace With honour, as in war, since that to both It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak To the people; not by your own instruction, Nor by the matter which your heart promits you, But with such words that are like voted in Your tongue, though but hastiards, and syllables Of no allowance to your bosom's truth.

Now, this no more dishonours you at all, Than to take in a town with gentle words, Which else would put you to your fortune, and The hazard of much blood:—

I would dissemble with my nature, where, My fortunes and my friends at stake, requir'd I should do so in honour: I am in this, Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles; And you will rather show our general love How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon 'em,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin.

Men.  Noble lady!—
Come, go with us; speak fair; you may salve so,
Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol.  Pr’ythee now, my son,
Go in them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretch’d it, (here be with them)
Thy knee bussing the stones, (for in such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears) waving thy head,
Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,
Now’s humble as the ripest mulberry
That will not hold the handling. Or say to them,
Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use as they to claim,
In asking their good loves; but thou will frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power, and person.

Men.  This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours;
For they have pardons, being ask’d, as free
As words to little purpose.

Vol.  Pr’ythee now,
Go, and be rul’d; although, I know, thou hadst rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf;
Than flatter him in a bower. Here is Corninius.
Enter Corninius.

Com.  I have been at the market-place; and, sir, ’s it fit
You make strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence; all’s in anger.

Men.  Only fair speech.

Com.  I think, ’t will serve; if he
Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol.  He must, and will.—
Pr’ythee now, say you will, and go about it.

Cor.  Must I go show them my unbarbed sconce?
Must I with my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie, that it must bear? Well, I will do ’t;
Yet were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcus, they to dust should grind it,
And throw t against the wind.—To the market-place!
You have put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to the life.

Com.  Come, come, we’ll prompt you.

Vol.  I pr’ythee now, sweet son; as thou hast said,
My praises made thee first a soldier, so,
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.

Cor.  Well, I must do ’t.
Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot’s spirit! My throat of war be turn’d,
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice
That babies lulls asleep! The smiles of knives
Tent in my cheeks; and school-boys’ tears take up
The glasses of my sight! A beggar’s tongue
Make motion through my lips; and my arm’d knees,
Who bow’d but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv’d an alms!—I will not do ’t,
Least I come to love my own truth,
And by my body’s action teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

Vol.  At thy choice, then:
To beg of thee it is my more honour,
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin: let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear

1 owes: in fe.  2 Hatred.  3 worth: in f e.
Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by the volume. — The honour'd gods
Keep Item in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supplier with worthy men! plant love among us!
Throw our large temples with the shows of peace,
And not our streets with war!
1 Sen. A noble wish.
Men. Re-enter Edile, with Citizens.
Sic. Draw near, ye people.
Ed. List to your tribunes. Audience: peace! I say.
Cor. First, hear me speak.
Both Tri. Well, say.— Peace, ho!
Cor. Shall I be charg'd no farther than this present?
Must all determine here?
Sic. I do demand,
If you submit to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and are content
To suffer lawful censure for such faults
As shall be prov'd upon you?
Cor. I am content.
Men. Lo, citizens! he says, he is content.
The warlike service he has done, consider;
Think upon the wounds his body bears, which show
Like graves 't' the holy churchyard.
Cor. Scratches with briars;
Sears to move laughter only.
Men. Consider farther,
That when he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a soldier. Do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds,
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than envy you.
Com. Well, well; no more.
Cor. What is the matter,
That being pass'd for consul with full voice,
I am so dishonour'd. That the very hour
You take it off again?
Sic. Answer to us.
Cor. Say then: 't is true, I ought so.
Sic. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical:
For which you are a traitor to the people.
Cor. How! Traitor?
Men. Nay, temperately; your promise!
Cor. The fires? the lowest hell fold in the people!
Call me their traitor? — Then injurious tribune,
Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutched'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say;
Thou liest, unto thee, with a voice as free
As I do pray the gods.
Sic. Mark you this, people?
Ct. To the rock! to the rock with him!
Sic. Peace!
We did not put new matter to his charge:
What you have seen him do, and heard him speak,
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws, with strokes, and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even this,
So criminal, and in such capital kind,
Deserves th' extremest death.
Bru. But since he hath Serv'd well for Rome,—
Cor. What do you prate of service?
Bru. I talk of that, that know it.
Cor. You?
Men. Is this
1 courage: in f. e. 2 but: in folio. Capell made the change.

The promise that you made your mother?

Know,
I pray you,—
Cor. I'll know no farther.
Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word,
Nor check my carriage for what they can give,
To have't with saying, good morrow.
Sic. For that he has
(As much as in him lies) from time to time
Envied against the people, seeking means
To pluck away their power; as now at last
Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it; in the name o' the people,
And in the power of us, the tribunes, we Even from this instant, banish him our city,
In peril of precipitation
From off the rock Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates.
' The people's name, I say, it shall be so.
Ct. It shall be so, it shall be so: let him away.
He's banish'd, and it shall be so.
Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common friends:—
Sic. He's sentence'd: no more hearing.
Com. Let me speak
I have been consul, and can show for Rome,
Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love
My country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
And treasure of my loins; then, if I would Speak that—
Sic. We know your drift. Speak what?
Bru. There's no more to be said; but he is banish'd,
As enemy to the people, and his country.
It shall be so.
Ct. It shall be so: it shall be so.
Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath I hate
As reck of the rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men,
That do corrupt my air, I banish you:
And here remain with your uncertainty.
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defenders; till, at length,
Your ignorance, (which finds not, till it feels)
Making no' reservation of yourselves,
(Still your own foes) deliver you as most Abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back.
There is a world elsewhere.

[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, Menenius,
Senators, and Patricians.
Ed. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!
Ct. Our enemy is banish'd! he is gone! Hoo! hoo!
[The People short, and throw up their Caps.
Sic. Go, see him out at gates; and follow him,
As he hath follow'd you, with all despite:
Give him desert'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city,
Ct. Come, let us see him out at gates: come.—
The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Come. [Exeunt.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before a Gate of the City.

Enter Coriolanus, Volumnia, Virgilia, Menenius, Cominius, and several young Patricians.

Cor. Come, leave your tears: a brief farewell.—The beast

With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother, Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd To say, extremity was the trier of spirits: That common chances common men could bear; That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike Shou'd master'ship in floating: fortune's blows, When most struck home, being gentle minded' craves A noble cunning. You were us'd to load me With precepts, that would make invincible The heart that cou'd them.

Cor. "O heavens! O heavens!"

Vol. Now, the red pestilence strike all trades in Rome, And occupations perish!

Cor. What, what, what! I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay, mother, Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say, If you had been the wife of Hercules, Six of his labours you'd have done, and say'd Your husband so much sweat.—Cominius, Droop not: adieu.—Farewell, my wife! my mother! I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Menenius, Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's, And venomous to thine eyes.—My sometime general, I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld Heart-hardening spectacles; tell these sad women, 'Tis fond to wall inevitable strokes, As 'tis to laugh at 'em.—My mother, you tot well, My hazards still have been your solace; and Believe'rt not lightly, though I go alone, Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more than seen, your son Will or exceed the common, or be caught With cautionable baits and practice.

Vol. My first son, Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius With thee a while: determine on some course More than a wild exposure' to each chance, That starts' the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods! I'll follow thee a month; devise with thee Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st hear of us, And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man, And lose advantage, which doth ever cool I' the absence of the neader.

Cor. Fare ye well: Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too full Of the wars' surfeits to go rove with one That's yet untried: bring me but out at gate.—

Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and My friends of noble touch, when I am forth, Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come, While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still; and never of me aught

Men. That's worthy As any ear can hear.—Come; let's not weep.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium. City, 'Tis I that made thy widows: many an heir
Of these fair edifices 'fore my wars
Have I heard groan, and drop: then, know me not,
Lest that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,

Enter a Citizen.

In puny battle slay me.—Save you, sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will,
Where great Aufidius lies. Is he in Antium?
Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state
At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, beseych you?

Cit. This, here before you.

Cor. Thank you, sir. Farewell. [Exit Citizen.

O world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose house, whose bed, whose meal, and exercise,
Are still together, who twin, as 't were, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour;
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitter enmity: so, fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broken their sleep
To take the one the other, by some chance.
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends,
And interjoin their issues. So with me:—
My birth-place hate1 I, and my love's upon
This enemy town. I'll enter: if he slay me,
He does fair justice; if he give me way,
I'll do his country service.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Hall in Aufidius's House.

Music within. Enter a Servant.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here?
I think our fellows are asleep.

[Exit.

Enter a second Servant.

2 Serv. Where's Cotsus? My master calls for him.—

Cotsus!

[Exit.

Enter Coriolanus.

Cor. A goodly house. The feast smells well; but I
Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first Servant.

1 Serv. What would you have, friend? Whence are you?
Here's no place for you: pray, go to the door.
Cor. I have deserve'd no better entertainment,
In being Coriolanus.

Re-enter second Servant.

2 Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter hit his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away!

2 Serv. Away? Get you away.

Cor. Now, th' art troublesome.

2 Serv. Are you so brave? I'll have you talked with anon.

Enter a third Servant; the first meets him.

3 Serv. What fellow's this?

1 Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o' the house. Pr'ythee, call my master to him.

3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house.

Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your hearth.

3 Serv. What are you?

Cor. A gentleman.
COEIOLANUS.

3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.

Cor. True, so I am.

3 Serv. Pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station; here's no place for you. Pray you, avoid: come.

Cor. Follow your function; go,

And batten on cold bits. \[Pushes him away.\]

3 Serv. What, will you not? Pr'ythee, tell my master what a strange guest he has here.

2 Serv. And I shall. \[Exit.\]

Cor. Follow your function; go,

And batten on cold bits. \[Pushes him away.\]

3 Serv. Where's that?\[Exeunt.\]

Cor. I' the city of kites and crows.

3 Serv. I' the city of kites and crows?—What an ass it is!—Then, thou dwell'st with daws too?

Cor. No: I serve not thy master.

3 Serv. How, sir! Do you meddle with my master?

Cor. Ay; "tis an honest service than to meddle with thy mistress.

Thou pratt'st, and pratt'st: serve with thy trencher.

Hence! \[Beats him.\]

Enter AVIDINE and the second Servant.

Auff. Where is this fellow?

2 Serv. Here, sir. I'd have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

Auff. Whence com'st thou? what wouldst thou?

Thy name?

Why speak'st not? Speak, man: what's thy name?

Cor. If, Tullus, \[Unraveling: No, thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not Think me for the man I am, necessity Commands me name myself.\]

Auff. What is thy name? \[Servants retire.\]

Cor. A name unmusical to the Volscians' ears, And harsh in sound to thine.

Auff. Say, what's thy name?

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face Bears a command in 't: though thy tackle's torn, Bears'vt a noble vessel. What's thy name?

Cor. Prepare thy brow to frown. Know'st thou me yet?

Auff. I know thee not.—Thy name?

Cor. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done To thee particularly, and to all the Volscians Great hurt and mischief; thereto witness may My surname, Coriolanus. The painful service, The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood Shed for thy thankless country, are required But with that surname; a good memory, And witness of the malice and displeasure Which thou shouldst bear me. Only that name remains:
The cruelty and envy of the people, Permitted by our dastard nobles, who Havé all forsaken me, hath devoured the rest; And suffered me by the voice of slaves to be Whoo'd out of Rome. Now, this extremity hath brought me to thy hearth: not out of hope, Mistake me not, to save my life; for if I had four deaths, of all the men in the world, I would have 'voided thee; but in mere spite, To be full quit of those my banishers, Stand I before thee here. Then, if thou hast A heart of wreek in thee, that will revenge Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those mains Of shame seen through thy country, speed thee straight, And make my misery serve thy turn: so use it,

That my revengeful services may prove As benefits to thee; for I will fight Against my canker'd country with the spleen Of all the under fiends. But if so be Thou dost not love this, and hast to prove more fortunes Thou art tird; then, in a word, I also am Longer to live most weary, and present My throat to thee, and to thy ancient malice; Which not to cut would show thee but a fool, Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate, Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast, And cannot live but to thy shame, unless It be to do thee service.

Auff. O Marcius, Marcius! Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my heart A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter Should from yond' cloud speak divine things, And say, "'Tis true,? I'd not believe them more Than thee, all noble Marcius.—Let me thrive Mine arms about that body, where against My grained ash an hundred times hath broke, And scar'd the moon with splinters! Here I clip The anvil of my sword; and do contest As hotly and as nobly with thy love, As ever in ambitions strength I did Contend against thy valour. Know thou first, I lov'd the maid I married: never man Sighed truer breath; but that I see thee here, Thou noble thing, more dances my rapt heart, Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Beside my threshold. Why, thou Mars, I tell thee, We have a power on foot; and I had purpose Once more to hoist thy target from thy brawn, Or lose mine arm for't. Thou hast beat me outTwelve several times, and I have nightly since Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me: We have been down together in my sleep, Unbuckling helms, fasting each other's throat, And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy Marcius, Had we no other quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all From twelve to seventy: and, pouring war Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome, Like a bold flood o'er-bear. O! o' come, go in, And take our friendly senators by the hands, Who now are here, taking their leaves of me, Who am prepar'd against thy territories, Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. You bless me, gods! Auff. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have The leading of thine own revenge, take Th' one half of my commission; and set down,— As best thou art experience'd, since thou know'st Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own ways: Whether to knock against the gates of Rome, Or rudely visit them in parts remote, To fright them, ere destroy. But come in: Let me commend thee first to those, that shall Say, "'tis thine. A thousand welcome! And more a friend than e'er an enemy; Yet, Marcius, that was much. Young man, most well— worthies, \[Exit.\]

1 Serv. \[Advancing.\] Here's a strange alteration!

2 Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have stricken him with a cudgel; and yet my mind gave me, his clothes made a false report of him.

1 Serv. What an arm he has! He turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top.

2 Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was some—

1 scar'd: in folio. 2 Embrace. 3 Out and out; completely. 4 beat: in folio.
thing in him: he had, sir, a kind of face, methought,—I cannot tell how to term it.

1 Serv. He had so; looking as it were.—Would I had been hanged, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.

2 Serv. So did I; I’ll be sworn. He is simply the rancour of the world.

1 Serv. I think, he is; but a greater soldier than he, you wot on.

2 Serv. Who? my master?

1 Serv. Nay, it’s no matter for that.

2 Serv. Worth six on him.

1 Serv. Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be the greater soldier.

2 Serv. Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say that: for the defence of a town, our general is excellent.

1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.

Re-enter third Servant.

3 Serv. O, slaves! I can tell you news; news, you rascals.

3 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations; I had as lieve be a condemned man.

1. 2. Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?

3 Serv. Why, here’s he that was wont to thwack our general.—Caio Caius Marcius.

1 Serv. Why do you say thwack our general?

3 Serv. I do not say, thwack our general; but he was always good enough for him.

2 Serv. Come, we are fellows, and friends: he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.

1 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth on’t; before Corioli, he scotched him and notched him like a carbonado.

2 Serv. An he had been cannibally given, he might have broiled* and eaten him too.

1 Serv. But, more of thy news?

3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars: set at upper end o’ the table; no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand bald before him. Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with his hand, and turns up the white o’ the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i’ the middle, and but one half of what he was yester-day, for the other has half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table. He’ll go, he says, and *sowle† the porter of Rome gates by the ears. He will sow all down all before him, and leave his passage polished.

2 Serv. And he’s as like to do’t, as any man I can imagine.

3 Serv. Do’t! he will do’t; for, (look you, sir,) he has as many friends as enemies; which friends, sir, (as it were,) durst not (look you, sir) now themselves (as we term it) his friends, whilst he’s in dejectitude*.

1 Serv. Dejectitude! what’s that?

3 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like comies after rain, and revel all with him.

1 Serv. But when does this forward?

3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day, presently. You shall have the drum-trumpet up this morning. ’tis, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Serv. Why, then shall we have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing, but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

1 Serv. Let me have war, say I: it exceeds peace, as far as day does night; it’s sprightly, walking, audible, and full of vaunt.* Peace is a very apoplectic, lethargy; muddled, deaf, sleepy, insensitive; a getter of more bastard children, than wars a destroyer of men.

2 Serv. ’T is so: and as wars in some sort may be said to be a ravisher, so it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars, for my money. I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volscians.—They are rising, they are rising.

All. In, in, in, in. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter Scipio and Brutus.

Scipio. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him:
His remedies are tamed by* the present peace
And quietness of the people, which before
Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends
Blush that the world goes well; who rather had,
Though they themselves did suffer by’t, behold
Discontentious numbers pestering streets, than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly.

Enter Menenius.

Brut. We stood to’t in good time. Is this Menenius?
Scip. ’Tis he, ’tis he. O! he is grown most kind
Of late. —Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Scip. Your Coriolanus is not much miss’d,
But with his friends: the common-wealth doth stand,
And so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All’s well; and might have been much better.
He could have temper’d.

Scip. Where is he, hear you?
Men. Nay, I hear nothing: his mother and his wife
Hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four Citizens.

Cit. The gods preserve you both!

Scip. Good-den, our neighbours.

Brut. Good-den to you all, good-den to you all.

1 Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees,
Are bound to pray for you both.

Scip. Live, and thrive.

Brut. Farewell, kind neighbours. We wish’d Corio-
Had you to us as we did.

[Exeunt Citizens.

1 Cit. Now the gods keep you all.

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. [Exeunt Citizens.

Scip. This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying confusion.

Brut. Caius Marcius was
A worthy officer i’ the war; but insolent,
O’ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking,
Self-loving,—

Scip. And affecting one sole throne,
Without assistance.

Men. I think not so.

Scip. We should by this, to all our lamentation,
If he had not forth compiled, found it so.

Brut. The gods have well prevented it; and Rome
Sits safe and still without him.

Enter an Edile.

Ed. Worthy tribunes,
There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,
Reports, the Volscians with two several powers
Are enter’d in the Roman territories;

1 A piece of meat cut and hacked for broiling.  2 boiled: in folio.  3 tame i’; in f. e.

And with the deepest malice of the war
Destroy what lies before them.

Men.

'Tis Aufidius,
Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment,
Thrusts forth his horrid arms again into the world;
Which were inshelled when Marcius stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out.

Sic.

Come, what talk you
Of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rumourer whipp'd.—It cannot be,
The Volscians dare break with us.

Men.

We have record that very well it can;
And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason with the follow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this,|
Lest you shall chance to whip your information,
And beat the messenger who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic.

I know, this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles in great earnestness are going
All to the senate house: some news is come in,
That turns their countenances.

Sic.

'Tis this slave.

Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes:—his raising;
Nothing but his report.

Mess. Yes, worthy sir,
The slave's report is second; and more,
More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,
How probable I do not know, that Marcius,
Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome,
And vows revenge as spacious, as between
The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic.

This is most likely!

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish
God! Marcius home again.

Men. This is unlikely:
He and Aufidius can no more atone,
Than violentest contrariness.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. You are sent for to the senate.
A fearful army, led by Gaius Marcius,
Associated with Aufidius, rages
Upon our territories; and have already O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and took What lay before them.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. O! you have made good work.

Men. What news? what news?

Com. You have help to ravish your own daughters, and
To melt the city leads upon your pates:—

To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses:—

Men. What's the news? what's the news?

Com. Your temples burn'd in their cement; and
You franchises, wherein you stood, confin'd
Into a stranger's bore.

Men. Pray now, your news?—
You have made fair work, I fear me.—Pray, your news?
If Marcius should be join'd with Volscians,—

Com. He is their god; he leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better; and they follow him
Against us brats, with no less confidence
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies,
Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work,
You, and your apron-men; you that stood so much
Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlic-eaters!

Com. He will shake
Your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules
Did shake down mellow fruit. You have made fair work.

Bru. But is this true, sir?

Com. Ay; and you'll look pale
Before you find it other. All the legions
Do smilingly revolt, and who resists
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Who is't can blame him?
Your enemies, and his, find something in him.

Men. We are all undone unless
The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it?

The tribunes cannot do't for shame; the people
Deserve such pity of him, as the wolf
Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they Should say, 'Be good to Rome,' they charg' d him, even
As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein show'd like enemies.

Men. 'Tis true:
If he were putting to my house the brand
That should consume it, I have not the face
To say, 'Beseech you, cease.'—You have made fair
You, and your handy' crafts have crafted fair.

Hands.

Men. You have brought
A trembling upon Rome, such as was never
So inceaseable of help.

Tri. Say not, we brought it.

Men. How! Was it we? We lov'd him; but, like beasts
And cowardly nobles, gave way unto your clusters,
Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Com. But I fear
They'll roar him in again. Tullius Aufidius,
The second name of men, obeys his points
As if he were his officer. Desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troop of Citizens.

Men. Here come the clusters,—
And is Aufidius with him?—You are they
That made the air unwholesome, when you cast
Your stinking, greasy caps, in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming;
And not a hair upon a soldier's head,
Which will not prove a whip: as many coxcombs,
As you threw caps up, will he tumble down,
And pay you for your voices. 'Tis no matter:
If he could burn us all into one coal,
We have deserved it.

Cit. Faith, we bear fearful news.

1 Cit. For mine own part,
When I said, banish him, I said, 't was pity.

2 Cit. And so did I:
3 Cit. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us. That we did, we did for the best;
and though we willingly consented to his banishment,
yet it was against our will.

Com. Y' are goodly things, you voices!

Men. You have made
Good work, you and your cry!—Shall 's to the Capitol?
Com. O! say, what else? [Exeunt Com. and Men.]

Sic. Go, masters, get you home; be not dismay'd: These are a side that would be glad to have This true, which they so seem to fear. Go home, And show no sign of fear.

1 Cit. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let's home. I ever said, we were 't the wrong, when we banished him.

2 Cit. So did we all. But come, let's home. [Exeunt Citizens.]

Bru. I do not like this news.

Sic. Nor I.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol. — Would half my wealth Would buy this for a lie!

Sic. Pray, let us go. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—A Camp; at a small distance from Rome.

Enter Aufidius, and his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?

Lieu. I do not know what witchcraft's in him, but Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat, Their talk at table, and their thanks at end; And you are darken'd in this action, sir, Even in your own name.

Auf. I cannot help it now, Unless, by using means, I lame the foot Of our design. He bears himself more proudlier, Even to my person, than I thought he would When first I did embrace him; yet his nature In that's no changeling, and I must excuse What cannot be amended.

Lieu. Yet I wish, sir, (I mean, for your particular) you had not Join'd in commission with him; but either Had borne the action of yourself, or else To him had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou sure, When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Though it seems, And so he thinks, and is no less apparent To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly, And shows good husbandry for the Volscian state, Fights dragou-like, and does achieve as soon As draw his sword; yet he hath left undone That, which shall break his neck, or hazard mine, Whene'er we come to our account.

Lieu. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry Rome?

Auf. All places yield to him ere he sits down; And the nobility of Rome are his; The senators and patricians love him too, The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people Will be as rash in the repeal, as hasty To expel him thence. I think, he'll be to Rome, As is the osprey to the fish, who takes it By sovereignty of nature. First he was A noble servant to them, but he could not Carry his honours even; whether 't was pride, Which out of daily fortune ever taints The happy man; whether defect of judgment, To fail in the disposing of those chances Which he was lord of; or whether nature, Not to be other than one thing, not moving From the casque to the cushion; but commanding peace, Even with the same austerity and garb As he controll'd the war; but one of these (As he hath spices of them all, not all, For I dare so far free him) made him fear'd, So hated, and so banish'd: but he has a merit, To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues Live in the interpretation of the time, And power, in itself most commendable, Hath not a tomb so evident as a cheer To extol what it hath done.

One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail; Rights by rights suffer, strengths by strengths do fail. Come, let's away. — When, Caius, Rome is thine, 'Thou art poor'st of all; then, shortly art thou mine. [Exeunt.]
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I have tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leasing. Therefore, fellow, I must have leave to pass.

1 G. 'Tis faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf, as you have uttered words in your own, you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie, as to live chaste. Therefore, go back.

Men. Pr'ythee, fellow; remember my name is Menenus, always factionary on the party of your general.

2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar, as you say you have, I am one that, telling true under him, must say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he dined, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

1 G. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am, as thy general is.

1 G. Then you should hate Rome, as he does. Can you, when you have pushed out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the queenly groans of old women, the virginal laments of old daughters, and the Men. Good faith, I'll prove him, Speed how it will. You shall ere long have knowledge

Of my success. [Exit.

Com. He'll never hear him.

Sic. Not?

Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye
Red as 't would burn Rome, and his injury
The gadder to his pity. I kneel'd before him;
'T was very faintly he said, "Rise?" dismissed me
Thus, with his speechless hand. What he would do,
He sent in writing after me; what he would not,
Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions:
So that all hope is vain,
Unless his noble mother, and his wife;
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's hence,
And with our fair entreaties haste them on. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Volscian Camp before Rome. The Guards at their Sations.

Enter to them, Menenius.

1 G. Stay! Whence are you?

2 G. Stand, and go back.

Men. You guard like men: it is well; but, by your leave,
I am an officer of state, and come
To speak with Coriolanus.

1 G. From whence?

Men. From Rome.

2 G. You may not pass; you must return: our general
Will no more hear from thence.

2 G. You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire, before
You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends,
If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks,
My name hath touch'd your ears: it is Menenius.

1 G. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name
Is not here passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover: I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply, amplifi'd;
For I have ever magnifi'd my friends,
(Of whom he's chief) with all the size that variety

---

1 This word was often used for friend.
2 verified; in f. s.
3 Falsehood.
Take this along: I write it for thy sake. [Gives a Paper. And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius, I will not hear thee speak.—This man, Aufidius, was my belov'd in Rome; yet thou behold'st—

AUF. You keep a constant temper.

[Exit Coriolanus and Aufidius.

1 G. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?

2 G. 'Tis a spell; you see, of much power. You know the way home again.

1 G. Do you hear how we are shent1 for keeping your greatness back?

2 G. What cause, do you think, I have to swoon?

Men. I neither care for the world, nor your general: for such things as you, I can scarce think 'tis any, you are so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself, fears it not from another. Let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are, long; and your misery increase with your age. I say to you, as I was said to, away! [Exit.

1 G. A noble fellow, I warrant him.

2 G. The worthy fellow is our general: he is the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Tent of Coriolanus.

Enter Coriolanus, Aufidius, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow
Set down our host.—My partner in this action,
You must report to the Volscian lords, how plainly
I have borne this business.

AUF. Only their ends
You have respected; stopp'd your ears against
The general suit of Rome; never admitted
A private whisper, no, not with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Loved me above the measure of a father:
Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him; for whose old love, I have (Though I show'd sourly to him) once more offer'd
The first conditions, which they did refuse,
And cannot now accept, to grace him only
That thought he could do more. A very little
I have yielded, too: fresh embassies, and snits,
Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter
Will I lend ear to.—Ha! what shout is this? [Shout
Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow [within,
In the same time 'tis made? I will not.—

Enter, in mourning Habits, VIRGILIA, VOLUMNIA, leading young MARESCH, VALERIA, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then, the honour'd mould
Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand
The grand-child to her blood. But, out, afflication! All bond and privilege of nature, break! Let it be virtuous, to be obtinate.—

What is that curt'sy worth? or those doves' eyes,
Which can make gods forsworn?—I melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others.—My mother bows, As if Olympus to a molehill should
In supplication; and my young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession, which
Great nature cries, "Deny not."—Let the Volscians Plead Rome, and harrow Italy; I'll never
Be such a恭敬 to obey instinct, but stand
As if a man were author of himself;
And knew no other kin.

VIR. My lord and husband! Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Vir. The sorrow, that delivers us thus chang'd,
Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor, now,
I have forgot my part, and I am out,
Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny; but do not say
For that, "Forgive our Romans!"—O! a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath vProg'd it e'er since. You gods! I pray,2 And the most noble mother of the world Leave unsaluted. Sink, my knee, 'tis the earth; [Kneels.
Of thy deep duty more impression show
Than that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up bless'd! Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint,
I kneel before thee, and improperly
Show duty, as mistaking3 all this while
Between the child and parent. [Kneels.

Cor. What is this?
Your knees to me? to your corrected son?
Then, let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars; then, let the mutinous winds
Strike the good cedars in the fiery sun, Murd'ring impossibility, to make
What cannot be slight work. [Rising and raising her.

Vol. Thou art my warrior; I hop4 to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

Cor. The noble sister of Publico.

The moon of Rome; chaste as the idol,
That's curdled by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple: dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which, by the interpretation of full time,
May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform
My thoughts with nobleness; that thou may'st prove
To shame unvulnerable, and stick i' the wars
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw,
And saving those that eye thee!

Vol. Your knee, sirrah.

Cor. That's my brave boy?

Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself,
Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace;
Or, if you'd ask, remember this before:
The things I have forsworn to grant may never
Be held by you denials. Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanics: tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural: desire not
To allay my rages and revenges with
Your colder reasons.

Vol. O! no more, no more! You have said, you will not grant us any thing;
For we have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already; yet we will ask;
That, if we fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness. Therefore, hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volscians, mark; for we'll Hear nought from Rome in private. [Takes his seat.

—Your request?

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our raiment, And state of bodies, would bewray what life
We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself,
How more unfortunate than all living women

Footnotes:
1 Rebutted. 2 pray: in folio. Theobald made the change. 3 mistaken: in f. e. 4 Not in f. e. 5 hope: in folio. Corrected by Pope.
And to poor we,

Thine enmity's most capital.

When she, (poor hen !) fond of no second brood,
Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home,
Loaden with honour. Say, my request's unjust,
And spur me back; but, if it be not so,
Thou art not honest, and the gods will plague thee,
That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs,—He turns away:
Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees.

All kneel.

To his surname, Coriolanus. Longs more pride,
Than pity to our prayers. Down: an end;
This is the last:—so we will home to Rome,
And die among our neighbours.—Nay, behold us:
This boy, that cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship,
Does reason our petition with more strength
Than thou hast to deny it.—Come, let us go.
This fellow had a Volscian to his mother;
His wife is in Corioi, and his child
Like him by chance.—Yet give us our despatch:
I am hush'd until our city be afire,
And then I'll speak a little. [struggling.]

[He holds Volumnia by the hand, long, and self.]

Cor. O mother, mother! What have you done?
Behold! the heavens do ope, The gods look down, and this unnatural scene
They laugh at. O my mother! mother! O!
You have won a happy victory to Rome;
But, for your son,—believe it, O! believe it,—
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. But let it come.—
Aaufidius, though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius,
Were you in my stead, would you have heard
A mother less, or granted less, Aufidius?

Auf. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn, you were:
And, sir, it is no little thing to make
Mino eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir,
What peace you 'll make, advise me. For my part,
I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and pray you,
Stand to me in this case.—O mother! wife!

Auf. [Aside.] I am glad, thou hast set thy mercy
And thy honour
At difference in thee: out of that I'll work:
Myself a firmer fortune.

[The Ladies make signs to Coriolanus.]

Cor. [Ay, by and by.]

[To Volumnia, Virgilia, &c.]

But we will drink together; and you shall bear
A better witness back than words, which we
On like conditions will have counter-seal'd.
Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve
To have a temple built you: all the swords
In Italy, and her confederate arms,
Could not have made this peace. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius.

Men. See you yond! coign o' the Capitol; yond corner-stone?

Sir. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger; there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him:
but I say, there is no hope in't. Our throats are sentenced, and stay upon execution.
SCENE V. —Antium. A Public Place.

Enter Tullius Aufidius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords of the city, I am here.
Deliver them this paper: having read it,
Bid them repair to the market-place; where I,
Even in theirs and in the commons' ears,
Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse
The city ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends 't appear before the people, hoping [Attendants]
To purge himself with words. Despachet. [Exeunt
Enter Conspirators of Aufidius' Faction.

Most welcome!
1 Con. How is it with our general?
Auf. Even so,
As with a man by his own alms empoison'd,
And with his charity slain.
2 Con. Most noble sir,
If you do hold the same intent, wherein
You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you
Of your great danger.
Auf. Sir, I cannot tell;
We must proceed, as we do find the people.
3 Con. The people will remain uncertain, whilst 'Twixt you there 's a difference; but the fall of either
Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf. I know it;
And my pretext to strike at him admits
A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd
Mine honour for his truth: who being so height'd,
He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery,
Seducing so my friends; and to this end
He bow'd his nature, never known before
But to be rough, unswayable, and fierce.
3 Con. Sir, his stoutness,
When he did stand for counsel, which he lost
By a lattice of stooping,—

Auf. That I would have spoke of.
Being banish'd for't, he came unto my heart;
Presented to my knife his throat: I took him;
Made him joint-servant with me; gave him way
In all his own desires; may, let him choose
Out of my files, his projects to accomplish,
My best and freshest men; serv'd his designments
In mine own person; help to reap the fame
Which he did ear all his; and took some pride
To do myself this wrong: till, at the last,
I seem'd his follower, not partner; and
He wagg'd me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary.

1 Con. So he did, my lord;
The army marvell'd at it; and, in the last,
When he had carried Rome, and that we look'd
For no less spoil, than glory,—

Auf. There was it;
For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him.
At a few drops of women's rheum, which are
As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour
Of our great action: therefore shall he die,
And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

[Drums and Trumpets sound, with great Shouts of the People.]
' 1 Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post,
And had no welcomes home; but he returns,
Splitting the air with noise.
 2 Con. And patient fools,
Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear
With giving him glory.
 3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage,
Ere he express himself, or move the people
With what he would say, let him feel your sword,
Which we will second. When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounced shall bury
His reasons with his body.
Auf. Say no more.
Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the City.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I have not deserv'd it.

But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus'd
What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

1 Lord. And grieve to hear it.

What faults he made before the last, I think,
Might have found easy lines: but there to end,
Where he was to begin, and give away
The helps of our levies, answering us
With our own charge, making a treaty there
There was a yielding; this admits no excuse.

Auf. He approaches: you shall hear him.

Enter Coriolanus, with Drums and Colours; a crowd of Citizens with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting
Under your great command. You are to know,
That prosperously I have attempted, and
With bloody passage led your wars, even to
The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home,
Do more than counterpoise, a full third part,
The charges of the action. We have made peace,
With no less honour to the Antonates,
Than shame to the Romans; and we here deliver,
Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal o' the senate, what We have compounded on.

Auf. Read it not, noble lords;
But tell the traitor in the highest degree
He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor!—how now!—

Auf. Ay, traitor, Marcius!

Cor. Ay, Marcius! Coriolanus!

Auf. Doest thou think
I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name
Coriolanus in Corioli?—

You lords and heads of the state, perfidiously
He has betray'd your business, and given up
For certain drops of salt your city, Rome;
I say your city, to his wife and mother,
Breaking his oath and resolution, like
A twist of rotten silk; never admitting
Counsel o' the war, but at his nurse's tears
He whinn'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars?

Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears. Ha!

Cor. Auf. No more

1 The rest of this stage direction is not in f. e.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart
Too great for what contains it. Boy! O slave!—
Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever
I was forc'd to scold. Your judgments, my grave lords,
Must give this cur the lie: and his own notion (Who wears my stripes impress'd upon him, that Must bear my beating to his grave) shall join
To thrust the lie unto him.

1 Lord. Peace both, and hear me speak.
Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volscians; men and lads,
Stain all your edges on me.—Boy! False hound!
If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there,
That like an eagle in a dove-cote, I
Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli:

3 Lord. The nobles. The Volscians. To you.
Cor. I alone did it.—Boy!

Auf. Why, noble lords,
Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune,
Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart,
'Tfore your own eyes and ears?

All Con. Let him die for't.
All People. Tear him to pieces; do it presently. He killed my son,—my daughter,—he killed my cousin,
Mareius:—he killed my father.—

2 Lord. Peace, he!—No rage:—peace!
The man is noble, and his fame folds in
This orb o' the earth. His last offences to us
Shall have judicious hearing.—Stand, Aufidius,
And trouble not the peace.

Cor. O! that I had him,
With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe,
To use my lawful sword!

Auf. Insolent villain!

All Con. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him!

[Aufidius and the Conspirator draw, and kill Coriolanus, who falls: Aufidius stands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold!

Auf. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord. O Tullius!—
2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valour will weep.

3 Lord. Tread not upon him.—Masters all, be quiet.—

Put up your swords.

Auf. My lords, when you shall know (as in this rage, Provok'd by him, you cannot) the great danger
Which this man's life did owe you, you 'll rejoice
That he is thus cut off. Please it your honours
To call me to your senate, I'll deliver
Myself your loyal servant, or endure
Your heaviest censure.

1 Lord. Bear from hence his body,
And mourn you for him. Let him be regarded,
As the most noble corse that ever herald
Did follow to his urn.

2 Lord. His own impatience
Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.
Let's make the best of it.

Auf. My rage is gone,
And I am struck with sorrow.—Take him up:—
Help, three o' the chiefest soldiers; I'll be one.—
Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully;
Trail your steel spikes.—Though in this city he Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury,
Yet he shall have a noble memory.

 Assist. [Exeunt, bearing the Body of Coriolanus.
A dead March, while they pass round the Stage.
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE.

SATURNINUS, Son to the late Emperor of Rome, and afterwards declared Emperor.
BASSIANUS, Brother to Saturninus; in love with Lavinia.
TITUS ANDRONICUS, a noble Roman, General against the Goths.
MARCUS ANDRONICUS, Tribune of the People; and Brother to Titus.
LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, MUTIUS, Young Lucius, a Boy, Son to Lucius.

Kinsmen of Titus, Senators, Tribunes, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

SCENE, Rome; and the Country near it.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. Before the Capitol.

The Tomb of the Andronici appearing; the Tribunes and Senators aloft, as in the Capitol. Enter, below, SATURNINUS and his Followers, on one side; and BASSIANUS and his Followers, on the other; with Drum and Colours.

Sat. Noble patricians, patrons of my right, Defend the justice of my cause with arms; And, countrymen, my loving followers, Plead my successive title with your swords. I am the first-born son, of him the last That wore the imperial diadem of Rome: Then, let my father’s honours live in me, Nor wrong mine age with this indignity.

Bas. Romans,—friends, followers, favourers of my right, If ever Bassianus, Caesar’s son, Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome, Keep then this passage to the Capitol; And suffer not dishonour to approach Th’ imperial seat, to virtue consecrate, To justice, conscience, and nobility; But let desert in pure election shine; And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter Marcus Andronicus, aloft, with the Crown.

Mar. Princes, that strive by factions, and by friends, Ambitiously for rule and empire, Know, that the people of Rome, for whom we stand A special party, have by common voice In election for the Roman empery, Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius, For many good and great deserts to Rome: A noble man, a braver warrior, Lives not this day within the city walls. He by the senate is accited home, From weary wars against the barbarous Goths; That, with his sons, a terror to our foes.

Hath yok’d a nation strong, train’d up in arms. Ten years are spent since first he undertook This cause of Rome, and chastised with arms Our enemies’ pride: five times he hath return’d Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons In collins from the field; And now at last, laden with honour’s spoils, Returns the good Andronicus to Rome, Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms. Let us entreat,—by honour of his name, Whom worthily you would have now succeed, And in the Capitol and senate’s right, Whom you pretend to honour and adore,— That you withdraw you, and abate your strength: Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors should, Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts. Bas. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affly? In thy uprightness and integrity, And so I love and honour thee and thine, Thy noble brother Titus, and his sons, And her, to whom my thoughts are humbled all, Gracious Lavinia, Rome’s rich ornament, That I will here dismiss my loving friends; And to my fortunes, and the people’s favour, Commit my cause in balance to be weigh’d.

[Exeunt the Followers of Bassianus.

Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my right, I thank you all and here dismiss you all; And to the love and favour of my country Commit myself, my person, and my cause.

[Exeunt the Followers of Saturninus.

Rome, be as just and gracious unto me, As I am confident and kind to thee.— Open the brazen gates, and let me in.

Bas. Tribunes, and me, a poor competitor.

[Exeunt, and Bas. go into the Capitol; and exeunt with Senators, Marcus, &c.
SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter a Captain, and others.

Cap. Romans! make way! The good Andronicus, Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion, Successful in the battles that he fights, With honour, and with fortune, is return'd, From where he circumscribed with his sword, And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.

Sound Drums and Trumpets, &c. Enter Martius and Mutius: after them, Two men bearing a Coffin covered with black; then Lucius and Quintus. After them, Titus Andronicus; and then Tamora, with Alarbus, Chiron, Demetrius, Aaron, and other Goths, prisoners; Soldiers and People, following. The Bearers set down the Coffin.

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning woods! Lo! as the bark that hath discharge'd her fraught Returns with precious lading to the bay, From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage, Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs, To re-salute his country with his tears; Tears of true joy for his return to Rome. Thou great defender of this Capitol, Stand gracious to the rites that we intend! Romans, of five-and-twenty valiant sons, Half of the number that king Prisam had, Behold the poor remains, alive, and dead! These that survive let Rome reward with love; These that I bring unto their latest home, With burial amongst their ancestors: Here Goths have given me leave to shear my sword, Titus, unused, and careless of thine own, Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet, To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?— Make way to lay them by their brethren.

[The Tomb is opened.

There gree in silence, as the dead are wont, And sleep in peace, stain in your country's wars! O sacred receptacle of my joys, Sweet cell of virtue and nobility, How many sons hast thou of mine in store, That thou wilt never render to me more? Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths, That with their limbs he may have his, and on a pile Ad manes fratrum sacrificium offer. Before this earthy prison of their bones; That so their shadows be not unappeas'd, Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth. Tit. I give him you; the noblest that survives, The eldest son of this distrest queen.

Tum. Stay, Roman brethren!—Gracious conqueror, Victorious Titus, rue the tears I shed, A mother's tears in passion for her son; And, if thy sons were ever dear to thee, O! think my son to be as dear to me. Sufficeth not, that we are brought to Rome, To beautify thy triumphs, and return, Captive to thee, and to thy Roman yoke; But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets, For valiant doings in their country's cause? O! if to fight for king and common weal Were pitied in thine, it is in these. Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood. Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods? Draw near them, then, in being merciful: Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge. Thrice-noble Titus, spare my first-born son.

Tit. Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me.

There are their brethren, whom you Goths beheld Alive, and dead; and for their brethren slain, Religious they ask a sacrifice:
To this your sons is marked; and die he must, To appease their groaning shadows that are dust. Luc. Away with him! and make a fire straight; And with our swords, upon a pile of wood, Let's hew his limbs, till they be clean consum'd. [Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius, with Alarbus.

Tam. O cruel, irreligious piety! Chi. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous? Dem. Oppose not Scythia to ambitious Rome. Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive To tremble under Titus' threatening look. Then, madam, stand resolv'd; but hope withal, The self same gods, that arm'd the queen of Troy With opportunity of sharp revenge Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent, May favour Tamora, the queen of Goths, (When Goths were Goths, and Tamora was queen) To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius, with their Swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd Our Roman rites. Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd, And enthralls feed the sacrificing fire, Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky. Remainest nought, but to inter our brethren, And with loud 'larums welcome them to Rome. Tit. Make this his latest farewell to their souls. [Trumpets sounded; and the Coffins laid in the tomb. In peace and honour rest you here, my sons; [Kneeling. Rome's readiest champions, repose you here in rest, Secure from worldly chances and mishaps! Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells, Here grow no damned grudges; here no storms, No noise, but silence and eternal sleep. In peace and honour rest you here, my sons! [Rising.

Enter Lavinia.

Lav. In peace and honour live lord Titus long; My noble lord and father, live in fame. Lo! at this tomb my tributary tears I rend, for my dear brows alas! gone! and At that fair knee I kneel, with tears of joy Shed on the earth for thy return to Rome: O! bless me here with thy victorious hand, Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud. Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly resolv'd The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!— Lavinia, live; outlive thy father's days, And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise! Enter Marcus Andronicus, Saturninus, Bassianus, and others.

Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus. Let it be a wish, my sons, from successful wars, You that survive, and you that sleep in fame. Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all, That in your country's service drew your swords, But safer triumph is this funeral pomp, That hath aspir'd to Solon's happiness, And triumphs over chance in honour's bed.— Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome, Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been, Send thee by me, their tribune and their trust, This palliament of white and spotless hue;
And name thee in election for the empire,
With these our late-deceased emperor's sons.
Be candidates then, and put it on,
And help to set a head on headless Rome.

_Tit._ A better head her glorious body fits,
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness:
What! should I don this robe, and trouble you?
Be chose! with acclamations to-day;
To-morrow, yield up rule, resign my life,
And set abroad new business for you all—

Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,
And led my country's strength successfully,
And buried one and twenty variant sons,
Knighthed in field, slain manfully in arms,
In right and service of their noble country.
Give me a staff of honour for mine age,
But not a sceptre to control the world:
Upright he held it, lords, that held it last.

_Mar._ Titus, thou shalt obtain the empery.

_Sat._ Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell?

_Tit._ Patience, prince Saturninus.

_Sat._ Romans, do me right.

Patricians, draw your swords, and sheath them not Till Saturninus be Rome's emperor.—
Andronicus, would thouwert ship'd to hell,
Rather than rob me of the people's hearts.

_Luc._ Proud Saturnine, in triumph of the good
That noble-minded Titus means to thee!

_Tit._ Content thee, prince: I will restore to thee
The people's hearts, and wean them from themselves.

_Bas._ Andronicus, I do not flatter thee,
But honour thee, and will do till I die:
My faction if thou strengthen with thy friends,
I will most thankfully be; and thanks, to men
Of noble minds, is honourable meed.

_Tit._ People of Rome, and people's tribunes, here
I ask your voices, and your suffrages:
Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?

_Trib._ To gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admits.

_Tit._ Tribunes, I thank you; and this suit I make,
That you create your emperor's eldest son,
Lord Saturnine, whose virtues will, I hope,
Reflect on Rome, as Titan's rays on earth,
And ripen justice in this common-wealth:
Then, if you will elect by my advice,
Crown him, and say,—'Long live our emperor!'

_Mar._ With voices and applause of every sort,
Patricians, and plebeians, we create
Lord Saturninus, Rome's great emperor,
And say,—'Long live our Emperor Saturnine!'

_Along Flourish._

_Sat._ Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done
To us in our election this day,
I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts
And will with deeds requite thy gentleness:
And, for an onset, Titus, to advance
Thy name and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my empress,
Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart,
And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse.
Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?

_Tit._ It doth, my worthy lord; and in this match
I hold me highly honour'd of thy grace:
And here, in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,
King and commander of our common-wealth,
The wide world's emperor, do I condescend
My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners;

Present well worthy Rome's imperial lord:
Receive them, then, the tribute that I owe,
Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

_Sat._ Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts,
Rome shall record; and, when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable deserts,
Romans, forget thy fealty to me.

_Tit._ Now, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor?

_To TAMORA._

To him, that for your honour and your state,
Will use you nobly, and your followers.

_Sat._ A goodly lady, trust me, of the hue
_Aside._ That I would choose, were I to choose anew.—

_To her._ Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance:
Though chance of war hath wrought this change of cheer,
Thou com'st not to be made a scorn in Rome:
Princely shall be thy usage every way.
Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes: madam, he comforts you,
Can make you greater than the queen of Gods.—

_Lavinia._ You are not displeas'd with this?

_Luc._ Not I, my lord; sith true nobility
Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

_Sat._ Thanks, sweet Lavinia.—Romans, let us go.

Re-enter LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

_Mar._ Our duty, Lucius, to convey her away.

_Luc._ And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live.

_Tit._ Traitors, avaunt! Where is the emperor's guard?

_Luc._ My lord, Lavinia is surpris'd.

_Sat._ Surpris'd! By whom?

_Bas._ By him that justly may
Bear his bethroth'd from all the world away.

[Exit MARCUS AND BASSIANUS with LAVINIA.

_Mut._ Brothers, help to convey her hence away,
And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

[Exit LUCIUS, QUINTUS, AND MARTIUS.

_Mar._ With voices and applause of every sort,
Patricians, and plebeians, we create
Lord Saturninus, Rome's great emperor,
And say,—'Long live our Emperor Saturnine!'

_Along Flourish._

_Tit._ What, villain boy!

_Bas._ Barrit'st me way in Rome? [Titus kills MUTIUS.

_Mut._ Help, Lucius, help! [Re-enter LUCIUS.

_Luc._ My lord, you are unjust; and, more than so,
In wrongful quarrel you have stain your son.

_Tit._ Not thou, nor he, nor any sons of mine:
My sons would never so dishonour me.

_Tit._ Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

_Luc._ Dead, if you will; but not to be his wife,
That is another's lawful promis'd love.

_Exeunt._

_Sat._ No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock:
I'll trust by leisure him that mocks me once;
Thou never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,
Confederates all thus to dishonour me.

_Was there none else in Rome to make a stale?_ But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus.

Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine,
That said'st, I beg'd the empire at thy hands.

_Tit._ O monstrous! what reproachful words are these?
Sat. But go thy ways; go, give that changing piece
To him that flourish'd for her with his sword;
A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of Gothis,
That, like the stately Phebus 'mongst her nymphs,
Dost overshine the gallant'st dames of Rome,
If thou be pleas'd with this my sudden choice,
Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,
And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, queen of Gothis, dost thou applaud my choice?

And here I swear by all the Roman gods,—
Sith priest and holy water are so near
And tapers burn so bright, and every thing
In readiness for Hymenaeus stand,—
I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place
I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome I swear,
If Saturnine advance the queen of Gothis,
She will a handmaid be to his desires,
A loving nurse, a mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pauline.—Lords, accompany
Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride,
Sent by the heavens for prince Saturnine,
Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquered:
There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

[Exeunt Saturninus and his followers; Tamora, and her sons; Aaron and Gothis.]

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride.
Titus, whenwert thou wont to walk alone,
Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Re-enter Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Mar. O, Titus, see, O, see what thou hast done!
In a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribune, no; no son of mine,
Nor thou, nor these, confesses in the deed
That hath dishonour'd all our family:
Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Luc. Shall we not use him burial, as becomes Give Mutius burial with our lost Valens?

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb.
This monument five hundred years hath stood,
Which I have sumptuously re-edified:
Here none but soldiers, and Rome's servants,
Repose in fame; none basely slain in bravals,
Bury him where you can, he comes not here.

Mar. My lord, this is impiety in you.
My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for him:
He must be buried with his brethren.

Quint. Mart. And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tit. And shall I! What villain was it spoke that word?

Quin. He that would vouch't in any place but here.

Tit. What I would us, bury him in my despite?

Mar. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, even thou hast struck upon my crest,
And, with these boys, mine honour thou hast wounded:
My foes I do repute you every one;
So, trouble me no more, but get you gone.

Mar. He is not1 himself; let us withdraw awhile.

Quin. Not I, till Mutius' bones be buried.

[Marcus and the Sons of Titus kneel.]

Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plead.

Quin. Father, and in that name doth nature speak.

Tit. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.

Mar. Renowned Titus, more than half my soul,—

Luc. Dear father, soul and substance of us all,—

Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter
His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,
That died in honour and Lavinia's cause.

Thou art a Roman, be not barbarous:
The Greeks upon advice did bury Ajax,
That slew himself, and wise Laertes' son.

Did graciously plead for his funerals.

Let not young Mutius, then, that was thy joy,
Be barr'd his entrance here.

Tit. Rise, Marcus, rise,—

The dismal'st day is this, that e'er I say,
To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome!—

Well, bury him, and bury me the text.
[Mutius is put into the Tomb.]

Luc. There lie thy bones, sweet Mutius, with thy friends,
Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb!

All. No man shed tears for noble Mutius;
He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.

Mar. My lord,—to step out of these dreary dumps,—
How comes it that the subtle queen of Gothis
Is of a sudden thus advance'd in Rome?

Tit. I know not, Marcus, but I know it is;
Whether by device or no, the heavens can tell.

Is she not, then, beholding to the man
That brought her for this high good turn so far?
Yes, and will nobly him reward to the last.

Flourish. Re-enter, at one side, Saturninus, attended;

Tamora, Demetrius, Chiron, and Aaron: at the other side. Bassianus, Lavinia, and others.

Sat. So Bassianus, you have play'd your prize?

God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride.

Bas. And you of yours, my lord. I say no more,
Nor wish no less; and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have power,
Thou and thy faction shall repent this rape.

Bas. Rape, call you it, my lord, to seize my own,
My true-betrothed love, and now my wife?

But let the laws of Rome determine all;
Mean while, I am possess'd of that is mine.

Luc. Sat. Thou, sir; but Sir, doth hold with you;

But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you.

Bas. My lord, what I have done, as best I may,
Answer I must, and shall do with my life;
Only thus much I give you grace to know.

By all the duties that I owe to Rome,
This noble gentleman, lord Titus here,
Is in opinion, and in honour, wrong'd;
That in the rescue of Lavinia
With his own hand did slay his youngest son,
In zeal to you, and highly mov'd to wrath,
To be control'd in that he frankly gave.

Receive him, then, to favour, Saturnine,
That hath express'd himself, in all his deeds,
A father, and a friend, to thee, and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds:
'Tis thou, and those, that have dishonour'd me.

Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge,
How I have lov'd and honour'd Saturnine.

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora
Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine,
Then hear me speak indifferently for all;
And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. What, madam! be dishonour'd openly,
And basely put it up without revenge?

Tam. Not so, my lord: the gods of Rome foretend,
I should be author to dishonour you!

1 not: in f. e.
2 viose: sullen; a dump was originally a strain of music, or a poem.
3 This line is not in the quartos.
But, on mine honour, dare I undertake
For good lord Titus' innocence in all,
Whose fury, not dissembled, speaks his griefs.
Then, at my suit look graciously on him;
Low not so noble a friend on vain suppose,
Nor with sour looks afflict his gentle heart.
My lord, be rul'd by me, be wise at last; [Aside to Sat.
Dissemble all your griefs and discontent:
You are but newly planted in your throne;
Lest, then, the people, and patricians too,
Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,
And so supplant you for ingratitude,
Which Rome reposites to be a heinous sin,
Yield at entreats, and then let me alone.
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction, and their family,
The cruel father, and his traitorous sons,
To whom I sued for my dear son's life;
And make them know what 'tis to let a queen
Kneel in the streets, and beg for grace in vain.—
Come, come, sweet emperor,—come, Andronicus;—

Aloud.
Take up this good old man, and cheer the heart
That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.
Sat. Rise, Titus, rise; my empress hath prevail'd.
Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord.
These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.
Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily,
And must advise the emperor for his good.
This day all quarrels die, Andronicus;
And let it be mine honour, good my lord,
That I have reconcile'd your friends and you.—
For you, prince Bassianus, I have pass'd
My word and promise to the emperor,
That you will be more mild and tractable.—
And fear not, lords,—and you, Lavinia.—
By my advice, all his gallows on my knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.
Lec. We do: and vow to heaven, and to his highness,
That what we did was mildly, as we might, [They kneel.]
Tending our sister's honour, and our own.
Mar. That on mine honour here I do protest.
Sat. Away, and talk not: trouble us no more.
Tom. Nay, nay, sweet emperor, we must all be friends.
The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace:
I will not be denied. Sweet heart, look back.
Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother's here,
And at my lovely Tamora's entreaties,
I do remit these young men's heinous faults.

[They stand up.]

Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
I found a friend; and sure as death I swore,
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.
Come; if the emperor's court can feast two brides,
You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends.—
This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.
Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty,
To hunt the panther and the hart with me,
With horn and hound we'll give your grace bonjour.
Sat. Be it so, Titus, and grace me too.

[Trumpets. Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before the Palace.

Enter Aaron.

Aar. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus' top,
Safe out of fortune's shot; and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder's crack, or lightning flash,
Advance'd above pale envy's threatening reach.
As when the golden sun salutes the morn,
And having girt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac in his glistering coach,
And overlooks the highest-peering hills;
So Tamora.—
Upon her will doth earthly honour wait,
And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.
Then, Aaron arm thy heart, and fit thy thoughts,
To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress;
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Hast prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains,
And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes,
Than was Prometheus tied to Caucasus.
Away with slavish weeds, and servile thoughts!
I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
To wait upon this new-made empress.
To wait, said I? to wanton with this queen,
This goddess, this Semiramis, this nymph,
This syren, that will charm Rome's Saturnine,
And see his shipwreck, and his commonwealth's
Holla! what a storm is this?—

Enter Demetrius and Chiron, braving.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners, to intrude where I am gracie'd,
And may, for aught thou know'st, affect be.
Chri. Demetrius, thou dost over-wean in all,

5 6 Not in f. a. 7 The usual London cry, in time of tumult.
Aar. Away, I say!

Now by the gods that warlike Goths adore,
This petty brabble will undo us all.—
Why, lords,—and think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right?
What! is Lavinia then become so loose,
Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her love such quarrels may be broach'd,
Without controlment, justice, or revenge?
Young lords, beware!—an should the empress know
This discard's ground, the music would not please.
Chi. I care not; I, know she and all the world:
I love Lavinia more than all the world.

Dem. Youngling, learn thou to make some meaner choice:
Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope.

Aar. Why, are ye mad? or know ye not, in Rome
How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brook competitors in love?
I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths
By this device.

Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths
Would I propose, to achieve her whom I love.
Aar. To achieve her!—How?

Dem. Why mak'st thou it so strange?
She is a woman, therefore may be won;
She is a woman, therefore may be won;
She is Lavinia, therefore must be lov'd.
What, man! more water glideth by the mill
Than wots the miller of; and easy 'tis
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know:
Though Bassianus be the emperor's brother,
Better than he have worn Vulcan's badge.

Aar. Ay, and as good as Saturninus may.

Dem. Then, why should he despair, that knows to court it
With words, fair looks, and liberality?
What! hast thou not full often struck a doe,
And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose?

Aar. Why then, it seems, some certain snatch or so
Would serve your turns.

Chi. Ay, so the turn were serv'd;
Aar. Would you had hit it too;
Then should not we be tir'd with this ado.
Why, harke ye, harke ye,—and are you such fools,
To square for this? Would it offend you then,
That both should speed?

Chi. Faith, not me.

Dem. Nor me, so I were one.

Aar. For shame! be friends, and join for that you jar
'Tis policy and, stratagem must do
That you affect; and so must you resolve,
That what you cannot as you would achieve,
You must, perforce, accomplish as you may.
Take this of me; Lucerce was not more chaste
Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love.
A speciord course than lingering languishment.
Must we pursue, and I have found the path.
My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;
There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:
The forest walks are wide and spacious,
And many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villainy.
Single you thither, then, this dainty doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words:
This way, or not at all, stand you in hope.

Come, come; our empress, with her sacred wit,
To villainy and vengeance consecrate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend;
And she shall file our engines with advice,
That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.
The emperor's court is like the house of fame,
The palace full of tongues, of eyes, and ears:
The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and dull;
There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your turns;
There serve your lust, shadow'd from heaven's eye,
And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Chi. They counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice.

Dem. Sit fes and nefis, till I find the stream
To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits,
Per Styga, per manes vehor.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Titus Andronicus, with Hunters, &c. Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gay,
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are wide.
Unequal here, and let us make a bay,
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride,
And rouse the prince, and sing a hunter's round,
That all the court may echo with the sound.

Sons, let it be your charge, and so will I
To attend the emperor's person carefully:
I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day brought comfort and delight.

[Horns wind.  * * they sing:  "The hunt is up."

Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Bassianus, Lavinia, Demetrius, Chiron, and Attendants.

Tit. Many good morrows to your majesty:—
Madam, to you as many and as good.
I promised your grace a hunter's peal.
Sat. And you have rung it lustily, my lords,
Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.
Bas. Lavinia, how say you?

Chi. I say, no;
I have been broad awake two hours and more.
Sat. Come on, then: horse and chariots let us have,
And to our sport.—Madam, now shall ye see
Our Roman hunting.

[To Tamora.

Mar. I have dogs, my lord,
Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase,
And climb the highest promontory's top.
Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game
Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.

Dem. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse nor hound;
But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A desert Part of the Forest.

Enter Aegon, with a Bag of Gold.

Aar. He, that had wit, would think that I had none,
To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it.
Let him that thinks of me so abjectly,
Know that this gold must coin a stratagem,
Which, cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent piece of villainy:
And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest.

[Hides the Gold.

That have their alms out of the empress' chest.

Enter Tamora.

Tam. My lovely Aarow, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?
The birds chaunt melody on every bush;
The snake lies coiled in the cheerful sun;
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground.
Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,
And, whilst the babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd chorus,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,
Let us sit down, and mark their yelling noise:
And—after conflict, such as was supposed
The wandering prince and Dido once enjoy'd.
When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,
And curtained with a counsel-keeping cave.—
We may, each wretched in the other's arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber;
While hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,
Be unto us, as is a nurse's song
Of lullaby to bring her babe asleep.

Aur. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,
Saturn is dominator over mine.
What signifies my deadly-standing eye,
My silences, and my cloudy melancholy?
My fleece of woolly hair that now uncurls,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll.
To do some fatal execution?
No, madam, these are no venereal signs:
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.
Hark, Tamora, the empress of my soul,
Which never hopes more heaven than rests in thee,
This is the day of doom for Bassianus;
His Philomel must lose her tongue to-day:
Thy sons make pillage of her chastity,
And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood.
Seest thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee,
And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll.—
Now question me no more; we are espied:
Here comes a parcel of our hopeful booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.

Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life!

Aur. No more, great empress. Bassianus comes:
Be cross with him; and I'll go fetch thy sons.
To back thy quarrels, whatsoever it may be.

[Exit. Enter Bassianus, and LAVINIA.

Bas. Whom have we here? Rome's royal empress,
Unfurnished of her well-beseeming troop?
Or is it Dian, libited like her;
Who hath abandoned her holy groves,
To see the general hunting in this forest?

Tam. Saucy controller of my private steps!
Had I the power, that, some say, Dian had,
Thy temples should be planted presently
With horns, as was Actaeon's; and the hounds
Should dine upon thy new-transformed limbs,
Unmannerly intruder as thou art!

La. Under your patience, gentle empress,
'Tis thought you have a godly gift in horning;
And to be doubted, that your Moor and you
Are single forth to try experiments.
Jove shield your husband from his hounds to-day!
'T is pity, they should take him for a stag.

Bas. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian
Doth make your honour of his body's hue,
Spotted, destitute, and abominable.
Why are you sequester'd from all your train,
Dismounted from your snow-white goodly steed,
And wander'd hither to an obscure plot,
Accompanied but with a barbarous Moor,

If foul desire had not conducted you?

La. And being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my my noble lord be rated
For sauciness!—I pray you, let us hence,
And let her 'joy her raven-coloured love:
This valley fits the purpose passing well.

Bas. The king, my brother, shall have note of this.

La. Ay, for these slips have made him noted long,
Good king! to be so mightily abus'd.

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother!

Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?

Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale?

These two have 'tied me hither to this place,
A barren detested vale, you see, it is:
The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe.
Here never shines the sun; here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven,
And, when they show'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, here, at dead time of the night,
A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many uchins, 8
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal barely hearing it,
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.
No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But straight they told me, they would bind me here
Unto the body of a diemal yew,
And leave me to this miserable death:
And then they call'd me, foul adulteress,
Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms
That ever ear did hear to such effect;
And, had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed.
Revive it, as you love your mother's life,
Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.

Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

[Stabs Bassianus.

Chi. And this for me, struck home to show my strength.

La. Ay, come, Semiramis!—nay, barbarous Ta-

[Exeunt Bassianus, and LAVINIA.

For no name fits thy nature but thy own.

Tam. Give me thy peniard; you shall know, my boys,
Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong.

Dem. Stay, madam; here is more belongs to her:
First, thrust the corn, then after burn the straw.
This minion stood upon her chastity,
Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty,
And with that painted shape she brav's your might:
And shall she carry this unto her grave?

Chi. An if she do, I would I were an eunuch.

Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,
And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.

Tam. But when ye have the honey ye desire,
Let not this wasp outlive us both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you, madam, we will make that sure.—

Come, mistress, now perforce, we will enjoy
That nice preserved honesty of yours.

La. O Tamora! thou hast a woman's face,—

Tam. I will not hear her speak: away with her!

La. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me but a word.

Dem. Listen, fair madam: let it be your glory
To see her tears; but be your heart to them,
As unrelenting flint to drops of rain.

La. When did the tiger's young ones teach the dam?
I o! do not learn her wrath; she taught it thee.
The milk, thou suck'dst from her, did turn to marble;
Even at her teat thou hadst thy tyranny.
Yet every mother breedeth not sons alike:
Do thou entreat her show a woman pity. [To CHIRON.
CHI. What! wouldst thou have me prove myself
A bastard?
LAV. 'Tis true; the raven doth not hatch a lark:
Yet have I heard, O, could I find it now!
The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely claws pard all away.
Some say that ravens foster forlorn children,
The whilst their own birds famish in their nests:
O! be to me, though thy hard heart say no,
Nothing so kind, but something pitiful.
TAM. I know not what it means. Away with her!
LAV. O! let me teach thee: for my father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee,
Be not obdurate. Open thy deaf ears.
TAM. Hadst thou in person ever offended me,
Even for his sake am I pitiless.
Remember, boys, I pour'dst forth tears in vain,
To save your brother from the sacrifice;
But fierce Andronicus would not relent.
Therefore, away, and use her as you will:
The worse to her, the better lov'd of me.
Lav. O Tamora! be call'd a gentle queen, [Kneeling.
And with thine own hands kill me in this place;
For 'tis not life that I have begg'd so long:
Poor I was slain when Bassianus died.
[go.
TAM. What begg'st thou then? fond' woman, let me
Lav. 'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more,
That womanhood denies my tongue to tell.
O! keep me from their worse than killing lust,
And tumble me into some loathsome pit,
Where never man's eye may behold my body:
Do this, and be a charitable murderer.
TAM. So should I rob my sweet sons of their fee:
No; let them satisfy their lust on thee.
DOM. Away! for thou hast stay'd us here too long.
Lav. No grace? no womanhood? Ah, beastly creature,
The blot and enem'y to our general name!
Confusion fall—
CHI. Nay, then, I'll stop your mouth.—Bring thou
Her husband: [Dragging off LATINIA.
This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him. [Exeunt.
TAM. Farewell, my sons: see, that you make her sure.
Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed,
Till all the Andronici be made away.
Now will I hence to see my lovely Moor,
And let my spleenful sons this trufl deffour. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same.

Enter AARON, with QUINTUS and MARTIUS.

AAR. Come on, my lords, the better foot before:
Straight will I bring you to the lonesome pit,
Where I espy'd the panther fast asleep.
QUIN. My sight is very dull, whate'er it bodes.
MART. And mine, I promise you; 'tis not for shame,
Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile.
MARTIUS falls into the Pit.
QUIN. What! art thou fallen? What subtle hole is this,
Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growning brars,
Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood,
As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers?
A very fatal place it seems to me.—
Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

MART. [Under the stage.] O, brother! with the dismal'st object hurst.
That ever eye with sight made heart lament.
AAR. [Aside.] Now will I fetch the king to find
That he thereby may give a likely guess,
How these were they that made away his brother.
[Exit AARON.
MART. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out
From this unhallowed and blood-stained hole?
QUIN. I am surprised with an uncoth fear;
A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling joints:
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.
MART. To prove thou hast a true-divining heart,
Aaron and thou look down into this den,
And see a fearful sight of blood and death.
QUIN. Aaron is gone; and my compassionate heart
Will not permit mine eyes once to behold
The thing wher'eat it trembles by surprise.
O! tell me how it is; for ne'er till now
Was I a child, to fear I know not what.
MART. Lavinia, poor Lavinia lie embow'ed here,
All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb,
In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit.
QUIN. If it be dark, how dost thou know 'tis he?
MART. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring, that lightens all the hole,
Which, like a taper in some monument,
Dost shine upon the dead man's earthy cheeks,
And shows the rag'd entrails of the pit:
So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus,
When he by night lay bath'd in maiden blood.
O brother! help me with thy fainting hand,—
If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,—
Out of this fell devouring receptacle,
As hateful as Coeus' misty mouth.
QUIN. Reach me thy hand that I may help thee out;
Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,
I may be plung'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.
I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.
MART. Nor can I no strength to climb without thy help.
QUIN. Thy hand once more: I will not loose again,
Till thou art here aloft, or I below.—
THOU canst not come to me; I come to thee. [Falls in.

Enter SATURNINUS and AARON.

SAT. Along with me:—I'll see what hole is here,
And what he is that now is leap'd into it.
Say, who art thou, that lately did descend
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?
MART. The unhappy son of old Andronicus,
Brought hither in a most unlucky hour,
To find thy brother Bassianus dead.
SAT. My brother dead! I know, thou dost but jest:
He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase;
'T is not an hour since I left him there.
MART. We know not where you left him all alive,
But, out alas! here have we found him dead.

Enter TAMORA, with ATTENDANTS; TITUS ANDRONICUS, and LUCIUS.

TAM. Where is my lord, the king?
SAT. Here, Tamora; though as one end with killing grief.
MART. Who is thy brother Bassianus?
SAT. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound:
Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.
TAM. Then, all too late I bring this fatal writ.
[Giving a Letter.

The compleat of this timelesse tragedy;
And wonder greatly, that man's face can fold
In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

Sat. [Reads] "An if we miss to meet him handsomely,—
Sweet huntsman, Bassianus 'tis, we mean.—
Do thou so much as dig the grave for him.
Thou know'st our meanings, look for thy reward
Among the nettles at the elder-tree,
Which overshades the mouth of that same pit,
Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.
Do this, and purchase us thy lastling friends." O. Tamora! was ever heard the like?
This is the pit, and this the elder-tree.
Look, sirs, if you can find the huntsman out,
That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aar. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.

[Showing it.]

Sat. Two of thy wheals, [To Titus] fell ears of bloody kind.
Have here bereft my brother of his life.—
Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison:
There let them bide, until we have devise'd
Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tam. What! are they in this pit? O wondrous thing!
How easily murder is discovered.

Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee
I beg this boon with tears not lightly shed;
That this fell fault of my accursed sons,
Accursed, if the fault be prov'd in them.

Sat. If it be prov'd! you see, it is apparent.
Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?

Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up.
'Tis I did, my lord; yet let me be their bail;
For by my father's reverend tomb I vow
They shall be ready at your highness' will
To answer this suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not bail them; see, thou follow me.
Some bring the murder'd body, some the murderers:
Let them not speak a word, their guilt is plain;
For, by my soul, were there worse end than death,
That end upon them should be executd.

Tam. Andronicus. I will entreat the king;
Fear not thy sons, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come, Lucius, come; stay not to talk with them.

[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE V.—The Same.

Enter Demetrius and Chiron, with Livinia, ravished; her Hands cut off, and her Tongue cut out.

Dem. So, now go tell, an if thy tongue can speak,
Who 'tis cut out thy tongue, and ravish'd thee.

Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning so;
And, if thy stumps will let thee, play the scribe.

Dem. See how with signs and tokens she can scroll.

Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy hands,
Dem. She hath no tongue to call for, nor hands to wash;
And so let's leave her to her silent walks.

Chi. An 't were my case, I should go hang myself.
Dem. If thou hast hands to help thee knit the cord,
[Exeunt Demetrius and Chiron.

Wind Horns. Enter Marcus from hunting.

Mar. Who's this,—my niece, that flies away so fast?
Cousin, a word: where is your husband?
If I do dream, 'would all my wealth would wake me!
If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!—
Speak, gentle niece, what stern ungentle hands
Have lopp'd, and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches; those sweet ornaments,
Which circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in,
And might not gain so great a happiness.
As have thy love? Why dost not speak to me?—
Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall between thy roseate lips,
Coming and going with thy honey breath.
But, sure, some Tereus hath deflour'd thee,
And, lest thou shouldn't detect him, cut thy tongue.
Ah! now thou turn'st away thy face for shame;
And, notwithstanding all this loss of blood,—
As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,—
Yet do thy cheeks look red, as Titan's face
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.
Shall I speak for thee? shall I say, 'tis so?
O! that I knew thy heart; and knew the beast,
That I might rail at him to ease my mind.
Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
Dost burn the heart to cinders where it is.
Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind;
But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee;
A cratur Tereus, cousin, hast thou met,
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,
That could have better sew'd than Philomel.
O! had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a fute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them,
He would not then have touch'd them for his life;
Or, had he heard the heavenly harmony,
Which that sweet tongue hath made in minstrelsy;
He would have drop'd his knife, and fell asleep,
As Cerberus at the Thraesian poets feet.
Come; let us go, and make thy father blind;
For such a sight will blind a father's eye.
One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;
What will whole months of tears thy father's eyes?
Dost not draw back, for we will mourn with thee:
O, could our mourning ease thy misery!

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Senators, Tribunes, and Officers of Justice, with Marcus and Quintus, bound, passing on to the Place of Execution; Titus going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay;
For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed;
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd;
And for these bitter tears, which now you see
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks;
Be pitiful to my condemned sons,
Whose souls are not corrupted as 'tis thought.
For two and twenty sons I never wept,
Because they died in honour's lofty bed;

1 scroll: in folio. 2 them: in old copies. Rowe made the change. 3 their: in old copies; Hanmer's correction. 4 Not in folio; which adds "withall" to the end of the line. 5 These two words are not in f.e.
For these, these, tribunes, in the dust I write

[Throwing himself on the ground.
My heart's deep anguish in my soul's sad tears.
Let my tears stand on the earth's dry apple;
My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush.

[Exeunt Senators, Tribunes, &c., with the Prisoners.

O earth! I will befriend thee with more rain,
That shall distil from these two ancient urns;
Than youthful April shall with all his showers:
In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still;
In winter with warm tears I'll melt the snow,
And keep eternal spring-time thy face.
So thou refuse to drink my dear son's blood,

Enter Lucius, with his sword drawn.

O, reverend tribunes! gentle, aged men!
Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death;
And let me say, that never yet before,
My tears are now prevailing orators.

Luc. O, noble father! you lament in vain:
The tribunes hear you not, no man is by,
And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah, Lucius! for thy brothers let me plead.—
Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, 'tis no matter, man: if they did hear,
Their pity could not make them pity more;
or if they did mark,
They would not pity me, yet plead I must,
And bootless unto them? Therefore, I tell my sorrows to the stones;
Who, though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they are better than the tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale. [Rising.
When I do weep, they humbly at my feet
Receive my tears, and seem to weep with me;
And were they but attired in grave weeds,
Rome could afford no tribune like these.
A stone is soft as wax, tribunes more hard than stones;
A stone is silent, and offencoeth not,
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death,
But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawn?

Luc. To resuscitate two brothers from their death;
For which attempt the judges have pronounced
My everlastin' doom of banishment.

Tit. O happy man! they have befriended thee.
Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive,
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers?
Tigers must prey; and Rome affords no prey,
But me and mine: how happy art thou, then,
From these devourers to be banished?
But who comes with our brother Marcus here?

Marcus and Lavinia.

Mar. Titus, prepare thy aged feet to weep;
O! if not so, thy noble heart to break:
I bring consuming sorrow to this age.

Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it, then.

Mar. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Luc. Ah me! this object kills me.

Tit. Faint-hearted boy, arise, and look upon her.—

Speak, my Lavinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee handleless in thy father's sight?
What foolish had water to the sea,
Or brought a faggot to bright-burning Troy?
My grief was at the height before thou cam'st,
And now, like Nilius, it disdaineth bounds.—
Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hands too,
For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain,
And they have nurs'd this woe in feeding life;
In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have serv'd me to effectless use:
Now, all the service I require of them
Is, that the one will help to cut the other.—

T is well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands,
For hands to do Rome service are but vain.

Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath marty'd thee?

Mar. O! that delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage,
Where, like a stone, she was kept hid, it sung
Rich varying notes, enchanting old and young.

Luc. O! say thou for her, who hath done this deed?

Mar. O! thus I found her straying in the park,
Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer,
That hath receiv'd some unrecurring wound.

Tit. It was my deer; and he that wounded her
Hath hurt me more, than had he kill'd me dead:
For now I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea;
Who marks the washing tide grow wave by wave,
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will in his brinish bowls swallow him.
This way to death my wretched sons are gone,
Here stand I not many; or if they did mark,
And here my brother, weeping at my woes;
But that which gives my soul the greatest spur,
Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul.—

Tit. Had I but seen thy picture in this plight,
It would have maddened me; what shall I do
Now I behold thy living body so?

Thou hast no hands to wipe away thy tears,
Nor tongue to tell me who hath martyr'd thee:
Thy husband is dead; and for his death,
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this.

Look, Marcus; ah! son Lucius, look on her:
When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears
Stood on her cheeks, as doth the honey dew
Upon a gather'd lily almost withered.

Mar. Perchance, she weeps because they kill'd her husband;
Perchance, because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful,
Because the law hath ta'en revenge on them.—

No, no, they would not do so foul a deed;
Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.—

Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips,
Or make some sign how I may do thee ease.

Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain,
Looking all downwards, to behold our checks
How they are stain'd, as meadows yet not dry,
With mire that's left on them by a flood?

And in the fountain shall we gaze so long,
Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearness,
And made a brine-pit with our bitter tears?
Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine?
Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows
Pass the remainder of our hateful days?

What shall we do? let us, that have our tongues,
Plot some device of farther misery,
To make us wonder'd at in time to come.

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears; for at your grief,
See, how my wretched sister sobes and weeps.

Mar. Patience, dear niece.—Good Titus, dry thine eyes.

1 ruins: in old copies. Hamner made the change.
2 So the quarto, 1600; the folio:
Oh! if they did hear,
They would not pity me.
3 noble: in quarto, 1611, and folio.
4 This phrase is also found in Venus and Adonis.
5 like: in f. e.
Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! brother, well I wot,
Thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine,
For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine own.
Luc. Ah, my Lavinia! I will wipe thy cheeks.
Tit. [Mark! I understand her signs.
Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say
That to her brother which I said to thee:
His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.
O! what a sympathy of woe is this,
As far from help as limbo is from bliss.

Enter Aaron.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor
Sends thee this word,—that, if thou love thy sons,
Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the king: he for the same,
Will send thee hither both thy sons alive,
And that shall be the ransom for their fault.

Tit. O, gracious emperor! O, gentle Aaron!
Did ever ravens sing so like a lark?
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise?
With all my heart, I'll send my hand to him.
Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?

Luc. Stay, father! for that noble hand of thine,
That hath thrown down so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the turn.
My youth can better spare my blood than you,
And therefore mine shall save my brothers' lives.

Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome,
And rear'd aloft the bloody battle-axe,
Writing destruction on the enemy's castle?
O! none of both but are of high desert.
My hand hath been but idle; let it serve
To ransom my two nephews from their death,
Then, have I kept it to a worthy end.

Aar. Nay, come agree, whose hand shall go along,
For fear they die before their pardon come.

Mar. My hand shall go.

Luc. By heaven, it shall not go.

Tit. Sirs, strive no more: such wither'd herbs as these Are meet for plunging up, and therefore mine.

Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son,
Let me redeem my brothers both from death.

Mar. And, for our father's sake, and mother's care,
Now let me show a brother's love to thee.

Tit. Agree between you; I will not spare my hand.

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Mar. But I will use it. [Exeunt Lucius and Marcus.

Tit. Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them both:
Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine.

Aar. If that becall'd deceit, I will be honest. [Aside.
And never, whilst I live, deceive men so:—
But I'll deceive you in another sort,
And that you'll say, ere half an hour pass.

[He cuts off Titus's Hand with his Sword.

Re-enter Lucius with an Axe, and Marcus.

Tit. Now, stay your strife; what shall be done,
Is dispatch'd.—

Good Aaron, now in my majesty my hand:
Tell him, it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers. Bid him bury it:
More hath it merited; let it have it.
As for my sons, say, I account of them
As jewels purchase'd at an easy price;
And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.

Aar. I go, Andronicus; and for thy hand,
Look by and by to have thy sons with thee.—

[Aside. Their heads, I mean.—O, how this villainy

Doth fain me with the very thought of it!
Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace,
Aaron will have his soul black as his face. [Exit.

Tit. O! here I lift this one hand up to heaven,
And bow this feeble man to the earth:
If any power pities wretched tears,
To that I call.—What! wilt thou kneel with me?

[To Lavinia.

Do then, dear heart; for heaven shall hear our prayers,
Or with our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim,
And stain the sun with fog, as sometime clouds
When they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

Mar. O! brother, speak with possibilities,
And do not break into these deep extremes.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?
Then, be my passions bottomless with them.

Mar. But yet let reason govern thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries,
Then into limits could I bind my woe.
When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth overflow?
If the winds rage, doth not the sea wax mad,
Threat'ning the welkin with his big-swoln face?
And wilt thou have a reason for this coil?
I am the sea; hark, how her sighs do blow!
She is the weeping welkin, I the earth:
Then, must my sea be moved with her sighs;
Then, must my earth with her continual tears
Become a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd.
For why? my bowels cannot hide her woes,
But like a drunkard must I vomit them.
Then, give me leave, for losers will have leave
To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongues.

Enter a Messenger, with Two Heads and a Hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid
For good hand thou sent'st to the emperor.
Here are the heads of thy two noble sons;
And here's thy hand, in scorn to thee sent back:
Thy griefs their sports, thy resolution mock'd,
That woe is me to think upon thy woes,
More than remembrance of my father's death. [Exit.

Mar. Now, let hot Etna cool in Sicely,
And be my heart an ever-burning hell!
These miseries are more than may be borne.
To weep with them that weep doth ease some deal,
But sorrow flouted at is double death.

Luc. Ah, that this sight should make so deep a wound,
And yet between life and death to shew it
That ever death should let life bear his name.

[Exit. Where life hath no more interest, but to breathe!

[LaVinia kisses him.

Mar. Alas, poor heart! that kiss is comfortless,
As frozen water to a starved snake.

Tit. When will this fearful slumber have an end?

Thou dost not slumber: see, thy two sons' heads;
Thy warlike hand; thy mangled daughter here;
Thy other banish'd son, with this dear sight
Struck pale and bloodless; and thy brother, I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb.
Ah! now no more will I control my griefs:
Rend off thy silver hair, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal sight
The closing up of our most wretched eyes!

Now is a time to storm; why art thou still?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha!

Mar. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this hour.

Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed:
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,
And would usurp upon my watery eyes,

1 Fr. casquelet, a close helmet. 2 the words, "with an Axe," are not in f. e.
And make them blind with tributary tears;
Then, which way shall I find revenge's cave?
For these two heads do seem to speak to me,
And thrust me, I shall never come to bliss,
Till all the mischiefs be retailed again.
Even in their throats that have committed them.
Come, let me see what task I have to do.—
You heavy people, circle me about,
That I may turn me to each one of you,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.—
The vow is made.—Come, brother, take one head;
And in this hand the other will I bear:—
Lavinia, thou shalt be employed in these things;
Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth.
As for thee, boy, go, get thee from my sight:
Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay.
Hie to the Goths, and raise an army there;
And, if you love me, as I think 'tis true,]
Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[Exit Titus, Marcus, and Lavinia.

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father;
The woefulst man that ever liv'd in Rome.
Farewell, proud Rome: till Lucius come again,
He leaves his pledges dearer than his life.
Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;
O, would thou were as thou 'st once been hast been!
But now nor Lucius, nor Lavinia lives,
But in oblivion, and hateful griefs.
If Lucius live, he will require your wrongs,
And make proud Saturnine, and his empress,
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine.

[Exit.

Enter Titus, Marcus, Lavinia, and young Lucius, a Boy.

Tit. So, so, now sit: and look, you eat no more
Than will preserve but so much strength in us
As will revenge these just so bitter woes of ours.
Marcus, unknot that sorrow-wreathen knot:
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannot passionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is left to tyrannize upon my brother's vein,
And when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then, thus I thump it down.—
Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs.

[To Lavinia.

When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still,
Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with groans;
Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole,
That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall,
May run into that sink, and soaking in,
Drown the lamenting fool in sea-salt tears.

Marcus. Fie, brother, fie! teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Titus. How now! has sorrow made thee dote already?
Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I.

What violent hands can she lay on her life?
Ah! wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands?
To bid Eneas tell the tale twice o'er,
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
Of handle not the theme, to talk of hands,
Let us remember still, that we have none.
Fie, fie! how franticly I square my talk!
As come, let's fall to; and, gentle girl, eat this.—
Here is no drink. Hark, Marcus, what she says;
I can interpret all her martyr'd signs:
She says, she drinks no other drink but tears,
Brew'd with her sorrow, mesh'd upon her cheeks.—
Speechless complainor, I will learn thy thought;
In thy dumb action will I be as perfect,
As begging hermits in their holy prayers:
Thus shall not sigh, nor hold thy stumps to heaven,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I of these will wrest an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments:
Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.

Marcus. Alas! the tender boy, in passion mov'd,
Doth weep to see his grandsire's heaviness.

Titus. Peace, tender sapling; thou art made of tears,
And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—

[Marcus strikes the Dish with a Knife.

What dost thou strike at, Marcus, with thy knife?

Marcus. At that that I have kill'd, my lord—a fly.

Titus. Out on that, Marcus; thou kill'st at my heart;
Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny:
A deed of death, done on the innocent,
Becomes not Titus' brother. Get thee gone;
I see, thou art not for my company.

Marcus. Alas! my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

Titus. But how, if that fly had a father and mother,
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buzz lamenting doings in the air?
Poor harmless fly!

That with his pretty buzzing melody,
Came here to make us merry; and thou hast kill'd him.

Marcus. Pardon me, sir: it was a black ill-favour'd fly,
Like to the empress' Moor; therefore, I kill'd him.

Boy. Come, boy, take away.

Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed.
Give me thy knife, I will insult on him;
Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor
Come hither purposely to poison me.—

There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora. Ah, sirrah!—
Yet I think we are not brought so low,
But that between us we can kill a fly,
That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.

Marcus. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on him,
He takes false shadows for true substances.

Tit. Come, take away.—Lavinia, go with me:
I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee
Sad stories chanced in the times of old.—

Come, boy, and go with me: thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read, when mine begins to dazzle.

[Exeunt.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before Titus's House.

Enter Titus and Marcus. Then enter young Lucius, Lavinia running after him.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia follows me every where, I know not why.—

Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes.—

Also! sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.

Mar. Stand by me, Lucius: do not fear thine aunt.

Tit. She loves thee, boy; too well to do thee harm.

Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome, she did.

Mar. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?

Tit. Fear her not, Lucius: somewhat doth she mean.

See, Lucius, see, how much she makes of thee: Somewhither would she have thee go with her. Ah, boy! Cornelia never with more care Read to her sons, than she hath read to thee, Sweet poetry, and Tully's Orator.

Canst thou not guess wherefore she ples thee thus?

Boy. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I guess, Unless some fit, or frenzy do possess her; For I have heard my grandsire say full oft, Extremity of griefs would make men mad; And I have read how men mad ran mad through sorrow: that made me to fear;

Although, my lord, I know, my noble aunt Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did, And would not, but in fury, fright my youth; Which made me down to throw my books, and fly, Causeth, perhaps.—But pardon me, sweet aunt; And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go, I will most willingly attend your ladyship.

Mar. Lucius, I will.

[Lavinia turns over the books which Lucius had let fall.

Tit. How now, Lavinia!—Marcus, what means this? Some book there is that she desires to see,— Which is it, girl, of these?—Open them, boy.— But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd;

Come, and take choice of all my library, And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens
Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.—

What book?—Why lifts she up her arms in sequence thus?

Mar. I think, she means, that there was more than one Confederate in the fact.—Ay, more there was; Or else to heaven she leaves them to revenge.

Tit. Lucius, what book is that she tosteth so?

Boy. Grandsire, 't is Ovid's Metamorphosis:

My mother gave't me.

Mar. For love of her that's gone, Perhaps, she could it from among the rest.

Tit. Soft! see how basely she turns the leaves! Help her: what would she find?—Lavinia, shall I read This is the tragic tale of Philomel, And treats of Teres' treason, and his rape; And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy.

—Mar. See, brother, see! note, how she quotes the leaves,

Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpris'd, sweet girl, Ravish'd and wrong'd, as Philomela was, For'd in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?—

See, see!—Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt, (O, had we never, never hunted there!)

Lucius, I'll fit thee: and withal, my boy
Shall carry from me to the empress' sons
Present, that I intend to send them both.
Come, come; thou 'lt do thy message, wilt thou not?
Boy. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grandisire.
Tit. No, boy, not so; I'll teach another course.
Lavinia, come.—Marcus, look to my house:
Lucius and I'll go brave it at the court;
Ay, marry, will we, sir; and we'll be waited on.

[Execute Titus, Lavinia, and Boy.

Mar. O heavens! can you hear a good man groan,
And not relent, or not compassion him?
Marcus, attend him in his ecastye,
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Than foes-men's marks upon his batter'd shield;
But yet so just, that he will not revenge.—
Revenge, ye heavens, for old Andronicus!  [Exeit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Aaron, Demetrius, and Chiron, at one Door; at another door, young Lucius, and an Attendant, with a Bundle of Weapons, and Verses writ upon them.

Chi. Demetrius, here's the son of Lucius;
He hath some message to deliver us.

Aar. Ay, some mad message from his mad grand-father.

Boy. My lords, with all the humbleness I may,
I greet your honours from Andronicus:—
[Aside.] And pray the Roman gods, confound you both.

Dem. Grameery, lovely Lucius. What's the news?

Boy. [Aside.] That you are both decipher'd, that's the news!
For villains mark'd with rape. [To them.] May it please you,
My grandsire, well advis'd, hath sent by me
The goodliest weapons of his armoury,
To gratify your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome; for so he bade me say,
And so I do, and with his gifts present.
Your lordships, that whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well.
And so I leave you both, [Aside.] like bloody villains.
[Exeunt Boy and Attendant.

Dem. What's here? A scroll, and written round
Let's see; [about.

Integer vita, steterisque purus,
Non eget Mauri jaculis, nec arcu,
Chi. O! 'T is a verse in Horace. I know it well:
I read it in the grammar long ago.
Aar. Ay, just!—a verse in Horace:—right, you have it.

[Aside.] Now, what a thing it is to be an ass!
Here's no sound jest! the old man hath found their guilt,
And sends them* weapons wrapp'd about with lines,
That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick;
But were our witty empress well a-foot,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit:
But let her rest in her unrest awhile.—
[To them.] And now, young lords, was't not a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so,
Captive, to be advanced to this height?
It did me good, before the palace gate,
To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord
Basely unnatured, and thus besmear'd.
Aar. Hath he not reason, lord Demetrius?
Did you not use his daughter very friendly?

Dem. I would, we had a thousand Roman dames
At such a bay, by turn to serve our lust.
Chi. A charitable wish, and full of love.
Aar. Here lacks but your mother for to say amen.
Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more.

Dem. Come, let us go, and pray to all the gods
For our beloved mother in her pains.

Aar. Pray to the devils; the gods have given us
[Trumpets sound.

Dem. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish thus?
Chi. Belike to joy the emperor hath a son.

Dem. Some one who comes here.

Enter a Nurse, hiding a Black-a-moor Child in her Arms.

Nur. Good morrow, lords. O! tell me, did you see
Aaron the Moor.

Aar. Well, more, or less, or ne'er a whit at all,
Here Aaron is; and what with Aaron now?

Nur. O, gentle Aaron, we are all undone!
Now help, or we betide thee evermore.
Aar. Why, what a eaterawling dost thou keep.
What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine arms?

Nur. O! that which I would hide from heaven's eye,
Our empress' shame, and stately Rome's disgrace.—
She is deliver'd, lords; she is deliver'd.

Aar. To whom?

Nur. I mean she 'touched to bed.

Aar. Well, God
Give her good rest! What hath he sent her?

Aar. Why, then she's the devil's dam: a joyful issue,

Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue.
Here is the babe, as boathsome as a toad [Showing it.]
Amongst the fairest brands* of our clime.
The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.
Aar. Zounds! ye whore, is black so base a hue?

Sweet browsse, you are a beauteseous blossom, sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done?
Aar. That which thou canst not undo.

Chi. Thou hast undone our mother.
Aar. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone.
Woe to her chance, and damned her slopeth choice!
Accurs'd the offspring of so foul a fiend!

Chi. It shall not live.

Aar. It shall not die.

Nur. Aaron, it must: the mother wills it so.

Aar. What! must it, nurse? then let no man but I,
Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Dem. I'll broach the tadpole on my rapier's point.

Nurse, give it me; my sword shall soon despatch it.

Aar. Sooner this sword shall plow thy bowels up.

[Takes the Child from the Nurse, and draws.

Stay, murderous villains! will you kill your brother?
Now, by the burning tapers of the sky,
That shone so brightingly when this boy was got,
He dies upon my scimitar's sharp point,
That touches this my first-born son and heir.
I tell you, younglings, not Eneasclus,
With all his threatening band of Typhon's brood,
Nor great Alcides, nor the god of war,
Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.
What, what, ye sanguine, shallow-hearted boys!

Ye white-lim'd* walls! ye alehouse painted signs!
Coal-black is better than another hue,
In that it seems to bear another hue.

For all the water in the ocean
Can never turn the swain's black legs to white,
Although she lave them hourly in the flood.

Tell the empress from me, I am a man [To the Nurse.]
To keep mine own; excuse it how she can.
Dem. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistress thus?
Aar. My mistress is my mistress; this, myself;
The vigour, and the picture of my youth;
This, before all the world, do I prefer;
This, maugre all the world, will I keep safe,
Or some of you shall make for that escape.
[Exit Publius.]
Dem. By this our mother you have ever shamed.
Chi. Rome will despire her for this foul escape.
Nur. The emperor in his rage will doom her death.
Chi. I blush to think upon this ignomy.
Aar. Why, there's the privilege your beauty bears.
Fie! treacherous hue, that will betray with blushing
The close enacts and counsels of the heart:
Here's a young lad fram'd of another lea2.
Look, how the black slave smiles upon the father,
As who should say, "Old lad; I am thine own."3
He is your brother, lords, sensibly fed
Of that self-blood that first gave life to you;
And, from that womb, where you imprison'd were,
He is enfranchised and come to light:
Nay, he is your brother by the surer side,
Although my seal be stamped in his face.
Nur. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress?
Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done,
And we will all subscribe to thy advice:
Save thou the child, so we may all be safe.
Aar. Then sit we down, and let us all consult.
My son and I will have the wind of you;
Keep there; now talk at pleasure of your safety.
[They sit at a distance.
Dem. How many women saw this child of his?
Aar. Why, so, brave lords: when we all join in league,
I am a lamb; but if you brave the Moor,
The child is born; the mountain lightened:
The ocean swells not so as Aaron storms:—
But say again, how many saw the child?
Nur. Cornelia the midwife, and myself:
And no one else, but the deliver'd empress.
Aar. The empress, the midwife, and yourself;
Two may keep counsel, when the third's away.
Go to the empress; tell her, this I said.—
[Stabbing her: she screams.
Weke, weke!—so cries a pig, prepared to the spit.
Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron? Wherefore didst
Aar. O lord! sir, 'tis a deed of policy. [thou this?
Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours,
A long-tongued babbling gossip? no, lords, no.
And now be it known to you my full intent.
Not far hence Mutil lives,4 my countryman;
His wife but yesternight was brought to bed.
His child is like to her, fair as you are;
Go pack5 with him, and give the mother gold,
And tell them both the circumstance of all;
And how by this their child shall be advanc'd
And be received for the emperor's heir,
And substituted in the place of mine,
To calm this tempest whirling in the court,
And let the emperor dandle him for his own.
Hark ye, lords; ye see, I have given her physic.
[Pointing to the Nurse.
And you must needs bestow her fortunes soon.
The fields are near, and you are gallant grooms.
This done, see that you make no long delays,6
But send the midwife presently to me:
The midwife, and the nurse, well made away,
Then, let the ladiesattle what they may.

Chi. Aaron, I see, thou wilt not trust the air
With secrets.
Dem. For this ease of Tamora,
Herself and hers are highly bound to thee.
[Exeunt Dem. and Chi. bearing off the Nurse.
Aar. Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow flies;
There to dispose this treasure in mine arms,
And secretly to greet the empress' friends,—
Come on, thou thick-lipp'd slave, I'll bear you hence,
For it is you that puts us to our shifts:
I'll make you thrive on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave; and bring you up
To be a warrior, and command a camp.
[Exit with the child.

SCENE III.—The Same. A public Place.
Enter Titus, bearing Arrows, with Letters on the ends of them; with him Marcus, young Lucius, and other Gentlemen, with Bows.
Tit. Come, Marcus, come.—Kinsmen, this is the way.—
Sir boy, now let me see your archery:
Look ye draw home enough, and 'tis there straight.
Terra Astrae religuit:
Be you remember'd, Marcus, she's gone, she's fled.
Sirs, take you to your tools. You, cousins, shall Go sound the ocean, and cast your nets;
Happily you may catch her in the sea,
Yet there's as little justice as at land.—
No; Publius and Sempronius, you must do it;
'T is you must dig with mattock, and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth:
Then, when you come to Pluto's region,
I pray you, deliver him this petition;
Tell him, it is for justice, and for aid,
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome.—
Ah, Rome!—Well, well; I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannize o'er me.—
Go, get you gone; and pray be careful all,
And leave you not a man of war unsearch'd:
This wicked emperor may have shipp'd her hence,
And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.
Mar. O, Publius! is not this a heavy case,
To see thy noble uncle thus distract?
Pub. Therefore, my lord, it highly us concerns,
By day and night 't attend him carefully;
And feed his humour kindly as we may,
Till time beget some careful remedy.
Mar. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy,
Join with the Goths; and with revengeful war,
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine.
Tit. Publius, how now! how now, my masters! What!
Have you met with her?
Pub. No, my good lord; but Pluto sends you word,
If you will have revenge from hell, you shall.
Marry, for Justice, she is so employ'd,
He thinks with Jove in Heaven, or somewhere else,
So that perforce you must needs stay a time.
Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delays.
I'll drive into the burning lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heels.—
Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we;
No big-bon'd men, fram'd of the Cyclops' size,
But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back;
Yet wrung with wrongs, more than our backs can bear:
And, sith no justice is in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven, and move the gods
To send down justice for to wreak our wrongs.
Come, to this gear. You are a good archer, Marcus.

[He gives them the Arrows.]

Ad Jovem, that's for you:—here, ad Apollinem:
Ad Martem, that's for myself:
Here, boy, to Pallas:—here, to Mercury:
To Saturn, Cains, not to Saturnine;
You are as good to shoot against the wind.—
To it, boy: Marcus, loose when I bid.
Of my word, I have written to effect;
There's not a god left unsolicited.
Marcus, kiss them all, for shafts into the court:
We will afflict the emperor in his pride.

Tit. Now, masters, draw. [They shoot.] O well said! Lucius!

Good boy, in Virgo's lap: give it Pallas.

Mar. My lord, I aim'd a mile beyond the moon:
Your letter is with Jupiter by this.

Tit. Ha! Publius, Publius, what hast thou done?
See, see! thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns.

Mar. This was the sport, my lord: when Publius shot,
The bull, being gall'd, gave Aries such a knock
That down fell both the ram's horns in the court;
And who should find them but the empress' villain.
She laugh'd, and told the Moor: he should not choose
But give them to his master for a present.

Tit. Why, there it goes: God give his lordship joy.

Enter the Clown, with a Basket and Two Pigeons.

News! news from heaven! Marcus, the post is come.
Sirrah, what tidings? have you any letters?
Shall I have justice? what says Jupiter?

Clo. Ho! the gibbon-maker? he says, that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hanged till the next week.

Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee?

Clo. Alas, sir! I know not Jupiter: I never drank with him in all my life.

Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier?

Clo. Ay, of my pigeons, sir; nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heaven?

Clo. From heaven? alas, sir! I never came there.
God forbid, I should be so bold to press in heaven in my young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal plebs, to take up a matter of brawl betwixt my uncle and one of the emperal men.

Mar. Why, sir, that is as fit as can be, to serve for your oration; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace?

Clo. Nay, truly, sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah, come hither. Make no more ado,
But give your pigeons to the emperor;
By me thou shalt have justice at his hands.
Hold, hold; mean while, here's money for thy charges.
Give me pen and ink.—

Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplication?

Clo. Ay, sir.

Tit. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach you must kneel;
thens kiss his foot; then deliver up your pigeons, and then look for your reward. I'll be at hand, sir; see you do it bravely.

Clo. I warrant you, sir; let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife? Come, let me see it.—

Here, Marcus, fold it in the oration,
For thou hast made it like an humble suppliant.—
And when thou hast given it to the emperor,
Knock at my door, and tell me what he says.

Clo. God be with you, sir: I will.

Tit. Come, Marcus, let us go.—Publius, follow me.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Before the Palace.

Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Demetrius, Chiron, Lords and others. Saturninus with the arrows in his hand, that had been shot.

Sat. Why, lords, what wrongs are these? Was ever seen
An emperor of Rome thus overborne,
Troubled, confounded thus: and, for the extent
Of equal justice, us'd in such contempt?
My lords, you know, the mightful gods no less,1
(However these disturbers of our peace
Buzz in the people's ears) there nought hath pass'd,
But even with law, against the willful sons
Of old Andronicus. And what an if
His sorrows have so over whel'm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his freaks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness?
And now he writes to heaven for his redress:
See, here's to Jove, and this to Mercury;
This to Apollo; this to the god of war;
Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome!
What's this but libelling against the state,
And blazoning our injustice every where?
A goodly humour, is it not, my lords?
As who would say, in Rome no justice were.
But if I live, his feigned eustacies
Shall be no shelter to these outrages;
But he and his shall know, that justice lives
In Saturninus' health; whom, if she sleep,
He'll so awake, as she in fury shall
Cut off the proud'st conspirator that lives. [Takes his seat.*

Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine,
Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts,
Calm thee, and bear the faults of Titus' age,
Th' effects of sorrow for his valiant sons,
And the mischance of sundry things that pierc'd
And scar'd his heart;
And rather comfort his distressed plight,
Than prosecute the meanest, or the best,
For these contempts. [Aside.] Why, thus it shall become High-witted Tamora to gloze with all:
But, Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quick,
The life-blood on't. If Aaron now be wise,
Then is all safe, the anchor's in the port.—

Enter Clown.

How now, good fellow! wouldst thou speak with us?

Clo. Yea, forsooth, an your mistresship be imperial.

Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emperor.

Clo. 'Tis he.—God, and Saint Stephen,
Give you good even.
I have brought you a letter,
And a couple of pigeons, for want of better.

Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.

Clo. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, sirrah; you must be hang'd.

Clo. Hang'd! By'r lady, then, friend,
I have brought my neck to a fair end. [Exit. guarded.

Sat. Despightful and intolerable wrongs!
Shall I endure this monstrous villainy?
I know from whence this same device proceeds.
May this be borne?—as if his traitorous sons

1 Well done. 2 your : in quarto, 1611, and folio. 3 as do the mightful gods: in f. c. 4 Not in f. e.
That died by law for murder of our brother,
Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully.—
Go, drag the villain hither by the hair:
Nor age, nor honour, shall have privilege.—
For this proud mock, I'll be thy slaughter-man;
Sly frantic wretch, that help'st to make my great,
In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter Emilius.
What news with thee, Emilius?
Emil. Arm, my lords! Rome never had more cause.
The Goths have gather'd head; and with a power
Of high-resolved men, bent to the spoil,
They hither march amain, under conduct
Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus;
Who threats, in course of this revenge, to do
As much as ever Coriolanus did.
Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths?
These tidings nip me; and I hang the head
As flowers with frost, or grass beat down with storms.
Ay, now begin our soldiers to approach.
'Tis he the common people love so much:
Myself hath very often heard them say,
When I have walked like a private man,
That Lucius' banishment was wrongfully,
And wish'd that Lucius were their emperor.
Tam. Why should you fear? is not our city strong?
Sat. Ay, but the citizens favour Lucius,
And will revolt from me to succour him.
Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious, like thy name.
Is the sun dimm'd, that gnats do fly in 's flame?
The eagle suffers little birds to sing,
And is not careful what they mean thereby;

Knowing that with the shadow of his wing,
He can at pleasure stint their melody:
Even so may'st thou the giddy men of Rome,
Then cheer thy spirit; for know, thou emperor,
I will enchant the old Andronicus,
With words so sweet, and yet more dangerous,
Than baits to fish, or honey-sticks to sheep;
When as the one is wounded with the bait,
The other rotted with delicious food.
Sat. But he will not entreat his son for us.
Tam. If Tamora treat him, then he will;
For I can smooth, and fill his aged ear
With golden promises, that were his heart
Almost impregnable, his old ears deaf,
Yet should both ear and heart obey my tongue.—
Go thou before; be our ambassador: [To Emilius.
Say that the emperor requests a parley
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting,
Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus.
Sat. Emilius, do this message honourably:
And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.
Emil. Your bidding shall I do effectually.

[Exit Emilius.
Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the art I have,
To pluck proud Lucius from the warlike Goths.
And now, sweet emperor, be blithe again,
And bury all thy fear in my devices.
Sat. Then go successfully, and plead 'fore him.
[Execut.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome.
Enter Lucius, and an Army of Goths, with Drum and Colours.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends,
I have received letters from great Rome,
Which signify what hate they bear their emperor,
And how desirous of our sight they are.
Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness,
Imperious, and impatient of your wrongs;
And, wherein Rome hath done you any seath,
Let him make treble satisfaction.

1 Goth. Brave slip, sprung from the great Andronicus.
Whose name was once our terror, now our comfort;
Whose high exploits, and honourable deeds,
Ingratitude Rome requites with foul contempt,
Be bold in us: we'll follow where thou lead'st,
Like stinging bees in hottest summer's day,
Led by their master to the flower'd fields,
And be aveng'd on cursed Tamora.

Goths. And, as he saith, so say we all with him.
Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all.
But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth?
Enter a Goth, leading Aaron, with his Child in his Arms.

2 Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I stray'd,
To gaze upon a ruinous monastery,
And as I earnestly did fix mine eye
Upon the wasted building, suddenly
I heard a child cry underneath a wall.
I made unto the noise; when soon I heard
The crying babe contriv'd with this discourse:—
"Peace, tawny slave; half me, and half thy dam!

Did not thy hue bewray whose brat thou art,
Had nature lent thee but thy mother's look,
Villain, thou mightst have been an emperor:
But where the bull and cow are both milk-white,
They never do beget a coal-black calf.
Peace, villain, peace?—even thus he rates the babe,—
"For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth;
Who, when he knows thou art the empress' babe,
Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake."
With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him,
Surpris'd him suddenly, and brought him hither;
To use as you think needful of the man.

Luc. O worthy Goth! this is the incarnate devil
That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand:
This is the pearl that pleas'd your empress' eye,
And here 's the base fruit of his burning lust.—
Say, wall-eyed slave, whither wouldst thou convey
This growing image of thy fliend-like face?
Why dost not speak? What! deaf? no, not a word?
A halter, soldiers! hang him on this tree,
And by his side his fruit of bastardy.

Aar. Touch not the boy; he is of royal blood.
Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good.—
First, hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul withal.

[Enter a ladder.
Aar. Lucius, save the child;
And bear it from me to the empress.
If thou do this, I'll show thee wondrous things,
That highly may advantage thee to hear:
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
I'll speak no more; but vengeance rot you all!

1 In old copies this line is given to Aaron. Theobald made the change.
Luc. Say on: and if it please me which thou speak'st,
Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd.

Aar. An if it please thee? why, assure thee, Lucius,
[Speaking on the Ladder.]
'Twill vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak;
For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres,
Acts of black night, abominable deeds,
Complots of mischief, treason, villainies
Ruthful to hear, dispiteously* perform'd:
And this shall all be buried in my death,
Unles thou swear to me, my child shall live.

Luc. Tell on thy mind: I say, thy child shall live.

Aar. Swear that she shall, and then I will begin.

Luc. Whom should I swear by? thou believest no god:
That granted, how canst thou believe an oath?

Aar. What if I do not, as, indeed, I do no not;
Yet, for I know thou art religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called conscience,
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,
Therefore I urge thy oath:—for that, I know,
An idiot holds his baulk for a god,
And keeps the oath which by that god he swears,
To that I'll urge him.—Therefore, thou shalt vow
By that same god, what god soe'er it be,
That I will not, and hast in reverence,
To save my boy, to kill, and bring him up,
Or else I will discover nought to thee.

Luc. Even by my god I swear to thee, I will.

Aar. First, know thou, I begot him on the empress.

Luc. O most insatiate, luxurious woman!

Aar. Tut! Lucius, this was but a deed of charity,
To that which thou shalt hear of me anon.

'T was her two sons that murder'd Bassianus:
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her,
Cut her hands off, and trimmed her as thou saw'st.

Luc. O, detestable villain! call'st thou that trimming?

Aar. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd;
And I was
Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. O, barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself!

Aar. Indeed, I was their tutor to instruct them.
That coddling spirit had they from their mother,
As sure a card as ever won the set:
That bloody mind, I think, they learn'd of me,
As true a dog as ever fought at head.

Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay;
I wrote the letter that thy father found,
And hid the gold, within the letter mentioned,
Confederate with the queen, and her two sons;
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it?
I play'd the cheater for thy father's good,
And, when I had it, drew myself apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreme laughter.
I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When for his hand, he had his two sons' heads;
Beked his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his:
And when I told the empress of this sport,
She swooned almost at my pleasing tale,
And for my tidings gave me twenty kisses.

Goth. What! canst thou say all this, and never blush?

Aar. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.

Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?

Aar. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.

Even now I curse the day, (and yet, I think; Few come within the compass of my curse)
Wherein I did not some notorious ill:
As kill a man, or else devise his death;
Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it;
Accuse some innocent, and forswear myself;
Set deadly enmity between two friends;
Make poor men's cattle oftimes break their necks;
Set fire on barns and hay-stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears.
Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,
Even when the grave-stones were forgot:
And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,
Have with my knife carved in Roman letters,
"Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead."

Tut! I have done a thousand dreadful things,
As willingly as one would kill a fly;
And nothing grieves me heartily indeed,
But that I cannot do ten thousand more.

Luc. Bring down the devil, for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging, presently.

Aar. If there be devils, would I were a devil,
To live and burn in everlasting fire,
So I might have your company in hell,
But to torment you with my bitter tongue!

Luc. Sirs, stop his mouth, and let him speak no more.

Enter a Goth.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome,
Desires to be admitted to your presence.

Luc. Let him come near.

Enter Emilius.

Welcome, Emilius! what's the news from Rome?

Emil. Lord Lucius, and you princes of the Goths,
The Roman emperor greets you all by me:
And, for he understands you are in arms,
He craves a parley at your father's house,
Willing you to demand your hostages,
And they shall be immediately deliver'd.

1 Goth. What says our general?

Luc. Emilius, let the emperor give his pledges
Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,
And we will come.—March! away!

[Exeunt.

Enter TAMORA, DEMETRIUS, and CHIRON, disguised as Revenge, Rapipe, and Murder.

Tam. Thus, in this strange and sad habiliment,
I will encounter with Andronicus,
And say, I am Revenge, sent from below,
To join with him, and right his heinous wrongs,—
Knock at his study, where, they say, he keeps,
To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge;
Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him,
And work confusion on his enemies. [They knock.

Tit. Who doth molest my contemplation?
Is it your trick to make me ope the door,
That so my sad decrees may fly away,
And all my study be to no effect?
You are deceiv'd: for what I mean to do,
See here, in bloody lines I have set down,
[Shewing a Paper.]

And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. Old Titus, I am come to talk with thee.

Tit. No; not a word. How can I grace my talk,
Wanting a hand to give it action?—Thou hast a son of mine; therefore no more.

Tam. If thou didst know me, thou wouldst talk with me.

1 Not in f. e. * yet piteously: in f. e. * The rest of this stage direction is not in f. e. * Not in f. e.
Tit. I am not mad; I know thee well enough:
Witness this wretched stump, witness these crimson lines;
Witness these trenches made by grief and care;
Witness the tiring day, and heavy night;
Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well.
For our proud empress, mighty Tamora.
Is not thy coming for my other hand?
Tam. Know, thou sad man, I am not Tamora:
She is thy enemy, and I thy friend.
I am Revenge; sent from thine infernal kingdom,
To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind,
By working wretched wakening on thy foes.
Come down, and welcome me to this world's light;
Confer with me of murder and of death.
There's not a hollow cave, or lurking-place,
No vast obscurity, or misty vale,
Where bloody murder, or detested rape,
Can couch for fear, but I will find them out;
And in their ears tell them my dreadful name,
Revenge, which makes the soul offender quake.
Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou sent to me,
To be a torment to mine enemies?
Tam. I am; therefore come down, and welcome me.
Tit. Do I see some servitors, ere I come to thee.
Lo! by thy side where Rape, and Murder, stand;
Now, give some assurance that thou art Revenge:
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels,
And then I'll come, and be thy waggoner,
And whirl along with thee about the globes.
Provide two proper palfriees, black as jet,
To hale thy veneful waggon swift away,
And find out murderers' in their guilty caves:
And when thy car is loaded with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the waggon wheel
Trot like a servile footman all day long,
Even from Hyperion's rising in the east,
Until his very downfall in the sea:
And day by day I'll do this heavy task,
So thou destroy Rapine and Murder there.
Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.
Tit. Are they thy ministers? what are they call'd?
Tam. Rapine, and Murder; therefore called so,
'Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.
Tit. Good lord! how like the empress' sons they are;
And you, the empress: but we worldly men
Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.
O sweet Revenge! now do I come to thee;
And, if one arm's embrace will content thee,
I will embrace thee in it by and by. [Exit Titus above.
Tit. This closing with him fits his lunacy.
Whate'er I forge, to feed his brain-sick fits,
Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches.
For now he firmly takes me for Revenge;
And being credulous in this mad thought,
I'll make him send for Lucius, his son,
And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,
I'll find some cunning practice out of hand,
To scatter and disperse the giddy Goths,
Or, at the least, make them his enemies.
See! here he comes; and I must ply my theme. [Enter Titus, below.
Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee.
Welcome, dread fury, to my woeful house. —
Rapine, and Murder, you are welcome too. —
How like you supper and adventures here!
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moor; —
Could not all hell afford you such a devil?
For, well I wot, the empress never wags,
Tit. Know you these two?
Pub. The empress' sons
I take them; Chiron, and Demetrius.
Tit. Fie, Publius, fie! thou art too much deceit'd;
The one is Murder, Rape is the other's name:
And therefore bind them, gentle Publius;
Caio, and Valentine, lay hands on them.
Off have you heard me wish for such an hour,
And now I find it; therefore, bind them sure,
And stop their mouths, if they begin to cry.

[Exit Titus.—Publius, &c. seize Chiron, and Demetrius.
Chi. Villains, forbear! we are the empress' sons.
Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.
Caio. Stop close their mouths; let them not speak a word.
Is he sure bound? look, that you bind them fast.
Re-enter Titus Andronicus, with Lavinia; she holds a Bason, and he a Knife.
Tit. Come, come, Lavinia; look; thy foes are bound.
Sirs, stop their mouths; let them not speak to me,
But let them hear what fearful words I utter.
O villains! Chiron and Demetrius,
Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud:
This goodly summer with your winter mix'd.
You kill'd her husband, and for that vile fault
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death;
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest:
Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that more dear
Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forc'd.
What would you say, if I should let you speak?
Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace.
Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyry you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats,
Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth hold
The bason, that receives your guilty blood.
You know, your mother means to feast with me,
And calls herself Revenge, and thinks me mad.
Hark, villains! I will grind your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, I'll make a paste;
And of the paste a coffin I will rear,
And make two pasties of your shamefull heads;
And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dam,
Like to the earth, swallow her own increase.
This is the feast that I have bid her to,
And this the banquet she shall surfeit on;
For worse than Philomel you us'd my daughter,
And worse than Progne I will be reveng'd.
And now prepare your throats.—Lavinia come,
[He eats their Throats; & she catches the Blood.
Receive the blood: and when that they are dead,
Let me go grind their bones to powder small,
And with this hateful liquor temper it.
And in that paste let their vile heads be bak'd.—
Come, come, be every one officious
To make this banquet; which I wish may prove
More stern and bloody than the Centaurs' feast.
So, now bring them in, for I will play the cook,
And see them ready 'gainst their mother comes.

[Exeunt, bearing the dead Bodies.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Pavilion, with Tables, &c.
Enter Lucius, Marcus, and Goth; with Aaron, Prisoner.
Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 'tis my father's mind,
That I repair to Rome, I am content.
1 Goth. And ours, with thine, befall what fortune will.

Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous Moor,
This ravenous tiger, this accursed devil.
Let him receive no sustenance; fetter him,
Till he be brought unto the empress' face,
For testimony of her foul proceedings.
And see the ambush of our friends be strong;
I fear the emperor means no good to us.
Aar. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear,
And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!
Luc. Away, infanum dog! unhallow'd slave!
Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.

[Exeunt Goth with Aaron. Trumpets sound.
The trumpets show the emperor is at hand.
Enter Saturninus and Tamora, with Tribunes,
Senators, and others.
Sat. What! hath the firmament more suns than one?
Luc. What boots it thee to call thyself a sun?
Mar. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break the pause;
Their quarrels must be quietly debated.
The feast is ready, which the careful Titus
Hath ordain'd to an honourable end,
To entertain his highness, and your empress.
Please you, therefore, draw near, and take your places.
Sat. Marcus, we will.

[Trumpets sound. The Company sit down at table.
Enter Titus, dressed like a Cook, Lavinia, veiled, young Lucius, and others. Titus places the dishes on the table.
Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord; welcome, dread queen:
Welcome, ye warlike Goths; and welcome, Lucius;
And welcome, all. Although the cheer be poor,
'Twill fill your stomachs: please you eat of it.
Sat. Why art thou thus affli't, Andronicus?
Tit. Because I would be sure to have it all well,
To entertain your highness, and your empress.
Tam. We are beholding to you, good Andronicus.
Tit. An if your highness knew my heart, you were.
My lord the emperor, resolve me this:
Was it well done of rash Virgininius,
To slay his daughter with his own right hand,
Because she was enforc'd, stain'd, and defou'd?
Sat. It was, Andronicus.
Tit. Your reason, mighty lord!
Sat. Because the girl should not survive her shame,
And by her presence still renew hers sorrows.
Tit. A reason mighty; strong, and effectual;
A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant,
For me, most wretched, to perform the like—
Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee;

[He kills Lavinia.
And with thy shame thy father's sorrow flee.
Sat. What hast thou done? unnatural and unkind!
Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made me blind.
I am as woful as Virgininius was,
And have a thousand times more cause than he
To do this outrage:—and it is now done.
Sat. What! was she ravish'd? tell who did the deed.
Tit. Will 't please you eat? will 't please your highness feed?
Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter thus?
Tit. Not I; 't was Chiron, and Demetrius:
They ravish'd her, and cut away her hair,
And they it was, that did her all this wrong.
Sat. Go, fetch them hither to us presently.
Tit. Why, there they are both, baked in that pie;
Whereof their mother dauntily hath fed,
Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred.
'T is true, 'tis true; witness my knife's sharp point.

[Killing Tamora.]

Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accursed deed.

[Killing Titus.]

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed?
There's need for meed, death for a deadly deed.

[Killing Saturninus.]

A great Tamora. The People in faction divided. Marcus, Lucius, and their Partisans, ascend the Steps before Titus's House.

Mar. You sad-fac'd men, people and sons of Rome,
By uproot sever'd, like a flight of fowl
Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,
O! let me teach you how to knit again
This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf,
These broken limbs again into one body.^
Lest Rome herself be bane unto herself,
And she, who mighty kingdoms court'sy to,
Like a forlorn and desperate cast-away,
Do shameful execution on herself.
But if my frosty signs and claps of age,
Graves of the dead are dusted with fresh tears
Cannot induce you to attend my words,
Speak, Rome's dear friend; as erst our ancestor,
When with his solemn tongue he did discourse,
To love-sick Dido's sad attending ear,
The story of that baleful burning night,
When subtle Greeks surpris'd king Priam's Troy.
Tell us, what Sinon hath bewitch'd our ears,
Or who hath brought the fatal engine in,
That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound.
My heart is not compact of flint, nor steel,
Nor can I utter all my bitter grief;
But floods of tears will drown my oratory,
And break my very utterance, even i' the time
When it should move you to attend me most,
Lending your kind commiseration.
Here is a captain, let him tell the tale;
Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him speak.

Luc. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you,
That cursed Chiron and Demetrius
Were they that murdered our emperor's brother;
And they it was that ravished our sister.
For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded,
Our father's tears despir'd, and basely cozen'd
Of that true hand, that fought Rome's quarrel out,
And sent her enemies unto the grave.
Lastly, myself unkindly banished,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg relief among Rome's enemies;
Who drown'd their enmity in my true tears,
And op'd their arms to embrace me as a friend:
And I am the turn'd-forth, be it known to you,
That have preserv'd her welfare in my blood;
And from her bosom took the enemy's point,
Sheathing the steel in my adventurous body.
Alas! you know, I am no vaunter, I;
My scars can witness, dumb although they are,
That my report is just, and full of truth.
But, soft! methinks, I do digress too much,
Citing my worthless praise. O! pardon me;
For when no friends are by men praise themselves.
Now is my turn to speak. Behold this child;
Of this was Tamora delivered;
The issue of an irreconcilable Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes.
The villain is alive in Titus' house,
And, as he is, to witness this is true.

Now judge what cause had Titus to revenge
These wrongs, unspeakable, past patience,
Or more than any living man could bear.
Now you have heard the truth, what say you, Romans?
Have we done aught amiss? Show us wherein,
And from the place where you behold us now,
The poor remainder of Andronicus
Will, hand in hand, all head apace cast us down,
And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains,
And make a mutual closure of our house.
Speak, Romans, speak! and, if you say, we shall,
Lo! hand in hand, Lueius and I will fall.

Æmil. Come, come, thou reverend man of Rome,
And bring our emperor gently in thy hand,
Lucius our emperor; for, well I know,
The common voice doth cry, it shall be so.

Mar. Lucius, all hail! Rome's royal emperor.—
Lucius, &c. descend.

Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house. [To an Attendant.
And hither hale that misbelieving Moor,
To be adjudge'd some direful lingering death,
As punishment for his most execrable life.
Lucius, all hail! Rome's gracious governor.

Luc. Thanks, gentle Romans: may I govern so,
To heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her woe!
But, gentle people, give me aim awhile,
For nature puts me to a heavy style,—

Stand all aloof;—but, uncle, draw you near,
To shed obsequious tears upon this bier.—
O! take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips,

[Kisses Titus.]

These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,
The last true duties of thy noble son!

Mar. Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:—
O! were they then of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them.

Luc. Come hither, boy: come, come, and learn of us
To melt in showers. Thy grandsire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee,
Sung thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meet and agreeing with thine infancy;
In that respect, then, like a loving child,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring,
Because kind nature doth require it so:
Friends should associate friends in grief and woe.
Did him farewell; commit him to the grave;
Do him that kindness, all that he can have.

Boy. O grandsire, grandsire! even with all my heart
Would I were dead, so you did live again.—

O lord! I cannot speak to him for weeping;
My tears will choke me, if I ope my mouth.

Enter Attendants, with Aaron.

1 Rom. You sad Andronicus, have done with woes:
Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and famish him;
There let him stand, and rave and cry for food:
If any one relieves, or pities him,
For the offence he dies. This is our doom:
Some stay to see him fasten'd in the earth.

Aor. O! why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb?
I am no baby, I, that with base prayers
I should repent the evils I have done.
Ten thousand worse than ever yet I did
Would I perform, if I might have my will:
If one good deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very soul.

Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor hence,
And give him burial in his father's grave.
My father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith
Be closed in our household's monument.
As for that ravenous tiger, Tamora,
No funeral rite, nor man in mournful weeds,
No mournful bell shall wring her burial;
But throw her forth to beasts, and birds of prey.
Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity;
And, being so, shall have like want of pity.
See justice done on Aaron, that damn'd Moor,
By whom our heavy haps had their beginning:
Then, afterwards, to order well the state,
That like events may ne'er it ruinate.

[Exeunt]

SCENE, during the greater Part of the Play, in Verona: once, in the fifth Act, at Mantua.

PROLOGUE.

Whose misadventur'd piteous overthrows
Do, with their death, bury their parents' strife,
The fearful passage of their death-mark'd love,
And the continuance of their parents' rage,
Which, but their children's end, nought could remove,
Is now the two hours' traffic of our stage;
The which if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

ACT I.

I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maids to the wall.

Gre. The quarrel is between our masters, and us their men.

Sam. 'Tis all one, I will show myself a tyrant:
when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids; I will cut off their heads.

Gre. The heads of the maids?

Sam. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maidenheads; take it in what sense thou wilt.

Gre. They must take it in sense, that feel it.

Sam. Me they shall feel, while I am able to stand; and, 'tis known, I am a pretty piece of flesh.

Gre. 'Tis well, thou art not fish; if thou hast, thou hast been 'poor John.' Draw thy toil; here come 'twos of the house of the Montagues.

Enter Abram and Balthasar.

Sam. My naked weapon is out; quarrel, I will back thee.

Gre. How! turn thy back, and run?

1 This was regarded as a low, degrading office. 2 stand to it; therefore (of my word) if thou be mov'd, thou 'tis run away: in quarto, 1597. 3 civil: in f. e. 4 Only in quarto, 1597. 5 Salted and dried fish. 6 Only in the quarto, 1597.
Sam. Fear me not.
Gre. No marry: I fear thee!
Sam. Let us take the law of our sides; let them begin.
Gre. I will frown as I pass by, and let them take it as they list.
Sam. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they be able to bear it.
Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
Sam. I do bite my thumb, sir.
Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
Sam. Is the law of our side, if I say—ay?
Gre. No.
Sam. No, sir, I do not bite my thumb at you; but I bite my thumb, sir.
Gre. Do you quarrel, sir?
Abr. Quarrel, sir? no, sir.
Sam. If you do, sir, I am for you: I serve as good a man as you.
Abr. No better.
Sam. Well, sir.

Enter BENVOLIO, at a Distance.

Gre. Say—better: here comes one of my master's kinsmen.
Sam. Yes, better, sir.
Abr. You lie.
Sam. Draw, if you be men.—Gregory, remember thy swashing blow.

[They fight.]
Ben. Part, fools! put up your swords; you know not what you do.

[Enter TYBALT.]

Tyb. What! art thou drawn among these heartless hinds?

[Draws.]

Turn thee, Benvolio; look upon thy death.
Ben. I do but keep the peace: put up thy sword, or manage it to part these men with me.
Tyb. What! drawn, and talk of peace? I hate the word,
As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee.
Have at thee, coward.

[They fight.]

Down with the Capulets! down with the Montagues!

Enter CAPULET, in his Gown; and Lady CAPULET.

Cap. What noise is this?—Give me my long sword, ho! La. Cap. A crutch, a crutch!—Why call you for a sword?

Cap. My sword, my say!—Old Montague is come, and flourishes his blade in spite of me.

Enter MONTAGUE and Lady MONTAGUE.

Mon. Thou villain Capulet!—Hold me not; let me go.
La. Mon. Thou shalt not stir one foot to seek a foe.

Enter the Prince, with his Train.

Prin. Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace, Profaners of this neighbour-stained steel—

Will they not hear?—what ho! you men, you beasts, That quench the fire of your pernicious rage With purple fountains issuing from your veins?—On pain of torture, from those bloody hands Throw your mis-temper'd weapons to the ground, And hear the sentence of your moved prince.—

Three civil brows, bred of an angry word, By thee, old Capulet, and Montague, Have three thunders in the quiet of our streets; And made Verona's ancient citizens Cast by their grave beseeing ornaments, To wield old partisans, in hands as old, Clever'd with peace, to part your cannon's hate.

If ever you disturb our streets again, Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace:

For this time all the rest depart away.

You, Capulet, shall go along with me; And Montague, come you this afternoon, To know our further pleasure in this case, To old Free-town, our common judgment-place.

Once more, on pain of death, all men depart.

[Execut the Prince, and Attendants; CAPULET, Lady CAPULET, TYBALT, Citizens, and Servants.

Mon. Who set this ancient quarrel new abroach?—
Speaks, nephew, were you by when it began?

Ben. Here were the servants of your adversary, And yours, close fighting ere I did approach.

I drew to part them: in the instant came The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepar'd; Which, as he breathe'd defiance to my ears, He swung about his head, and cut the winds, Who, nothing hurt withal, his head in scorn.

While we were interchanging threats and blows, Came more and more, and fought on part and part, Till the prince came, who parted either part.

La. Mon. O! where is Romeo? saw you him to-day?
Right glad I am he was not at this fray.

Ben. Madam, an hour before the dawnipp'd sun Poor Fortner^ with the golden windows of the east, A troubled mind drive me to walk abroad; Where, underneath the grove of sycamore That westward rootheth from the city's side, So early walking did I see your son.

Towards him I made; but he was 'ware of me, And stole into the covert of the wood:

I, measuring his affections by my own, Which then most sought where most might not be found,

Being one too many by my weary self,

Pursui'd my humour, not pursuing his,

And gladly shunn'd who gladly fled from me.

Mon. Both by myself, and many other friends;

But he, his own affections' counsellor,

Is to himself—I will not say, how true—

But to himself so secret and so close,

So far from sounding and discovery,

As is the bud with the envious worm,
Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air,
Or dedicate his beauty to the sun.
Could we but learn from whence his sorrows grow,
We would as willingly give cure, as know.

Enter Romeo, at a distance.

Ben. See, where he comes: so please you, step aside;
I'll know his grievance, or be much denied.

Mon. I would, thou wert so happy by thy stay,
To hear true shrift. —Come, madam, let's away. [Execut Montague and Lady.

Ben. Good morrow, cousin.
Rom. Is the day so young?
Ben. But new struck nine.
Rom. Ah me! sad hours seem long.
Was that my father that went hence so fast?
Ben. It was. What sadness lengthens Romeo's hours?
Rom. Not having that, which, having, makes them short.
Ben. In love?
Rom. Out.
Ben. Of love?
Rom. Out of her favour where I am in love.
Ben. Alas, that love, so gentle in his view,
Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof!
Rom. Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes see pathways to his® will!
Where shall we dine? —O me! —What fare was here?
Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all.
Here's much to do with hate, but more with love: —
Why then, O brawling love! O loving hate!
O any thing, of nothing first created!
O heavy lightness! serious vanity!
Mis-shapen chaos of well-seeing forms.
Feather of lead, bright smoke, cold fire, sick health!
Still-waking sleep, that is not what it is! —
This love feel I, that feel no love in this.
Dost thou not laugh?

Ben. No, coz; I rather weep.

Rom. Good heart, at what?

Ben. At thy good heart's oppression.

Rom. Why, such, Benvolio, is love's transgression. —
Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast;
Which thou wilt propagate, to have it press'd
With more of thine: this love, that thou hast shown,
Doth add more grief to too much of mine own.
Love is a smoke, made with the fume of sighs;
Being puffed, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes:
Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears:
What is it else? a madness most discreet,
A choking gall, and a preserving sweet.

Farewell, my coz. [Going.

Ben. Soft, I will go along:
An if you leave me so,® you do me wrong.
Rom. Tut! I have lost myself; I am not here:
This is not Romeo; he's some other where.
Ben. Tell me in sadness, who is 't that® you love.
Rom. What! shall I groan, and tell thee?
Ben. Groan! why, no;
But sadly tell me, who.

Rom. Bid a sick man in sadness make his will!®
A word ill urg'd to one that is so ill,—
In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.

Ben. I aim'd so near,® when I suppose'd you lov'd.
Rom. A right good mark-man! — and she 'fai love.
Ben. A right fair mark, fair coze, is soonest hit.

Rom. Well, in that hit you miss: she 'll not be hit
With Cupid's arrow. She hath Dian's wit;
And in strong proof of chastity well arm'd,
From love's weak childish bow she lives uncharm'd.®
She will not stay the siege of loving terms.
Nor bide th' encounter of assailant eyes,®
Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold:
O! she is rich in beauty; only poor,
That when she dies with beauty dies her store.®

Ben. Then she hath sworn, that she will still live chaste?
Rom. She hath, and in that sparing makes huge wad;
For beauty, starv'd with her severity,
Cuts beauty off from all posterity.
She is too fair, too wise; too wisely fair,
To merit bliss by making me desir'd:
She hath forsworn to love, and in that vow
Do I live dead, that live to tell it now.
Ben. Be rul'd by me; forget to think of her.
Rom. O! teach me how I should forget to think.
Ben. By giving liberty unto thine eyes:
Examine other beauties.

Rom. 'Tis the way
To call hers, exquisite, in question more.
These happy masks, that kiss fair ladies' brows,
Being black, put us in mind they hide the fair:
He, that is stricken blind, cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eyesight lost.
Show me a mistress that is passing fair;
What doth her beauty serve, but as a note
Where I may read who pass'd that passing fair?
Farewell: thou canst not teach me to forget.
Ben. I'll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt. [Execut.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Capulet, Paris, and Servant.

Cap. But Montague is bound as well as I,
In penalty alike; and 't is not hard, I think,
For men so old as we to keep the peace.

Par. Of honourable reckoning are you both;
And pity 't is, you liv'd at odds so long.
But now, my lord, what say you to my suit?
Cap. But saying o'er what I have said before.
My child is yet a stranger in the world,
She hath not seen the change of fourteen years:
Let two more summers wither in their pride,
Ere wise may think her ripe to be a bride.
Par. Younger than mine are happy mothers made.
Cap. And too soon marr'd are those so early married.®

Earth up!® hath swallowed all my hopes but she,
She is the hopeful lady of my earth;®
But woo her, gentle Paris, get her heart,
My will to her consent is but a part;
An she agree, within her scope of choice
Lies my consent and fair according voice.®
This night I hold an old accustom'd feast,
Whereeto I have invited many a guest,
Such as I love; and you, among the store,
One more most welcome makes my number more.
At my poor house look to behold this night.
Earth-treading stars, that make dark heaven light:
Such comfort, as do lusty youth's men feel,
When well-apparel'd April on the heel.
Of limping winter treads, even such delight

Among fresh female buds shall you this night
Inherit at my house; here is all, all seen.
And like her most, whose merit most shall be:
Which, on more view, of many, mine being one,
May stand in number, though in reckoning none.
Come, go with me.—Go, sirrah, trudge about.
Through fair Verona; find those persons out,
Whose names are written there, and to them say,

[Giving a Paper.]

My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.

[Exeunt Capulet and Paris.

Serv. Find them out, whose names are written here?

It is written, that the shoemaker should meddle with his yard, and the tailor with his last, the fisher with his bend, and the painter with his nets; but I am sent to find those persons, whose names are here writ, and can never find what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned:—in good time.

Enter Benvolio and Romeo.

Ben. Tut, man! one fire burns out another's burning,
One pain is lesse'd by another's auguish;
Turn giddy, and be holp by backward turning;
One desperate grief cures with another's languish:
Take thou some new infection to thy eye,
And the rank poison of the old will die.
Rom. Your plantain leaf is excellent for that.
Ben. For what, I pray thee?
Rom. For your broken shin.
Ben. Why, Romeo, art thou mad?
Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a madman is:
Shut up in prison, kept without my food,
Whipp'd, and tornenified, and—Good-den, good fellow.
Serv. God gi' good den:—I pray, sir, can you read?
Rom. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery.
Serv. Perhaps you have learnt it without book; but,
I pray, can you read any thing you see?
Rom. Ay, if I know the letters, and the language.
Serv. Ye say honestly. Rest you merry. [Going?
Rom. Stay, fellow; I can read. [Reads.

"Signior Martino, and his wife, and daughters;
County Anselme, and his beauteous sisters; the lady widow of Vitruvius; Signior Placentio, and his lovely niece Mercuetio, and his brother Valentine; mine uncle Capulet, his wife, and daughters; my fair nieces Rosaline; Livia; Signior Valente, and his cousin Tybalt; Lucio, and the lively Helena."

A fair assembly; whether should they come?

Serv. Up.

Rom. Whither? to supper?
Serv. To our house.

Rom. Whose house?
Serv. My master's.

Rom. Indeed, I should have asked you that before.
Serv. Now, I'll tell you without asking. My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Mercutio, and his brother Valentine, you may hang your head, and waddle all about, for even the day before she broke her brow; and then my husband—God be with his soul! 1

1 Such amongst view: in quarto, 1597.
2 Not in f. s. Such an expression often met with. 3 that: in old copies. 4 Dyes suggests: lady-love. 5 seems: in quarto, 1599-9. 6 Seren. 7 high loss: in quarto, 1597. 8 The rest of this, and half of the next line, not in quarto, 1597. 9 Stopped.

One fairer than my love! the all-seeing sun
Ne'er saw her match since first the world begun.

Ben. Put! you saw her fair, none else being by,
Herself too'd with herself in either eye;
But in those crystal seals let there be weigh'd
Your lady's love against some other maid,
That I will show you shining at this feast,
And she shall seem show well, that now shows best.
Rom. I'll go along, no such sight to be shewn.
But to rejoice in splendour of mine own. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Nurse, where's my daughter, call her forth to me.

Nurse. Now, by my maiden-head at twelve year old, I bade her come.—What, lamb! what, lady-bird!—

God forbid!—where's this girl?—what, Juliet!

Enter JULIET.

Jul. How now! who calls?

Nurse. Your mother.

Jul. Madam, I am here:

What is your will?

La. Cap. This is the matter. Nurse, give leave awhile,
We must talk in secret.—Nurse, come back again:
I have remember'd me, thou shalt hear our counsel.
Thou know'st my daughter's of a pretty age.
Nurse. Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour.
La. Cap. She's not fourteen.

Nurse. I'll lay fourteen of my teeth, and yet to my teen' be it spoken I have but four, she is not fourteen. How long is it now
To Lammas-tide?

La. Cap. A fortnight, and odd days.

Nurse. Even or odd, of all days in the year, Come Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen.
Susan and she,—God rest all Christian souls!—
Were of an age.—Well, Susan is with God;
She was too good for me. But, as I said,
On Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen:
That shall she marry; I remember it well.
'T is since the earthquake now eleven years;
And should I have been in,_—I never shall forget it—
Of all the days of the year, upon that day;
For I had then laid wormwood to my dog,
Sitting in the sun under the dove-house wall:
My lord and you were then at Mantua,—
Nay, I do bear a brain:—but, as I said,
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple
Of my dog, and felt it bitter, pretty fool,
To see it tetchy, and fall out with the dog!
Shake, quoth the dove-house: 't was no need, I trow,
To bid me trudge.
And since that time it is eleven years;
For thou she could stand alone*; nay, by the rood,
And had the head to bear; and the head she had,
For even the day before she broke her brow;
And then my husband—God be with his soul! 1

1 A was a merry man—or took up the child:—
"Yea," quoth he, "dost thou fall upon thy face?
Thou wilt fall backward, when thou hast more wit;
Wilt thou not, Julie?" and, by my holy-dam,
The pretty wretch left crying, and said—"Ay." 2

To see, now, how a jest shall come about!
I warrant, an I should live a thousand years,
I never should forget it: "Wilt thou not, Julie?" quoth he, and,
Pretty fool, it stinte'd, and said—"Ay." 3

La. Cap. 1 Enough of this: I pray thee, hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes, madam. Yet I cannot choose but laugh, To think it should Leave crying, and say—"Ay, ay!"

And yet, I warrant, it had upon its brow A bump as big as a young cockrel's stone, A perilous knock; and it cried bitterly.

"Yes," quoth my husband, "fall'st upon thy face? Thou wilt fall backward, when thou com'st to age; wilt thou not, Julie?" it stinted, and said—"Ay, ay!"

Jul. And since thou too, I pray thee, nurse, say I.

Nurse. Peace! I have done. 2 God mark thee to his grace.

Thou wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nurs'd:
An I might live to see thee married once, I have my wish.

La. Cap. Marry, that marry is the very theme I came to talk of. Tell me, daughter Juliet, How stands your disposition to be married?

Jul. It is an honour that I dream not of.

Nurse. An honour! were not I thine only nurse, I would say; thou hast suck'd wisdom from thy teat.

La. Cap. Well, think of marriage now; younger than you.

Here in Verona, ladies of esteem,
Are made already mothers: by my count, I was your mother, much upon these years That you are now a maid. Thus, then, in brief:—

The valiant Paris seeks you for his love.

Nurse. A man, young lady! lady, such a man, As all the world—Why, he's a man of wax.

La. Cap. Verona's summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very flower.

La. Cap. What say you? can you love the gentleman?

This night shall you behold him at our feast:—
Read e'er the volume of young Paris' face, And find delight writ there with beauty's pen.

Examine every married lineament, And see how one an other lends content; And what obscure'd in this fair volume lies, Find written in the margin of his eyes.

This precious book of love, this unbound lover, To beautify him only lacks a cover:— The fish lives in the sea; and 'tis much pride, For fair without the fair within to hide. That book in many eyes doth share the glory, That in gold clasps locks in the golden story; So shall you share all that he doth possess By having him, making yourself no less.

Nurse. No less? nay, bigger women grow by men.

La. Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris' love? Jul. I'll look to like, if looking like move; But no more deep will I endear mine eye, Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Madam, the guests are come, supper served up, you called, my young lady asked for, the Nurse cursed in the pantry, and every thing in extremity, I must hence to wait; I beseech you, follow straight.

La. Cap. We follow thee. Juliet, the county stays.

Nurse. Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter ROMEO, MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO, with five or six Maskers, Torch-Bearers, and others, preceded by a Drum.

Rom. What, shall this speech be spoke for our excuse?

Or shall we go without apology?

Ben. The date is out of such prolixity:— We'll have no Cupid hood-wink'd with a servile Bear a Tartar's painted bow of lath, Scaring the ladies like a crow-keeper!

Nor no without-book prologue, faintly spoke After the prompter, for our entrance.

But, let them measure us by what they will, We'll measure them a measure, and be gone

Rom. Give me a torch! I am not for this ambling: Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

Mer. Nay, gentle Rome, we must have you dance.

Rom. Not I, believe me. You have dancing shoes, With nimble soles; I have a soul of lead, So stiakes to me the ground I cannot move.

Mer. You are a lover; borrow Cupid's wings, 9 And soor with them above a common bound.

Rom. I am too soon eniperied with his shaft, To soar with his light feathers; and so bound, I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe: Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

Ben. And to sink in it, should you burden love; Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Rom. Is love a tender thing? it is too rough, Too rude, too boisterous; and it pricks like thorn.

Mer. If love be rough with you, be rough with love; Pick love for prickling, and you beat love down. — Give me a case to put my visage in:

[Putting on a Mask.

A visor for a visor—it what care I? What curious eye doth quote deformities? Here are the beetle-brows shall blush for me.

Ben. Come, knock, and enter; and no sooner in, But every man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A torch for me: let wantons, light of heart, Tickle the senseless rushes 11 with their heels; For I am proverb'd with a grandairie phrase,— I'll be a candle-holder, and look on: The game was never so fair, and I am done.

Mer. Tut! dum's 14 th mouse, the constable's own word.

If thou art dun, we'll draw thee from the mire 15 Of this save-reverence 14 love, wherein thou stick'st Up to the ears. — Come, we burn day-light, ho! Rom. Nay, that's not so.

Mer. I mean, sir, in delay

We waste our lights in vain, 17 like lamps by day. Take our good meaning, for our judgment hits Five times in that, ere once in our five wits.

Rom. And we mean well in going to this mask, But 'tis no wit to go.

Mer. Why, may one ask?

Rom. I dreamt a dream to-night.

Mer. And so did I.

Rom. Well, what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lie. Rom. In bed asleep, while they do dream things true.
Merc. O! then, I see, queen Mab hath been with you. She is the fairies' midwife; and she comes in shape no bigger than an agate stone
On the fore-finger of an alderman,1
Drawn with a team of little atomies
Over men's noses as they lie asleep:
Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners' legs;
The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;
The traces, of the smallest spider's web;
The collars, of the moonshine's watery beams:2
Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash, of film;
Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat, Not half as big as a round little wagging pig.
Pick'd from the lazy finger of a milkmaid.4
Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,
Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub,
Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers.
And in this state she gallops night by night:
Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love:
On couriers' knees, that dream on courtiers' seats:
O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees:
O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream;
Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,
Because their breaths with sweet-meats tainted are.
Sometime she gallops o'er a counsel's nose, And then dreams he of smelling out a suit:
And sometime with a tip of her pig's tail,
Tickling a parson's nose as 'a lies asleep,
Then he dreams of another benefice.
Sometime she driveth o'er a soldier's neck;
And then dreams he of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuscades, Spanish blades; Of healths five fathom deep; and then anon Drums in his ear, at which he starts, and wakes;
And, being thus frightened,5 swears a prayer or two,
And sleeps again. This is that very Mab,
That plait the manes of horses in the night;
And makes8 the elf-locks in foul sluttish hair;
Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes.9
This is the hag, when maids lie on their backs,
That presses them, and learns them first to bear,
Making them women of good carriage.
This, she is—.14
Rom. Peace, peace! Mercutio, peace!
Thou talk'st of nothing.
Mer. True, I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more inconstant than the wind, who wows Even now the frozen bosom of the north,
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence.13
Turning his tide4 to the dew-dropping south.

Ben. This wind, you talk of, blows us from ourselves;
Summer is done, and we shall come too late.

Rom. I fear, too early; for my mind misgives,
Some consequence, yet hanging in the stars,
Shall bitterly begin his fearful date
With this night's revels: and expire the term
Of a despised life, clos'd in my breath,
By some vile forfeit of untimely14 death:

But he, that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my sail.15—On, lusty gentlemen.

Ben. Strike, drum.

SCENE V.—A Hall in CAPULET'S House.
Musicians waiting. Enter Servants.

1 Serv. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away? he shift a trencher! he scrape a trencher!

2 Serv. When good manners shall lie all into one or two men's hands, and they unwashed too; 'tis a foul thing.

3 Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard,28 look to the plate — Good thou, save me a piece of marchpane;29 and, as thou lovest me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone, and Nell, Antony! and Potpan!

4 Serv. Ay, boy; ready.

5 Serv. You are looked for, and called for, asked for, and sought for, in the great chamber.

6 Serv. We cannot be here and there too.—Cheerly, boys; be brisk awhile, and the longer liver take all.

[They retire.

Enter22 CAPULET, &c. with the Guests, and the Maskers.
Cap. Welcome, gentlemen! ladies, that have their losses Unplagued with corns, will have a bout? with you:—
Ah, he, my replenishment, which if we all
Will now deny to dance? she that makes dainty, she,
I'll swear, hath corns. Am I come near you now?
You are welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the day,
That I have worn a visor, and could tell [To Romeo, &c.,32
A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear,
Such as would please:—'t is gone, 't is gone, 't is gone.
You are welcome, gentlemen!—Come, musicians, play.
A hall! a hall! give room, and foot it, girls.

[Music plays, and they dance.

More light, ye knaves, and turn the tables up,
And quench the fire, the room is grown too hot.—
Ah! sirrah, this unlock'd-for sport comes well.
Nay, sit, nay, sit, good cousin Capulet,
For you and I are past our dancing days:
How long is 't now, since last youse and I
Were in a mask?

2 Cap. By 't lady, thirty years.

1 Cap. What, man! 't is not so much, 't is not so much:
'T is since the nuptial of Lucentio,
Come pentecost as quickly as it will,
Some five and twenty years; and then we mask'd.

2 Cap. 'T is more, 't is more: his son is elder, sir;
His son is thirty,

1 Cap. Will you tell me that?27
His son was but a ward two years ago.

Rom. What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand
Of yonder knight? [Pointing to Juliet.33

Serv. I know not, sir.

Rom. O! she doth teach the torches to burn bright.
It seems she23 hangs upon the cheek of night.
Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear;
Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove14 trooping with crowns, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand,
And, touching here, how bless'd my rude hand.
Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight!
I never saw true beauty fill this night.

Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague.
Fetch me my rapiers, boy.—[Exit Boy.]

What! dares the slave
Come hither, cover'd with an antic face,
To fleer and scorn at our solemnity?
Now, by the stock and honour of my kin,
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.

1 Cap. Why, how now, kinsman? wherefore storm you so?

Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe;
A villain, that is tither come in spite,
To scorn at our solemnity this night.

1 Cap. Young Romeo is it?

Tyb. 'Tis he, that villain Romeo.

1 Cap. Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone,
He bears him like a portly gentleman;
And, to say truth, Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth.
Here, in my house, do him disparagement;
Therefore, be patient, take no notice on him:
It is my will; the which if thou respect,
Show a fair presence, and put off these frowns,
An ill-beseeing semblance for a feast.

Tyb. It fits, when such a villain is a guest.
I'll not endure him.

1 Cap. He shall be endure'd:
What, goodman boy!—I say, he shall; go to;
Go to: am I the master here, or you?
You'll not endure him!—God shall mend my soul—
You'll make a mutiny among my guests.
You will set cock-a-hoop: you'll be the man.

Tyb. Why, uncle, 'tis a shame.

1 Cap. Go to, go to;
You are a saucy boy.—Is't so, indeed?
This trick may chance to keat you;—I know what.
You must contrarily I marry, 'tis time
Well said, my hearts!—You are a prince; go:
Be quiet, or—More light, more light!—for shame!
I'll make you quiet; What!—Cheerly, my hearts!

Tyb. Patience perform with wilful choler meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.
I will withdraw, but this intrusion shall,
Now seeming sweet, convert to bitter gall. [Exit.

Rom. If I profane with my unworshipp'd hand
The holy shrine, the gentle fine this, is this,
My lips, two blushing pilgrims, ready stand
To smooth that rough touch with a tender kiss.

Jul. Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly devotion shows in this;
For saints have hands that pilgrims' hands do touch,
And palm to palm is holy palmers' kiss.
Rom. Have not saints lips, and holy palmers too?
Jul. Ay, pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer.
Rom. O! then, dear saint, let lips do what hands do;
They pray, grant thou, lest faith turn to despair.
Jul. Saints do not move, though grant for prayers' sake.

Rom. Then move not, while my prayer's effect I take.

Thus from my lips, by thine, my sin is purg'd.

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took.
Rom. Sin from my lips? O, trespass sweetly urg'd!
Give me my sin again.

Jul. You kiss by the book. [Kissing her again.]

Nurse. Madam, your mother craves a word with you.

[Juliet retires.

Rom. What is her mother?

Nurse. Marry, bachelor,
Her mother is the lady of the house,
And a good lady, and a wise, and virtuous.
I nurs'd her daughter, that you talk'd withal;
I tell you—he that can lay hold of her
Shall have the chinks.

Jul. Is she a Capulet?

Rom. O, dear account! my life is my foe's debt.

Ben. Away, begone: the sport is at the best.

Rom. Ay, so I fear; the more is my unrest.[Going]

1 Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;
We have a trifling foolish banquet towards.—
Is it e'en so? Why then, I thank you all;
I thank you, honest gentlemen; good night.—
More torches here!—Come on, then let's to bed.
Ah, sibbath, by my say, it waxes late;
I'll to my rest.

[Exit.

Jul. Come hither, nurse. What is yound gentleman?

[The Guests retire severally.

Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.

Jul. What's he, that now is going out of door?

Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petruchio.

Jul. What's he, that follows here, that would not dance?

Nurse. I know not.

Jul. Go, ask his name. If he be married,
My grave is like to be my wedding-bed.

Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague;
[Going and returning.

The only son of your great enemy.

Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate!
Too early seen unknown, and known too late!
Prodigious birth of love it is to me,
That I must love a loathed enemy. [Exeunt all Guests.

Nurse. What's this? what's this?

Jul. A rhyme I learn'd even now
Of one I danc'd withal. [One calls within, Juliet!

Nurse. Anon, anon.

Come, let's away; the strangers all are gone. [Exeunt.

Enter Chorus. Now old desire doth in his death-bed lie,
And young affection gapes to be his heir:
That fair, for which love grean'd for, and would die,
With tender Juliet match'd, is now not fair.
Now Romeo is belov'd, and loves again,
Alike bewitch'd by the charm of looks;
But to his foe suppos'd he must complain,
And she steal love's sweet bait from fearful hooks:
Being held a foe, he may not have access
To breathe such vows as lovers use to swear;
And she as much in love, her means much less
To meet her new-belov'd any where;
But passion lends them power, time means to meet,
Tempering extremities with extreme sweet. [Exit.
ACT II.

Be not her maid, since she is envious;
Her vestal livery is but white* and green,
And none but fools do wear it: cast it off.—
It is my lady; O! it is my love:
O, that she knew she were!—
She speaks, yet she says nothing: what of that?
Her eye discourses, I will answer it.—
I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks:
Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,
Having some business, do entreat her eyes
To twinkle in their spheres till they return.
What if her eyes were there, they in her head?
The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars,
As daylight doth a lamp: her eyes in heaven
Would through the airy region stream so bright,
That birds would sing, and think it were not night.
See, how she leaves her cheek upon her hand!
O! that I were a glove upon that hand,
That I might touch* that cheek.

Jul. Ah me! She speaks
O, speak again, bright angel! for thou art
As glorious to this night, being o'er my head,
As is a winged messenger of heaven
Unto the white-upturned wond'ring eyes
Of mortals, that fall back to gaze on him,
When he bestrides the lazy-passing* cloaths,
And sails upon the bosom of the air.

Jul. O Romeo, Romeo! wherefore art thou Romeo?
Dost thou afflict, and refuse, thy name?
Or, if thou wilt not, but be aworne my love,
And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this?

Jul. 'T is but thy name that is my enemy:
Thou art thyself, although* a Montague.
What's in a name? it is nor hand, nor foot,
Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part
Belonging to a man. O! be some other name.
What's in a name? that which we call a rose,
By any other name* would smell as sweet;
So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd,
Retain that dear* perfection which he owes
Without that title—Romeo, doff* thy name;
And for thy name, which is no part of thee,
Take all myself?

Rom. I take thee at thy word.

Jul. [Starting forwara.*]
Call me but love, and I'll be new baptiz'd;
Henceforth I never will be Romeo.

Jul. What man art thou, that, thus bescreen'd in night,
So stumbllest on my counsel?

Rom. By a name
I know not how to tell thee who I am:
My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself,
Because it is an enemy to thee:
Had I it written, I would tear the word.

Jul. My ears have yet not drunk a hundred words
Of that tongue's utterance,* yet I know the sound.
Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?

Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thee displeas.
Jul. How cam'st thou hither, tell me? and wherefore?
The orchard walls are high, and hard to climb,
And the place death, considering who thou art,
If any of my kinsmen find thee here.
Rom. With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;
For stony limits cannot hold love out:
And what love can do, that dares love attempt;
Therefore, thy kinsmen are no let to me.
Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.
Rom. Alack! there lies more peril in thine eye,
Than twenty of their swords: look thou but sweet,
And I am proof against their enmity.
Jul. I would not for the world they saw thee here.
Rom. I have night's cloak to hide me from their eyes;
And but thou love me, let them find me here:
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death perjured, wanting of thy love.
Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?
Rom. By love, that first did prompt me to inquire;
He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.
I am no pilot; yet, wert thou as far
As that vast shore was washed with the farthest sea,
I would adventure for such merchandise.
Jul. Thou know'st the mask of night is on my face;
Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek,
For that which thou hast heard me speak to-night.
Fain would I dwell on form, fain, fain deny
What I have spoke: but farewell compliment.
Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say—Ay;
And I will take thy word; yet, if thou swearest,
Thou may'st prove false: at lovers' perjuries,
They say, love laughs. O, gentle Romeo!
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frown, and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo; but, else, not for the world.
In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond,
And therefore thou may'st think my favour light;
But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true
Than those that have more cunning to be strange.
I should have been more strange. I must confess,
But that thou over-heards't ere I was ware,
My true love's passion: therefore, pardon me;
And not impute this yielding to light love,
Which the dark night hath so discovered.
Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops—
Jul. O! swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.
Rom. What shall I swear by?
Jul. Do not swear at all; or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my idolatry,
And I'll believe thee.
Rom. If my heart's dear love—
Jul. Well, do not swear. Although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to-night:
It is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden;
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say it lightens. Sweet, good night,
This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flower, but, I fear, too meet.
Good night, good night! as sweet repose and rest
Come to thy heart, as within my breast!

1. Hindrance. 2. gave: in quarto, 1597. 3. couring: in later quartos, and folio. 4. yonder moon I vow: in folio. 5. glorious: in quarto, 1597. 6. my true heart's love: in quarto, 1597. 7. 42
Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gves,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again,
So loving-jealous of his liberty.
Rom. I would, I were thy bird.

Jol. Sweet, so would I:
Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.
Good night, good night: parting is such sweet sorrow,
That I shall sing about the same till it be morrow. [Exit]

Rom. Sleep dwells upon thine eyes, peace in thy breast!—
Would I were asleep and peace, so sweet to rest!
Hence will I to my ghostly fathers' cell;
His help to crave, and my good hap to tell. [Exit]

SCENE III.—Friar Laurence’s Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence, with a basket.

Fri. The grey-ey’d morn smiles on the frowning night,
Cheequer ing the eastern clouds with streaks of light;
And flecked darkness like a drunkard reels
From forth day’s path and Titan’s fiery wheels.
Now, ev’ry course in heaven advances
The day to cheer, and night’s dank dew to dry,
I must up-fill this osier cage of ours.
With baleful weeds, and precious-juiced flowers.
The earth, that’s nature’s mother, is her tomb:
What is her burying grave, that is her womb;
And from her womb children of divers kind
We suck on her natural bosom find:
Many for many virtues excellent,
None but for some, and yet all different.
Oh! mickle is the powerful grace that lies
In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities:
For nought so vile that on the earth doth live
But to the earth some special good doth give;
Nor ought so good, but strain’d from that fair use,
Revolt from true birth, stumbling on abuse;
Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied,
And vice sometime’s by action dignified.
Within the infant rind of this weak flower,
Poison hath residence, and medicine power:
For this, being smelt, with that act cheers each part;
Being fasted, slays all senses with the heart.
Two such opposed kings encamp them still
In man as well as herbs, grace, and rude will;
And where the worser is predominant,
Full soon the canker death eats up that plant.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Good morrow, father.

Fri. Benedicite! What early tongue so sweet saluteth me?
Young son, it argues a distemper’d head,
So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed;
Care keeps his watch in every old man’s eye
And where care lodges, sleep will never lie;
But where unused youth, with unstaff’d brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign.
Therefore, thy earliness doth me assure,
Thou art up-ros’d by some distemper:
Or if not so, then here I hit it right—
Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.

Rom. That last is true; the sweeter rest was mine.
Fri. What, wilt thou with Rosaline?
Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly father? no;
I have forgot that name, and that name’s woe.

Fri. That’s my good son: but where hast thou been, then?

Rom. I’ll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again.
I have been fasting with mine enemy;
Where, on a sudden, one hath wounded me,
That’s by me wounded: both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physic lies:
I bear no hatred, blessed man; for, lo!
My intercession likewise steads my foes.
Fri. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confusion finds but riddling shift.
Rom. Then plainly know, my heart’s dear love is set
On the fair daughter of rich Capulet:
As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine;
And all combin’d, save what thou must combine
By holy marriage. When, and where, and how,
We met, we wou’d, and made exchange of vow,
I’ll tell thee as we pass: but this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us to-day.
Fri. Holy Saint Francis! what a change is here!
Is Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear,
So soon forsaken? young men’s love, then, lies
Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes.
Jesus Maria! a change in thy life.
Hath wash’d thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline!
How much salt water thrown away in waste
To season love, that of it doth not taste!
The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears,
Thy old groans ring yet in my ancient ears;
Lo! here upon thy check the stain doth sit
Of an old tear that is not wash’d off yet.
If e’er thou wast thyself, and these woes thine,
Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline:
And art thou chang’d? pronounce this sentence, then—
Women may fall, when there’s no strength in men.
Rom. Thou child’st me oft for loving Rosaline.
Fri. For doing, not for loving, pupil mine.
Rom. And hast’st me bury love.
Fri. Not in a grave,
To lay one in, another out to have.
Rom. I pray thee, chide not: she, whom? I love now,
Doth grace for grace, and love for love allow:
The other did not so.
Fri. O! she knew well, Thy love did read by rote, and could not spell.
But come, young waverer, come, go with me,
In one respect I’ll thy assistant be;
For this alliance may so happy prove,
To turn your households’ ranour to pure love.
Rom. O! let us hence: I stand on sudden haste.
Fri. Wisely, and slow:* they stumble that run fast.

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter Benvolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the devil should this Romeo be?—
Came he not home to-night?
Ben. Not to his father’s: I spoke with his man.
Mer. Why, that same paid hard-hearted wench, that Rosaline,
Torments him so, that he will sure run mad.
Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman to old Capulet,
Hath sent a letter to his father’s house.
Mer. A challenge, on my life.
Ben. Romeo will answer it.
Mer. Any man that can write may answer a letter.
Ben. Nay, he will answer the letter’s master, how he dares, being dared. 13

Mer. Alas, poor Romeo! he is already dead! stab-

1 friar’s close: in later quartos, and folio. 2 burning: in later quartos, and folio. 3 This and the five following lines, are not in quarto, 1597. 4 Revolts to vice, and stumbles on abuse: in quarto, 1597. 5 small: in quarto, 1597. 6 foes: in later quartos, and folio. 7 unbruised: in f. e. 8 rest: in folio. 9 be: in later quartos, and folio. 10 The rest of the line, not in quarto, 1597. 11 Why, what’s become of Romeo: in quarto, 1597. 12 if he be challenged: in quarto, 1597.
bed with a white wench’s black eye; run thorough the ear with a love-song; the very pin of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy’s shaft; and is he a man to encounter Tybalt?

Ben. Why, what is Tybalt?

Mer. More than princes of cats, I can tell you. O! he is a courageous captain of compliments. He fights as you sing prick-song; keeps time, distance, and proportion; roasts me his minutest nose, one, two, and the third in your bosom: the very butcher of a silk button, a duellist, a duellist; a gentleman of the very first house, of the first and second cause. Ah, the immortal passado! the punto riverso! the hay!—

Ben. The what?

Mer. The pox of such antic, lisping, affecting fantastoses, these new tuners of accents!—By Jesu, a very good blade!—a very tall man!—a very good where?—Why, is not this a lamentable thing, grand sire, that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies, these fashion-mongers, these parbliuz-moits, who stand so much on the new form, that they cannot sit at ease on the old bench? O, their bosh! their bosh! Enter Romeo.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his roe, like a dried herring—O flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified!—Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flowed in: Laura, to his lady, was a kitchen-wench;—narry, she had a better love to be-rhyme her: Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Here, hildings, and harlots; Thisbe, a grey eye or so, but not to the purpose.—Signior Romeo, bon jour! there’s a French salutation to your French slop. You gave us the counterfeit fairly last night.

Rom. Good morrow to you both. What counterfeit did I give you?

Mer. The slip, sir, the slip;* can you not conceive?

Rom. Pardon, good Mercutio, my business was great; and in such a case as mine, a man may strain courtesy.

Mer. That’s as much as to say—such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom. Meaning—to courtesy.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly hit it.*

Rom. A most courteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pink of courtesy.

Rom. Pink for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why, then is my pump well flowered.*

Mer. I will say; follow me this jest now, till thou hast worn out thy pump; that, when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain, after the wearing, solely singular.

Rom. O single-soled jest! solely singular for the singleness.

Mer. Come between us, good Benvolio, for my wits fail.*

Rom. Switch and spurs, switch and spurs; or I’ll cry a match.

Mer. Nay, if our wits run the wild-goose, I have done; for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than I am sure, I have in my whole five. Was it with you that for the goose?

Rom. Thou wast next with me for any thing, when thou wast not there for the goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the ear for that jest.

Rom. Nay, good goose, bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very bitter sweeting;* it is a most sharp sauce.

Rom. And is it not well served in to a sweet goose?

Mer. O! here’s a wit of cheevrel,!* that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad.

Rom. I stretch it out for that word—broad; which added to the goose, proves thee far and wide abroad—goose.*

Mer. Why, is not this better now than groaning for love? now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo:* now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature: for this drveling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desirest me to stop in my tale against the hair.

Ben. Thou wouldst else have made thy tale large.

Mer. O! thou art deceived. I would have made it short; for I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant, indeed, to occupy the argument no longer.

Rom. Here’s goodly gear!

Enter Nurse and Peter.

Mer. A sail, a sail!

Ben. Two, two; a shirt, and a smock.

Nurse. Peter, pr’thy, give me my fan.

Mer. Pr’thy, do, good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan’s the fairer of the two.*

Nurse. God ye good morrow, gentlemen.

Mer. God ye good den, fair gentlewoman.

Nurse. Is it good den?

Rom. Who’s no less, I tell you; for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the prick of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you.

Rom. One, gentlewoman, that God hath made for himself to mar.

Nurse. By my troth, it is well said;—for himself to mar, quoth a?—Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, than he was when you sought him. I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nurse. You say well.

Mer. Yea! is the worst well? very well took, if faith; wisely, wisely.

Nurse. If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence* with you.

Ben. She will invite him to some supper.

Mer. A bawd, a bawd, a bawd! So ho!

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No hare, sir; unless a hare, sir, in a lenten pie, that is something stale and hoar ere it be spent.

An old hare hoar, and an old hare hoar.[Singing.]

Is very good meat in lent:

But a hare that is hoar, is too much for a score,

When it hoars ere it be spent.—

Romeo, will you come to your father’s? we’ll to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell, ancient lady;

Farewell, lady, lady, lady.[Singing.

[Exeunt Mercutio and Benvolio.

Nurse. Marry, farewell! —I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his ropery?
Rom. A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk; and will speak more in a minute, than he will stand to in a month.

Nurse. An 'a speak any thing against me, I'll take him down, an 'a were lusterier than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those that shall. Scurvy knife! I am none of his flirt-gills; I am none of his skains-mates. —And thou must stand by, too, and suffer every knave to use me at his pleasure?

Pet. I saw no man use you at his pleasure; if I had, my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant ye. Most curs'd man as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on my side.

Nurse. Now, afore God, I am so vexed, that every part about me quivers. —Scurvy knife! —Pray you, sir, a word; and as I told you, my young lady bade me inquire you out: what she bid me say, I will keep to myself; but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her in a fool's paradise, as they say, it were a very gross kind of behaviour, as they say, for the gentlewoman is young; and, therefore, if you should deal double with her, truly, it were an ill thing to be offered to any gentlewoman, and very wicked dealing.

Rom. Nurse, commend me to thy lady and mistress. I protest unto thee, I do not mean heart! and, 'tis faith, I will tell her as much, Lord! lord! she will be a joyfull woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her, nurse? thou dost not mark me.

Nurse. I will tell her, sir,—that you do protest; which, as I take it, is a gentlemanlike offer.

Rom. Bid her devise some means to come to shrift this afternoon;
And there she shall at friar Lawrence' cell
Be shriv'd, and married. Here is for thy pains.

Nurse. No, truly, sir; not a penny.

Rom. Go to; I say, you shall. [Giving her money.
Nurse. This afternoon, sir? well, she shall be there.

Rom. And stay, good nurse, behind the abbey-wall:
Within this man shall be with thee.
And bring thee cords made like a tackled stair; Which to the high top-gallant of my joy
Must be my convey in the secret night.

Farewell! —Be trusty, and I'll quite thy pains.

Farewell! —Commend me to thy mistress.

Nurse. Now, God in heaven bless thee! —Hark you, sir.

Rom. What say'st thou, my dear nurse?
Nurse. Is your man secret? Did you ne'er hear say,
Two may keep counsel, putting one away?

Rom. I warrant thee; my man is true as steel.

Nurse. Well, sir; my mistress is the sweetest lady—Lord, lord! when 'tis a little prating thing,—O!
There's a good man in town, on Paris street, that would fain lay knife aboard; but she, good soul, had as lieve see a toad, a very toad, as see him. I anger her sometimes, and tell her that Paris is the proper man; but, I'll warrant you, when I say so, she looks as pale as any clown in the varsiworld.

Doth not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. Ay, nurse; what of that? both with an R.

Nurse. Ah, mucker! that's the dog's name. R. is for thee? no. I know it begins with one other letter; and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and rosemary, that it would do you good to hear it.

Rom. Commend me to thy lady.

Nurse. Ay, a thousand times. —Peter!
Pet. Anon?
Nurse. Peter, take my fan, and go before. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Capulet's Garden.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. The clock struck nine, when I did send the nurse;
in half an hour she promis'd to return.

Nurse. Perchance she cannot meet him: that's not so.—
O! she is lame? love's heralds should be thoughts,¹²
Which ten times faster glide than the sun's beams
Driving black shadows over lowering hills:
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love,
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Now is the sun upon the highest hill
Of this day's journey; and from nine till twelve
Is three long hours,—yet she is not come.

Had she affections, and warm youthful blood,
She'd be as swift in motion as a ball;
My words would bandy her to my sweet love,
And his to me: but old folks, seem as dead;
Unwieldy, slow, heavy, and dull as lead.

Nurse. O God! she comes! —O honey nurse! what news?
Hast thou met with him? ²¹
Send thy man away.

Nurse. Peter, stay at the gate. [Exit Peter.

Jul. Now, good sweet nurse,—O lord! why look'st thou sad?

Nurse. Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily;
If good, thou sham'st the music of sweet news
By playing it to me with so sour a face.

Nurse. I am weary, give me leave awhile. —
Fie, how my bones ache! That a jaunt have I had!
Jul. I would, thou hadst my bones, and I thy news:
Nay, come, I pray thee, speak;—good, good nurse, speak.

Nurse. Moan, what haste! can you not stay awhile?
Do you not see, that I am out of breath?

Jul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast breath
To say to me—that thou art out of breath?
The excuse that thou dost make in this delay
Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy news good, or bad? answer to that;
Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance.
Let me be satisfied, is't good or bad?

Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice; you know not how to choose a man: Romeo! no, not he;
though his face be better than any man's, yet his leg excels all men's; and for a hand, and a foot, and a body,—though they be not to be talked on, yet they are not the flower of courtesy,—but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.—Go thy ways, wench: serve God.
What, have you dined at home?

Jul. No, no: but all this did I know before.
What says he of our marriage? what of that?

Nurse. Lord, how my head aches! what a head have I!

And run more swift than hasty powder foi;
Both hurry from the fearful cannon's mouth.
It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces. My back! o' t' other side.—O, my back, my back!—

Beshrew your heart for sending me about, to catch my death with jaunting up and down.

Jul. I' faith, I am sorry that thou art not well.
Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love?

Nurse. Your love says like an honest gentleman, And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome, And, I warrant, a virtuous.—Where is your mother?

Jul. Where is my mother?—why, she is within: Where should she be? How oddly thou reply'st;

"Your love says like an honest gentleman,

Where is your mother?"

Nurse. O, God's lady dear!

Are you so hot? Marry, come up, I trow;

Is this the poultice for my aching bones?

Henceforward do your messages yourself.

Jul. Here's such a coil—Come, what says Romeo?¹

Nurse. Have you got leave to go to shift to-day?

Jul. I have.

Nurse. Then, hie you hence to friar Laurence's cell,

There stays a husband to make you a wife;

Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks;

They'll be in scarlet straightway² at my² news.

Hie you to church; I must another way,

To fetch a ladder, by the which your love

Must climb a bird's nest soon, when it is dark:

I am the drudge, and toil in your delight,

But you shall bear the burden soon at night.

Go; I'll to dinner; hie you to the cell.

Jul. Hie to high fortune!—Honest nurse, farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Romeo.

Fri. So smile the heavens upon this holy act,

That after-hours with sorrow chide us not!

Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can,

It cannot countervail the exchange of joy

That one short minute gives me in her sight:

Do thou but close our hands with holy words,

Then love-devouring death do what he dare;

It is enough I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights have violent ends,

And in their triumph die: like fire and powder,

Which as they kiss consume. The sweetest honey

Is lothsome in his own deliciousness,

And in the taste confounds the appetite:

Therefore, love moderately; long love doth so;

Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.

Enter Juliet.

Here comes the lady.—O! so light a foot

Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint:

A lover may bestride the gossamers

That idle in the wanton summer air,

And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

Jul. Good even to my ghostly confessor.

Fri. Romeo shall thank thee, daughter, for us both.

Jul. As much to him, else are his thanks too much.

Rom. Ah, Juliet! if the measure of thy joy

Be heap'd like mine, and that thy skill be more

To blazon it, then sweeten with thy breath

This neighbour air, and let rich music's tongue

Unfold the imagin'd happiness, that both

Receive in either by this dear encounter.

Jul. Conceit, more rich in matter than in words,

Brags of his substance, not of ornament;

They are but beggars that can count their worth;

But my true love is grown to such excess,

I cannot sum the sum² of half my wealth.

Fri. Come, come, come with me, and we will make short work;

For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone,

Till holy church incorporate two in one. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Public Place.

Enter Mercutio, Benvolio, Page, and Servants.

Ben. I pray thee, good Mercutio, let's retire:

The day is hot, the Capulets abroad,

And if we meet we shall not 'scape a brawl;

For now, these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.²

Mer. Thou art like one of those fellows that,

When he enters the confines of a tavern, claps me his sword upon the table, and says, "God send me no need of thee!"³ and, by the operation of the second cup, draws him on the drawer, when, indeed, there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a fellow?

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot a Jack, in thy mood, as any in Italy; and as soon moved to be moody; and as soon moody to be moved.

Ben. And what to?

Mer. Nay, an there were two such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other. Thou! why thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more, or a hair less, in his beard, than thou hast. Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts; having no other reason, but because thou hast hazel eyes: what eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egg is full of meat; and yet thy head hath been beaten as addle as an egg for quarrelling. Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his new shoes with old riband; and yet thou wilt tutor me from quarrelling!

An I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee-simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Mer. The fee-simple? 0 simple!

Ben. By my head, here come the Capulets.

Enter Tybalt, and others.

Mer. By my heel, I care not.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them.—

Gentlemen, good den! a word with one of you.

Mer. And but one word with one of us? Couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You will find me apt enough to that, sir, if you will give me occasion.

¹ In place of this question, the quarto, 1597, has:

Nay stay, sweet nurse; I do entreat thee, now,

What says my love, my lord, my Romeo?

² straight: in f. e. ² any: in f. e. ³ This scene was entirely re-formed in the quarto, 1599. It may be found as it appears in the quarto, 1597, in the notes to Verplanck's edition. ⁴ sum up some: in folio. Steevens made the change. ⁵ This and the previous line, are not in quarto, 1597. ⁶ This and the next speech, are not in the quarto, 1597.
Mer. Could you not take some occasion without giving?

Tyb. Mercutio, thou consort'st with Romeo.—

Mer. Consort! what! dost thou make minstrels' an thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here's my fiddlestick; here's that shall make you dance. 'Zounds, consort! [Striking his hilt.]

Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of men:
Either within or without some private place,
And reason coldly of thy grievances,
Or else depart; here all eyes gaze on us.²

Mer. Men's eyes were made to look, and let them gaze:
I will not budge for no man's pleasure, I.

Enter Romeo.

Tyb. Well, peace be with you, sir. Here comes my man.

Mer. But, I'll be hang'd, sir, if he wear your livery:
Marry, go before to field, he'll be your follower;
Your worship, in that sense, may call him—man.

Tyb. Romeo, the hate I bear thee, can afford
No better term than this—thou art a villain.

Romeo. Tybalt, the reason that I have to love thee
Doth much exceed the appertaining rage
To such a greeting,—villain am I none;
Therefore farewell: I see, thou know'st me not.

Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries
That thou hast done me; therefore, turn and draw.

Rom. I do protest, I never injur'd thee;
But love thee better than thou canst devise,
Till thou shalt know the reason of my love:
And so, good Capulet,—which name I tender
As dearly as mine own,—be satisfied.

Mer. O calm, dishonourable, vile submission!
A la stoccata carries it away. [Draws as Tybalt is going.]

Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk?

Tyb. What wouldst thou have with me?

Mer. Good king of cats, nothing, but one of your nine lives; that I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry-beat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pitchfork by the cars? make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you. [Drawing.] [They fight.]

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up.

Mer. Come, sir, your passado.

Rom. Draw, Benvolio; Beat down their weapons.—Gentlemen, for shame, Forbear this outrage.—Tybalt—Mercutio—
The prince expressly hath forbid this bandying In Verona streets.—Hold, Tybalt!—good Mercutio! [Exit Tybalt and his Partisans.]

Mer. I am hurt:—[Romeo supports Merc.] A plague o' both the houses!—I am sped:—
Is he gone, and hath nothing?

Ben. What! art thou hurt?

Mer. Ay, ay, a scratch, a scratch; marry, 't is enough.—

Where is my page?—go, villain, fetch a surgeo.

Rom. Courage, man; the hurt cannot be much.

Mer. No, no, not so. So wide a wound as a church's door; but 't is enough, 't will serve: ask for me to-morrow, and you shall find me a grave man. I am pepered, I warrant, for this world:—a plague o' both your houses!—'Zounds! a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death! a braggart, a rogue, a villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic!—Why, the devil, came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Help me into some house, Benvolio, Or I shall faint.—A plague o' both your houses! They have made worms' meat of me:
I have it, and soundly too:—your houses!

Exeunt Mercutio and Benvolio.

Rom. This gentleman, the prince's near ally,
My very friend, hath got his mortal hurt:
In my behalf; my reputation stain'd
With Tybalt's slander, Tybalt, that an hour
Hath been my cousin. O sweet Juliet!
Thy beauty hath made me effeminate,
And in my tender solan'd valour's steel.

Re-enter Benvolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo! brave Mercutio's dead; That gallant spirit hath expir'd the clouds,
Which too untimely here did scorn the earth.

Rom. This day's black fate on more days doth depend;
This but begins the woes others must end.

Re-enter Tybalt.

Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Rom. Alive! in triumph! and Mercutio slain!
Away to heaven, respective lenity,
And fire-ey'd fury be my conduct now!—
Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again,
That late thou gav'st me; for Mercutio's soul
Is but a little way above our heads,
Staying for thine to keep him company:
Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him.

Tyb. Thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him here,
Shalt with him hence.

Rom. This shall determine that. [They fight; Tybalt falls.]

Ben. Romeo, away! begone! The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain:—
Stand not amaz'd:—the prince will doom thee death,
If thou art taken. Hence!—be gone!—away!

Rom. O! I am fortune's fool.

Ben. Why dost thou stay? [Exit Romeo.]

Enter Citizens, &c.

1 Cit. Which way ran he that kill'd Mercutio?
Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

1 Cit. You, sir;—go with me;
I charge thee in the prince's name, obey.

Enter Prince, attended; Montague, Capulet, their Wives, and others.

Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?

Ben. O noble prince! I can discover all
The unlucky manage of this fatal brawl:
There lies the man, slain by young Romeo,
That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio.

La. Cap. Tybalt, my cousin!—O my brother's child! O prince! O cousin! husband! O, the blood is spil'd Of my dear kinsman!—Prince, as thou art true,
For blood of ours shed blood of Montague.

O cousin, cousin! O prince, cousin, cousin!

Prin. Who began this bloody fray?

Ben. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did slay:

Romeo, that spoke him fair, bade him bethink

Whiter than new snow on a raven's back—
Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd night,
Give me my Romeo: and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine,
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish sun—
O, I have bought the mansion of love,
But not possess'd it; and though I am sold,
Not yet enjoy'd.
So tedious is this day,
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. O! here comes my nurse.

Enter Nurse, with a Ladder of Cords.
And she brings news; and ev'ry tongue, that speaks
But Romeo's name, speaks heavenly eloquence.—
Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there? the cords
That Romeo bade thee fetch?

Nurse. Ah well-a-day! he's dead, he's dead, he's dead!
We are undone, lady; we are undone!—
Alack the day!—he's gone, he's kill'd, he's dead!
Jul. Can heaven be so envious?

Nurse. Romeo can,
Though heaven cannot.—O Romeo, Romeo!—
Who ever would have thought it?—Romeo!—
Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me thus?
This torture should be roar'd in dismal hell.
Hath Romeo slain himself? say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice:
I am not I, if there be such a shade;
Or those eyes shut, that make the answer, I.
If he be slain, say,—I; or if not—no:
Brief sounds determine or my weal or woe.

Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes—
God save the mark!—here on his manly breast:
A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse;
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaub'd in blood,
All in gore blood;—I swooned at the sight.

Jul. O break, my heart!—poor bankrupt, break at once!
To prison, eyes; ne'er look on liberty:
Vile earth, to earth resign; end motion here,
At thou, and bare beauty, press one heavy bier!—

Nurse. O Tybalt, Tybalt! the best friend I had:
O courteous Tybalt, honest gentleman!
That ever I should live to see thee dead!

Jul. What storm is this that blows so contrary?
Is Romeo slaughter'd? and is Tybalt dead?
My dear-lov'd cousin, and my dearer lord!—
Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom;—
For who is living, if those two are gone?

Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banish'd:
Romeo, that kill'd him, he is banish'd.

Jul. O God!—did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's blood?

Nurse. It did, it did; alas the day! it did.

Jul. O serpent heart,^11 how listeth with a flowered face!
Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?
Beautiful tyrant; and angelical!—
Dove-feather'd raven! wolsvish-ravening lamb!—
Despised substance of divinest show!

SCENE II.—A Room in C. and J.'s House.

Enter J. and N.

J. Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,
Towards Phæbus' mansion; such a waggoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the west,
And bring in cloudy night immediately.—
Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night,
That enemies' eyes may wink, and Romeo
Leap to these arms, untalk'd of, and unseen!—
Lovers can see to do their amorous rites
By their own beauties; or if love be blind,
It best agrees with night.—Come, civil night,
Thou sober-suited maision, all in black,
And learn me how to lose a winning match,
Play'd for a pair of stainless uninvested hands:
Hood my unmann'd head, breathing in my cheeks,
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold,
Think true love acted simple modesty.
Come night, come Romeo, come thou day in night;
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night

^1 Trifling. ^2 This word is not in f. e. ^3 This line is not in quarto, 1597. ^4 This line and the next speech, are not in quarto, 1597. ^5 So the quarto, 1597; other old copies: dwelling. ^6 The rest of the soliloquy, is not in quarto, 1597. ^7 Most f. s.: runaways. Dyce reads: roving.

^8 Terms of falconry—to murr a hawk, is to accustom her to the person who trains her; bring is beating the air with the wings, in striving to get away. ^9 The old spelling of e. ^10 So the quarto, 1597; other old copies: dearest. ^11 serpent's hate: in quarto, 1597.
Just opposite to what thou justly seem'st;
A damned saint, an honourable villain!—
O, nature! what hadst thou to do in hell,
When thou didst pour the spirit of a fiend
In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?—
Was ever book containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound? O, that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace?

Nurse. There's no trust,
No faith, no honesty in men;
Then Jerry'd,
All forsworn, all naught, all dissemblers.—
Ah! where's my man? give me some aqua vitae:—
These griefs, these woes, these sorrows make me old.
Shame come to Romeo!

Jul. Blister'd be thy tongue,
For such a wish! he was not born to shame:
Upon his bow shame is asham'd to sit;
For 't is a throne where honour may be crown'd
Sole monarch of the universal earth.
O, what a beast was I to chide at him!
Nurse. Will you speak well of him that kill'd your cousin?

Jul. Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband?
Ah, poor my lord! what tongue shall smooth thy name,
When I, thy three-hours wife, have mangled it?—
But, wherefore, villain, didst thou kill my cousin?
That villain cousin would have kill'd my husband:
Back, foolish tear, back to your native spring;
Your tributary drops belong to woe,
Which you, mistaking, offer up to joy.
My husband lives, that Tybalt would have stain;
And Tybalt's dead, that would have stain my husband:
All this is comfort; wherefore weep I then?
Some word there was, worse than Tybalt's death,
That murder'd me. I would forget it pain;
But, O! it presses to my memory,
Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds:
Tybalt is dead, and Romeo—banish'd!
That—banish'd, that one word—banish'd,
Hath stain ten thousand Tybalt's. Tybalt's death
Was woe enough, if it had ended there;
Or,—if sour woe delights in fellowship,
And needly will be rank'd with other griefs,—
Why follow'd not, when she said—Tybalt's dead,
Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both,
Which modern lamentation might have mov'd?
But, with a rear-ward following Tybalt's death,
Romeo is banish'd!—to speak that word,
Is father, mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet.
All stain, all dead.—Romeo is banish'd!
There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,
In that word's death; no words can that woe sound.
Where is my father, and my mother, nurse?
Nurse. Weeping and wailing over Tybalt's corpse:
Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.

Jul. Wash they his wounds with tears? mine shall be spent,
When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banishment.
Take up those cords.—Poor ropes, you are beguil'd,
Both you and I, for Romeo is exil'd: [Taking them up.
He made you for a highway to my bed,
But I, a maid, die maiden-widow.
Come, cords; come, nurse: I'll to my wedding bed;
And from hence, nurse, take my maidenhead!
Nurse. Hie to your chamber; I'll find Romeo
To comfort you:—I was loath where he is.
Hark ye, your Romeo will be here at night:
I'll go to him; he is hid at Laurence's cell.

Jul. O, find him! give this ring to my true knight,
And bid him come to take his last farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Friar Laurence's Cell.
Enter Friar Laurence and Romeo.

Fri. Romeo, come forth; come forth, thou fearful
Affliction is enamour'd of thy parks,
[man:
And thou art wedded to calamity.
Rom. Father, what news? what is the prince's doom?
What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand,
That I yet know not?

Fri. Too familiar
Is my dear son with such sour company:
I bring thee tidings of the prince's doom.

Rom. What less than dooms-day is the prince's doom?

Fri. A gentle judgment parted from his lips,
Not body's death, but body's banishment.

Rom. Ha! banishment? be merciful, say—death;
For exile hath more terror in his look.
Much more than death: do not say—banishment.

Fri. Hence from Verona art thou banish'd:
Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

Rom. There is no world without Verona walls,
But purgatory, torture, hell itself.
Hence banish'd am banish'd from the world,
And world's exile is death:—then, banish'd
Is death mis-term'd: calling death banishment,
Thou cut'st my head off with a golden axe,
And sni'tst upon the stroke that murders me.

Fri. O deadly sin! O rude unthankfulness!
Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind prince,
Taking thy part, hath brush'd aside the law,
And turn'd that black word death to banishment:
This is dear mercy, and thou seest it not.

Rom. 'Tis is torture, and not mercy: heaven is here,
Where Juliet lives; and every cat, and dog,
And little mouse, every unworthy thing,
Live here in heaven, and may look on her;
But Romeo, may not.—More validity,
More honourable state, more courtship lives
In carrion flies, than Romeo; they may seize
On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand,
And steal immortal blessing from her lips;
Who, even in pure and vestal modesty,
Still blush, as thinking their own kisses sin;
This may flies do, when I from this must fly,
And say'st thou yet, that exile is not death?
But Romeo may not: he is banish'd.
Flies may do this, but I from this must fly:
They are free men, but I am banish'd.
Hast thou no poison mix'd, no sharp-ground knife,
No sudden mean of death, though ne'er so mean,
But—banish'd—to kill me—banish'd?
O friar! the damned used that word in hell;
Howling attends it: how hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin-absolver, and my friend profess'd,
To mangle me with that word—banish'd?

Fri. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak a word.
Rom. O! thou wilt speak again of banishment.

Fri. I'll give thee armour to keep off that word;
Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy,
To comfort thee, I would thou art banish'd.

Rom. Yet banish'd?—Hang up philosophy:
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,
It helps not, it prevails not. Talk no more.

2 So the undated quarto; other old copies: bower.

5 This and the previous line, are not in folio.
Fri. O! then I see that madmen have no ears.
Rom. How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?
Fri. Let me dispute with thee of thy estate.
Rom. Thou canst not speak of that thou dost not feel.
Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love,
An hour but married, Tybalt murdered,
Doting like me, and like me banished,
Then mightst thou speak; then mightst thou tear thy hair,
And fall upon the ground, as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave. [Falling.
Fri. Arise; one knocks: good Romeo, hide thyself.
Rom. Not I: unless the breath of heart-sick groans.
Mist-like, infold me from the search of eyes. [Knocking.
Fri. Hark, how they knock!—who's there?—
Romeo, arise;
Thou wilt be taken.—Stay a while.—Stand up;
[Falling.
Run to my study.—By and by.—God's will!
What willfulness is this!—I come, I come. [Knocking.
Who knocks so hard? whence come you? what's your will?
Nurse. [Within.] Let me come in and you shall know my errand:
I come from lady Juliet.
Fri. Welcome, then.
[Enter Nurse.
Nurse. O holy friar! O! tell me, holy friar,
Where is my lady's lord? where's Romeo?
Fri. There on the ground, with his own tears made drink.
Nurse. O! he is even in my mistress' case;
Just in her case.
Fri. O woful sympathy!
Pitious predicament!
Nurse. Even so lies she, Blubbing and weeping, weeping and blubbing.—
Stand up, stand up; stand, an you be a man:
For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand;
Why should you fall into so deep an O? [Romeo groans.
Rom. Nurse. [Rising suddenly.
Nurse. Ah sir! ah sir!—Death is the end of all.
Rom. Spak'st thou of Juliet? how is it with her?
Doth she not think me an old murderer,
Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy
With blood remov'd but little from her own?
Where is she? and how doth she? and what says
My conceal'd lady to our cancell'd love?
Nurse. O, she says nothing, sir, but weeps and weeps;
And now falls on her bed; and then starts up,
And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries,
And then down falls again.
Rom. As if that name, Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murder her; as that name's cursed hand
Murder'd her kinsman.—O! tell me, friar, tell me.
In what vile part of this anatomy
Doth my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack
The hateful mansion.
Fri. Hold thy desperate hand!
Art thou a man? thy form cries out, thou art;
Thy tears are womanish; thy wild acts denote
The unreasonable fury of a beast;
Unseemly woman, in a seeming man;
Or ill-beseeming beast, in seeming both!
Thou hast amaz'd me; by my holy order, I thought thy disposition better temper'd;
Hast thou slain Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself,
And slay thy lady, too, that lives in thee,
By doing dammed hate upon thyself? 44
Why rack'st thou on thy birth, the heaven, and earth?
Since birth, and heaven, and earth, all three do meet
In thee at once, which thou at once wouldst lose.
Fie, fie! thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit,
Which, like an usurer, abound'st in all,
And useth none in that true use indeed
Which should beedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit.
Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Dreggising from the valour of a man;
Thy dear love, swoon'd, but hollow peruery,
Killing that love which thou hast vow'd to cherish;
Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Mis-shapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skill-less soldier's flash,
Is set afire by thine own ignorance,
And thou dismember'd with thine own defence.
What! rouse thee, man: thy Juliet is alive,
For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead;
There art thou happy: Tybalt would kill thee,
But thou knowest Tybalt; there art thou happy too:
The law, that threaten'd death, becomes thy friend,
And turns it to exile; there art thou happy:
A pack of blessings lights upon thy back;
Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a mis-believ'd and suffer'd wench,
Thou pou'st upon thy fortune and thy love.
Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable.
Go, get thee to thy love, as was agreed,
Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her;
But, look, thou stay not till the watch be set,
For then thou canst not pass to Mantua;
Where thou shalt live, till we can find a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends,
Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back,
With twenty hundred thousand times more joy
Than thou went'st forth in lamentation.—
Go before, nurse: commend me to thy lady;
And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto:
Romeo is coming.
Nurse. O Lord! I could have stay'd here all the night,
To hear good counsel: O, what learning is!—
My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come.
Rom. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.
Nurse. Here is a ring she bid me give you, sir.
Hie you, make haste, for it grows very late. [Exit Nurse.
Rom. How well my comfort is reviv'd by this!
Fri. Go hence. Good night; and here stands all
Either be gone before the watch be set, [your state;—
Or by the break of day dignis'd from hence.
Sojourn in Mantua; I'll find out your man,
And he shall signify from time to time
Every good hap to you that chances here.
Give me thy hand: it's late; farewell; good night.
Rom. But that a joy past joy calls out on me, it were a grief so brief to part with thee:
Farewell. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and Paris.

Cap. Things have fallen out, sir, so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our daughter.
Look you, she lov'd her kinsman Tybalt dearly,
And so did I:—well, we were born to die.
T is very late, she'll not come down to-night:
I promise you, but for your company,
I would have been a-bed an hour ago.
Par. The winds of love afford us time to woo.
Madam, good night; commend me to your daughter.
La. Cap. I will, and know her mind early to-morrow;
To night she's mean'd up in her heaviness.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender
Of my child's love: I think, she will be rul'd
In all respects by me; may more, I doubt it not.
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed;
Acquaint her here of my son Paris' love,
And bid her mark you me, on Wednesday next—
But, soft! what day is this?
Par. Monday, my lord.

Cap. Monday? ha! ha! Well, Wednesday is too
O' Thursday let it be — o' Thursday, tell her, [soon; she Shall be married to this noble earl.
Will you be ready? do you like this haste?
We'll keep no great ado: — a friend, or two; —
For hark you, Tybalt being slain so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much.
Therefore, we'll have some half a dozen friends,
And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?
Par. My lord, I would that Thursday were to-morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone: o' Thursday be it then.
Go you to Juliet, ere you go to bed,
Prepare her, wife, against this wedding-day.
Farewell, my lord. — Light to my chamber, ho!
Ago me! it is so very late, that I
May call it early by and by. — Good night. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — Juliet's Chamber.
Enter Romeo and Juliet.
Jul. Wilt thou be gone? it is not yet near day:
It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pier'd the fearful hollow of thine ear;
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate tree.
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.
Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east.
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tiptoe on the misty mountain tops:
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.
Jul. You light is not day-light; I know it, I:
It is some meteor that the sun exhalers,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore, stay yet; thou need'st not to be gone.
Rom. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to death;
I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
I'll say, you grey is not the morning's eye,
'T is but the pale reflex of Cynthia's bow; —
Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heaven so high above our heads:
I have more care to stay, than will to go: —
Come, death, and welcome. Juliet calls it so.
How is't, my soul? let's talk, it is not day.
Jul. It is, it is; hie hence, be gone away!
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords, and unpleasing sharps.
Some say, the lark makes sweet division;
This doth not so, for she divideth us.
Some say, the lark and loathed toad change eyes;
O! now I would they had chang'd voices too,
Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray.
Hunting thee hence with hunts-up to the day.
O! now be gone: more light and light it grows.
Rom. More light and light, more dark and dark
Our woes.

Enter Nurse.
Nurse. Madam!
Nurse. Your lady mother's coming to your chamber:
The day is broke; be wary, look about. [Exit Nurse.
Jul. Then, window, let day in, and let life out.
Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I'll descend.
[Descending.
Jul. Art thou gone so? love, lord! ay, husband,
I must hear from thee every hour in the day, [friend! I
For in a minute there are many days:
O! by this count I shall be much in years.
Ere I again behold my Romeo.
Rom. Farewell! I will omit no opportunity
That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.
Jul. O! think'st thou, we shall ever meet again?
Rom. I doubt it not, and all these woes shall serve
For sweet discourses in our time to come.
Jul. O God! I have an ill-divining soul:
Methinks, I see thee, now thou art so low,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb:
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale.
Rom. And trust me, love, in my eye so do you:
Dry sorrow drinks our blood. Adieu! adieu! [Exit Romeo.
Jul. O fortune, fortune! all men call thee fickle. 4
If thou art fickle, what dost thou with fickle
That is renown'd for faith? Be fickle, fortune;
For, then, I hope thou wilt not keep him long;
But send him back.
La. Cap. [Within.] Ho! daughter, are you up?
Jul. Who is 't that calls? is it my lady mother?
Is she not down so late, or up so early?
What unaccustom'd cause procurers her bithet?

Enter Lady Capulet.
La. Cap. Why, how now, Juliet?
Jul. Madam, I am not well.

La. Cap. Evermore weeping for your cousin's death?
What! wilt thou' wash him from his grave with tears?
An if thou wouldst, thou couldst not make him live;
Therefore, have done. Some grief shows much of love;
But much of grief shows still some want of wit.
Jul. Yet let me weep for such a feeling loss.
La. Cap. So shall you feel the loss, but not the friend
Which you weep for.
Jul. Feeling so the loss,
I cannot choose but ever weep the friend.
La. Cap. Well, girl, thou weep'st not so much for his death,
As that the villain lives which slaughter'd him.
Jul. What villain, madam?
Jul. Villain and he are many miles asunder.
God pardon him! I do, with all my heart.
And yet no man, like him, doth grieve my heart.
La. Cap. That is, because the traitor murderer's lives.
Jul. Ay, madam, from the reach of these my hands.
Would none but I might venge my cousin's death?
La. Cap. We will have vengeance for it, fear thou not:
Then, weep no more. I'll send to one in Mantua,—
Where that same banish'd runagate doth live,—
Shall give him such an unaccustom'd dram'.

1 brew: in f.c. 3 The name of a tune to summon hunters.

speeches, are wanting in the quarto, 1597. 1 I think, thou 'st: in quarto, 1597. The scene was much altered subsequently 4 Not in

To go with Paris to Saint Peter's church,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.
Out, you green-sickness carrion! out, you baggage!
You tallow face!

La. Cap.
Fie, fie! what, are you mad?

Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,
Hear me with patience but to speak a word.

Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient wretch!
I tell thee what,—get thee to church o' Thursday,
Or never after look me in the face.

Speak not, reply not, do not answer me;
My fingers itch.—Wife, we scarce thought us bless'd
That God had lent us but this only child;
But now I see this one is too much,
And that we have a curse in having her.
Out on her, hiding!

Nurse.
God in heaven bless her!
You are to blame, my lord, to rate her so.

Cap. And why, my lady wisdom? hold your tongue,
Good prudence: smaller with your gossip's; go.

Nurse. I speak no treason.

Cap.
O! God ye good don.

Nurse. May not one speak?

Cap.
Peace, you mumbling fool!

Uter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl,
For here we need it not.

La. Cap.
You are too hot.

Cap. God's bread! it makes me mad.

Day, night, hour, tide, time, work, play,
 Alone, in company, still my care hath been
To have her match'd: and having now provided
A gentleman of noble parentage,
Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly train'd,
Sturd'y (as they say) with honourable parts,
Proportion'd to her person,
And then to have a wretched piling fool,
A whining mammet, in her fortune's tender,
To answer—"I'll not wed,"—"I cannot love,"
"I am too young,"—"I pray you, pardon me,"—
But, an you will not wed, I'll pardon you;
Graze where you will, you shall not house with me:
Look to't, think on't, I do not use to jest.

Thursday is near; lay hand on heart, advise,
An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;
An you be not; hang, beg, starve, die in the streets,
For, by my soul, I'll never acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall never do thee good.

Trust to't, bethink you; I'll not be forsworn.
[Exit.
Jul. Is there no pity sitting in the clouds,
That sees into the bottom of my grief?
O, sweet my mother, cast me not away!

Delay this marriage for a month, a week;
Or, if you do not, make the bridal bed
In that dim monument where Tybalt lies.

La. Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word.

Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee.
[Exit.
Jul. O God! —O nurse! how shall this be prevented?

My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven;
How shall that faith return again to earth,
Unless that husband send it me from heaven
By leaving earth? —Comfort me, counsel me.—

Black! that heaven should practise stratagems
Upon so soft a subject as myself!
What say'st thou? hast thou not a word of joy?
Some comfort, nurse.

Nurse.
Faith, here 'tis. Romeo

Is banished, and all the world to nothing,

---

1 this: in quarto, 1597.  2 f. e. give this line to JULIET.  3 Not in folio.  4 a low, despicable person.  5 God give you good even or day.  6 God's blessed mother, wife, it made me: in quarto, 1597.  7 allied: in folio.  8 heart could: in quarto, 1597.  9 The quarto, 1597 has but one line in place of this speech.
That he dares ne'er come back to challenge you;
Or, if he do, it needs must be by stealth.
Then, since the case so stands as now it doth,
I think it best you married with the county.
O! he's a lovely gentleman;
Romeo's a dishclout to him: an eagle, madam,
Hath not so green, so quick, so fair an eye,
As Paris hath. Beshrew my very heart,
I think you are happy in this second match,
For it excels your first: or if it did not,
Your first is dead; or 't were as good he were,
As living here and you no use of him.
Jul. Speaketh thou from thy heart?
Nurse. And from my soul too;
Or else beshrew them both.
Jul. Amen!

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris.

Fri. On Thursday, sir? the time is very short.
Par. My father Capulet will have it so;
And I am nothing slow to slack his haste.

Fri. You say, you do not know the lady's mind:
Unseen is the course; I like it not.

Par. Immoderately she weeps for Tybali's death,
And, therefore, have I little talk'd of love;
For Venus smiles not in a house of tears,
Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous,
That she doth give her sorrow so much way,
And in his wisdom hastens our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears;
Which, too much minded by herself alone,
May be put from her by society.
Now do you know the reason of this haste?
Fri. I would knew not why it should be slow'd.

[Aside.

Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter JULIET.

Par. Happily met, my lady, and my wife.
Jul. That may be, sir, when I may be a wife.
Par. That may be, must be, love, on Thursday next.
Jul. What must shall be.

Fri. That's a certain text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this father?
Jul. To answer that, I should confess to you.
Par. Do not deny to him that you love me.
Jul. I will confess to you that I love him.
Par. So will you, I am sure, that you love me.
Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price,
Being spoke behind your back, than to your face.
Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abus'd with tears.
Jul. The tears have got small victory by that;
For it was bad enough before their spite.
Par. Thou wrong'st it, more than tears, with that report.
Jul. That is no slander, sir, which is a truth;
And what I spake, I spake it to my face.
Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd it.
Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own.—

[Aside.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now,
Or shall I at evening come to you?
SCENE III.

Romeo and Juli.e.

669

Cap. Well, he may chance to do some good on her:
A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is.

[Enter Juliet.

Nurse. See, where she comes from shift with merry look.

Cap. How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding?

Jul. Where I have learn'd me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition
To you, and your betesests; and am enjoin'd
By holy Laurence to fall prostrate here, [Kneeling.
And beg your pardon.—Pardon, I beseech you:
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you.

Cap. Send for the County: go tell him of this.
I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.
Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence's cell;
And gave him what becoming' love I might,
Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am glad on 't; this is well,—stand up:
This is as 't should be.—Let me see the County:
Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither.

Now, afore God, this reverend holy friar,
All our whole city is much bound to him.

Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet,
To help me sort such needful ornaments
As you think fit to furnish me to-morrow?

La. Cap. No, not till Thursday: there is time enough.
Cap. Go, nurse, go with her.—We'll to church tomorrow.

[Exeunt Juliet and Nurse.

La. Cap. We shall be short in our provision:
'Tis now near night.

Cap. — Tush! I will stir about,
And all things shall be well, I warrant thee, wife.
Go thou to Juliet; help to deck up her:
I'll not to bed to-night:—let me alone;
I'll play the housewife for this once.—What ho!—
They are all forth: well, I will walk myself
To county Paris, to prepare him up
Against to-morrow. My heart is won'drous light,
Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—JULIET'S CHAMBER.

Enter Juliet and Nurse.

Jul. Ay, those attires are best;—but, gentle nurse,
I pray thee leave me to myself to-night;
For I have need of many orisons
To move the heavens to smile upon my state,
Which, well thou know'st, is cross and full of sin.

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What, are you busy, ho? need you my help?
Jul. No, madam; we have call'd such necessaries
As are behovely for our state to-morrow:
So please you, let me now be left alone,
And let the nurse this night sit up with you;
For, I am sure, you have your hands full all,
In this so sudden business.

La. Cap. Good night:
Get thee to bed, and rest; for thou hast need.

[Exeunt Lady Capulet and Nurse.

Jul. Farewell!—God knows when we shall meet again.
Laying down a Dagger.

What if it be a poison, which the friar
Subly hath minister'd to have me deed,
Lost in this marriage he should be dishonourd';
Because he married me before to Romeo?
I fear, it is; and yet, methinks, it should not,
For he hath still been tried a holy man:
I will not entertain so bad a thought.

How if, when I am laid into the tomb,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeem me? there's a fearful point.
Shall I not, then, be stifled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes?
Or, if I live, is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place—
As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where, for these many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd; Where bloody Tybalt, yet green in earth,
Lies festering in his shroud; where, as they say,
At some hours in the night spirits resort—
Alack, alack! is it not like, that I,
So early waking—what with loathsome smells,
And shrieks like mandrakes torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad;—
O! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,
Environed with all these hideous fears,
And madly play with my forefathers' joints,
And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud?
And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,
As with a club, dash out my desperate brains?
O, look! methinks, I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body
Upon a rapier's point.—Stay, Tybalt, stay!—
Romeo! Romeo! where's he?—I drink to thee.

[She throws herself on the bed.

SCENE IV.—CAPULET’S HALL.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Hold; take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.

Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd; The curfew bell hath rung; 'tis three o'clock.

Look to the bake'd meats, good Angelica: Spare not for cost.

Nurse. Go, go, you cot-queen, go.

Get you to bed: 'tis faith, you'll be sick to-morrow For this night's watching.

Cap. No, not a whit. What! I have watch'd ere now All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick.

La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt in your But I will watch you from such watching now. [Exit.

SCENE V.—JULIET’S CHAMBER; JU LiET ON THE BED.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Mistress! what, mistress!—Juliet!—fast, I warrant:—
Why, lamb!—why, lady!—fly, you slug-a-bed!—
Why, love, I say!—madam! sweet-heart!—why, bride!—
What! not a word!—You take your pennyworths now: Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant, The county Paris hath set up his rest, That you shall rest but little. God forgive me, Marry and amen, how sound is she asleep! I needs must wake her. —Madam, madam, madam! Ay, let the County take you in your bed: He'll fright you up, I know. Will it not be?— What, drest! and in your clothes! and down again! I must needs wake you. —Lady! lady! lady!— Alas! alas!—Help! help! my lady's dead!— O, well-a-day, that ever I was born!— Some aqua-vita, ho!—my lord! my lady!—

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What noise is here? Nurse. O lamentable day!—

La. Cap. What is the matter? Nurse. Look, look! O heavy day!—

La. Cap. O me! O me!—my child, my only life, Revive, look up, or I will die with thee!— Help, help!—call help.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. For shame! bring Juliet forth; her lord is come. Nurse. She's dead, dead, dead;—she's dead;—alack the day!—

La. Cap. Alack the day! she's dead, she's dead, she's dead.

Cap. Ha! let me see her.—Out, alas! she’s cold! Her blood is settled, and her joints are stiff; Life and these lips have long been separated: Death lies on her, like an untimely frost Upon the sweetest flower of all the field. Nurse. O lamentable day!—

La. Cap. O woful time!—

Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me rail, Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris, with Musicians.

Fri. Come, is the bride ready to go to church?
Cap. Ready to go, but never to return.—
O son! the night before thy wedding day
Hath death lain with thy wife: there she lies,
Flower as she was, deflowered by him.
Death is my son-in-law, death is my heir;
My daughter he hath wedded. I will die,
And leave him all: life, living, all is death's!
Par. Have I thought long to see this morning's face,?
And doth it give me such a sight as this?
La. Cap. Accurs'd, unhappy, wretched, hateful day!
Most miserable hour, that ever I saw.
In lasting labour of his pilgrimage!
But one, poor one, one poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight:—
Nurse. O woe, O woful, woful, woful day!
Most lamentable day! most woful day,
That ever, ever, I did yet behold!
O day! O day! O day! O hateful day!
Never was seen so black a day as this:—
O woful day, O woful day!
Par. Beguil'd, divorc'd, wrong'd, spited, slain!
Most detestable death, by thee beguil'd,
By cruel death the guest outright overthrown;
O love! O love!—not life, but love in death!
Cap. Despair'd, distress'd, hated, martyr'd, kill'd!
Uncomfortable time, why can't thou now
To murder, murder our solemnity?—
O child! O child!—my soul, and not my child!—
Dead art thou!—alack! my child is dead;
And with my child my joys are buried.
Fri. Peace, ho! for shame! confusion's curse lives not
In these confusions. Heaven and yourself
Had part in this fair maid, now heaven hath all;
And all the better is it for the maid:
Your part in her you could not keep from death,
But heaven keeps his part in eternal life.
The most you sought was her promotion.
For 'tis was your heaven she should be advance'd;
And weep ye now, seeing she is advance'd
Above the clouds, as high as heaven itself?
O! in this love you love your child so ill,
That you run mad, seeing that she is well;
She's not so well married that lives married long,
But she's best married that dies married young.
Dry up your tears, and stick your rosemary
On this fair corse: and, as the custom is,
In all her best array bear her to church;
For though fond nature bids us all lament,
Yet nature's tears are reason's mournment.
Cap. All things, that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral:
Our instruments to melancholy bells;
Our wedding cheer to a sad burial feast:
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corpse,
And all things change them to the contrary.
Fri. Sir, you go in.—and, madam, go with him;—
And go, sir Paris:—every one prepare
To follow this fair corse unto her grave.
The heavens do low'r upon you, for some ill;
Move them no more, by crossing their high will.
[Exeunt Capulet, Lady Capulet, Paris, and Friar.]
1 Mus. 1 Faith, we may put up our pipes, and be gone.
Nurse. Honest good fellows, ah! put up, put up;
for, well you know, this is a pitiful case. [Exit Nurse.
2 Mus. Ay; by my troth, the case may be amended.
Enter Peter.
Petr. Musicians, O, musicians! "Heart's ease?"
Heart's ease?" O! an you will have me live, play—
"Heart's ease?"

1 Mus. Why "Heart's ease?"
Petr. O, musicians! because my heart itself plays
"My heart is full of woe?" O! play me some merry dump, to comfort me.
2 Mus. Not a dump we: it is no time to play now.
Pet. You will not, then?
Mus. No.
Petr. I will, then, give it you soundly.
1 Mus. What will you give us?
Petr. No money is my faith; but the gleeke: I will give you the minstrel.
1 Mus. Then, will I give you the serving-creature.
Petr. Then, will I lay the serving-creature's dagger on your pate. I will carry no crotchets: I'll re you,
I'll fa you. Do you note me? [Drawing his Dagger.]
1 Mus. An you re us, and fa us, you note us.
2 Mus. Pray you, put up your dagger, and put out your wit.
Pet. Then have at you with my wit. I will dry-beat you with my iron wit, and put up my iron dagger.
—Answer me like men:

When gripping grief the heart doth wound, 12
And doleful dumps the mind oppress,
Then music, with her silver sound;

Why, "silver sound?" why, "music with her silver sound?"
What say you, Simon Cating? 1
1 Mus. Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.
Petr. Thou pratest! 1 —What say you, Hugh Rebeck? 2
2 Mus. I say "silver sound," because musicians sound for silver.
Petr. Thou pratest too!—What say you, James Soundpost? 3
3 Mus. 1 Faith, I know not what to say.
Petr. O! I cry you mercy; you are the singer: I will say for it. It is "music with her silver sound," because musicians have seldom gold for sounding:—
Then music with her silver sound.
With speedy help doth lend redress.

1 Mus. What a pestilent knife is this same.
2 Mus. Hang him, Jack! Come, we'll in here; tarry for the mourners, and stay dinner. [Exeunt.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Mantua. A Street.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering death of sleep,
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand. 3
My bosom's lord sits lightly in his throne;
And, all this day, an uncustom'd spirit
Lifts me above the ground with cherishing thoughts.
I dreamt, my lady came and took me dead;
(Strange dream! that gives a dead man leave to think)
And breath'd such life with kisses in my lips,
That I reviv'd, and was an emperor.
Ah me! how sweet is love itself possess'd; 4
When but love's shadows are so rich in joy?

Enter Balthasar.

News from Verona!—How now, Balthasar?
Dost thou not bring me letters from the friar? 1
How doth my lady? Is my father well? 2
How fares my Juliet? That I ask again;
For nothing can be ill if she be well. 3

Bal. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill:
Her body dwells, as Christ's monument,
And her immortal part with angels lives.
I saw her laid low in her kindred's vault,
And presently took post to tell it you.
O pardon me for bringing these ill news,
Since you did leave it for my office, sir.

Rom. Is it even so? then, I defy you, stars! 4
Thou know'st my lodging: get me ink and paper,
And hire post horses; I will hence to-night.

Bal. I do beseech you, sir, have patience:
Your looks are pale and wild, and do import
Some misadventure.

Rom. Tush! thou art deceiv'd:
Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee do.
Hast thou no letters to me from the friar?

Bal. No, my good lord.

Rom. No matter; get thee gone,
And hire those horses: I'll be with thee straight.

[Exit Balthasar.

Well, Juliet, I will lie with thee to-night.
Let's see for means:—O, mischief! thou art swift 5 to enter in the thoughts of desperate men.
I do remember an apothecary,
And hereabouts he dwells, which late I noted
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples; meagre were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones:
And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds,
Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses,
Were thinly scatter'd to make up a show.
Noting this penury, to myself I said,—
An if a man did need a poison now,

Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here lives a caitiff wretch would sell it him.
O! this same thought did but forerun my need,
And this same needy man must sell it me.
As I remember, this should be the house:
Being holiday, the beggar's shop is shut.—
What, ho! apothecary!

Enter Apothecary.

Ap. Who calls so loud?

Rom. Come hither, man.—I see, that thou art poor; 6
Hold, there is forty ducats: let me have
A draught of poison; such soon-speeding gear
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the life-weary taker may fall dead;
And that the trunk may be discharge'd of breath
As violently, as hasty powder fir'd
Doth hurry from the fatal cannon's womb.

Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness, 7
And fear'st to die? famine is in thy cheeks;
Need and oppression starve thee in thy eyes; 8
Contempt and beggary hang on thy back;
The world is not thy friend, nor the world's law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich;
Then, be not poor, but break it, and take this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.

[Exit and returns. 9

Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will.

Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will,
And drink it off: and, if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would despatch you straight.

Rom. There is thy gold; worse poison to men's souls,
Doing more murders in this loathsome world,
Than these poor compounds that thou may'st not sell:
I sell thee poison, thou hast sold me none.

Ap. Farewell; buy food, and get thyself in flesh.—
Come, cordial, and not poison, go with me.

To Juliet's grave, for there must I use thee.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar John.

John. Holy Franciscan friar! brother, ho!

Enter Friar Laurence.

Lau. This same should be the voice of friar John.—
Welcome from Mantua: what says Romeo?
Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter.

John. Going to find a bare-foot brother out,
One of our order, to associate me,
Here in this city visiting the sick,
And finding him, the searchers of the town,
Suspecting that we both were in a house
Where the infectious pestilence did reign,
Seal'd up the doors, and would not let us forth;
So that my speed to Mantua there was stay'd.

Lau. Who bare my letter, then, to Romeo?

1 truth: in f. e.: eye: in quarto, 1597. 2 good event to come: in quarto, 1597. 3 pleasant: in quarto, 1597. 4 This and the next line, not in quarto, 1597. 5 This line not in quarto, 1597. 6 doth my lady: in later quartos, and folio. 7 deny: in later quartos, and folio. 8 The quarto, 1597, reads: As I do remember. Here dwells a potheul in quarto, 1597. 9 here's twenty: in quarto, 1597. 10 poverty: in quarto, 1597. 11 The quarto, 1597, has in place of this, and next line: Upon thy back hang ragged misery, Him, as I noted, thus with myself I thought, An if a man should need a poison now, And whose present sale is death in Mantua, Here he might buy it. This thought of mine Did but forerun my need: and henceabout he dwells, Making holiday the beggar's shop is shut. What ho! apothecary! come forth, I say— Not in f. o.
John. I could not send it,—here it is again,—[Giving it.]
Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearful were they of infection.

Lau. Unhappy fortune! by my brotherhood,
The letter was not nice, but full of charge
Of dear import; and the neglecting it
May do much danger. Friar John, go hence;
Get me an iron crow; and bring it straight
Unto my cell.

John. Brother, I'll go and bring it.

Lau. Now must I to the monument alone.
Within this three hours will fair Juliet wake;
She will bestrew me much, that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents;
But I will write again to Mantua,
And keep her at my cell till Romeo come:
Poor living corse, clos'd in a dead man's tomb! [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Churchyard; in it the Monument of the Capulets.

Enter Paris, and his Page, bearing Flowers, and a Torch.

Par. Give me thy torch, boy: hence, and stand
Yet put it out, for I would not be seen.
[alooD;—

Under yond? yew-trees lay thee all along,
Holding thine ear close to the hollow ground;
So shall no foot upon the churchyard tread,
Being loose, unfirm with digging up of graves,
But thou shalt hear it: whistle then to me,
As signal that thou hear'st something approach.
Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee; go.

[Giving a basket.]

Page. I am almost afraid to stay alone
Here in the churchyard; yet I will adventure. [Retires.

Par. Sweet flower, with flowers thy bridal bed
O woe! thy canopy is dust and stones, [strew.

Which with sweet water nightly I will dew,
Or wanting that with tears distil'd by moans:
The obsequies, that for thee will keep,
Nightly shall be to strew thy grave and weep
[The Boy whistles.

The boy gives warning something doth approach.
What cursed foot wanders this way to-night,
To cross my obsequies, and true love's rite?
What! with a torch?—muffle me, night, a while.

[Retires.

Enter Romeo and Balthasar, with a Torch,
Mattock, &c.

Rom. Give me that mattock; and the wrenching iron.
Hold, take this letter: early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my lord and father.
Give me the light. Upon thy life I charge thee,
Whate'er thou hear'st or seest, stand all afoot,
And do not interrupt me in my course.
Why I descend into this bed of death
Is partly to behold my lady's face;
But chiefly to take thence from her dead finger
A precious ring, a ring that I must use
In dear employment. Therefore hence, be gone:
But if thou, jealous, dost return to pray
In what I farther shall intend to do,
By heaven, I will bear thee join'd by joint,
And strew this hungry churchyard with thy limbs.
The time and my intents are savage, wild;
More fierce, and more inexorable far,
Than empty tigers, or the roaring sea.

Bal. I will be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Rom. So shalt thou show me friendship.—Take thou that:

[Giving his Purse.]

Live, and be prosperous; and farewells, good fellow.

Bal. For all this same I'll hide me here about:
His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt.

[Exit.]

Rom. Thou detestable maw, thou womb of death,
Gorg'd with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open,

[Breaking open the Monument.]

And, in despite, I'll cram thee with more food!

Par. This is that banish'd haughty Montague,
That murder'd my love's cousin,—with which grief,
It is supposed, the fair creature died,—
And here is come to do some villainous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.

[Advancing.

Stop thy unhallow'd toil, vile Montague.
Can vengeance be purg'd farther than death?
Condemned villain, I do apprehend thee:
Obey, and go with me; for thou must die.

Rom. I must, indeed; and therefore came I hither.
Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man;
Fly hence and leave me:—think upon these gone;
Let them affright thee,—I beseech thee, youth,
Put not another sin upon my head,
By urging me to fury—O! be gone.
By heaven, I love thee better than myself;
For I come hither arm'd against myself.
Stay not, be gone;—live, and hereafter say,—
A madman's mercy bade thee run away.

Par. I do defy commiseration.

And apprehend thee for a felon here.

Rom. Will thou provoke me? then, have at thee, boy.
[They fight.

Page. O Lord! they fight: I will go call the watch.

[Exit Page.

Par. O! I am slain. [Falls.]—If thou be merciful,
Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet.

Dies.

Rom. In faith, I will.—Let me peruse this face:—
Mercutio's kinsman, noble county Paris!
What said my man when my betossed soul
Did not attend him as we rode? I think,
He told me, Paris should have married Juliet:
Said he not so? or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,
To think it was so?—O! give me thy hand, [Taking it.]

One writ with me in sour misfortune's book!
I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave,
A grave? O, no! a lantern, slaughter'd youth,
For here lies Juliet; and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death, lie thou there, by a dead man inter'd.

[Laying Paris in the Monument.]

How oft, when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry, which their keepers call
A lightning before death: O! how may I
Call this a lightning?—O! my love! my wife!

Accept this latest favour at my hands,
That living honours thee, and being dead,
With funeral praises do adorn thy tomb.

The next two lines, not in quarto, 1597.

The last three lines are not in quarto, 1597.

The quarto, 1597, has in place of this and the six following lines:
But I will satisfy thy last request,
For thou hast priz'd thy love above thy life.

43
Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty:
Thou art not punctured; but thy cheek is riven
In crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks.
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.—

Tybalt, liest thou there in this bloody sheet?
O! what more favour can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in twain,
To tender his that was thine enemy?
Forswear me, cousin!—Ah! dear Juliet,
Why art thou yet so fair? I will believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous;
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour.
For fear of that I still will stay with thee,
And never from this palace of dim night
Depart again: here, here will I remain
With worms that are thy chambermaids: O! here
Will I set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh—Eyes, look thy last
Arms, take thy last embrace; and lips, O! you,
The doors of breath, seal with a right kiss
A dateless bargain to engrossing death.—
Come, bitter combat, come, unsavoury guide!
Thou desperate pilot, now at once run on
The dashing rocks thy sea-sick weary bark.
Here's to my love!—[Drinks.] O, true apothecary!
Thy drugged quick.—Thus with a kiss I die.

Enter, at the other End of the Churchyard, Friar Laurence, with a Lantern, Crow, and Spade; and Balthasar following.

Fri. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft to-night
Have my old feet stumbled at graves?—Who's there?
Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well.
Fri. Bliss be upon you! Tell me, good my friend,
What torch is yond? that vainly lends his light
To grubs and eyeless skulls? as I discern,
It burneth in the Capulet's monument.
Bal. It doth so, holy sir; and there's my master,
One that you love.
Fri. Who is it?
Bal. Romeo.
Fri. How long hath he been there?
Bal. Full half an hour.
Fri. Go with me to the vault.
Bal. I dare not, sir.
My master knows not, but I am gone hence;
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents.
Fri. Stay, then, I'll go alone.—Fear comes upon me;
O! much I fear some ill unprofitable thing.
Bal. As I did sleep under this yew-tree here,
I dreamt my master and another fought,
And that my master slew him.
[Exit.

Fri. Alack! alack! what blood is this, which stains
The stony entrance of this sepulchre?—
What mean these masterless and gory swords
To lie discolor'd by this peace of peace!

[Entering the Monument.

Romeo! O, pale one!—Who else? what, Paris too?

And steep'd in blood?—Ah! what an unkind hour
Is guilty of this lamentable chance!—

The lady stirs.

Jul. O, most distasteful friar! where is my lord?
I do remember well where I should be.
And there I am. —Where is my Romeo?
[Noise within.

Fri. I hear some noise.—Lady, come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep.
A greater power than we can contradict
Hath thwarted our intents: come, come away.
Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;
And Paris too: come, I'll dispose of thee
Among a sisterhood of holy nuns.
Stay not to question, for the watch is coming.
Come, go, good Juliet. —[Noise again.] I dare no longer stay.

[Exit.

Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not a way.—
What's here? a cup, clo'd in my true love's hand?
Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end. —
O churl! drink all, and left no friendly drop,
To help me after?—I will kiss thy lips;
Haply, some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative.

[Kisses him.

Thy lips are warm!

1 Watch. [Within.] Lead, boy:—which way?
Jul. Yea, noise?—then I'll be brief,—O happy dag ger!
[Snatching Romeo's Dagger.

This is thy sheath; [Stabs himself] there rest, and let me die.

[Dies.

Fri. O Watch, with the Page of Paris.

Page. This is the place; there, where the torch doth burn.

1 Watch. The ground is bloody, search about the churchyard.

Go, some of you; whooe'er you find, attach. [Exeunt some.

Pitiful sight! here lies the County slain; —
And Juliet bleeding; warm, and newly dead,
Who here hath lain these two days buried.—
Go, tell the Prince,—run to the Capulets,—
Raise up the Montagues, some others search.

[Exeunt other Watchmen.

We see the ground whereon these woes do lie;
But the true ground of all these piteous woes
We cannot find without circumstance desery,

Enter some of the Watch, with Balthasar.

2 Watch. Here's Romeo's man; we found him in the churchyard.

1 Watch. Hold him in safety, till the Prince come hither.

Enter another Watchman, with Friar Laurence.

3 Watch. Here is a friar, that trembles, sighs, and weeps:
We took this mattock and this spade from him,
As he was coming from this churchyard side.

1 Watch. A great suspicion: stay the friar too.

Enter the Prince and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up?
That this our person from our morning rest

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and others.

Cap. What should it be, that they so shriek abroad?
La. Cap. O! the people in the street cry Romeo,
Some Juliet, and some Paris; and all run
With open outcry toward our monument.

Prince. What fear is this which startles in your ears?
SCENE III.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

1 Watch. Sovereign, here lies the county Paris slain; And Romeo dead; and Juliet, dead before, Warm and new kill'd.

Prince. Search, seek, and know how this foul murder comes.

1 Watch. Here is a friar, and slaughter'd Romeo's, With instruments upon them, fit to open These dead men's tombs.

Cap. O, heaven! — O, wife! look how our daughter bleeds!

This dagger hath mista'en,—for, by! his house Is empty on the back of Montague, And is mis-sheathed in my daughter's bosom.

La. Cap. O me! this sight of death is as a bell, That warns my old age to a sepulchre.

Enter MONTAGUE and others.

Prince. Come, Montague; for thou art early up, To see thy son and heir more early down. Mon. Alas, my liege, my wife is dead to-night; Grief of my son's exile has stopp'd her breath. What farther woe conspires against mine age?

Prince. Look, and thou shalt see.

Mon. O thou untaught! what manner is this, To press before thy father to a grave?

Prince. Seal up the mouth of outcry for a while, Till we can clear these ambiguities, And know their spring, their head, their true descent; And then will I be general of your woes, And lead you even to death. Mean time forbear, And let mischance be slave to patience.

Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to do least, Yet most suspected, as the time and place Do make against me, of this direful murder; And here I stand, both to impeach and purge Myself condemned, and myself excuse'd.

Prince. Then, say at once what thou dost know in this.

Fri. I will be brief, for my short date of breath Is not so long as in a tedious tale. Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet; And she, there dead, that Romeo's faithful wife: I married them; and their stolen marriage-day Was Tybalt's dooms-day, whose untimely death Banish'd the new-made bridegroom from this city; For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pin'd. You, to remove that siege of grief from her, Betróth'd, and would have married her perfume, To count'y Paris: then, comes she to me, And, with wild looks, bid me devise some means To rid her from this second marriage, Or in my cell there would she kill herself. Then gave I her, (so tutor'd by my art) A sleeping potion; which so took effect As I intended, for it wrou'th on her The form of death. Meantime, I write to Romeo, That he should hither come, as this dire night, To help to take her from her borrow'd grave, Being the time the potion's force should cease: But he which bore my letter, friar John, Was stay'd by accident, and yesternight Return'd my letter back. Then, all alone, At the prefixed hour of her waking, Came I to take her from her kindred's vault, Meaning to keep her closely at my cell, Till I conveniently could send to Romeo: But, when I came, (some minute ere the time Of her awakening) here unlaid she lay: The noble Paris, and true Romeo, dead. She waked; and I entreated her come forth, And bear this work of heaven with patience: But then a noise did scare me from the tomb, And she, too desperate, would not go with me, But (as it seems) did violent on herself. All this I know, and to the marriage Her nurse is privy; and, if aught in this Misscarried by my fault, let my old life Be sacrificed some hour before the time, Unto the rigour of severest law.

Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man.— Where's Romeo's man? what can he say in this?

Bal. I brought my master news of Juliet's death, And then in post he came from Mantua, To this same place, to this same monument. This letter he early bid me give his father; And threaten'd me with death, going in the vault, If I departed not, and left him there.

Prince. Give me the letter, I will look on it.— Where is the county's page, that rais'd the watch? Sirrah, what made your master in this place?

Page. He came with flowers to strew his lady's grave And bid me stand aloof; and so I did: Anon, comes one with light to ope the tomb, And, by and by, my master drew on him; And then I ran away to call the watch.

Prince. This letter deck'd up good the friar's words, Their course of love, the tidings of her death; And here he writes, that he did buy a poison Of a poor 'pothecary; and therewithal Came to this vault to die, and lie with Juliet,— Where be these enemies? Capulet! Montague! See, what a scourge is laid upon your hate, That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love; And I, for winking at your discords too, Have lost a brace of kinsmen;—all are punish'd. Cap. O, brother Montague! give me thy hand: This is my daughter's jointure; for no more [They shake hands.]

Can I demand.

Mon. But I can give thee more; For I will raise her statue in pure gold, That, while Verona by that name is known, There shall no figure at such rate be set, As that of fair* and faithful Juliet.

Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his lady lie; Poor sacrifices of our enmity.

Prince. A glooming* peace this morning with it brings, The sun for sorrow will not show his head. Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things; Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished: For never was a story of more woe, Than this of Juliet and her Romeo. [Exeunt.

1 Sheath. 2 And it is sheathed in our daughter's breast: in quarto, 1597. 3 The quarto, 1597, adds: And young Benvolio is deceased too. 4 outrage: in f. e. 5 In quarto, 1597: And let us seek to find the authors out Of such a heinous and self-seen mischance.

6 The quarto, 1597, has in place of this the next four lines: Where are these enemies? See what hate hath done! 7 Not in f. e. There shall no statue at such price be set, As that of Romeo and loved Juliet.

8 true: in f. e. 9 In quarto, 1597: Those shall no statue at such price be set, As that of Romeo and loved Juliet.

10 gloomy: in quarto, 1597.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athens. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several Doors.

Poet. Good day, sir.

Pain. I am glad you're well.

Poet. I have not seen you long. How goes the world?

Pain. It wears, sir, as it grows.

Poet. Ay, that's well known;

But what particular rarity? what strange,

Which manifold record not matches? See,

Magic of bounty! all these spirits thy power

Hath conjur'd to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. I know them both: th' other's a jeweller.

Mer. O! 'tis a worthy lord.

Jew. Nay, that's most fix'd.

Mer. A most incomparable man; breath'd, as it were,

To an untrammell and continue goodness:

He passes.*

Jew. I have a jewel here—[showing it.]

Mer. O! pray, let's see 't... For the lord Timon, sir?

Jew. If he will touch the estimate; but, for that—

Poet. "When we for recompense have praise'd the vile,

It stains the glory in that happy verse

Which aptly sings the good."*

Mer. 'Tis a good form.

Jew. And rich: here is a water, look ye.

Pain. You are rapt, sir; in some work, some dedication.

To the great lord.

Poet. A thing slipp'd idly from me.

Our poesy is as a gum,* which issues*

From whence 'tis nourish'd: the fire 'tis the flint

Shows not, till it be struck; our gentle flame

Of grave and austere quality) tender down
Their services to lord Timon: his large fortune,
Upon his good and gracious nature hanging,
Subdues, and properties to his love and tendance,
All sorts of hearts; yea, from the glass-faced flutterer
To Apemantus, that few things loves less
Than to abhor himself: even he drops down
The knee before him, and returns in peace.
Most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain. I saw them speak together.

Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill
Feign'd Fortune to be throw'd: the base of the mount
Is rank'd with all desert, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere
To propagate their states: amongst them all,
Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,
One do I personate of lord Timon's frame;
Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to her,
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals.

Pain. 'Tis conjectiv'd to scope.

This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy mount,
To climb his happiness, would be well express'd
In our condition.

Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on.

All those which were his fellows but of late,
(Some better than his value) on the moment
Follow his strides; his lobbies fill with tendance,
Ruin sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him
Drink the free air.

Pain. Ay, marry, what of these?

Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and change of mood,
Spurs down her late below'd, all his dependants,
Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top,
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'T is common:
A thousand moral paintings I can show,
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of Fortune's
More pregnantly than words. Yet you do well,
To show lord Timon that: mean eyes have seen
The foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter Timon, attended; the Servant of Ventidius talking with him.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?

Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord: five talents is his debt;
His means most short. His creditors most strict:
Your honourable letter he desires
To those have shut him up; which failing him,
Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius! Well;
I am not of that feather, to shake off
My friend when he most needs me. I do know him
A gentleman that well deserves a help,
Which he shall have. I'll pay the debt, and free him.

Tim. Commend me to him: I will send his ranson;
And, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me.—
'Tis not enough to help the fecile up.
But to support him after. — Fare you well.

Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honour!

[Exit.]

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I have so: what of him?

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the men before thee.

Tim. Attends he here, or no? — Lucilius!

Enter Lucilius.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service.[creature.

Old Ath. This fellow here, lord Timon, this thy
By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inflin'd to thrift,
And my estate deserves an heir, more rais'd
Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what farther?

Old Ath. One only daughter have I; no kin else,
On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love: I pray thee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:
His honesty rewards him in itself;
It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young, and apt:
Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity's in youth.

Tim. [To Lucilius.] Love you the maid?

Luc. Ay, my good lord; and she accepts of it.

Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing,
I call the gods to witness, I will choose
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd,
If she be mated with an equal husband?

Old Ath. Three talents on the present; in future all.

Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me long:
To build his fortune I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter;
What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,
And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,
Pawm to this your honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise.

Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship. Never may
That state or fortune fall into my keeping;
Which is not ow'd to you!

[Exit Lucilius and old Athenian.

Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship.

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon:
Go not away. — What have you there, my friend?

Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech
Your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.
The painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour traffics with man's nature,
He is but outside: these pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work,
And you shall find, I like it: wait attendance
Till you hear farther from me.

Pain. The gods preserve you!

Tim. Well fare you, gentleman: give me your hand;
We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel
Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jew. What, my lord, dispraise?

Tim. A mere satiety of commendations.
If I should pay you for 't as 'tis extoll'd,
It would uncease me quite.

Jew. My lord, 'tis rated
As those which sell would give: but you well know,
Things of like value, differing in the owners, Are prized by their masters. Believe 't, dear lord, You mend the jewel by the wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd.

Mer. No, my good lord; he speaks the common Which all men speak with him. [tongue,
Tim. Look, who comes here. Will you be chid?

Enter Apemantus.

Jew. We'll bear, with your lordship.

Mer. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus.

Apem. Till I be gentle, stay thou for thy good morrow; when thou art Timon's dog, and these knives honest.

Tim. Why dost thou call them knives? thou know'st them not.

Apem. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Apem. Then I repent not.

Jew. You know me, Apemantus.

Apem. Thou know'st, I do; I call'd thee by thy name.

Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.

Apem. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like
Timon.

Tim. Whither art going?

Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.

Tim. That's a deed thou 't d lie for.

Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.

Tim. How likes thou this picture, Apemantus?

Apem. The best, for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it?

Apem. He wrought better that made the painter; and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Pain. Y' are a dog.

Apem. Thy mother's of my generation: what's she, if I be a dog?

Tim. Will dine with me, Apemantus?

Apem. No; I eat not lords.

Tim. An thou should'st, thou 'd'st anger ladies.

Apem. O! they eat lords; so they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.

Apem. So thou apprehend'st it. Take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?

Apem. Not so well as plain-dealing, which will not cost a man a doit.

Tim. What dost thou think 't is worth?

Apem. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet!

Poet. How now, philosopher!

Apem. Thou liest.

Poet. Art not one?

Apem. Yes.

Poet. Then, I lie not.

Apem. Art not a poet?

Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then, thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd; he is so.

Apem. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour: he that loves to be flattered is worthy o' the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What wouldst do then, Apemantus?

Apem. Even as Apemantus does now; hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Wherefore?

Apem. That I had so hungry a wish: to be a lord.—

Art not thou a merchant?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.

[Exeunt Apemantus and Servants.

Tim. What trumpet's that?

Serv. 'T is Alcibiades, and some twenty horse, all of companionship.

Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us.—

[Exeunt some Attendants.

You must needs dine with me.—Go not you hence, Till I have thank'd you; and when dinner's done Show me this piece— I am joyful of your sights.—

Enter Alcibiades, with his Company.

Most welcome, sir!

Apem. So, so, there.—

Aches contract and starve your supple joints!—

That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet knives,

And all this courtesy. The strain of man's bred out

Into baboon and monkey.

Alcib. Sir, you have sav'd my longid, and I feel

Most hungrily on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome, sir; Ere we depart, we'll share a bountious time

In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.

[Exeunt all but Apemantus.

Enter two Lords.

1 Lord. What time o' day is 't, Apemantus?

Apem. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still.

Apem. The more accru'd thou, that still omit'st it.

2 Lord. Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.

Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knives, and wine heat fools.

2 Lord. Pare thee well; fare thee well.

Apem. Thou art a fool to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1 Lord. Hang thyself.

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding: make thy requests to thy friend.

2 Lord. Away, unappeasable dog, or I'll spurn thee hence.

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the ass. [Exit

1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in,

And taste lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes

The very heart of kindness.

2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of gold,

Is but his steward: no meed but he repays

Sevenfold above itself: no gift to him,

But breeds the giver a return exceeding

All use of quittance.

1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries,

That ever govern'd man.

2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?

1 Lord. I'll keep you company. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room of State in Timon's House.

Hautboys playing loud Music. A great banquet served in; Flavius and others attending: then, enter Timon, Alcibiades, Lucius, Lucullus, Sempronius, and other Athenian Senators, with VentiVius, whom Timon redeemed from prison, and Attendants: then comes, dropping after all, Apemantus, discontentedly, like himself.

Ven. Most honour'd Timon, it hath please'd the gods to remember
My father's age, and call him to long peace.
He is gone happy, and last left me rich:
Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound
To your free heart, I do return these talents,
Doubled with thanks and service, from whose help
I deriv'd liberty.

Tim.
O! by no means,
Honest Ventidius: you mistake my love.
I gave it freely ever; and there's none
Can truly say, he gives, if he receives.
If our betters play at that game, we must not dare
To imitate them: faults that are rich are fair.

Ven.
A noble spirit!

Tim.
Nay, my lords,
Ceremony was but devil'sd at first,
To set a gloss on a faulted deeds, hollow welcomes.
Receiving goodness, sorry cre 't is shown;
But where there is true friendship, there needs none.
Pray, sit: more welcome are ye to my fortunes,
Than my fortunes to me.

[They sit.]

1 Lord.
My lord, we always have confessed it.

Apen.
Ho, ho! confess'd it? hang'd it, have you not?

Tim.
O, Apenantus!—you are welcome.

Apen.
No, you shall not make me welcome:
I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim.
Fie! thou 't a churl! you have got a humour
Does not become a man: 't is much to blame.—
They say, my lords, in juv'or brevis est,
But yond' man is ever' angry,
Go, let him have a table by himself;
For he does neither affect company,
Nor is he fit for 't, indeed.

Apen.
Let me stay at thine apperil, Timon:
I come to observe: I give thee warning on't.

Tim.
I take no heed of thee; thou art an Athenian, therefore, welcome. I myself would have no power; pr'ythee, let my meat make thee silent.

Apen.
I scorn thy meat; 't would choke me, for I should never flatter thee.—O you gods! what a number of men eat Timon, and he sees them not! It grieves me, to see so many dip their meat in one man's blood; and all the madness is, he cheers them up too.
I wonder, men dare trust themselves with men:
Methinks he should invite them without knives,
Good for their meat, and safer for their lives.
There's much example for't; the fellow, that sits next him now, parts bread with him, and pledges the breath of him in a divided draught, is the readiest man to kill him; it has been proved. If I were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals,
Lest they should spy my windpipe's dangerous notes:
Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

Tim.
My lord, in heart; and let the health go round.

2 Lord.
Let it flow this way, my good lord.

Apen.
Flow this way? A brave fellow!—he keeps his tides well.—Those healths will make thee and thy state look ill, Timon.
Here's that, which is too weak to be a fire,
Honest water, which ne'er left man i' the mire:
This and my food are equals, there's no odd;
Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

Apenantus' Grace.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man, but myself.
Grant I may never prove so fond,
To trust man on his oath or bond:
Or a harlot for her weeping;
Or a dog that seems a sleeping;

Or a keeper with my freedom;
Or my friends, if I should need 'em.
Amen. So fall to 't:
Rich men sin, and I eat root.

[Eats and drinks.

Much good do't thy good heart, Apenantus!

Tim.
Captain Alebiades, your heart's in the field now.

Alicib.
My heart is ever at your service, my lord.

Tim.
You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies,
than a dinner of friends.

Alicib.
So they were bleeding new, my lord, there's no meat like 'em: I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apen.
Would all those flatterers were thine enemies then, that then thou mightst kill 'em, and bid me to 'em.

1 Lord.
Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeal, we should think ourselves for ever perfect.

Tim.
O! no doubt, my good friends; but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you: how had you been my friends else? why have you that charitable title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart? I have told more of you to myself, than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf; and thus far I confirm you. O, you gods! think I, what need we have any friends, if we should need! no need of 'em? they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne'er have use for 'em; and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you.
We are born to do benefic; and what better or properer can we call our own, than the riches of our friends? O! what a precious comfort 't is, to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes.

Apen.
Thou weep'st to make them drink, Timon.

2 Lord.
Joy had the like conception in our eyes,
And at that instant, like a babe, sprung up.

Apen.
Ho, ho! I laugh to think that babe a bastard.

3 Lord.
I promise you, my lord, you mov'd me much.

Apen.
Much!

[Trump sounded.

Tim.
What means that trump?—How now!

Enter a Servant.

Serv.
Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of adittance.

Tim.
Ladies! What are their wills?

Serv.
There comes with them a forerunner, my lord,
which bears that office to signify their pleasures.

Tim.
I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid.

Cup.
Hail to thee, worthy Timon; and to all
That of his bounties taste!—in five best senses,
Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely
To gratulate thy plentiful bosom.
The ear,
Taste, touch, smell, pleads from thy table rise;
They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim.
They're welcome all. Let them have kind adittance;

Music, make their welcome.

[Exit Cupid.

1 Lord.
You see, my lord, how amply y' are belov'd,
Music.
Re-enter Cupid, with a mask of Ladies as Amazons, with Lutes in their Hands, dancing, and playing.
Apem. Hey day! what a sweep of vanity comes this way!
They dance: they are mad women.
Like madness is the glory of this life,
As this pomp shows to a little oil, and root.
We make ourselves fools, to distroy ourselves;
And spend our flatteries, to drink those men,
Upon whose age we void it up again,
With poisonous spite, and envy.
Who lives, that's not depraved, or depraves?
Who dies, that bears not one spurn to their graces
Of their friends' gift?
I should fear, those, that dance before me now,
Would one day stamp upon me: 't has been done.
Men shut their doors against the setting sun.
The Lords rise from Table, with much adoring of Timon; and, to show their loves, each single out an Amazon, and all dancer. Men with Women, a lofty Strain or two to the Hautboys, and cease.
Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies.
Set a fair fashion on our entertainment,
Which was not half so beautiful and kind:
You have added worth unto 't, and lustre,
And entertain'd me with mine own device;
I am to thank you for it.
1 Lady. My lord, you take us ever at the best.
Apem. 'T is true, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me.
Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet
Attends you: please you to dispose yourselves.
All Lad. Most thankfully, my lord.
[Exeunt Cupid and Ladies.
Tim. Flavius!
Flav. My lord.
Tim. The little casket bring me lither.
Flav. Yes, my lord. [Aside.] More jewels yet!
There is no crossing him in his humour;
Else I should tell him,-well,-I faith, I should,
When all 's spent he'd be cross'd then: and he could,
'T is pity bounty had not eyes behind,
That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind.
[Exit, and returns with the Casket.

1 Lord. Where be our men?
Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness.
2 Lord. Our horses!
Tim. O, my friends!
I have one word to say to you. Look you, my good lord,
I must entreat you, honour me so much,
As to advance this jewel; accept it and wear it,
Kind my lord.
1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts.—
All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.
Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate newly alighted, and come to visit you.
Tim. They are fairly welcome.
Flav. I beseech your honour, Vouchsafe a word: it does concern you near.
Tim. Near? why then another time I'll hear thee: I pr'ythee, let 's be provided to show them entertainment.
Flav. I scarce know how. [Aside.

Enter another Servant.
2 Serv. May it please your honour, lord Lucius,
Out of his free love, hath presented to you
Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.
Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents
Enter a third Servant.
Be worthily entertain'd. — How now! what news?

Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.
Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be receiv'd,
Not without fair reward.
Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to?
He commands us to provide, and give great gifts,
And all out of an empty coffer:
Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this,
To show him what a beggar his heart is,
Being of no power to make his wishes good.
His promises fly so beyond his state,
That what he speaks is all in debt; he owes
For every word: he is so kind, that he now
Pays interest for 't; his land's put to their books.
Well, would I were gently put out of office,
Before I were for'd out!
Happier is he that has no friend to feed
Than such as do even enemies exceed.
I bleed inwardly for my lord. [Exit.
Tim. You do yourselves
Much wrong: you bafe too much of your own merits.
Here, my lord, a trifle of our love.
2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.
3 Lord. O! he's the very soul of bounty.
Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you gave Good words the other day of a bay courser
I rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it.
2 Lord. O! I beseech you, pardon me! my lord, in that.
Tim. You may take my word, my lord: I know no man
Can justly praise, but what he does affect:
I weigh my friend's affection with mine own;
I'll tell you true. I'll call to you.
All Lords. O! none so welcome.
Tim. I take all, and your several visitations,
So kind to heart, 't is not enough to give:
Methinks, I could deal kingdoms to my friends,
And ne'er be weary.—Alcibiades,
Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich:
It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living
Is 'mongst the dead, and all the lands thou hast
Lie in a pitch'd field.
Alcibiades. Ay, des't land, my lord.
1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,—
Tim. And so
Am I to you.
2 Lord. So infinitely esteem'd,—
Tim. All to you.—Lights! more lights!
1 Lord. The best of happiness, Honour, and fortunes, keep with you, lord Timon.
Tim. Ready for his friends.

[Exeunt Alcibiades, Lords, &c.
Apem. What a coil's he here!
Serving of backs, and jettting out of bums!
I doubt whether their legs be worth the sums
That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of dreggs:
Methinks, false hearts should never have sound legs.
Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on court'sies.
Tim. Now, Apemansius, if thou wert not sullen,
I'd be good to thee.
Apem. No, I'll nothing: for if I should be brib'd too, there would be none left to rail upon thee, and then thou wouldest sin the faster. Thou giv'st so long, Timon, I fear me, thou wilt give away thyself in paper shortly: what need these feasts, pomp's, and vain glories?
TIMON OF ATHENS.

ACT II.

SCENE I. — The Same. A Room in a Senator's House.

Enter a Senator, with Papers in his Hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand to Varro; and to Isidore he owes nine thousand, besides my former sum, Which makes it five-and-twenty — Still in motion Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not. If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog, And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold: If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon; Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me straight! A stable o' horses. — But rather one that smiles, and still invites All that pass by. — It cannot hold; no reason Can sound his state in safety. Caphis, ho! Caphis, I say!

Enter Caphis.

Caph. Here, sir: what is your pleasure?

Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to lord Timon: Importune him for my moneys; be not ease'd With slight denial; nor then silence'd, when — "Command me to your master" — and the cap Plays in the right hand, thus: — but tell him, sirrah, My usage cry to me. I must serve my turn Out of mine own, his days and times are past, And my reliances on his fracted dates Have smit my credit. I love, and honour him, But must not break my back to heal his finger. Immediate are my needs; and my relief Must not be tos'd and turn'd to me in words, But find supply immediate. Get you gone: Put on a most importunate aspect, A visage of demand; for, do I fear, When every feather sticks in his own wing, Lord Timon will be left a naked gull, Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, sir.

Sen. Ay, go, sir. — Take the bonds along with you, And have the dates in compt. I will, sir.

Sen. Go. [Exeunt."

SCENE II. — The Same. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter Flavius, with many Bills in his Hand.

Flavius. No care, no stop: so senseless of expense, That he will neither know how to maintain it, Nor cease his flow of riot; takes no account How things go from him; no reserve; no care Of what is to continue. Never mind Was surely so unwise, to be so kind. What shall be done? He will not hear, till feel. I must be round: with him, now he comes from hunting. Fie, fie, fie, fie!

Enter Caphis, and the Servants of Isidore and Varro.

Caph. Good even, Varro. What! You come for money?

Var. Serv. Is't not your business too?

Caph. It is. — And yours too, Isidore?

Isid. Serv.

Caph. Would we were all discharge'd!

Var. Serv.

Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter Timon, Alcibiades, and Lords, &c., as from hunting.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth again, My Alcibiades. — With me! what is your will? Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues. Tim. Dues! Whence are you?

Caph. Of Athens here, my lord.

Tim. Go to my steward.

Var. Serv. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off To the succession of new days this month: My master is awak'd by great occasion To call upon his own, and humbly prays you, That with your other noble parts you'll suit, In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend, I pr'ythee, but repair to me next morning.

Caph. Nay, my good lord,—

Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.

Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, good my lord,—

Isid. Serv. From Isidore:—

Caph. He humbly prays your speedy payment,

Var. Serv. 'T was due on forfeitence, my lord, six weeks, And past,—

Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my lord; And I am sent expressly to your lordship.

Tim. Give me breath.—

Caph. I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on;

[Exit Alcibiades and Lords.

Tim. I'll wait upon you instantly. — Come hither: pray you, [To Flavius. How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd With clamorous demands of debt, broken bonds, And the detention of long-since-due debts, Against my honour?

Flav. Please you, gentlemen, The time is unagreeable to this business: Your importunacy cease till after dinner, That I may make his lordship understand Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. See them well entertain'd.

[Exit Timon.

Flav. Pray, draw near. [Exit Flavius.

Enter Apeamantus and a Fool.

Caph. Stay, stay; here comes the fool with Apeamantus: let's have some sport with 'em.

Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Isid. Serv. A plague upon him, dog!

Var. Serv. How dost, fool?

Apeam. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?

1 Come: in folio. Theobald made the change. 2 nor resumes no care, &c.: in f. e. 3 Was to be so unwise: in f. e. 4 Plains 5 The rest of this stage direction, is not in f. e. 6 Malone changes to "date-broken."
Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.

Apm. No; 'tis to myself.—Come away. [To the Fool.

Asid. Serv. [To Var. Serv.] There's the fool hangs on your back already.

Apm. No, thou stand'st single; thou'rt not on him yet.

Ceph. Where's the fool now?

Apm. He last asked the question.—Poor rogues, and usurers' men; bawds between gold and want.

All Serv. What are we, Apmantus?

Apm. Asses.

All Serv. Why?

Apm. Thanks, you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to 'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All Serv. Gramercies, good fool. How does your mistress?

Fool. She's c'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. Would, we could see you at Corinth!

Apm. Good; gramercy.

[Enter Page.

Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain! what do you in this wise company?—How dost thou, Apmantus?

Apm. Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Pr'ythee, Apmantus, read me the superscription of these letters: I know not which is which.

Apm. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Apm. There will little learning die, then, that day thou art hanged. This is to lord Timon; this to Alebiades. Go; thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelped a dog; and thou shalt famish, a dog's death. Answer not; I am gone.

Apm. Even so thou out-run'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apm. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three usurers?

All Serv. I would they served us.

Apm. So would I;—as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his servant: my mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merry, and go away sadly. The reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

Apm. Do it, then, that we may account thee a whoremaster, and a knave; which notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee.

'Tis a spirit: sometime, it appears like a lord; sometime like a lawyer; sometime like a philosopher, with two stones more than his artificial one. He is very often like a knight; and generally in all shapes, that man goes up and down in from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Apm. That answer might have become Apmantus

All Serv. Aside, aside: here comes lord Timon.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Apm. Come, with me, fool; come.

Fool. I do not always follow lover, elder brother, and woman; sometime, the philosopher.

[Exeunt Apmantus, and Fool after him.

Flav. Pray you, walk near: I'll speak with you anon.

[Exeunt Serv.

Tim. You make me marvel. Wherefore, ere this time, Had you not fully laid my state before me,
That I might so have railed my expense
As I had leave of means?

Flav. You would not hear me:

At many pleasures I propos'd.

Tim. Go to:

Perchance, some single vantages you took,
When my indisposition put you back;
And that unaptness made you minister,
Thus to excuse yourself.

Flav. O, my good lord!

At many times I brought in my accounts,
Laid them before you: you would throw them off,
And say, you found them in mine honesty.
When for some trifling present you have bid me
Return so much, I have shook my head, and wept;
Yea, 'gainst the authority of manners, pray'd you
To hold your hand more close: I did endure
Not seldom, nor no slight checks, when I have Prompted you, in the ebb of your estate,
And your great flow of debts. 'My loved lord,
Though you hear now, yet now's a time too late,
The greatest of your having lacks a half
To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold.

Flav. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and gone;
And what remains will hardly stop the mouth
Of present dues. The future comes apace;
What shall defend the interim? and at length
How goes our reckoning?

Tim. To Laederon did my land extend.

Flav. O, my good lord! the world is but a word;
Were it all yours to give it in a breath,
How quickly were it gone?

Tim. You tell me true.

Flav. If you suspect my husbandry, or falsehood,
Call me before th' exactest auditors,
And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me,
When all our offices have been oppress'd
With riotous feeders; when our vaults have wept
With drunken spilt of wine; when every room
Hath blaze'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy,
I have retir'd me to a wasteful nook,*
And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Pr'ythee, no more.

Flav. Heavens, have I said; the bounty of this lord!
How many prodigal bits have slaves, and peasants,
This night engulfed! Who is not Timon's?

What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is lord Timon's,
Great Timon's, noble, worthy, royal Timon's?
Ah! when the means are gone that buy this praise,
The breath is gone whereof this praise is made:
Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter showers,
These flies are couch'd.

Tim. Come, sermon me no farther.

No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart;
Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given
Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack,
To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart,
If I would broach the vessels of my love,
And try the argument of hearts by borrowing,
Men, and men's fortunes, could I frankly use,
As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless thy thoughts!
Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd,
That I account them blessings; for by these Shall I try friends. You shall perceive how you
Mistake my fortunes: I am wealthy in my friends.
Within there!—Flaminius! Servilius!

Enter Flaminius, Servilius, and other Servants.
Serv. My lord, my lord,—
Tim. I will despatch you severally—You, to lord Lucius;—to lord Lucullus you; I hunted with his honour to-day,—you, to Scpronius. Commend me to their loves; and, I am proud, say, that my occasions have found time to use them toward a supply of money: let the request be fifty talents.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.
Flav. Lord Lucius, and Lucullus? humph!
Tim. Go you, sir, [To another Serv.] to the senators,
(Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserv'd this hearing) bid 'em send o' the instant
A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold,
(For that I knew it the most general way)
To them to use your signet, and your name;
But they make their heads, and I am here
No richer in return.

Tim. Is't true? can't be?
Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at full, want treasure, cannot Do what they would; are sorry—you are honourable,—
But yet they could have wished— they know not—
Something hath been amiss: a noble nature
May catch a wrench—would all were well—'tis pity.
And so, intending other serious matters,
After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions,
With certain half-caps, and cold-moving nods,
They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them!—
Pr'ythee, man, look cheerly; these old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary:
Their blood is eak'd, 'tis cold, it seldom flows;
'T is lack of kindly warmth they are not kind.
And nature, as it grows again toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull, and heavy.

Go to Ventidius,—[To a Serv.] 'Pr'ythee, [To Flavius,] be not sad;
Thou art true, and honest: ingeniously! I speak,
No blame belongs to thee.—[To Serv.] Ventidius lately
Buried his father; by whose death, he's stepp'd
Into a great estate: when he was poor,
Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends,
I clear'd him with five talents: greet him from me;
Bid him suppose some good necessity
Touche his friend, which craves to be remember'd
With these five talents:—that had, [To Flam.] give it these follows
To whom 't is instant due. Ne'er speak, or think,
That Timon's fortunes 'mong his friends can sink.

Flav. I would, I could not think it; that thought is bounty's foe:
Being free itself, it thinks all others so. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in Lucullus's House.

Flaminus waiting. Enter a Servant to him.
Serv. I have told my lord of you; he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir. Enter Lucullus.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucul. [Aside.] One of lord Timon's men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver basin and euer to-night.—Flaminius, honest Flaminius, you are very respectfully welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine.—[Exit Servant.] And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master?

Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well, sir.
And what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. 'Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir, which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him, nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucul. La, la, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he; alas, good lord! a noble gentleman is it, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I have dined with him, and told him on't; and come again to supper to him, to persuade him to have him spend less, and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his: I have told him on't, but I could ne'er get him from it.

Re-enter Servant with Wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.

Lucul. Flaminius, I have noted thee always wise. Here's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Lucul. I have observed thee always for a towardly prompt spirit,—give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason; and cannot use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah.—[To the Servant, who exits.]—Draw nearer, honest Flaminus. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman; but thou art wise, and thou knowest well enough, although thou commend to me, that this is no time to lend money, especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidares for thee; good boy, wink at me, and say, thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. [Giving money.]

Flam. Is't possible, the world should so much differ,
And we alive that liv'd? Fly, dammed baselesses,
To him that worships thee. [Throwing the money away.

Lucul. Ha! now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy master.

[Exit Lucullus.

Flam. May these add to the number that may scald thee!
Let molten coin be thy damnation,
Thou dysease of a friend, and not himself!{
Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turns in less than two nights? O you gods!
I feel my master's passion. This slave
Unto his humour has my lord's meat in him;
Why should it thrive, and turn to nutriment,
When he is turn'd to poison?
O! may diseases only work upon't,
And, when he's sick to death, let not that part of nature,
Which my lord paid for, be of any power
To expel sickness, but prolong his hour!  [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Public Place.

Enter Lucius, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who? the lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.
1 Str. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumours;
now lord Timon's happy hours are done and past,
and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fie! no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

2 Str. But believe you this, my lord, that not long ago one of his men was with the lord Lucullus, to borrow so many talents; nay, urged extremely for't, and showed what necessity belonged to't, and yet was denied.

Luc. How?

2 Str. I tell you, denied, my lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that! now, before the gods, I am ashamed on't. Denied that honourable man? there was very little honour showed in't. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his;
yet, had he mistook him, and sent to me, I should
'ne'er have denied his occasion so many talents.

Enter Servilius.

Ser. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord; I have sweat to see his honour.—My honoured lord.

[To Lucius.

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well: commend me to thy honourable-virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Ser. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent—
I know not what has he sent? I am so much exhorted to that lord, he's ever sending: how shall I thank him, thinnest thou? And what has he sent now?

Ser. He has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with five hundred talents.1

Luc. I know, his lordship is but merry with me:
He cannot want five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the mean time he wants less, my lord.
If his occasion were not virtuous,
I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Ser. Upon my soul, 'tis true, sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I, to disturbish mys-self with that sort of time, when I might have shown myself honourable! how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part,
and undo a great deal of honour!—Servilius, now before the gods, I am not able to do; the more beast I, say.—I was sending to use lord Timon myself, these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done it now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship; and I hope, his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no

1 with so many talents: in f. o.  2 spirit: in f. e; changed from "sport," of the folio.  3 Thrive: in folio. Johnson made the change.
I’d such a courage to do him good. But now return, And with their faint reply this answer join; Who bates mine honour shall not know my coin. [Exit. Serv. Excellent! Your lordship’s a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did, when he made man politic; he crossed himself by’t; and I cannot think, but, in the end, the villainies of man will set him clear. How fairly this lord strives to appear foul? takes virtuous copies to be wicked; like those that, under hot ardent zeal, would set whole realms on fire. Of such a nature is his politic love. This was my lord’s best hope; now all are fled, Save only the gods. Now his friends are dead, Doors, that were ne’er acquainted with their wards Many a bounteous year, must be employ’d To guard now their master: And this is all a liberal course allows; Who cannot keep his wealth must keep his house. [Exit. SCENE IV.—The Same. A Hall in Timon’s House. Enter two Servants of Varro, and the Servant of Lucius, meeting Titus, Hortensius, and other Servants to Timon’s Creditors, waiting his coming out. Var. Serv. Well met; good-morrow, Titus and Hortensius. Tit. The like to you, kind Varro. Luc. What, do we meet together? Luc. Serv. Ay, and I think, One business does command us all, for mine Is money. Tit. So is theirs, and ours, Enter Philorus. Phil. Good day at once. Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother. What do you think the hour? Phi. Labouring for mine. Luc. Serv. So much? Phi. Is not my lord seen yet? Luc. Serv. Not yet. Phi. I wonder on’t: he was wont to shine at seven. Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed shorter with him: You must consider, that a prodigal course Is like the sun’s; but not, like his, recoverable. I fear ’t is deepest winter in Lord Timon’s purse; That is, one may reach deep enough, and yet Find little. Phi. I am of your fear for that. Tit. I’ll show you how ’t observe a strange event. Your lord sends now for money. Hor. Most true, he does. Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon’s gift, For which I wait for money. Hor. It is against my heart. Luc. Serv. Mark, how strange it shows, Timon in this should pay more than he owes: And e’en as if your lord should wear rich jewels, And send for money for ’em. Hor. ’Tis weary winter this charge, the gods can witness: I know, my lord hath smart of Timon’s wealth, And now ingratitude makes it worse than stealth. 1 Var. Serv. Yes, mine’s three thousand crowns; what’s yours? Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine. 1 Var. Serv. ’Tis much deep: and it should seem by the sum, Your master’s confidence was above mine; Else, surely, his had equal’d. Enter Flaminius. Tit. One of lord Timon’s men. Luc. Serv. Flaminius! Sir; a word. Pray, is my lord ready to come forth? Flam. No, indeed, he is not. Tit. We attend his lordship: pray, signify so much. Flam. I need not tell him that; he knows you, are you too diligent. [Exit FLAMINUS, Enter FLAVIUS in a Clock, muffled. Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his Steward muffled so? He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him. Tit. Do you hear, sir? 1 Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,— Flav. What do you ask of me, my friend? Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir. Flav. Ay, if money were as certain as your waiting, It were sure enough. Why then prefer’d you not Your sums and bills, when your false masters ate Of my lord’s meat? Then, they could smile, and fawn Upon his debts, and take down the interest Into their glutinous maws. You do yourselves but wrong. To stir me up; let me pass quietly: Believe ‘t, my lord and I have made an end: I have no more to reckon, he to spend. Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve. Flav. If ’t will not serve, ’Tis not so base as you; for you serve knaves. [Exit 1 Var. Serv. How! what does his cashier’d worship matter? 2 Var. Serv. No matter what he’s poor, and that’s revenge enough. Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? such may rail against great buildings. Enter Servilius. Tit. O! here’s Servilius: now we shall know some answer. Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, to repair Some other hour, I should derive much from’t; for, take’t of my soul, my lord leaves wondrously to discontent. His comfortable temper has forsok’d him: he’s much out of health, and keeps his chamber. Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers, are not sick: And if he be so far beyond his health, Methinks, he should the sooner pay his debts, And make a clear way to the gods. Ser. Good gods! Tit. We cannot take this for an answer, sir. Flam. [Within.] Servilius, help!—my lord! my lord! Enter Timon in a rage; Flaminius, following. Tim. What! are my doors oppos’d against my passage? Have I been ever free, and must my house Be my retentive enemy, my goal? The place which I have feasted, does it now, Like all mankind, show me an iron heart? Luc. Serv. Put in now, Titus. Tit. My lord, here is my bill. Luc. Serv. Here’s mine. Hor. Serv. And mine, my lord. Both Var. Serv. And ours, my lord. Phi. All our bills. Tim. Knock me down with ’em; shape me to the girdle. 1 Luc. Serv. Alas! my lord,— Tim. Cut my heart in sums. Tit. Mine, fifty talents.
Tim. Tell out my blood.

Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand ducats pays that,— What yours? — and yours?

1 Var. Serv. My lord,—

2 Var. Serv. My lord.

Tim. Tear me, take me; and the gods fall upon you! [Exit.

Hor. Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money; these debts may well be called desperate ones. for a madman owes 'em. [Exit.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the slaves.

Creditor—devils!

Flav. My dear lord,—

Tim. What if it should be so?

Flav. My lord,—

Tim. I'll have it so,— my steward?

Flav. Here, my lord.

Tim. So fitly? Go, bid all my friends again, Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius; all: I'll once more feast the rascals.

Flav. O my lord!

You only speak from your distracted soul: There is not so much left to furnish out A moderate table.

Tim. Be't not in thy care: go, I charge thee; invite them all: let the tide Of knives once more; my cook and I'll provide.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The Same. The Senate-House.

The Senate sitting. Enter Alcibiades, attended.

1 Sen. My lord, you have my voice to 't: the fault's bloody; 't is necessary he should die.

Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

2 Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the senate!

1 Sen. Now, captain?

Alcib. I am an humble suitor to your virtues; For pity is the virtue of the law; And none but tyrants use it cruellly. It pleases time and fortune to lie heavy Upon a friend of mine; who, in hot blood, Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth To those that without heed do plunge into 't. He is a man, setting his fault aside, Of comely virtues: Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice; [An honour in which buys out his fault] But, with a noble fury, and fair spirit, Seeing his reputation touch'd to death, He did oppose his foe: And with such sober and unnoted passion He deprov'd his anger, ere 't was spent, As if he had but no more an argument.

1 Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox, Striving to make an ugly deed look fair: Your words have took such pains, as if they labour'd To bring manslaughter into form, and set quarrelling Upon the head of valour; which, indeed, Is valour misbegot, and came into the world When sees and factions were newly born. He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer The worst that man can breathe; and make his wrongs His outside; to wear them like his raiment, carelessly, Scene VI.

Timon of Athens. 687

'Tis in few words, but specious in effect:
We banish thee for ever.
Alec. Banish me! Banish your dotage, banish usury,
That makes the senate ugly.
1 Sen. If, after two days' shine Athens contain thee, Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell our spirit,
He shall be executed presently. [Exeunt Senators.
Alec. Now the gods keep you old enough; that you may live
Only in bone, that none may look on you.
I am worse than mad: I have kept back their foes,
While they have told their money, and let out
Their coin upon large interest; I myself,
Rich only in large hurts:—all those, for this?
Is the this balsam that the usurping senate
Pours into captives' wounds? Banishment!
It comes not ill; I hate not to be banish'd:
It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,
That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up
My discontented troops, and lay for hearts.
'Tis honour with most lands to be at odds;
Soldiers should brook as little wrongs as gods. [Exit.

ScENE VI.—A Banquet-hall in Timon's House.

Music. Tables set out: Servants attending. Enter diners Lords, at several Doors.

1 Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.
2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think, this honourable lord did but try us this other day.
1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts tiring, when we encountered: I hope, it is not so low with him, as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.
2 Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.
1 Lord. I should think so. He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.
2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my improp unate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.
1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.
2 Lord. Every man here's so. What would he have borrowed of you?
1 Lord. A thousand pieces.
2 Lord. A thousand pieces!
1 Lord. What of you?
3 Lord. He sent to me, sir.—Here he comes.
Enter Timon, and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both:—And how fear you?
1 Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.
2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willingly, than we your lordship.
Tim. [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter;
such summer-birds are men. [To them.] Gentlemen,
our dinner will not recompense this long stay; feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly o' the trumpet's sound; we shall to 't presently.
1 Lord. I hope, it remains not unkindly with your lordship, that I returned you an empty messenger.
Tim. O! sir, let it not trouble you.
2 Lord. My noble lord,—

Tim. Ah! my good friend, what cheer?
[The Banquet brought in.]

2 Lord. My most honourable lord, I am e'en sick of shame that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.
Tim. Think not on't, sir.
2 Lord. If you had sent but two hours before.—
Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance.
—Come, bring in all together. [To the Servants.]
2 Lord. All covered dishes!
1 Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.
3 Lord. Doubt not that, if money, and the season can yield it.
1 Lord. How do you? What's the news?
3 Lord. Alecibiades is banished: hear you it of?
1 & 2 Lord. Alecibiades banished!
3 Lord. 'Tis so; be sure of it.
1 Lord. How? how?
2 Lord. I pray you, upon what?
Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near?
3 Lord. I'll tell you more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.
2 Lord. This is the old man still.
3 Lord. Will 't hold? will 't hold?
2 Lord. It does; but time will show.
3 Lord. I do conceive.
Tim. Each man to his stool, with that spurr as he would to the lip of his mistress: your dict shall be in all places alike. Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place: sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

"You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts make yourselves praised, but reserve still to give, lest your deities be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another; for, were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be beloved, more than the man that gives it.
Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains: if there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozens of them be—as they are.—The rest of your foes, O gods! the senators of Athens, together with the common tag of people,—what is amiss in them, you gods make suitable for destruction. For these,
your present friends,—as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing are they welcome."
Uncover, dogs, and lap.
[The Dishes uncovered are full of warm water.

Some speak. What does his lordship mean?
Some other. I know not.
Tim. May you a better feast never behold,
You knot of mouth-friends! smoke, and luke-warm water
Is your perfection. This is Timon's last;
Who stuck and spangled you with flatteries,
Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces
[Throwing water in their faces;]
Your recking villainy. Live loath'd and long,
Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears;
You fools of fortune, trower-friends, time's flies,
Cap and knee slaves, vapours, and minute-jacks!
Of man, and beast, the infinite malady
Cruet you quite o'er!—What! dost thou go?
Soft, take thy physic first—thou too,—and thou:
[Throws the Dishes at them, and drives them out.
Stay, I will lend thee money, borrow none.—
What, all in motion? Henceforth be no feast,
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdlest in those wolves! Dive in the earth,
And fence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent;
Obdience fail in children! slaves, and fools,
Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench,
And minister in their steads! to general filth
Convert o' the instant green virginity!
Do 't in your parents' eyes. Bankrupts, hold fast;
Rather than render back, out with your knives,
And cut your trusters' throats! bound servants, steal!
Large-handed robbers your grave masters are,
And pill by law. Maid, to thy master's bed;
Thy mistress is o' the brothel! son of sixteen,
Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping sire,
With it beat out his brains! pitiful, and fear,
Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth,
Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries,
And let confusion live!—Plagues, incident to men,
Your potent and infectious fevers heap
On Athens, ripe for stroke! thou cold sciatrica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners! lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot! itch's, blains,
Sow all the Athenian bosoms, and their crop
Be general leprous! breath infect breath.
That their society, as their friendship, may
Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bear from thee,
But nakedness, thou detestable town.

[ Casting away his Clothes.]

Take thou that too, with multiplying bans.
Timon will to the woods; where he shall find
Th' unkindest beast more kind than mankind.
The gods confound (hear me, you good gods all)
The Athenians, both within and out that wall!
And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow
To the whole race of mankind, high, and low! Amen.

[Exit.]

Enter Flavius, with two or three Servants.

Flav. Alack! my fellows, what should I say to you?
Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,
Tim. I know thee too; and more, than that I know thee.
I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;
With man’s blood paint the ground, gules, gules:
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel,
Then what should war be? This fell whore of thine
Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look.

Phry. Thy lips rot off!
Tim. I will not kiss thee; then, the rot returns
To thine own lips again.

Alcib. How came the noble Timon to this change?
Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give;
But then, renew, I could not, like the moon;
There were no suns to borrow of.

Noble Timon,
What friendship may I do thee?

Tim. Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon?
Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none: if thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee, for thou art a man!

Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.
Tim. Thou saw’st them, when I had prosperity.

Alcib. I see them now; then was a blessed time.
Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of harlots.

Timan. Is this th’ Athenian minion, whom the world
Voiced so regardfully?

Art thou Timandra?

Timan. Yes.
Tim. Be a whore still! they love thee not, that use thee:
Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust.
Make use of thy salt hours; season the slaves
For tubs, and baths; bring down rose-checkered youth
To the tub* fast, and the diet.

Timan. Hang thee, monster!

Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra, for his wits
Are drown’d and lost in his calamities.
I have had but little gold of late, brave Timon,
The want whereof doth daily make revolt
In my penurious band; I have heard and grieved,
How cursed the black, white; how sweet;
Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them.—

Tim. I pr’ythee, beat thy drum, and get thee gone.
Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Timon.
Tim. How dost thou pity him, whom thou dost trouble?
I had rather be alone.

Alcib. Why, fare thee well:

Here is some gold for thee;

Tim. Keep it, I cannot eat it.

Alcib. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,—

Tim. Warr’st thou’gainst Athens?

Alcib. Ay Timon, and have cause.

Tim. The gods confound them all in thy conquest;
And thee after, when thou hast conquered:

Alcib. Why me, Timon, Tim.

That, by killing of villains,
Thou wast born to conquer my country.
Put up thy gold: go on,—here’s gold,—go on;
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o’er some high-vic’d city hang his poison
In the sick air: let not thy sword skip one.

Pity not honour’d age for his white beard;
He is an usurer. Strike me the counterfeit matron; It is her habit only that is honest; Herself's a bawd. Let not the virgin's cheek Make soft thy trenchant sword; for those milk-paps, That through the window-bars bore at men's eyes, Are not within the leaf of pity writ, But set them down horrible traitors. Spare not the babe, Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their mercy: Think it a bastard, whom the oracle Hath doubtfully pronounced thy throat shall cut, And mince it sans remorse; swear against abjures;² Put armour on thine ears, and on thine eyes, Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maidens, nor babes, Nor sight of priests, in holy vestments bleeding, Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers: [Throwing it.³

Make large confusion; and thy fury spent, Confounded be thyself! Speak not; be gone. Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou giv'st me, Not all thy counsel. Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, heaven's curse upon thee! Phr. & Timon. Give us some gold, good Timon: hast thou more? Tim. Enough to make a whore forswear her trade, And to make whores abhor'd.²² Hold up, you sluts, Your aprons mountant: you are not oathable,— Although I know, you'll swear, terribly swear, Into strong shanders, and to heavenly agues, The immortal gods that hear you,—spare your oaths, I'll trust to your conditions: be whores still; And he whose pious breath seeks to convert you, Be strong in where, allure him, burn him up; Let your close fire predominate his smoke, And be no turncoats. Yet may your pains, six months, Be quite contrary: and that thy poor thin roofs With burdens of the dead;—some that were hang'd, No matter:—wear them, betray with them: where still; Paint till a horse may mire upon your face: A box of wrinkled; Phr. & Timon. Well, more gold,—What then? Believe't, that we'll do any thing for gold. Tim. Consumptions sow In hollow bones of men; strike their sharp shins, And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's voice, That he may never more false title plead, Nor sound his quillets shrilly: hoar the flames, That scolds against the quality of flesh, And not believes himself: down with the nose, Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away Of him, that his particular to foresee, Smells from the general weal: make curl'd-pate running bald; And let the unscur'd braggers of the war Derive some pain from you. Plague all, That your activity may defeat and quell The source of all erection.—There's more gold: [Throwing it.⁴

Do you damn others, and let this damn you, And ditches grave you all! Phr. & Timon. More counsel with more money; bounteous Timon. Tim. More whoré, more mischief first: I have given you earnest. Alcib. Strike up the drum towards Athens! Farewell, Timon:

If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again. Tim. If I hope well, I'll never see thee more. Alcib. I never did thee harm. Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me. Alcib. Call'st thou that harm? Tim. Men daily find it. Get thee away, And take thy beagles with thee. Alcib. We but offend him. Strike!

[Drum beats. Exeunt Alcibiades, Phrynia, and Timandra. Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness, Should yet be hungry!—Common mother, thou, [Digging. Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast, Teems, and feeds all; whose self-same mettle, Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd, Engenders the black toad, and adder blue, The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm, With all the abhorred births below crisp heaven Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine; Yield him, who all the human sons doth hate, From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root! Ensear thy fertile and conception womb; Let it no more bring out ingratitude man! Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears; Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward face Hath to the marbled mansion all above Never presented!—O! a root—dear thanks! Dry up thy tame, and plough-torn leas; Whereof ingratitude man, with licentious drafts, And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind, That from it all consideration slips—.

Enter Apearithus. More man? Plague! plague! Aepm. I was directed hither: men report Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them. Tim. 'Tis, then, because thou dost not keep a dog Whom I would imitate. Consumption catch thee! Aepm. This is in thee a nature but infected; A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung From change of fortune.¹ Why this resolve? this place? This is a life, and love must have a lock of care? Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft, Hug their disease'd perfumes, and have forgot That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods, By putting on the cunning of a carper, Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive By that which has undone thee: hinge thy knee, And let his very breath, whom thou 'st observe, Blow off thy cap; praise his most vicious strain, And call it excellent. Thou wast told thus; Thou gav'st thine ears, like tapsters that bade welcome, To knaves, and all approachers;¹² it is most just, That thou turn racecl: hast thou wealth again. Rascals should have it. Do not assume my likeness. Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself. Aepm. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like thyself; A madman so long, now a fool. What! think'st That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain, Will put thy shirt on warm? Will these moist trees, That have outlived the eagle, page thy heels, And skip when thou point'st out? Will the cold brook, Candid with ice, candid thy morning taste, To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? call the creatures,— Whose naked natures live in all the spite Of wretched heaven, whose bare unhoused trunks,¹³

To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer mere nature,—bid them flatter thee;
O! thou shalt find—
Apm. I love thee better now than e'er I did.
Tim. I hate thee worse.
Apm. Why?
Tim. Thou flatt'rist misery.
Apm. I flatter not, but say thou art a catiliff.
Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?
Apm. To vex thee.
Tim. Always a villain's office, or a fool's.
Dost please thyself in't?
Apm. Ay.
Tim. What! a knave too?
Apm. If thou didst put this sour cold habit on to castigate thy pride, 'twere well; but thou
Dest it enforc'dly: thou dost contriver be again,
Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery
Outlives uncertain pomp, is crown'd before:
The one is filling still, never complete.
The other, at high wish, best state, contentless,
Hath a distracted and most wretched being.
Worse than the worst content.
Thou shouldst desire to die, being miserable.
Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miserable.
Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm
With favour never claspt, but bred a dog.
Hast thou, like us, from our first swarth, proceeded
The sweet degrees that this brief world affords
To such as may the passive dogs of it
Freely command, thou wouldst have plump'd thyself
In general riot; melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust; and never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd
The sugar'd goose and most wretched being.
Hath who, had the world as my consecration;
The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men
At duty, more than I could frame employment;
That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves
Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush
Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare
For every storm that blows;—I, to bear this,
That never knew but better, is some burden;
Thy nature did commence in sufferance, time
Hath made thee hard in't. Why shouldst thou hate men?
They never flatter thee: what hast thou given?
If thou wilt curse, thy father, that poor rag,
Must be thy subject; who, in spite, put stuff
To some she beggar, and compounded thee
Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone!—
If thou hastad not been born the worst of men,
Thou hastad been a knave, and flatterer.
Apm. Art thou proud yet?
Tim. Ay, that I am not thee.
Apm. I, that I was No prodigal.
Tim. I, that I am one now:
Were all the wealth I have shut up in thee,
I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.—
That the whole life of Athens were in this!
Thou would eat it.
Apm. Here; I will mend thy feast.
[Offering something.
Tim. First mend my* company, take away thyself.
Apm. So I shall mend mine own, by the lack of Thine.
Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botch'd;
If not, I would it were.

---

Apm. What wouldst thou have to Athens?
Tim. Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,
Tell them there I have gold: look, so I have.
Apm. Here is no use for gold.
Tim. The best, and trust; for here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.
Apm. Where ly'st o' nights, Timon?
Tim. Under that 's above me.
Apm. Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?
Tim. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather, where I eat it.
Tim. Would poison were obedient, and knew my mind!
Apm. Where wouldst thou send it?
Tim. To sauce thy dishes.
Apm. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfumes, they mocked thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. There's a medlar for thee; eat it.
Tim. On what I hate I feel not.
Apm. Dest hate a medlar?
Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.
Apm. An thou hadst hated meddlers sooner, thou shouldst have loved thyself better now. What man didst thou ever know unthrift, that was beloved after his means?
Tim. Who, without those means thou talkest of, didst thou ever know beloved?
Apm. Myself.
Tim. I understand thee: thou hadst some means to keep a dog.
Apm. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?
Tim. Women nearest, but men are the things themselves. What wouldst thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?
Apm. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.
Tim. Wouldst thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?
Apm. Ay, Timon.
Tim. A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee to attain to. If thou wast the lion, the fox would beguile thee: if thou wast the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wast the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wast accused by the ass: if thou wast the ass, thy dunness would torment thee, and still thou livedst but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wast the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou shouldst hazard thy life for thy dinner: worth thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury: worth thou a bear, thou wouldst be killed by the horse: worth thou a horse, thou wouldst be seized by the leopard: worth thou a leopard, thou wert gavane to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life; all thy safety were remotion, and thy defence, absence. What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transformation. On.
Apm. If thou couldst please me with speaking to me, thou mightst have hit upon it here: the commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.
Tim. How has the ase broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?
Apm. Yonder comes a poet, and a painter. The plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it; and give way. When I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again.
Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be welcome. I had rather be a beggar's dog, than Apeamantus.
Apeam. Thou art the cap of all the fools alive.
Tim. Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon.
Apeam. A plague on thee, thou art too bad to curse.
Tim. All villains, that do stand by thee, are pure.
Apeam. There is no leprosy but what thou speak'st.
Tim. If I name thee,—
I'd beat thee, but I should infect my hands.
Apeam. I would, my tongue could rot them off.
Tim. Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!
Choler does kill me, that thou art alive;
I swoon to see thee.
Apeam. Would thou wouldst burst! Away,
Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry, I shall lose
A stone by thee. [Throws a stone at him.
Apeam. Beast! Slave! Toad!
Tim. Rogue, rogue, rogue!

I am sick of this false world, and will love nought
But even the mere necromancer upon't.
Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave:
Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat
Thy grave-stone daily; make thine epiphate,
That death in me at others' lives may laugh.
O, thou sweet king-killer, and dear divorce
[Looking on the gold.
'Twixt natural son and sire! thou bright defiler
Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!
Thou ever young, fresh, lov'd, and delicate woor,
Whose bloom doth thaw the consecrated snow
That lies on Dion's lap! thou visible god,
That soldier's chief impossibilities,
And mak'st them kiss! that speak'st with every tongue,
To every purpose! O thou touch'd? of hearts!
Think, thy slave man rebels; and by thy virtue
Set them into confounding odds, that beasts
May have the world in empire!
Apeam. Would 't were so;
But not till I am dead.—I'll say, thou 'st gold:
Thou will be throng'd to shortly.
Tim. Thro'g'd to? Ay.
Apeam. Thy back, I pray thee.
Tim. Long live so, and so die—[I am quit.
[Exit Apeamantus.

More things like men?—Eat, Timon, andánhther them.
[Enter Banditti.

1 Band. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender ort of hisremainder.
The mere want of gold, and the falling from him2 of his friends, drove him into this melancholy.
2 Band. It is noise, he hath a mass of treasure.
3 Band. Let us make the assay upon him: if he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall 's get it?
2 Band. True, for he bears it not about him; 'tis hid.
1 Band. Is not this he?
3 Band. 'Tis his description.
3 Band. He; I know him,
All. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now, thieves?
All. Soldiers, not thieves.
Tim. Both two; and women's sons.
All. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.
Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat.4
Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;
Within this mile break forth a hundred springs;
The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips;
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you. Want! why want?
1 Band. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water,
As beasts, and birds, and fishes.
Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and Fishes.
You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you con,
That you are thieves profess'd, that you work not
In holier shapes; for there is boundless theft
In limited professions. Rascal thieves,
Here's gold. Go, suck the subtle blood o' the grape,
[Throwing gold 5
Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth,
And so escape hanging: trust not the physician;
His antidotes are poison, and he slays
More than you rob: take wealth and lives together;
Do villainy, do, since you protest to do 't,
Like workmen: I'll example you with thiery:
The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction
Rob's the vast sea: the moon's an arrant thief,
And her pale fire she snatches from the sun:
The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The moon into salt tears: the earth's a thief,
That feeds and breeds by a composure stolen
From general excrement: each thing's a thief.
The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power
Have uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves; away!
Rob one another. There's more gold: eat throats;
[Throwing it. 5
All that you meet are thieves. To Athens, go;
Break open shops: nothing can you steal,
But thieves do lose it. Steal no less for this
I give you; and gold confound you howsoever! Amen.

[Timon retires to his Cave.

3 Band. He has almost charmed me from my profesion, by persuading me to it.
1 Band. 'T is in the malice of mankind, that he thus advises us; not to have us thrive in our mystery.
2 Band. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade.
1 Band. Let us first see peace in Athens: there is no time so miserable, but a man may be true.
[Exeunt Banditti.

Enter Flavius.

Flav. O you gods!
Is yond's despis'd and ruinous man my lord?
Full of decay and failing? O monument,
And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd!
What an alteration of honour has desperate want made!
What viler thing upon the earth, than friends
Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends?
How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was wish'd to love his enemies;
Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo
Those that would mischief me, than those that do!
He has caught me in his eye: I will present
My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord,
Still serve him with my life.—My dearest master!
TIMON comes forward from his Cave.

Tim. Away! what art thou?
Flav. Have you forgot me, sir?
Tim. Why dost ask that? I have forgot all men; then, if thou grant'rt thou'rt a man, I have forgot thee.
Flav. An honest poor servant of yours.
Tim. Then, I know thee not: I never had honest man about me, I; all I kept were knaves to serve in meat to villains.
Flav. The gods are witness, Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief for his undone lord, than mine eyes for you.
Tim. What! dost thou weep?—Come nearer; then, I love thee, because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st Flav. I.
Tim. Had I a steward so true, so just, and now so comfortable? it almost turns my dangerous nature mild. Let me behold thy face. Surely, this man was born of woman.
Flav. Forgive my general and exceptless rashness, you perpetual-sober gods! do proclaim
Tim. One honest man, mis-take me not; but one; no more, I pray, and he's a steward.
Flav. How fain would I have hated all mankind, and thou redeem'st thyself: but all, save thee, I foll'w with curses.
Tim. Methinks, thou art more honest now, than wise; for by oppressing and betraying me, thou mightst have sooner got another service, for many so arrive at second masters.

Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true, (For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure) is not thy kindness subtle, covetous? Is't not a suising kindness as rich men deal gifts, Expecting in return twenty for one?
Flav. No, my most worthy master; in whose breast Doubt and suspect, alas! are plac'd too late.
You should have fear'd false times, when you did feast: suspect still comes when an estate is least.
That which I show, heaven knows, is merely love, duty and zeal to your unmatched mind, care of your food and living: and, believe it, my most honour'd lord, for any benefit that points to me, either in hope, or present, I'd exchange for this one wish,—that you had power and wealth to require me by making rich yourself.
Tim. Look thee, it is so. Thou singly honest man, here, take,—the gods of my misery! have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich, and happy; but thou shalt build from men; hate all, curse all; show charity to none, let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone, ere thou relieve the beggar: give to dogs what thou deny'st to men; let prisons swallow, debts wither; men like blasted woods, and may diseases tick up their false bloods! and so, farewell, and thrive.
Flav. O! let me stay,
Tim. If thou hast curs'd,
Curse, stay not: fly, whilst thou'rt bless'd and free.
Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.

[Exit Flavius; and Timon into his Cave.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before Timon's Cave.
Enter Poet and Painter.

Poet. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true, that he is so full of gold?

Paint. Certain; Alcibiades report'st it; Phrynia and Timandra had gold of him; he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity. 'Tis said, he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.
Paint. Nothing else; you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore, 'tis not amiss we tender our loves to him in this supposed distress of his: it will show honestly in us, and is very likely to load our purses' with what we travail for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?
Paint. Nothing at this time but my visitation; only, I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so; tell him of that intent that's coming toward him.

Paint. Good as the best. Promising is the very air of the time: it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the dullest for his act; and, but in the plainest and simplest kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of use. To promise is most courtly and fashionable: performance is a kind of will, or testament, which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Enter Timon, behind, from his Cave.

Tim. Excellent workman! Thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking, what I shall say I have provided for him. It must be a personating of himself; a satire against the softness of prosperity, with a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulence.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men? do so; I have gold for thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him: then do we sin against our own estate, when we may profit meet, and come too late.

Paint. True;

When the day serves, before black-cover'd night, find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light.

Come.

Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a god's gold, that he is worshipp'd in a baser temple, than where swine feed!

'Tis thou that rigged'st the bark, and plough'dst the foam; settlest admired reverence in a slave: to thee be worship; and thy saints for eye be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey!

1 grum'tst: in folio. Southern made the change. 2 Not in f. e. 3 Exeunt severally: in f. e. 4 purposes: in f. e. 5 they: in f. e.
Fit I meet them. [Advancing.

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Pain. Our late noble master.

Tim. Have I once liv'd to see two honest men?

Poet. Sir,

Having often of your open bounty tasted,
Hearing you were retir'd, your friend's fall'n off,
Whose thankless natures—O, abhorred spirits!
Not all the whips of heaven are large enough—
What! to you,
Whose star-like nobleness gave life and influence
To their whole being? I am rapt, and cannot cover
The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude
With any size of words.

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see 't the better:
You, that are honest, by being what you are;
Make them best seen, and known.

Pain. He, and myself,
Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Ay, you are honest men.

Pain. We are hither come to offer you our service.

Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I requite you?
Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no.

Both. What can we do, we'll do, to do you service.

Tim. You are honest men. You have heard that I have gold:
I am sure you have to speak truth; you are honest men.

Pain. So it is said, my noble lord; but therefore Came not my friend, nor I.

Tim. Good honest men!—Thou draw'st a counterfeit
Best in all Athens: thou art, indeed, the best;
Thou counterfeit'st most lively.

Pain. So, so, my lord.

Tim. Even so, sir, as I say.—And for thy fiction,
Why, thy verse swells with stuff so fine and smooth,
That thou art even natural in thine art.—
But, for all this, my honest-natur'd friends,
I must needs say, you have a little fault:
Marry, 't is not monstrous in you; neither wish I,
You take much pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honour,
To make it known to us.

Tim. You'll take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will you, indeed?

Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There's never a one of you but trusts a knave,
That mightily deceives you.

Both. Do we, my lord?

Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog; see him dissemble,
Know his gross patchery; love him, feed him,
Keep in your bosom; yet remain assur'd,
That he's a made-up villain.

Pain. I know none such, my lord.

Poet. Nor I.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you gold,
Rid me these villains from your companies:
Hang them, or stab them, drown them in a draught,
Confound them by some course, and come to me
I'll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord; let's know them.

Tim. You that way, and you this; but two is com-
Each man apart, all single and alone, [paly:—
Yet an arch-villain keeps him company;
If, where thou art, two villains shall not be.

[To the Painter.

Come not near him.—If thou wouldst not reside

[To the Poet.

But where one villain is, then him abandon.—
Hence! pack! there's gold; ye came for gold, ye slaves:
You have done* work for me, there's payment: hence!
You are an alchymist, make gold of that.
Out, rascal dogs! [Exit, beating them out.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Flavius, and two Senators.

Flav. It is in vain that you would speak with Timon;
For he is set so only to himself,
That nothing but himself, which looks like man,
Is friendly with him.

Sen. Bring us to his cave:
It is our part, and promise to the Athenians,
To speak with Timon.

2 Sen. At all times alike
Men are not still the same, 'T was time, and griefs,
That fram'd him thus: time, with his fairer hand
Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him. Bring us to him,
And chance it as it may.

Flav. Here is his cave.

Peace and content be here! Lord Timon! Timon!
Look out, and speak to friends. Th'i Athenians,
By two of their most reverend senate, greet thee:
Speak to them, noble Timon.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn!—Speak, and be hang'd:
For each true word, a blister; and each false
Be as a cauterizing to the root o' the tongue,
Consuming it with speaking:

1 Sen. Worthy Timon.—

Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.

2 Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee, Timon.

Tim. I shank them; and would send them back the plague,
Could I but catch it for them.

1 Sen. O! forget
What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.
The senators, with one consent of love,
Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought,
On special dignities, which vacant lie
For thy best use and wearing.

2 Sen. They confess
Toward thee forgetfulness, too general, gross;
Which now the public body, which doth seldom
Play the recantor, feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;
And send forth us, to make their sorrowed render,
Together with a recompense, more fruitful
Than their offence can weigh down by the dram;
Ay, even such hearts and sums of love and wealth,
As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs,
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Ever to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it:
Surprise me to the very brink of tears:
Lend me a fool's heart, and a woman's eyes,
And I'll beweep these comforts, worthy senators.

1 Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return with us,
And of our Athens, thine and ours, to take
The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks,
Allow'd with absolute power, and thy good name
Live with authority.—so, soon we shall drive back
Of Alcibiades th' approaches wild:
Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up
His country's peace.

[1 in i. e. 2 Not in folio. Added by Malone.]
SCENE V.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

2 Sen. And shakes his threat'ning sword
Against the walls of Athens.

1 Sen. Therefore, Timon,—

Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir; thus,—
If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That Timon cares not. But if he sack fair Athens,
And take our goodly aged men by the beards,
Giving our holy virgins to the stain
Of contumelious, beastly, madd-brain'd war,
Then, let him know,—and tell him, Timon speaks it,
In pity of our aged, and our youth,
I cannot choose but tell him,—that I care not.
And let him take 't at worst; for their knives care not,
While you have threats to answer: for myself,
There's not a whistle in th' unruly camp,
But I do prize it at my love, before
The reverend'st threat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the prosperous gods,
As theives to keepers.

Flav. Stay not: all's in vain.

Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph,
It will be seen to-morrow. My long sickness
Of health, and living, now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go; live still:
Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,
And last so long enough!

1 Sen. We speak in vain.

Tim. But yet I love my country; and am not
One that rejoices in the common wreck,
As common brut doth put it.

1 Sen. That's well spoke.

Tim. Command me to my loving countrymen,—
1 Sen. These words become your lips as they pass through them.

2 Sen. And enter in our ears, like great triumphers
In their applauding gates.

Tim. Command me to them;
And tell them, that to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love, and other incident throes;
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do them.
I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades' wrath.

2 Sen. I like this well; he will return again.

Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,
That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it: tell my friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,
From high to low throughout, that whose please
To stop affliction, let him take his haste,
Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,
And hang himself.—I pray you, do my greeting.

Flav. Trouble him no farther; thus you shall find him.

Tim. Come not to me again; but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Whom once a day with his embossed froth
The turbulent surge shall cover; thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle.—
Lips, let sour words go by, and language end:
What is amiss, plague and infection mend;
Graves only be men's works, and death their gain.
Sun, hide thy beams: Timon hath done his reign.
[Exit Timon.

1 Sen. His discontents are unremovably coupled to nature.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead. Let us return,

And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril.

1 Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Walls of Athens.

Enter two Senators, and a Messenger.

1 Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd: are his files
As full as they report?

Mess. I have spoke the least;
Besides, his expedition promises
Present approach.

2 Sen. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient friend,
Whom, though in general part we were oppos'd,
Yet our old love made a particular force.
And made us speak like friends; this man was riding
From Alcibiades to Timon's cave,
With letters of entreaty, which imported
His fellowship i' the cause against your city,
In part for his sake mov'd.

Enter Senators from Timon.

1 Sen. Here come our brothers.

3 Sen. No talk of Timon; nothing of him expect.—
The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scouring
Doth choke the air with dust. In, and prepare:
Ours is the fall, I fear, our foes the snare.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Woods. Timon's Cave, and a
Tomb-stone seen.

Enter a Soldier, seeking Timon.

Sold. By all description this should be the place.
Who's here? speak, ho!—No answer?—What is this?
Timon is dead, who hath outstretched his span;
Some beast rear'd this; there does not live a man.
Dead, sure, and this his grave.—What's on this tomb
I cannot read; the character I'll take with wax:
Our captain hath in every figure skill;
An ag'd interpreter, though young in days.
Before proud Athens he's set down by this,
Whose fall the mark of his ambition is.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Before the Walls of Athens.

Trumpets sound. Enter Alcibiades, and Forces.

Alcib. Sound to this coward and laseious town
Our terrible approach. [A Parley sounded.

Enter Senators, on the Walls.

Till now you have gone on, and fill'd the time
With all licentious measure, making your wills
The scope of justice: till now myself, and such
As slept within the shadow of your power,
Have wander'd with our traverse's arms, and breath'd
Our suffering vainly. Now the time is flush,
When crouching narrow, in the bearer strong,
Cries of itself, "No more:": now breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease;
And purty insolence shall break his wind
With fear, and horrid flight.

1 Sen. Noble, and young,
When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit,
Ere thou hadst power, or we had cause of fear,
We sent to thee, to give thy raging balm,
To wipe out our ingratitude with loves
Above their quantity.

2 Sen. So did we woo
Transformed Timon to our city's love,
By humble message, and by promises means:
We were not all unkind, nor all deserve
The common stroke of war.
These walls of ours
Were not erected by their hands, from whom
You have receiv'd your grief: nor are they such,
That these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall
For private faults in them.

Nor are they living,
Who were the motives that you first went out:
Shame, that they wanted cunning in excess
Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord,
Into our city with thy banners spread:
By decimation, and a tithed death
(If thy revenges hunger for that food
Which nature loaths) take thou the destin'd tenth;
And by the hazard of the spotted die
Let die the spotted.

All have not offended;
For those that were, is't not severe to take,
On those that are, revenge? crimes, like lands,
Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage:
Spare thy Athenian cradle, and those kin,
Which in the bluster of thy wrath must fall
With those that have offended. Like a shepherd,
Approach the fold, and cull th' infected forth,
But kill not all together.

What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile,
Than how to't with thy sword.

Set but thy foot
Against our rampir'd gates, and they shall ope,
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say, thou 'lt enter friendly.

Throw thy glove,
Or any token of thine honour else,
That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress,
And not as our confusion, all thy powers
Shall make their harbour in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Then, there's my glove,
Descend, and open your uncharged ports.
Those enemies of Timon's, and mine own,
Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof,
Fall, and no more: and,—to stone* your fears
With my more noble meaning,—not a man
Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream
Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
But shall be remedied by* your public laws
At heaviest answer.

'T is most nobly spoken.

Descend, and keep your words.

[The Senators descend, and open the Gates.]

Enter a Soldier.

Sold. My noble general, Timon is dead,
Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea;
And on his grave-stone this inscription, which
With wax I brought away, whose soft impression
Interprets for my poor ignorance.

[Reads.] "Here lies a wretched corse, of Wretched soul bereft:
Seek not my name. A plague consume you wicked
Caitiffs left!
Here lie I Timon; who, alive, all living men did hate:
Pass by, and curse thy fill; but pass, and stay not here thy gait.
These well express in thee thy later spirits:
Though thou abhor'dst in us our human griefs,
Scorn'dst our brain's flow, and those our droplets, which
From niggard nature fall, yet rich conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye
On thy low grave on faults forgiven. Dead
Is noble Timon; of whose memory
Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city,
And I will use the olive with my sword:
Make war breed peace; make peace stilt war; make each
Prescribe to other, as each other's leech.—
Let our drums strike.
BRUTUS, AND GHOST OF CAESAR.

Julius Caesar, Act. IV. Scene 3.
SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Flavius, Marullus, and a body of Citizens.

Flav. Hence! home, you idle creatures, get you home.

Is this a holiday? What! know you not, Being mechanical, you ought not walk Upon a labouring day without the sign Of your profession?—Speak, what trade art thou? 1 Cit. Why, sir, a carpenter.

Mar. Where is thy leather apron, and thy rule? What dost thou with thy best apparel on?—You, sir; what trade art thou? 2 Cit. Sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.

2 Cit. A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Flav. What trade, thou knave? thou naughty knave, what trade?

2 Cit. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me; yet, if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What mean'st thou by that? Mend me, thou saucy fellow?

2 Cit. Why, sir, cobbler you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, all that I live by is, with the awl; I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with all. "I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I re-cover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neats-leather have gone upon my handywork."

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day? Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday, to see Caesar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home?

What tributaries follow him to Rome,
To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels?
You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!
O! you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome,
Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft
Have you clim'd up to walls and battlements,
To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops,
Your infants in your arms, and there have sat
The live-long day, with patient expectation,
To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome: And when you saw his chariot but appear,
Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath her banks,
To hear the repetition of your sounds
Made in her concave shores?
And do you now put on your best attire?
And do you now pull out a holiday?
And do you now strew flowers in his way,
That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood?
Be gone!
Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,
Pray to the gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen; and for this fault Assemble all the poor men of your sort:
Draw them to Tyber banks, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. [Exeunt Citizens

See, who their basest metal be not mov'd;
They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness.
Go you down that way towards the Capitol;
This way will I. Disrobe the images,
If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies.

Mar. May we do so?

You know, it is the feast of Lupercal.

Flav. It is no matter; let no images
Be hung with Caesar's trophies. I'll about,
And drive away the vulgar from the streets:
So do you too, where you perceive them thick.
These growing feathers pluck'd from Caesar's wing,
Will make him fly an ordinary pitch,
Who else would soar above the view of men,
And keep us all in servile fearfulness.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Public Place.
Enter, in Procession, with Trumpets and other Music.
CEasar; ANToNY, for the course; CALPhurniA, Por-
Tii, DECiuS, CICCero, Brutus, CAssius, and CASeA: a
Soothsayer, and a crowd following them.

CEasar, Calphurnia,—

Cal. Here, my lord.
Cas. Stand you directly in Antonius' way,
When he doth run his course.—Antonius.
Ant. Caesar, my lord.
Cas. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius,
To touch Calphurnia; for our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their sterile curse.

Ant. I shall remember:
When Caesar says, "Do this," it is perform'd.

Cas. Set on; and leave no ceremony out.  [Music.

Sooth. Caesar!  [Sings.
Cas. Had it who calls?
Casca. Bid every noise be still.—Peace yet again!

Cas. Who is it in the press that calls on me?
I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,
Cry, Caesar! Speak: Caesar is turn'd to hear.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cas. What man is that?
Bru. A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.

Cas. Set him before me; let me see his face.
Cas. Fellow, come from the throng: look upon Cæsar.

Cas. What say'st thou to me now? Speak once again.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cas. He is a dreamer; let us leave him.—Pass.

[Senet.  Exeunt all but Bru. and Cas.
Cas. Will you go to see the order of the course?

Bru. Not I.
Cas. I pray you, do.

Bru. I am not gamesome: I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.
Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;
I'll leave you.

Cas. Brutus, I do observe you now of late;
I have not from your eyes that gentleness,
And show of love, as I was wont to have;
You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand
Over your friend that loves you.

Bru. Cassius,
Be not deceived: if I have veil'd my look,
I turn the trouble of my countenance
Merely upon myself. Vexed am I
Of late with passions of some different,
Conceptions only proper to myself,
Which give some soil, perhaps, to my behaviours;
But let not therefore my good friends be griev'd,
(Among which number, Cassius, be you one)
Nor construe any further my neglect,
Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,
Forgets the shows of love to other men.

1 laughter: in folio. Pope made the change.
The old Anchises bear, so from the waves of Tyber
Did I the tired Caesar; and this man
Is now become a god; and Cassius is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body;
If Caesar carelessly but not on him,
He had a fever when he was in Spain.
And, when he was on him, I did mark
How he did shake: 'tis true, this god did shake:
His coward lips did spit from their colour fly;
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the world,
Did lose his justre. I did hear him groan,
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
Mark him, and write his speeches in their books,
Alas! it cried, "Give me some drink, Titinius!"
As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone. [Shout. Flourish.
Bru. Another general shout! I do believe that these applauses are
For some new honours that are heaped on Caesar.
Cas. Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world,
Like a Colossus; and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs, and peep about
To find ourselves dishonourable graves.
Men at some time are masters of their fates:
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.
Brutus, and Caesar: what should be in that Caesar?
Why should that name be sounded more than yours?
Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;
Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with them,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Caesar.
Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great? Age, then art sham'd:
Rome, thou hast lost the bread of noble blood.
When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man?
When could they say, till now, that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide walls compass'd but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O! you and I have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus once, that would have brook'd
Th' eternal devil to keep his state in Rome,
And bore the king.
Bru. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;
What you would work to me, I have some aim;
How I have thought of this, and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter: for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any farther mov'd. What you have said,
I will consider; what you have to say,
I will with patience hear, and find a time
Both meet to hear, and answer, such high things.
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this;
Brutus had rather be a villain,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions, as this time
Is like to lay upon us.
Cas. I am glad, that my weak words
Have struck but thus much show of fire from Brutus.
Bru. The games are done, and Caesar is returning.
Re-enter Caesar, and his Train.
Cas. As they pass by pluck Cassa by the sleeve;
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to-day.
Bru. I will do so.—But, look you, Cassius;
The angry spot doth glow on Caesar's brow,
And all the rest look like a chidden train.
Cælphurnia's cheek is pale; and Cicero
Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,
As we have seen him in the Capitol,
Being cross'd in conse and by some senators.
Cas. Cassa will tell us what the matter is.
Cas. Antontius!
Ant. Caesar.
Cas. Let me have men about me that are fat;
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o' nights.
Yond Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.
Ant. Fear him not, Caesar, he's not dangerous:
He is a noble Roman, and well given.
Cas. 'Would he were fatter; but I fear him not:
Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much;
He is a great observer, and he looks
Quite through the deeds of men: he loves no plays,
As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music;
Seldom he smiles, and smiles in such a sort,
As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit.
That could be mov'd to smile at any thing.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
While's they behold a greater than themselves,
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Than what I fear, for always I am Caesar.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.
[Exit Caesar and his Train. Casca stays behind.
Casca. You pull'd me by the cloake: would you speak with me?
Bru. Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,
That Caesar looks so sad.
Casca. Why you were with him, were you not?
Bru. I should not, then, ask Cassa what hath chanc'd.
Casca. Why, there was a crown offered him: and,
Being offered him, he put it by with the back of his hand,
Thus: and then the people fell a shouting.
Bru. What was the second noise for?
Casca. Why, for that too.
Cas. They shouted thrice: what was the last cry for?
Casca. Why, for that too.
Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?
Casca. Ay, marry, was't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting by mine honest neighbours shouted.
Cas. Who offer'd him the crown?
Casca. Why, Antony.
Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Cassa.
Casca. I can as well be hanged, as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolishy, I did not mark it. I saw
Mark Antony offer him a crown: yet 'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coronets; and, as I told you, he put it by once; but, for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offered it to him again; then he put it by again, but, to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offered it the third time: he put it the third time by; and still as he reach'd it, the rabblemen shouted, and clapp'd their clapped hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath, because Caesar refused the crown, that it had almost choked Caesar; for he swooned, and fell down at it. And for mine own part,
I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips, and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But, soft, I pray you. What! did Caesar swoon? Caesar. He fell down in the market-place, and foamed at mouth, and was speechless.

Bru. 'Tis very like he hath the falling-sickness.

Cas. No, Caesar hath it not; but you, and I.

And honest Casca, we have the falling-sickness.

Casca. I know not what you mean by that; but, I am sure, Caesar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him, and hiss him, according as he pleased, and displeased them, as they use to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.

Bru. What said he, when he came unto himself?

Casca. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceived the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he plucked me eke his doublet, and offered them his throat to cut.—An I had been a man of any occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would might go to hell among the rogues —and so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, if he had done or said any thing amiss, he desired their worship to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenches, where I stood, cried, "Alas, good soul!"—and forgave him with all their hearts. But there's no heed to be taken of them: if Caesar had stabb'd their mothers, they would have done no less.

Bru. And after that he came thus sad away?

Casca. Ay.

Cas. Did Cicero say any thing?

Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you in the face again, but those that understood him talked at one another, and shook their heads; but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news, too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Caesar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well: there was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Casca?

Casca. No, I am promised forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Casca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold, and your dinner worth the eating.

Cas. Good; I will expect you.

Casca. Do so. Farewell, both. [Exit Casca.]

Bru. He was a bit fellow is this grown to be. He was quick mettled when he went to school.

Cas. So is he now, in execution.

Of any bold or noble enterprise,

However he puts on this tardy form.

This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit,

Which gives men stomach to digest his words

With better appetite.

Bru. And so it is. For this time I will leave you:

To-morrow, if you please to speak with me,

I will come home to you; or, if you will,

Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so,— till then, think of the world. [Exit Brutus.]

Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see

Thy honourable mettle may be wrought

From that it is disposed: therefore, 'tis meet

That noble minds keep ever with their likes;

For who so firm that cannot be seduced?

Caesar doth bear hard, but he loves Brutus:

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,

He should not humour me. I will this night,

In several hands, in at his windows throw,
SCENE I. JULIUS CAESAR.

When the most mighty gods by tokens send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.

Cas. You are dull, Cassius; and these works of life,
That should be in a Roman, you do want,
Or else you use not. You look pale, and gaze,
And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the heavens;
But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why birds, and beasts, from quality and kind;
Why old men, fools, and children calculate;
Why all these things change from their ordinance,
Their natures, and pre-formed faculties,
To monstrous quality; why, you shall find,
That heaven hath infused them with these spirits,
To make them instruments of fear, and warning,
Unto some monstrous state.

Now could I, Cassus, name to thee a man
Most like this dreadful night;
That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars
As doth the lion in the Capitol:
A man no mightier than thyself, or me,
In personal action; yet prodigious grown,
And fearful, as these strange intrusions are,

Cas. 'Tis Caesar that you mean; is it not, Cassius?

Cas. Let it be who it is; for Romans now
Have theves and limbs like to their ancestors,
But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead,
And we are govern'd with our mothers' spirits;
Our yoke and subjection serve us womanish.

Casus. Indeed, they say, the senators to-morrow
Mean to establish Caesar as a king:
And he shall wear his crown by sea, and land,
In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger, then;
Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius.
Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong;
Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat:
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit;
But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
Never looks power to dismiss itself.
If I know this, know all the world besides,
That part of tyranny, that I do bear,
I can shake off at pleasure. [Thunder still.

Cas. So can I:
So every bondman in his own hand bears
The power to cancel his captivity.

Cas. And why should Caesar be a tyrant, then?
Poor man! I know, he would not be a wolf,
But that he sees the Romans are but sheep:
He were no lion, were not Romans bends.
Those that with haste will make a mighty fire
Begin it with weak straws: what trash is Rome,
What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate
So vile a thing as Caesar?—But, O grief!

Where hast thou led me? I, perhaps, speak this Before a willing bondman; then I know
My answer's made, but I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.

Casus. You speak to Cassus; and to such a man,
That is no fleeting tell-tale. Hold, my hand:
Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far,
As who goes farthest.

Cas. There's a bargain made.
Now know you, Cassus, I have mov'd already
Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans,
To undergo with me an enterprise
Of honourable, dangerous consequence;
And I do know, by this, they stay for me
In Pompey's porch: for now, this fearful night,
There is no stir, or walking in the streets,
And the completion of the element.
In favour's like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, sordid, and most terrible.

Enter Cinna.

Cas. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste.

Cas. 'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait:
He is a friend.—Cinna, where hast thou so?

Cin. To find out you. Who's that? Metellus Cimber?

Cas. No, it is Cassius; one incorporate
To our attempts. Am I not stay'd for, Cinna?

Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this!
There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

Cas. Am I not stay'd for? Tell me.

Cin. Yes, you are.

To you—

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger, then;
Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius.

Cas. Where Britus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window; set this up with wax
Upon old Brutes's statue: all this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us.

Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this!
There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

Cin. Am I not stay'd for? Tell me.

Cin. Yes, you are.

Cin. O, Cassius! if you could but win the noble Brutus
To our party—

Cas. Do you content. Good Cinna, take this paper,
And look you lay it in the praetor's chair,
Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window; set this up with wax
Upon old Brutes's statue: all this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us.

Cin. Is Decius Brutus, and Trebonius, there?

Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this!
There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

Cas. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre.

[Exit Cinna.

Come, Cassus, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already; and the man entire,
Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.

Casus. O! he sits high in all the people's hearts;
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchymy,
Will change to virtue, and to worthiness.

Cas. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,
You have right well conceited. Let us go,
For it is after midnight; and, ere day,
We will awake him, and be sure of him. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same. Brutus's Orchard.

Enter Brutus.

Bru. What, Lucius! I know—
I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to day.—Lucius, I say!—

[Is favour's: i.e. folly.

I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.—
When, Lucius, when? Awake, I say: what, Lucius!—

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord?

Bru. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.
Julius Caesar.

Act II.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door, Who doth desire to see you.

Bru. Is he alone?

Luc. No, sir, there are more with him.

Bru. Do you know them?

Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their ears, And half their faces buried in their cloaks, That by no means I may discover them By any mark of favour.

Bru. Let them enter. [Exit Lucius.

They are the faction. O conspiracy!

Sham'st thou to show thy dangerous brow by night, When evils are most free? O! then, by day Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy; Hide it in smiles, and affability: For if thou path thy native semblance on, Not Erebus itself were dim enough To hide thee from prevention.

Enter Cassius, Casca, Decius, Cinna, Metellus Cimber, and Trebonius.

Cas. I think we are too bold upon your rest: Good morrow, Brutus; do we trouble you?

Bru. I have been up this hour; awake, all night. Know I these men that come along with you?

Cas. Yes, every man of them: and no man here, But honours you: and every one doth wish, You had but that opinion of yourself, Which every noble Roman bears of you. This is Trebonius.

Bru. He is welcome hither.

Cas. This Decius Brutus.

Bru. He is welcome too.

Cas. This Casca; this Cinna;

And this Metellus Cimber.

Cas. They are all welcome.

What watchful cares do interpose themselves Betwixt your eyes and night?

Cas. Shall I entreat a word? [They whisper.

Dec. Here lies the east: doth not the day break here? Casca. No.

Cin. O! pardon, sir, it doth; and yond' grey lines, That set the clouds, are messengers of day.

Casca. You shall confess that you are both deceiv'd.

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises; Which is a great way growing on the south, Weighing the youthful season of the year.

Some two months hence, up higher toward the north He first presents his fire; and the high east Stands, as the Capitol, directly here.

Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one. [He takes their hands.

Cas. And let us swear our resolution.

Bru. No, not an oath: if not the face of men, The suffixture of our souls, the time's abuse, If these be motives weak, bear them but times, And every man hence to his idle bed; So let high-sighted tyranny range on, Till each man drop by lottery. But if these, As I am sure they do, bear fire enough To kindle cowards, and to steel with valour The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen, What need we any spur, but our own cause, To prick us to redress? what other bond, Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word, And will not palter? and what other oath, Than honesty to honesty engag'd, That this shall be, or we will fall for it?

JULIUS CAESAR.

Scene I.

Swear priests, and cowards, and men caustic, Old feeble carrions, and such suffering souls That welcome wrongs: unto bad causes swear Such creatures as men doubt; but do not stain The even virtue of our enterprise. Nor shall the insupportable mettle of our spirits, To think that, or our cause, or our performance, Did need an oath, when every drop of blood, That every Roman bears, and nobly bears, Is guilt of a several bastardy, If he do break the smallest particle Of any promise that hath pass'd from him.

Cas. But what of Cicero? Shall we sound him? I think he will stand very strong with us.

Casca. Let us not leave him out.

Met. O! let us have him; for his silver hairs
Will purchase us a good opinion,
And buy men's voices to commend our deeds: It shall be said, his judgment rul'd our hands;
Our youths, and wildness, shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity.

Brut. By the eighth hour: is that the uttermost? Gi. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Caesar hard,
Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey: I wonder, none of you have thought of him.

Brut. Now, good Metellus, go along by him:
He loves me well, and I have given him reasons;
Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him.

Cas. The morning comes upon's: we'll leave you, Brutus.—
And, friends, disperse yourselves; but all remember What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans.

Brut. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily.
Let not our looks put on our purposes;
Let not be bear it as our Roman actors do,
With untir'd spirits, and formal constancy:
And so, good-morrow to you every one.

[Exit all but Brutus.]

Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep. It is no matter; Enjoy the heavy honey-dew of slumber:
Thou hast no figures, nor any fancies,
Which busy care draws in the brains of men;
Therefore, thou sleep'st so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my lord! Brutus, what mean you? Wherefore rise you now? It is not for your health thus to commit Your weak condition to the raw cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours neither. You have ungently, Brutus, Stole from my bed: and yesternight, at supper;
You suddenly arose, and walk'd about,
Musing and sighing, with your arms across;
And when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You star'd upon me with ungentle looks.
I urg'd you farther: then, you scratch'd your head,
And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot:
Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not;
But, with an angry wafture of your hand,
Gave sign for me to leave you. So I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled; and, withal,
Hoping it was but an effect of humour,
Which sometime hath his hour with every man.
It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep;
And, could it work so much upon your shape,
As it hath, much prevail'd on your condition,
I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Brut. I am not well in health, and that is all.
Brave son, deriv'd from honourable loins,
Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up
My mortified spirit. Now bid me run,
And I will strive with things impossible;
Yea, get the better of them. What's to do?
\[Br.\] A piece of work that will make sick men whole.
\[Lig.\] But are not some whole that we must make sick?
\[Br.\] That must we also. What, it is, my Caius,
I shall unfold to thee, as we are going,
To whom it must be done.
\[Lig.\] Set on your foot,
And with a heart new-fir'd I follow you,
To do I know not what; but it sufficeth,
That Brutus leads me on.
\[Br.\] Follow me, then. \[Exit.\]

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in Cæsar's Palace.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter Cæsar, in his Night-gown.

Cas. Nor heaven, nor earth, have been at peace to-night:
Thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cried out,
"Help, ho! They murder Cæsar!"—Who's within?
\[Enter a Servant.\]

Serv. My lord.

Cas. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of success.
\[Serv.\] I will, my lord. \[Exit.\]

Enter CALPHURNA.

Cal. What mean you, Cæsar? Think you to walk forth?
You shall not stir out of your house to-day.
Cas. Cæsar shall forth: the things that threaten'd me,
Ne'er look'd but on my back; when they shall see
The face of Cæsar, they are vanquish'd.

Cal. Cæsar, I never stood on ceremonies,
Yet now they fright me. There is one within,
Besides the things that we have heard and seen,
Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch,
A lioness hath whelped in the streets;
And graves have yawn'd, and yielded up their dead;
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds
In racks, and squadrions, and right form of war,
Which dripp'd blood upon the Capitol:
The noise of battle hurte'd in the air;
Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan;
And ghosts did shriek, and squeal about the streets.
O Cæsar! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

Cas. What can be avoided,
Whose end is purposed by the mighty gods?
Yet Cæsar shall go forth; for these predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Cæsar.

Cal. When beggars die there are no comets seen;
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.
Cas. Cowards die many times before their deaths,
The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear,
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come.

Re-enter a Servant.

Serv. What say the augurers?

Serv. They would not have you to stir forth to-day,
Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast.
Cas. The gods do this in shame of cowardice;
Cæsar should be a beast without a heart,
If he should stay at home to-day for fear.
No, Caesar shall not: danger knows full well,
That Caesar is more dangerous than he.
We are! two lions litter'd in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible;
And Caesar shall go forth.

Cal. Alas! my lord,
Your wisdom is consum'd in confidence.
Do not go forth to-day: call it my fear
That keeps you in the house, and not your own.
We'll send Mark Antony to the senate-house,
And he shall say, you are not well to-day:
Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this. [Kneeling.

Ces. Mark Antony shall say, I am not well;
And, for thy humour, I will stay at home. [Raising her.

Enter Decius.

Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

Dec. Caesar, all hail! Good morrow, worthy Caesar:
I come to fetch you to the senate-house.

Ces. And you are come in very happy time
To bear my greeting to the senators,
And tell them that I will not come to-day.
Cannot be false; and that I dare not, false,
I will not come to-day. Tell them so, Decius.

Cal. Say, he is sick.

Ces. Shall Caesar send a lie?
Have I in conquest stretch'd mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell grey-beards the truth?
Decius, go tell them, Caesar will not come.

Dec. Most mighty Caesar, let me know some cause,
Lest I be laugh'd at when I tell them so.

Ces. The cause is in my will; I will not come:
That is enough to satisfy the senate;
But, for your private satisfaction,
Because I love you, I will let you know.
Calphurnia here, my wife, stays me at home:
She dream'd to-night she saw my statue,
Which, like a fountain with a hundred spouts,
Did run pure blood; and many lusty Romans
Came smiling, and did bathe their hands in it.
And these does she apply for warnings, and portents
Of evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day.

Dec. This dream is all amiss interpret'd:
It was a vision, fair and fortunate.
Your status spouting blood in many pipes,
In which so many smiling Romans bath'd,
Signifies that from you great Rome shall suck
Reviving blood; and that great men shall press
For tinctures, stains, relives, and cognizance.
This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

Ces. And this way have you well expounded it.
Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can say:
And now it now. The senate have concluded
To give this day a crown to mighty Caesar;
If you shall send them word you will not come,
Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock
Apt to be render'd, for some one to say,
"Break up the senate till another time,
When Caesar's wife shall meet with better dreams."
If Caesar hide himself, shall they not whisper,
"Lo! Caesar is afraid?"

Pardon me, Caesar; for my dear, dear love
To your proceeding bids me tell you this,
And reason, our love is liable,
Ces. How foolish do your fears seem now, Calphurnia?
I am ashamed I did yield to them.
Give me my robe, for I will go:—

Enter Publius. Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Casca, Trebonius, and Cinna.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.
Pub. Good morrow, Caesar.

Ces. Welcome, Publius.—
What, Brutus, are you stirr'd so early too?—
Good-morrow, Casca.—Caius Ligarius,
Cesar was not so much your enemy,
As that sameague which hath made you lean.—
What is 't o'clock?

Brus. 'Tis, Caesar, 'tis eleven eight.

Ces. I thank you for your pains and courtesy. [Exit Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Caesar.

Ces. Bid them prepare within.
I am to blame to be thus waited for.—
Now, Cinna.—Now, Metellus:—What, Trebonius! I have an hour's talk in store for you.
Remember that you call on me to-day:
Be near me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Caesar, I will: and so near will I be, [Aside.
That your best friends shall wish I had been farther.
Ces. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine with me,
And we, like friends, will straightway go together.

Brus. That every like is not the same, O Caesar! [Aside.
The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. A Street near the Capitol.

Enter Artemidorus, reading a Paper.

Art. "Cesar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cassius; come not near Caesar; have an eye to Cinna, trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wronged Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Caesar. If thou be'st not immortal, look about you: security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover,

"Artemidorus.""

Here will I stand till Caesar pass along;
And as a suitor will I give him this.
My heart laments that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.
If thou read this, O Caesar! thou may'st live;
If not, the fates with traitors do contrive.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same. Another Part of the same Street, before the House of Brutus.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I pray thee, boy, run to the senate-house;
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone.
Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand, madam
Por. I would have had thee there, and here again,
Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there.—
O constancy! be strong upon my side:
Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue!
I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.
How hard it is for women to keep counsel!
Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?
Por. Run to the Capitol, and nothing else,
And so return to you, and nothing else?
Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look well,
For he went sickly forth: and take good note,
What Caesar doth, what suitors press to him.
Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. The Capitol; the Senate sitting.

A crowd of People in the Street leading to the Capitol; among them ARTEMIDORUS, and the Soothsayer.

Flourish. Enter Cæsar, Brutus, Cassius, Casca, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cinna, Antony, Lupides, Popilius, Publius, and others.*

Cas. The ideas of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Cæsar: but not gone.

Art. Hall, Cæsar!—Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read.

At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

Art. O, Cæsar! read mine first; for mine's a suit

That touches Cæsar nearer. Read it, great Cæsar.

Cas. That touches us? ourselves shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not, Cæsar; read it instantly.

Cas. What is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirrah, give place.

Cas. What! urge you your petitions in the street?

Come to the Capitol.

Cæsar enters the Capitol; the rest following. All the Senators rise.

Pop. I wish, your enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cas. What enterprise, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well. I advance to Cæsar.

Brut. What said Popilius Lena?

Cas. He wish'd, to-day our enterprise might thrive.

I fear, our purpose is discovered.

Brut. Look, how he makes to Cæsar: mark him.

Cas. Cæsar, be sudden, for we fear prevention.—

Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known, Cassius or Cæsar never shall turn back, For I will slay myself.

Brut. Cassius, be constant:

Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes;

For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.

Cas. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you, Brutus.

He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Exeunt Antony and Trebonius. Cæsar and the Senators take their Seats.

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go, And presently prefer his suit to Cæsar.

Brut. He is address'd; press near, and second him.

Cin. Cæsar, you are the first that rears your hand.

Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be, much that I fear may chance.

Good morrow to you. Here the street is narrow: The throng that follows Cæsar at the heels, Of senators, of praetors, commin suitsors, Will crowd a feeble man and make him fall; I'll get me to a place more void, and there

Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along.

[Exeunt.

Casca. Are we all ready?

Cas. What is now amiss, That Cæsar and his senate must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Cæsar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat An humble heart.—

Cas. I must prevent thee, Cimber.

These crouchings, and these lowly courtesies,

Might fire the blood of ordinary men,

And turn pre-ordinance, and first decrees,

Into the laws of children. Be not fond,

To think that Cæsar hears such rebel blood,

That will be thaw'd from the true quality

With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words,

Low-crouched courtesies, and base spaniel fawning.

Thy brother by decree is banished:

If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawn for him,

I spurn thee like a cur out of my way.

Know, Cæsar doth not wrong; nor without cause

Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice, more worthy than my own,

To sound more sweetly in great Cæsar's ear?

For the repealing of my banished brother?

Brut. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Cæsar; Desiring thee, that Publius Cimber may

Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

Cas. What, Brutus!

Cas. Pardon, Cæsar; Cæsar, pardon:

As low as to thy foot dost Cæsius fall,

To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cas. I could be well mov'd, if I were as you; If I could pray to move, prayers would move me; But I am constant as the northern star, Of whose true, fix'd, and resting quality, There is no fellow in the firmament. The skies are painted with innumerable sparks, They are all fire, and every one doth shine; But there's but one in all doth hold his place. So, in the world: 't is furnish'd well with men, And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive; Yet in the number I do know but one That unassailable holds on his rank, Unshak'd of motion: and, that I am he, Let me a little show it, even in this, That I was constant Cimber should be banish'd,
And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cin. O Caesar!—

Cas. Hence! Wilt thou lift up Olympus?

Dec. Great Caesar,—

Cas. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?

[Casca stabs Caesar in the Neck. Caesar catches hold of his Arm. He is then stabbed by several other Conspirators, and last by Marcus Brutus.

Cas. Et tu, Brute!—Then fall, Caesar.

[Dies. The Senators and People retire in confusion.

Cin. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—

Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cas. Some to the common pulpits, and cry out, "Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!"

Bru. People, and senators! be not affrighted.

Fly not; stand still — ambition's debt is paid.

Casca. Go to the pulpit, Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Bru. Where's Publius?

Cin. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Caesar's should chance—

Bru. Talk not of standing.—Publius, good cheer:

There is no harm intended to your person,

Nor to no Roman else; so tell them, Publius.

Cas. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people,

Rushing on us, should do your age some mischief.

Bru. Do so—and let no man abide this deed,

But we, the doors.

Re-enter TREBONIUS.

Cas. Where's Antony?

Tre. Fle'd to his house amaz'd.

Men, wives, and children, stare, cry out, and run,

As it were doomsday.

Bru. Fates, we will know your pleasures—

That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time,

And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Casca. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life,

Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit:—

So are we Caesar's friends, that have abridg'd

His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop,

And let us bathe our hands in Caesar's blood

Up to the elbows, and besmeur our swords:

Then walk we forth, even to the market-place,

And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads,

Let's all cry, Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!

Cas. Stoop then, and wash.—How many ages hence,

Shall this our lofty scene be acted over,

In states unborn, and accents yet unknown?

Bru. How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey's basis lies along,

No worthier than the dust?

Cas. So oft as that shall be,

So often shall the knot of us be call'd

The men that gave their country liberty.

Dec. What! shall we forth?

Cas. Ay, every man away:

Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels
